CHINESE DIE OF PLAGUE

Thousand Daily Toll of Cholera

Weird Rites in Temples Conducted to Appease Dragon King

Shanghai Foreign Section Loses But Two Members; Poor Die in Hovels

SHANGHAI, Aug. 7. (AP) — With weird ceremonials in their temples to appease the dragon king, the Chinese are attempting to halt cholera, which is daily causing more than 1000 deaths in the native sections of Shanghai and in the Pootung district, across the Whangpoo River.

Foreigners, living in concession districts of Shanghai as modern as European or American cities, have been almost immune from the scourge, only two of their number having died.

The Chinese are praying to the dragon king to send rain to relieve the drought and the fierce heat that is drying streams and parching rice fields. Their officials admit their inability to cope with the disease, although they are establishing many hospitals and otherwise endeavoring to relieve the sufferers of the highly fatal epidemic.

Thousands of natives crowd the Chinese hospitals, which are almost helpless, their facilities being utterly inadequate. Only a few cases can be treated, thousands dying in hovels without medical attention.

Only narrow streets separate the foreign concessions, with their 20,000 foreigners of whom more than 8000 are Japanese, from the densely crowded antiquated Chinese city. The foreign districts are clean and sanitary, well equipped under white jurisdiction to care for their inhabitants.

The mortality is heavy in the native city and in the Pootung district, 150,000 Chinese being huddled in unsanitary buildings. Foreign physicians and others are aiding the Chinese sufferers.

RED RUSSIA MAY YIELD TO NEW "MAN OF STEEL"

Stalin Builds Mighty Power to Turn Country From Communism Back to Respected Nation

MOSCOW, Aug. 7. (AP)—Reports emanating from Bucharest, Rumania, that there is serious widespread insurrection in Russia, are denied here as "shameless fakes." The same denial is made of reports that Trotzky has fled from Moscow and that there is an uprising in Ukraine.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—While the world's attention has been centered on the critical events in France, Great Britain and other parts of Western Europe, some highly dramatic occurences in Russia have not been receiving the attention they deserve. And these events may have a far greater effect on the future than the fate of the franc and the outcome of the strikes in Britain. For Joseph V. Stalin—the "man of steel" who set out to be the big boss of Russia after the death of Lenin— has struck a final blow at the Red communists and, unless the opposition they are trying to organize can defeat him, we shall soon see Russia definitely turning away from Communism and back toward normal nationhood.

Through the mysterious death of Dzerjinsky — the bloody Pole who long kept Russia in terror with his secret police, or Cheka—Stalin has been able to take over not only these police but the supreme economic council, of which Dzerjinsky remained head until he died by suicide or assassination.

Thus fortified in power, Stalin has struck at all others who have undertaken to stand in his path. Of chief interest to the outside world is the final fall of Zinovieff, head of the Communist International, whose revolutionary propaganda has caused vast trouble in all countries and has been the chief reason for the refusal of the United States to recognize the Russian goverment. Zinovieff has been ousted from the all-powerful political bureau and the international is to pass under control of the conciliatory Foreign Office.

PLAN TO FIGHT

But the "man of steel" is not to have his own way without a real struggle. As an Associated Press dispatch from Moscow puts it: "A growing number of Lenin's staunchest and oldest disciples lately have risen against Stalin and his newly risen Communist friends, with whose aid he is striving to dominate the party, not tolerating even the faintest opposition."

The Baku soviet openly asserts that Trotsky, Kameneff and Zinovieff are leading this movement. The central executive committee has publicly charged that Zinovieff used the international to send out secret attacks on Stalin's regime. Lashevitch, an alternate on the political bureau, was removed because he had a prominent part in a secret meeting in a forest near Moscow in which dissenters were urged to organize an active struggle. The Stalin organs declare the opposition has been plotting to use "illegal means" to regain power.

REBELLION WIDESPREAD

It is evident from closely censored reports that this rebellion has been widespread among the original Communist revolutionaries and that the Stalin regime has resorted to widespread measures to crush it. Before the death of Dzerjinsky, a London Times correspondent at Riga reported that the secret police were "again inspired with the kind of massacreing fury which prevailed in the early years of the revolution." In reprisal, hundreds of supporters of the radical leaders, including many of-

BRIDEGROOM'S AUTO STOLEN AT WEDDING

ATCHISON (Kan.) August 7. (Exclusive)—Thieves operating in Atchison were unusually thoughtless. While a double wedding was taking place in the Whitelaw Hotel here, a Hudson coach belonging to one of the bridegrooms was stolen in front of the hotel. It had not been recovered and the two couples were forced to start their wedding journey in a bus. Miss Ruth Sanders was married to H. G. Roelofson and Miss Floy Sanders to F. G. Jones. All lived in Maryville, Mo. The car belonged to Jones.

ALL CLERICS MUST OBEY

Calles Firm on Church Law

President of Mexico in Interview Says No Bias Shown

Chief Executive Asserts No Intervention Will be Tolerated

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) "All foreign ministers and priests must obey the Mexican law. We cannot make a special law applying to certain foreigners here, saying that they cannot act as priests in Mexico, so we are forced to make a general law, including priests of all religions," President Calles said last night during an informal conversation with a group of American correspondents.

For the first time since this religious decree went into effect the President last night sat and conversed with a group of Americans. Senor Calles dilated upon his views on the Catholic question and at the same time showed that he feels deeply the charges that he is antireligious.

Replying to the charges of Catholics that he is a fanatic, President Calles said:

ROOM FOR ALL

"I am broad minded. To my way of thinking there is room for all beliefs. For me all religions are good. Catholic, Protestant, Buddhism, Jewish and Mohammedan are all good and equally respectable, for they seek a moral end."

Referring to the Catholics President Calles said there are two classes —fanatics and liberals.

"You, in your country," he went on, "cannot appreciate the question as you have no religious problem; but in our Latin-American countries, foreign priests have meant calamity, especially Spanish and Italian Catholic priests.

"They have all been outcasts from Rome, and all Europe has sent them to our country. Thousands of priests have come here to make our people fanatics and to sink them in ignorance while they take away with them all that they can lay their hands on.

"Therefore, in view of this, we have been obliged to take radical measures to prevent this evil.

MIX IN POLITICS

"It must be remembered that they have come here to mix in internal politics, to attempt to absorb our economic strength, to control all our activities, to disrupt our organization and to counteract the beneficial results and advantages obtained at the cost of so many sacrifices and so much blood."

Referring to the status of Protestant ministers in Mexico, President Calles stated that they are now working quietly in Mexico without being molested because they are complying with the law, but, he said, the means that he is taking to prevent foreign ministers from officiating in Mexico had reasons behind it.

"We could not make a special law applying to certain foreigners, saying that they could not act as priests in Mexico. Therefore, the terms of the law are general, including priests of

KITCHENER EPIC ENDS

Searcher Avows Body Found

Remains of British Hero Said to Have Been Unearthed in Norwegian Grave

Ocean Tragedy of Great War Recalled by Closing of Three-Year Quest

For three years, Frank Power, a free-lance journalist, working with The Referee, a London Sunday newspaper, has been attempting to discover the body of Horatio Herbert Kitchener, British field marshal, who went down with the cruiser Hampshire, June 5, 1916. The Hampshire was supposed to have encountered a German mine or torpedo three hours after she left her anchorage in Scapa Flow, Orkney Islands, for Archangel, Russia. Most of her crew of 688 men shared Kitchener's fate. In the following article Power describes what he asserts is the successful conclusion of his search.

BY FRANK POWER

[Copyright, 1926, in Great Britain by The Referee, and in the United States by the North American Newspaper Alliance.]

LONDON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—It is with a profound sense of all it means to England and the empire, to all the millions who cherish the great soldier's memory with love and pride and above all to the armies of every race which he inspired and organized in the most stupendous struggle the world has known, that I am able to announce that I am bringing to England the remains of Earl Kitchener of Khartoum.

For myself, it is the fulfillment of a purpose which has never left my thoughts all through the ten years that have passed since the wreck of the Hampshire. To the world at large it may well be a final solution of what has long been held to be a "mystery."

GREAT DIFFICULTIES

It is homecoming of a noble Englishman and is bringing back his body today to the resting-place he would have wished, in the country he loved and served. I feel it would be worse than useless for me to explain how it came about that it should have been left to me, a private citizen, to engage in this mission.

It is enough to say that under circumstances of great difficulty but with the encouragement of a few of the late Earl's relatives and intimate friends I have been able to carry through my great task. To many of my readers, it will not, of course, be unknown that I and others have for a long time entertained the belief that it was to Scandinavia we should look for the grave of Lord Kitchener. We believed that winds and currents would in all likelihood carry the body to Norway. During the weeks which followed the disaster which robbed England of her great war leader, many bodies were thrown up on that wild coast, one of which, there were reasons to believe, was that of the Earl himself.

This possibility, as a matter of fact, had been suggested at intervals ever since the disaster. It had been stated clearly that among the bodies found

BOTANICAL CROWN SOUGHT

Bent Tells Development Association Heads of Plans for World's Largest Gardens in Southland

DEL MONTE, Aug. 7. (Exclusive.)—The botanical center of the world is about to be shifted to California, Arthur S. Bent of Los Angeles, president of the Southern California Botanical Foundation, a chartered corporation, today told the board of directors of the California Development Association, the State chamber of commerce, which is holding its August meeting at Del Monte.

Plans for the establishment of the largest botanical gardens in the world, comprising 1000 acres in Mandeville Canyon, which is approximately three miles inland from Santa Monica, and lies between Mulholland Drive and Beverly Boulevard, were revealed by Mr. Bent.

The Kew Botanical Gardens of England, which Bent states the British government considers a priceless asset to that country, involve only 250 acres of land.

START DUE SOON

In explaining the great project to his fellow-directors of the association, Mr. Bent further stated:

"We now feel assured of the consummation of our plans, and a start toward the establishment of these great gardens will be made in the very near future. At a conservative estimate, we are assured of $10,000,000, with which to carry on our plans. A syndicate has been formed to take over 3500 acres in the Mandeville Canyon district. Of this it will apportion as a free gift to the Southern California Botanical Foundation 1500 acres, 100 acres of which is to be used for the establishment of the gardens and 500 for additional revenue, besides subscribing $1,000,000 for immediate use by the botanical foundation.

"A holding company has been formed to act as a guarantor clearing-house for the good faith of both the syndicate and the efforts of the botanical foundation.

"The United States government has urged us to go ahead with the establishment of these gardens, and has assured us of its full support.

IDEAL CLIMATE

"Dr. Gleason, curator of the New York Botanical Gardens, who has recently been a visitor to California, after looking over our plans, made this statement:

'This project, when consummated, will shift the botanical center of the world to California.'

"Careful and untiring research has shown that this particular spot has the most ideal climate for the establishment of botanical gardens of any place in the world. It is ideally adapted to tropical and subtropical vegetation. Fruits and other crops which do not thrive even in adjacent territory do thrive in Mandeville Canyon. For the past several years we have grown numerous varieties of bananas, and have been able to pick the ripened choice fruit each month.

"These gardens will be established, not alone for their attractive qualities, but primarily from the standpoint of a research field, where we may cultivate valuable economic plants for the use of California and America, if not the world.

"We consider the establishment of these gardens a great asset, not only to California, but to the Pacific Coast and to the United States."

VATICAN STRIKES BACK AT CHARGES BY CALLES

Papal Organ Denies Domination by Church and Lays Troubles of Mexico to Radicals

ROME, Aug. 7. (AP)—The Vatican organ, Osservatore Romano, in a lengthy article today denies the charge made by President Calles of Mexico that the Catholic Church for three centuries has absolutely dominated that country, hindering progress and doing nothing for the betterment of the people. "On the contrary," the article says, the "triumph of men representing the most radical and revolutionary political currents is responsible for all of Mexico's troubles."

The article, entitled "Four Centuries of Catholicism in Mexico," is looked on as expressing the views of the Pope as the most important statement of the Holy See viewpoint since the beginning of the religious crisis in Mexico.

"While the government puts Mexico to iron and steel," says the article, "to destroy—if it were possible—all traces of religion among the people, while the whole civilized world is indignant about a persecution recalling the first centuries of Christianity, it is strange that the government tries to blame the church for events which qualify as a religious crisis and attributes the unanimous indignation of all civilized peoples to their ignorance of Mexico's religious history."

WORK OF CLERGY

Then the article goes into details of Mexico's religious history pointing out that the foundation of the state out of races so antagonistic as the Spaniards and Indians, was made possible through the work of the clergy.

"If it had not been for the church," it adds, "Mexico's history would have been like that of certain African and Asiatic colonies, where material civilization, unimproved or little influenced by Christian spirit, is absolutely incapable of elevating the native population to the level of civilization necessary for peaceful fusing of races into a people able to work out their own destiny."

"It is admitted that the church's work has been less efficacious in recent years because "the revolutionary government has favored the Protestants, attacking and injuring Catholicism."

After offering examples to prove that the church, rather than the government, worked out the civilization of the people, the article continues:

OBREGON INCIDENT

"Ex-President Obregon, having lost his arm in battle, refused to be treated except by a Catholic sister, fearing that anyone else would betray him. When he offered her money, she refused, saying:

"'I act only for love of God, who orders us to love and help even our enemies.'

"Now as governmental communique accuses the Catholics of caring only for material goods which have been taken away from the church. . . .

"In Mexico, as in other American countries, prosperity, internal peace, culture, civil progress and the splendor of art testify to the time when the church exercised its beneficent influence, contributing not only spiritually to the young States, which were born Catholic and progressed on the road to Christian civilization, but considering the sovereign civil power in co-operation with the sovereign religious power for the supreme ends of human society."

The article concludes:

"Events of the last fifty years show the existence of a destructive retrogressive process, before which Catholicism has the glory to be able to affirm that it has been most frequently the favorite victim, whatever may have been the purposes or successes of the ambitions and forces in conflict."

CHURCH ROW IN MEXICO EXPLAINED

Misunderstanding Exists Here in Church Row, Says Mining Expert

A. M. McDermott, president and general manager of El Fuerte Mining and Smelting Company at Choix, Sin., Mex., is at present spending a vacation at his home in this city. Mr. McDermott has spent more than twenty years in Mexico among all classes of people, but his management of the work at the mines has thrown him into close contact with the masses and as he speaks Spanish fluently he has had access to the inner feelings of the people.

"There is widespread misunderstanding in the United States as to what the trouble is between the Mexican government and the Catholic church," he said yesterday. "It is not an interference with the religious worship of the people, as many suppose, but is aimed solely at the church as a landowner. When it is said that the Mexican government has taken possession of a church it does not mean that the officials have usurped the functions of the priest, or in any way interfered with his ministrations at the altar. It simply means that the title to the property has passed from the church to the State.

"The law applies alike to Protestant and Catholic churches. It has been unanimously accepted by the former and by many Catholic churches without question. I have talked to prominent citizens of Mexico on the subject and find them generally supporters of the Constitution. Most of the big noise about opposition is propaganda. As long as the United States government maintains its present attitude toward the importation of arms into Mexico as well as in other respects, I do not think there is any possibility of another revolution."

ALL AFFECTED BY CHURCH LAW

Calles Asserts Regulation Not Prejudiced

President Admits Priests Held to Blame

Mexico Will Not Tolerate Intervention

all religions, except Mexicans by birth.

"At present foreign Protestant ministers cannot act because the law distinctly states that priests of all religions must be Mexicans.

"This problem of the church is not Mexico's alone, but one of all Latin-America."

Replying to a question as to whether the boycott is causing uneasiness to the government, President Calles said:

"The government is not taking the boycott into account, for the government considers it ridiculous—as ridiculous as if I should dress as a clown and go out into the streets."

"Do you think," asked the President, "that the economic life of the people will be directed, will be stopped, because priests order that no one shall buy clothes or the necessities of life? That is impossible. Catholics themselves are first in nonobservance of the boycott.

"He who has no clothes I am sure will buy them and he who is thirsty will purchase drinkables."

The Catholics, he continued, were saying that Latin-American diplomats had offered to mediate.

"This is untrue," said the President, "because the bishops who conferred with the ministers of Latin-American nations represented in Mexico requested their intervention in the matter.

SEVERAL COMPLY

"I have in my possession copies of the communications which the Episcopate sent to them. They also applied to the Ministers of Cuba, Peru, Bolivia and Santo Domingo.

"I refused to receive them because the government cannot permit a discussion of constitutional laws. It is obliged to enforce observance of them.

"If, through evolution of the country or other circumstances it should be necessary to reform the laws, this can be done and the means to do so provided by the law itself."

"Would you consider foreign mediation?" the President was asked.

He flushed and with a slight show of anger replied:

"No, under no consideration."

Discussing the claims of the Catholics that they are united in the action, President Calles said that the government has received notice that a number of priests had complied with the law of registration and that their churches had been ordered returned to them at once.

Referring to the registration of the priests President Calles stated:

"I have already said that the Mexican government has no controversy with the clergy and can have none. The government and more especially the Federal executive have unavoidably an obligation to exact fulfillment of the Constitution of the republic and the laws emanating therefrom.

"I know no reason why Catholic priests or anyone else should refuse to comply with the provisions of the law, especially one so insignificant as making a statement before the proper legal authority as to who are in charge of the churches and giving the name of each priest."

Speaking of the churches, President Calles said that the government is not administering the churches. That is not its mission but the churches are the property of the nation.

What less, he asked, can the government demand as the owner of the churches than to know the person in charge of their administration.

In doctrine and solely spiritual things, he said, the government has no interest, so the fear of the clergy is futile and childish.

OBJECT OF REGISTRATION

The real object of the registration of priests, he said, is simply to know who are in charge of the churches and who are responsible for conditions because, he said, the churches are the property of the nation and the only genuine representatives of the people are the government.

"The government wants these statistics for many reasons," he said. "The government should keep control of what belongs to it. Should not every one have the right to know who is administering his property?

"The objection of the Catholics to this is only a pretext, for what has alarmed them is the reform of the penal code. It is not registration that has inconvenienced, but punishments established for infractions of the law.

"You know that the Constitutional provisions existed but the provisions had not been regulated and therefore it was not known what the punishments were for those who did not comply with them. (The recent Calles edict established the penalties for infractions of the Constitution.)

"The Constitution of the republic states that 'priests may not in the pulpit utter seditious speeches or hold services against the law of the land,' and now the law says that priests who preach seditious sermons will be punished with such and such penalties.

PREACHING SEDITION

"They protest against this. What does that mean? It means that they intend to break the law by preaching sermons of a seditious character.

"The Constitution states that services outside the churches are prohibited and now the law states that whoever conducts such an act of worship will be punished with such and such penalities.

"If the Catholics have no intention of breaking the law why do they protest against it?"

It was pointed out that Catholics held that their church constitution forbids obeying the clauses of the country's Constitution.

To this President Calles replied:

"That is the whole matter and it is clearly set forth in a local paper."

Here the President read from the paper as follows:

"'From the offices at the episcopate committee were received yesterday two copies of documents showing the attitude of the Holy See on the present religious conflict in our country. At the same time they give the archbishops and bishops of the republic a criterion by which to act.

"'The first document refers to the conference of the Mexican episcopate concerning the suspension of church services conducted by priests. The second is the reply given by Pius XI to the bishops.

"'One of the documents mentioned says that the majority of the Mexican episcopate favors suspending services in the churches of the republic from July 31 as the priests cannot exercise their functions in conformity with church canons when the new laws go into force and asks the approval of the Holy See.

"'The reply was as fololws: "The Holy See condemns the law and also every act which signifies or can be interpreted by the faithful as acceptance or recognition of this law. To this rule of conduct the Mexican episcopate must conform their acts so that the majority and, if possible, all, shall give an example of unity of action."

"'The latter document was signed by Cardinal Gasparri, secretary of state to Pope Pius XI.'

"What would the American government reply if the Pope should say that the people of the United States should disobey the laws of that country?" Senor Calles then asked. "How could any country submit to meddling of this kind?

CONFLICT NOT FUNDAMENTAL

"The conflict is not fundamental, it is superficial. The Catholics would disown the Constitution and in this country no one has the right to disown the Constitution.

"Not even in past ages, when nations were governed by Catholic princes and kings who were fanatics, was Rome allowed to interfere in the internal government of states. How can they now pretend to meddle in this century?"

Referring to the talk of mediation the President said:

"I cannot accept mediation because there is no conflict. It is a question of obeying the laws and I am determined to use the means which the law provides to enforce compliance with it."

He added that he had no offers of mediation, except that from the President of Peru.

PRIESTS TAKE CHARGE OF MEXICAN COLONIES

GALESBURG (Ill.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Mexican priests left churchless by the religious strife there are being sent to the United States to take charge temporarily of Mexican settlements, according to Father Angel Canamache of Monterey, who arrived here today to look after the religious interests of the Mexican colony of several hundred families in this city.

It was the hope of Mexican Catholic authorities even before the religious crisis that Mexicans in this country could from time to time be extended the services of native priests, he said, and the trouble in the homeland has made the opportunity possible.

Father Canamanche believes the boycott will soon force an end to the Mexican trouble.

COAST EPISCOPALIANS WILL PRAY FOR CATHOLICS

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Prayers for the Christians in Mexico, especially the Catholics, will be offered in the Episcopal Church here tomorrow morning, according to Bishop Moreland of the Sacramento diocese.

CONGRESS EXPECTED TO SOLVE TROUBLES

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7. (AP)—The new Congress, which will be convoked September 1, is looked to in some Catholic circles for a solution of the religious crisis. Today, the eighth day that the religious regulations have been in effect in Mexico, passed quietly, like the preceding days, with no outward signs of the deadlock's being broken.

While in some quarters the expectation is that the new Congress will adopt less stringent religious regulations than those in force, there are some who believe that Congress may affirm its adherence to present regulations. The hope of Congressional modification is based on a Department of Interior announcement that it will submit to Congress a bill regulating the religious Article 130 of the Constitution.

The Regional Confederation of Labor, in reprisal for the boycott of the League for the Defense of Religious Liberty, designed to slow down business, has ordered its members not to pay rent to landlords who are supporting the boycott. The Regional Confederation is also considering other measures of reprisal, but at the same time declares that the league's boycott is not having a serious effect.

This many Catholic leaders deny, saying that in some sections trade is at an absolute standstill, and that the effects of the boycott throughout the country are worse than Mexico City is permitted to realize. Catholic worshipers visit the churches as pray, but only in ordinary numbers.

ANTIFOREIGN ASPECT GIVEN RELIGIOUS ROW

GUADALAJARA (Mex.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Religious disturbances here lately have taken an antiforeign aspect and considerable feeling is evident among the people, who charge that the movement against the Catholic church is a result of the actions of foreigners.

Americans and Englishmen are being openly insulted on the streets and antiforeign feeling is running high.

WOMAN KILLED IN CLASH WITH SOLDIERS

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7. (AP)—Special dispatches from Torreon tell of the death of a woman today from injuries received when crowds, made up largely of women, clashed with soldiers and police last Sunday when a municipal committee was taking over one of the churches. The woman, Senora Josefa Flores, was shot through both legs. A number of other women received minor wounds.

"MAN OF STEEL" RULING RUSSIA

Stalin Fights Communism for Efficiency

New Leader Gains Control of Mighty Power

Red Element Opposes Return of Steady Nation

ficers and sailors of the fleet, were reported executed for plotting.

Of even more importance is the widespread campaign Stalin has been carrying on against the incompetents in the public service and the economic service of the state. Most of the incompetents were Communist agitators, who took advantage of their places to indulge in waste, revelry and corruption. Several months ago Stalin burst out in fiery denunciation of them and ordered that state business be cleansed and made honest ad efficient. Since then there have been authentic reports of a sweeping out of such employees and severe punishment, even to death, visited on the worst of them.

INCREASES EFFICIENCY

With the Supreme Economic Council now under his control, the "big boss" is continuing this progress. Vladimir Kuybushev, a practical man who has increased efficiency on the nation's railroads, has taken over this department with instructions to carry out Stalin's policy of making Russia self-supporting industrially as well as agriculturally. Kuybushev's past record indicates that few Reds will remain in the economic structure when he has completed his work of reorganization.

This process, however, has turned loose thousands of skillful agitators with a grievance and they have stirred up so much trouble that the Central Executive Committee has been moved to resolve formally that "all opposition must be suppressed mercilessly."

We are thus likely to see some very dramatic events in the coming months. The opposition is pursuing an outwardly peaceful course, organizing as a faction in the Communist party with a view of carrying the elections in the autumn. But the Stalin regime charges it really contemplates counter revolution to win its ends and the government undoubtedly will take advantage of any excuse to break up the movement.

STALIN HOLDS WHIP HAND

In this conflict all the advantages lie with Stalin. He has concentrated enormous power in the hands of followers who are tied to him not only by personal interest but by personal regard and admiration for his talents. His career shows he is endowed with remarkable political genius of the manipulative type. He has been likened to the late Charles F. Murphy, the highly successful Tammany boss.

He took over the army two years ago when he ousted Trotsky from command. Later he took over the regular police forces. Now he has the secret police. He also has all sources of arms within his grip. So there is slight chance that the Communists can overthrow him unless they get aid from the outside or unless there is a formidable revolt in the army.

This latter eventuality is highly improbable because of the nature of Stalin's political power. While the old Lenin crowd may be able to swing a certain amount of influence against him among the "proletariat" in the cities he can array against them the power of the peasants, who make up 85 per cent of the population and of the army.

As I have told my readers before, Stalin has long seen that the real power in Russia must lie with the peasants and not with the "proletariat" of the cities. It was not to be expected that the 600,000 Communists of the cities, who formed the original revolutionary party, would long control the 125,000,000 or more of an agricultural nation. In fact, it is admitted on all sides that the soviets have held power so long only because the body of the peasants was afraid their overthrow would mean the return of the old nobility.

Stalin helped to make Lenin see this and Lenin agreed the future policy must be directed toward alignment of the peasants in favor of the new regime. Stalin, as secretary of the Communist party, later as the organizer of the Federation of Socialist Soviet Republics, and later still as boss of the party and state, has steadily directed his efforts toward the satisfaction of the peasant population. He has seen to it that the Russian farmers got ownership of land and freedom to work it.

Since private ownership of land is the exact opposite to public ownership—or Communism—it can be seen readily that the success of Stalin in the fight he has undertaken with the Communist leaders means the end of their experiment. How far the process already has gone under his leadership is indicated by the recent local elections, in which only 10,000 Communists were elected to office out of a total of 116,000.

WARSAW REPORTS REVOLT IN LENINGRAD

LONDON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—A dispatch from Warsaw to the Berlingske Tidende of Copenhagen declaring that military revolts have broken out in Leningrad and Kronstadt under the leadership of Leon Trotsky is quoted here by the Central News Agency. The London newspapers treat the report with reserve, pending further confirmation.

The Danish paper is quoted as saying the government buildings in both Leningrad and Kronstadt have been occupied by the revolters and a state of siege proclaimed. It is added that the cheka, or secret police, have taken measures to check the revolt and that ammunition dumps have been discovered near Leningrad. More than 1000 persons are said to have been arrested in Leningrad in the last few days.

COUNTER-REVOLT IN UKRAINE REPORTED

VIENNA, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—A White counter-revolution is raging against the soviet in the Ukraine, according to reports published in Bucharest newspapers.

According to these papers the Ukraine soviet government is in full retreat before the victorious advance of the Whites. The Black Sea fleet has joined the revolt and is bombarding the cities of the Crimean Peninsula. The Ukrainian government has ordered a general mobilization, which has caused a great panic. The flying corps is said to have sided with the soviet. These reports, which are not confirmed from the Russian side, probably were put forth by the Bucharest press as a pretext for the Rumanian mobilization in Bessarabia.

KITCHENER BODY SEARCH CLOSED

English Journalist Asserts He Has Found Remains

Unmarked Grave in Norway Gives Up Its Dead

Casket on Way to London for Official Action

by fishermen on the Norwegian coast in the summer of 1916, was that of 'a tall, well-built officer with an unusual uniform of greenish khaki of the best quality"—just like that which Lord Kitchener was wearing—"and a line of ribbons much tattered and discolored.'

My own conviction on the point had been much strengthened by information supplied me through a Scandinavian doctor, who, from local knowledge, confirmed these reports with the further statement that it was "a high military officer from the Hampshire."

Before taking any further action I compiled a list of the graves of British soldiers, sailors and Merchant Marine men in Scandinavia, I found several hundred. About half of these had never been identified and I can say that in a great number of instances no identification ever has been attempted.

The graves fall into three descriptions—those actually identified and marked by gravestones; those with a vague inscription "known unto God," those bearing a little piece of wood or stone as a marker; those that were merely mounds.

Some time ago a systematic search was made along the coast to find whether any of the unidentified bodies bore a resemblance to Kitchener. Sufficient evidence was forthcoming to show that such a body had been discovered by a fisherman who had taken part of the clothing and hung it in his hut.

With these things in mind I set out for Norway, taking with me the coffin made by the government for Kitchener before the first search for his body immediately after the accident.

Upon my arrival I began by making a prolonged investigation of all cemeteries where bodies recovered from the sea had been buried—at Farsund, Crajero, Fedje and elsewhere. After a careful search I at last discovered the grave to which local statements and other evidence pointed as that of Kitchener.

In the quest I received invaluable assistance from two of the men who found the body and gave it temporary burial beneath the stones of the shore, whence it afterward was transferred in a wooden casket to the cemetery. These men have signed their names to statements for me.

The grave had neither cross nor stone to mark it.

The substance of the long conversation which I held with the men, L. Johansen and H. Eversen, was that during the war they had occasionally found bodies which had been washed up on the shore of Southwestern Norway near the villages of Farsund, Egersund and Hidra. South of Egersund they found the body of a man lying with his head toward the sea and his legs up toward the cliffs.

The remains can be those of no other high officer on the Hampshire; I have determined that by elimination. The only member of Kitchener's staff who was not found and buried was Leslie Robertson—a much shorter and smaller man than the Field Marshal. Kitchener's tailor is prepared to vouch for the cloth on the body as being absolute proof of the identity apart from any other incontestable evidences.

He was a tall man, terribly bruised about the head and horrible to look upon. His uniform was much torn and Johansen, who saved a piece of it, said it was that of a very high officer. Johansen also saved a ribbon but had thrown it away before I went to Norway. Within a few yards of the spot where the body was found, was found the remains of a British sailor from the Hampshire whose name is acknowledged on the sailor's tombstone. At other points on the coast other bodies of sailors from the Hampshire were found.

I am depending upon very chief marks of identification discovered when I examined the body. They are as follows:

The fine stature, the mark of an old wound on the skin and the splendor corresponds with one Kitchener was known to have received; his dental work, which corresponds to the description of Kitchener's dentist.

Indianapolis maintains a watch tower on top of a skyscraper and in it three veteran firemen by day and night scan the skyline for the first sign of smoke which might mean a fire. As many as 300 fires are sighted in a year. One of the watchers, Henry O. Cook, has a record of having sighted, without binoculars, a fire thirty miles west of the city.

PRESIDENT'S KIN FIDDLES

Cousin Plays Second Violin in Country Orchestra as Dancers go Through Virginia Reel

WOODSTOCK (Vt.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive.)—John Wilder, 80-year-old uncle of the President, fiddled tonight when all the couples from the Plymouth Notch countryside assembled in the little hall over Miss Florence Cilley's general store for the big dance. Across the lane President Coolidge with Mrs. Coolidge beside him, sat on the porch of the Coolidge farmhouse and rocked and smoked and watched the figures of the dancers pass the windows above the back room of the general store, in which he was born.

Out on the night air floated the tunes of his boyhood, "Money Musk," "Turkey in the Straw," "Pop Goes the Weasel," "Listen to the Mocking Bird" and others as the dancers executed the Virginia Reel, Hull's Victory, Fisher's Hornpipe, Portland Fancy, the Paul Jones and Lady Washington's Reel, while above the strains of the music rose the resonant voice of his cousin, Herb Moore, calling the dance figures, "Balance to your partners," "Grand Right and Left," "Ladies' Chain," "Docey Do Two, Docey do Four," and "Swing Your Partners, all."

PLAYS SECOND FIDDLE

Uncle John Wilder played second fiddle to Lewis Carpenter's first; Mrs. Cassie Cady, wife of the tenant of the Coolidge farm, played the piano; and Clarence Blanchard the clarinet. At midnight Miss Cilley served a lap supper.

The President and Mrs. Coolidge were invited to the dance, but begged to be excused. The President was asked if he would be annoyed by dancing till midnight and said he would not and would enjoy it from the porch. As for himself he never has danced, a fact of which Plymouth Notch is well aware, for many were the dollars given him by his grandmother to stay away from the dances, for which he didn't care, anyway.

The dancers began arriving soon after supper, farmers and villagers for ten miles around, most of the older ones having known the President all their lives and many being distant kin. Relatives and acquaintances were allowed to approach the Coolidge home and shake hands and chat with the President.

The biggest news of the day at Plymouth Notch was the removal of any misgiving on the part of the inhabitants that their distinguished neighbor might have become citified and dandified since reaching the seats of the mighty. The President made his first appearance of the day at 6 a.m. He came to the door to let Prudence Prim, Mrs. Coolidge's dog, out. Early risers noted with satisfaction that the President was clad not in pajamas, but in the old-fashioned night shirt of the common people.

INSTRUCTS TENANT

After breakfast, Mr. Coolidge drove to the North Forty, where Lynn Cady, who works his 200-acre farm, was mowing hay. Leaving the mower, Cady tramped over the farm with Mr. Coolidge for two hours while the President inspected the corn and oats and discussed the returns from the milk of his fourteen Holstein cows.

The President gave his tenant instructions on future working of the farm and expressed satisfaction with the state of the crops and the dairying. The price received by the farmers of the neighborhood for their milk has gone up since the local co-operative-marketing association was formed, confirming the President in his contention that the extension of co-operative marketing promises the most enduring and satisfactory remedy for the ills of agriculture.

Last night former Gov. Proctor of Vermont and Mrs. Proctor called on the Coolidges. While they were there a bull owned by Ed and Clarence Blanchard, cousins of the President, got out of the barnyard and careened around Plymouth Notch. It was recaptured with considerable difficulty, but no casualties, the President viewing the operations from the front porch.

RUM BARON OF SOUTHLAND FLEES POLICE DRY DRIVE

Tony Cornero Sells Liquor Ships, Prepares for Quick Get-away; Clean-up Plans Revealed

Southern California's rumland, still echoing to the recent shots that ended the activities of two of its lesser inhabitants, today is leaderless. In the face of one of the greatest police offensives ever inaugurated against prohibition law violators in this section, Tony Cornero, for years czar of rumland, is ready to abdicate his throne and to this end is already preparing his holdings in a convenient form for a quick getaway, in the opinion of Chief of Detectives Cline.

"Cornero is going to duck and duck mighty soon," Chief Cline said last night, "and word reached me yesterday that he is selling his trucks, automobiles and other holdings to enable him to leave this section."

Chief Cline said the word received yesterday of Cornero's asserted preparations to quit Southern California and the booze racket that is estimated to have netted him in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, bears out a statement made several weeks ago by the rum baron.

"Several weeks ago Cornero told me he was going to quit the game in Los Angeles," Chief Cline said. "Tony then declared that things were breaking bad and it was getting too hot for him."

GENERAL EXODUS NEAR

While Chief Cline expressed confidence that the liquor chief is actually preparing for a departure, he emphatically declared Cornero's exodus, together with all gunmen, rum-runners and hi-jackers in Southern California, is but a matter of a short time.

"Chief of Police Davis is making no grandstand gesture in his announced drive against the liquor and gun-toting element," Chief Cline said.

Chief Cline then outlined the plan advanced by Chief Davis to wipe out the liquor-running and hi-jacking bands that have operated so fearlessly in Los Angeles and Southern California for the last several years, operations that have been marked by numerous gun battles between rival bands and more recently by the slaying of four members of the liquor-dealing underworld.

HIT AT RUM-RUNNERS

"The recently created squad under Inspector Finlinson and Capt. O'Brien will strike not so much at the bootleggers in town as at the rum-runners, either as they land their cargoes or as they are attempting to run them into the city," Cline said. "We shall also prosecute a rigid drive against gunmen and hi-jackers and we will make it so hot for them all that they will be glad to get away from here."

Chief Cline said Chief of Police Davis will augment the present squad as much and as rapidly as is found necessary to thoroughly dry up the city in so far as desperadoes and liquor dealers in the liquor traffic are concerned.

No credence is placed by Cline in the report that Chicago gunmen are flocking into the city and that local liquor barons are keeping out of sight as much as possible for fear of the activities of the incoming [illegible]. He indicated the belief that all local liquor leaders are certain that rumland is facing a "tough" period and are all preparing to leave as soon as possible.

FEDERALS GIVE AID

An agreement to exchange information about rum-running activities in gunmen and hi-jackers was entered into yesterday by Col. R. E. Frith, prohibition administrator for Southern California and Arizona, and Capts. Finlinson and O'Brien after a conference that also included Maj. Dunn, assistant dry chief in charge of enforcement, and [illegible] W. Anderson, head of the permissive division, in the prohibition headquarters, Frith said.

"While we have no definite charges in place against the heads of the known rum-smuggling clique of this district," said Col. Frith, "we intend to co-operate with the municipal authorities in supplying them with whatever facts we are able to learn about their movements. In return for this information we hope to obtain tips on liquor-landing expeditions that will permit out newly established custom-inspection unit to swing into action once they have been definitely selected by the Civil Service Commission and turned loose to operate."

RUMORS OF SPLIT

Rumors of a split between law-enforcement agencies investigating the Los Angeles war between rum runners and hi-jackers, which flared into life last Tuesday with the murders of Harry Schwartz and Harry [illegible], were rife yesterday. Chief of Detectives Cline denied knowing of such a split, but admitted that the police are working independently of the Sheriff's office.

Cline declared he would not want this admission to be construed as meaning the police are unwilling to co-operate with other law-enforcement agencies. The Federal prohibition forces are working simply on an enforcement angle, he added, and the Sheriff's office is working along a line apart from that being pursued by the police.

BOTH SIDES SUSPICIOUS

Despite Cline's denial, it was common gossip around police headquarters that deputy sheriffs suspect police officers of being involved in the activities of rum runners and hi-jackers, while the uncomplimentary suspicion likewise is held by the police toward members of the Sheriff's staff.

Cline stated yesterday that Ernest Schultz and Theodore Eggers, suspected of being the men responsible for Harry "Cuter" Moran's death in the St. Regis Hotel gun battle, in all probability have fled Los Angeles and are heading north. Both men, he declared, have been connected with hijacking and rum-running gangs along the Pacific Coast from Seattle south. Their photographs and fingerprints were sent yesterday to the International Bureau of Identification in Washington, D. C., and will be broadcast by that bureau over the country. Cline believes their arrest in a city other than Los Angeles will follow soon.

GUN-PERMIT LETTERS

Although all efforts by Sheriff's office attaches to trace the missing records of a permit to Tony Cornero to carry a revolver in Los Angeles were again declared a failure, Sheriff Traeger produced yesterday two letters, said to be from local bankers, which "carried influence" in obtaining for the rum baron the right to pocket a deadly weapon.

Each letter was dated June 4, 1925. One purported to be from Fred A. Follett. The other was signed with the name of A. H. Wollman. Both are managers of branch banks. Each letter was addressed to Undersheriff Biscailuz.

The Follett letter read as follows:

"The bearer of this letter, Mr. A. M. Cornero, is a client of this bank and handles large amounts of currency and checks.

"I have known Mr. Cornero for some time and my business relations with him have always been very satisfactory. I think he should be afforded protection and granted the privilege of carrying a weapon."

Authorship in part of the letter presented by Cornero was admitted by Mr. Follett last night, but he expressed doubt that the letter had been originally addressed to Undersheriff Biscailuz. He also denied knowledge of the recommendation that Cornero be granted the privilege of carrying a gun.

SECOND MISSIVE

The second letter, bearing Mr. Wollman's name, stated:

"Mr. Anthony M. Cornero is one of our bank clients, and makes big deposits in currency and checks almost daily.

"We have found this party at all times reliable and sober and feel that for his own protection as well as ours he should be granted the privilege of carrying a weapon for protection."

Certain peculiarities about the two letters bear significance. In each instance the name of the party to whom the letter originally had been addressed had been scratched out and Biscailuz's name substituted. The name of the undersheriff was misspelled and written in on a typewriter other than that with which the body of the letter was written. Also the word "privilege" was spelled in the Follett letter as "privelge" and in the Wollman letter as "privelage."

One attache of the Sheriff's office, when questioned about the substitution of names, remarked:

"Well, perhaps it was addressed to the Chief of Police and he refused to grant the permit."

FRIENDS OF JAILER GIVE HIM TOKEN

Frank Dewar Presented With Diamond Badge for Stopping Escapes

County Jailer Frank D. Dewar yesterday was presented with a diamond-studded badge as a token from numerous friends. The presentation of the badge was made by Sheriff Traeger who pointed out that yesterday was the day on which Robert Wilson, alias Moran, who escaped from the jail on March 16, was returned to the jail.

FRANK D. DEWAR

Dewar was appointed jailer after several prisoners had escaped. He, it was stated by the Sheriff, has reorganized the jail system to such an extent that no escapes have occurred since. The badge given Dewar contains thirty-three diamonds, one a large centerpiece.

Wilson was recently rearrested at Independence, Kan., and was returned to the County Jail yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Wilmot. He is one of several who is said to have confessed to a plot to hold up the guests at Silver Peak Lodge, near Pomona, and burn bridges after them as they left the lodge.

Life Savings Spent for Lot in City's Park

John Shenk, street-railway man of Des Moines, Iowa, came to the salubrious climate of Southern California to buy a ranch. His wife, he said, was in ill health and doctors had prescribed the open air for her.

Well, John Shenk arrived. And he bought a ranch. It cost him $3746 every bit of his life savings.

But the ranch, the police learned later, was located in Elysian Park, and all Shenk had as "security" for his money was one of those, old, old "gold" bricks, that have become immortalized in the history of America's "con" men.

Shenk told Detective Lieutenant Yarrow that the negotiations for the "ranch" were made with three men who met him at his hotel at 730 West Sixth street. After they had showed him the "ranch" a secluded section of Elysian Park, they gave him the "gold" brick, wrapped in brown paper as security. And then he discovered that his "ranch" was a city park and he went to the police for help.

Great Industrial Sports Program Formed for City

One of the greatest industrial recreation programs inaugurated in any city of the United States has been organized in Los Angeles by the Recreation and Athletic Association of Southern California, in collaboration with the Los Angeles Playground and Recreation Department. Initial membership includes a comprehensive list of manufacturing and public-utility corporations of the city and many hundreds of employees have been enrolled for activities that include forthcoming swimming meets, tennis tournaments, kitten ball leagues, volley ball leagues and other froms of competitive recreational sports.

The Los Angeles playground department is providing many corporations with equipment whereby the employees are given the opportunity of practicing sports.

Municipal playgrounds are opened on schedule for the athletic recreation and practice of members of the association, though many factories have opened athletic fields for their own workers and other plants are arranging to do the same thing. As a test Exposition municipal swimming pool is being opened evenings for industrial workers with such immediate response that probably other city pools will be similarly thrown open.

The Recreation and Athletic Association plans a swimming meet to be held the week of September 11, at either the Exposition or Eagle Rock municipal pool; a tennis tournament starting the middle of September, a baseball league that will be in full force next month and, shortly after, soccer league games. A kitten ball tournament is now under way with Saturday afternoon and Monday twilight games. A volley ball league is also starting its schedule.

Officers of the association are Robert S. Weaver, Weaver-Mason Company, president; J. F. Moran, Municipal Water and Power Department, first vice-president; William A. Kemmell, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, second vice-president; W. J. Kerwin, Southern California Telephone Company, third vice-president; LeRoy Brittingham, Municipal Engineers, secretary, and G. H. Grace, Pacific Electric Corporation, treasurer.

KENT HONORED BY INSTITUTE

Engineering Degree Given Head of Radio Company

Worcester Polytechnic Institute, one of the oldest institutions of technical education in New England, conferred the degree of Doctor of Engineering on A. Atwater Kent at its commencement last week, according to a statement by Ray Thomas, Southern California distributor of Atwater Kent products.

"Mr. Kent is one of the outstanding figures of radio today," Thomas stated. "He and his technical staff have been constantly doing research work on the scientific side of radio since the industry's earliest days. Atwater Kent sets of today are ample proof that the scientific discoveries of Mr. Kent's laboratory have been of immense practical benefit to the listening public.

"The degree conferred by Worcester Tech is a high honor indeed, and all who are privileged to know Mr. Kent take a personal pride in this new distinction that has come to him."

SUIT FACED BY SHERIFF IN ARREST

Widow of Burlingame Asks $50,000, Asserting Detention Uncalled For

Suit for damages of $50,000 for false arrest was filed against Sheriff Traeger yesterday by Dolores Burlingame, attractive young widow of William Burlingame. Burlingame, scion of a well-known California family, died recently, and the arrest of which his widow complains was made at his instigation.

An interesting legal point is involved in the case. Mrs. Burlingame had sued for divorce in San Mateo county. Later Burlingame sued her to replevin an automobile he said she had taken from him illegally and brought to Los Angeles. She declined to disclose where the automobile was and Burlingame procured her arrest.

C. A. Stice, her attorney, recalled an ancient provision of California law, protecting women from arrest in civil proceedings. He immediately applied for her release on this ground, and won.

As further basis for her claim for damages Mrs. Burlingame, in her complaint, charged that unnecessary force was used in her arrest, and related that two days later she was forced to undergo an operation for peritonitis, which had been aggravated by the incident.

DEVICES TO TEACH CHILDREN DISPLAYED

PUBLISHING HOUSES EXHIBIT METHODS OF TRAINING YOUNG MINDS

Illustrated cards and mechanical devices are included in an exhibition of text books and school supplies of nine publishing houses being displayed in Stowell and Hoose Halls of Bovard Administration Building of the University of Southern California, revealing many new methods of conducting classes in the public schools of today.

Cardboard clocks with movable hands; story-telling with scissors showing how tales and poems are graphically described by silhouettes; Spanish made easy for children with sentence-building blocks, with masculine words in red and feminine words in green; addition problems illuminated by a row of eight babies, a plus sign, and an additional baby preceding the equals sign, and toy money to be counted and banked; miniatures of staple goods in cardboard grocery stores to be purchased at regular prices with cardboard dollars, are among the devices to aid education for the child now being exhibited at U. S. C.

GABLES CONCOURSE EXTENSION BEGUN

STRUCTURE TO SERVE CLUB UNTIL MAIN BUILDING IS COMPLETED

Construction was started this past week on an addition to the concourse of the Gables Beach Club which will give the club a dining capacity of 500 persons and increased dancing space, it was announced this past week by President J. Ward Cohen.

A. T. Cummings, Santa Monica contractor, is in charge of the work and expects to have it completed within ten days. The new structure joins with the concourse terrace and will be built on piling, the entire structure being built over the water. It will be glass enclosed and is expected to care for the large membership until such time as the main club building is completed. Start of construction of this latter building is scheduled for October 15.

PERFECT SPINE WINNER PICKED

Chiropractors in Session Select Beauties

One Asserts Charlestoning Developed Vertebrae

Gland Substitution Rapped by Speaker

A pair of queens of backs walked off with the major honors in the perfect back contest finals yesterday in conjunction with the second annual convention of the Pacific Coast Chiropractors' Association.

They are Vivian De Barre, 21-year-old Los Angeles beauty, and Marian Wright, 18. Both underwent a thorough-going examination by a committee of chiropractors and Miss De Barre was awarded a silver loving cup for the most perfect back while Miss Wright carried off honors for the most perfect spine. They had competition from twenty-one other contestants but the judges were unanimous in their selection of sweepstake winners.

CHARLESTON HELPS

Miss De Barre attributed her victory to an athletic life, consisting of swimming, diving and dancing, and Miss Wright gave credit for her victory to the Charleston, which she declared has given her a perfect spine.

Today, the chiropractors will turn their attention to babies in an effort to select the most perfect child in the city as viewed from the back. There are almost 250 child and infant entries in the contest, according to Dr. Charles H. Wood, president of the Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, where the sessions are in progress.

Other winners in the back contest yesterday were Dell Bartlett, for carriage and personality; Miss Chase McDonald and Violet Bowen.

Several hundred chiropractors from all sections of the West attended the sessions yesterday. They were informed by speakers that chiropractic is the modern elixir of life and that frequent adjustments of the spine have done more than anything else in keeping patients young and fit.

HITS GLAND WORK

Among the speakers were Dr. C. E. Sheridan, Mrs. B. R. Claire Charles, Prof. Anthony, Dr. Norman Sprague and Dr. Wesley Barrett. Glands were discussed by Dr. Sheridan. Tampering with nature by the substitution of glands is a dangerous practice, he said, since glands of a guinea pig grafted on a human gave him or her some of the characteristics of the guinea pig and the glands of a monkey had a similar effect.

The annual class reunion, entertainment and ball were conducted last night.

Negro Nabbed After He Stabs Nut Merchant

An exciting chase through the alley-ways of the Terminal Market at 740 South Central avenue occurred late yesterday following the stabbing of Julius Helfand, 34 years of age, manager of the Los Angeles Nut Company, and resulted in the arrest of Clarence Krouse, 21, a negro of 1359 East Washington street, by Detective Lieutenants Jacks and Bergeron.

Krouse, according to Helfand's story to the detectives, attacked him with a knife a few minutes after he had been discharged from the merchant's employ. The detectives who were investigating another case at the market observed the fight from a short distance and attempted to break it up. Krouse, they said, made an effort to escape by dodging back and forth through the market.

Helfand was treated at the Receiving Hospital for minor stab wounds. Krouse was locked up on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon.

Veterans Plan Funeral Today for Film Actor

Spanish-American War veterans will conduct funeral services for Gordon Sackville, motion-picture actor who died Friday, at the Strother funeral parlors, 6240 Hollywood Boulevard, at 10 o'clock this morning.

Following the services the body will be sent to Big Bear, Mich., where Sackville was born, for burial.

CORONER SAYS GIRL COMMITTED SUICIDE

Katherine McGowan, 25 years of age, whose body was found in an apartment at 1984 Park Grove Place yesterday morning, died by her own hand, according to Detective Lieutenant Jarvis. Following an investigation Jarvis announced that police are convinced the young woman was despondent because of ill health, opened five gas jets and then lay down to die. Assistant County Autopsy Surgeon Webb stated that a post-mortem examination showed death due to asphyxiation from illuminating gas. Frank Lewis, who was arrested soon after the girl's body was discovered, was released.

FUGITIVE SOUGHT IN JEALOUSY SLAYING

Deputy Sheriff Sepulveda yesterday began a search for a man, whose name was not given, who is said to have shot and killed Felipe Garcia, 3717 Gleason street, Belvedere, at 218 South Indiana street. The slayer is said to have been jealous of Maria Perez who lived at the address, and to have thought that the dead man was visiting her. It was stated he was merely visiting friends there and scarcely knew the girl.

EXPANSION OF POWER ADVOCATED

Van Norman in Favor of Immediate Development of Water Resources

Further development of the city's water and power resources and the expansion of the systems for the handling of these supplies without delay, was advocated yesterday by H. A. Van Norman, assistant chief engineer of the Municipal Water Bureau, who strongly urged approval of the proposed water and power bond issues at the primary election the 31st inst.

Van Norman was in charge of the construction of important sections of the Owens River Aqueduct and has been William Mulholland's first assistant in the operation and expansion of Los Angeles' municipal water system for many years.

"Los Angeles has a habit of outgrowing its water and power supplies and distributing facilities as rapidly as they are made available," said Van Norman. "This, of course, is proof of our city's amazing development. It also places upon the Municipal Water and Power Bureaus the extraordinary task of keeping pace with these demands.

"It is obvious that the only practical and business-like method of financing these permanent extensions and developments is through the issuance of bonds, to be retired from Water and Power Bureau earnings over a period of years.

"All interest and annual principal charges on these bonds are paid out of the revenues of the Water and Power Bureaus. For this reason the voting of additional water and power bonds, as required, does not cost the taxpayers a single dollar.

"Of the $10,000,000 water-board issue, approximately $6,000,000 is required to carry through the city's water-bearing land purchases in Owens Valley, source of the Aqueduct's water supply. Possession of this land by the city is required to guarantee and safeguard its Aqueduct water supply."

Dr. Douglas Accepts Local Church Call

Dr. Lloyd C. Douglas, pastor of the First Congregational Church at Akron, O., has resigned his pastorate of that church to accept the invitation to become pastor of the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles, according to a message received yesterday by officials of the local church.

The invitation to Dr. Douglas was extended by the official board of the Los Angeles church following Dr. Douglas's visit here a few weeks ago when he supplied the First Congregational pulpit for two consecutive Sundays. Dr. Douglas will arrive in Los Angeles early in November.

A curious coincidence is the fact that Dr. Douglas, who will succeed Dr. Carl S. Patton at the local church, was Dr. Patton's successor as pastor of the First Congregational Church at Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1915. Dr. Douglas, who is a well-known chautauqua lecturer, has been pastor at Akron for the last six years.

OCEAN FLIGHT TO PROVE BOON

New York-to-Paris Dash May Open Up New Realm

Regular Lines Across Ocean Next Possibility

Great Capacity and Safety Important Angles

NEW YORK, Aug. 6. (Exclusive)—More bombs than the Germans dropped on London during the entire war could now be spilled from the heavens in a single flight of two such planes as that Capt. Rene Fonck, premier Allied ace, expects to fly from New York to Paris this month. This is the assertion of Col. Harold E. Hartney, who commanded the first pursuit group of American aviation in France and who now is vice-president of the Argonauts, the organization backing the Fonck flight. He says the machine would not fly at the lumbering speed of war-time bombers, but would rush their devastating freight through the air at 135 miles an hour, faster than the swiftest pursuit planes, carrying only machine guns and a fighting pilot, traveled in 1918.

"These statements may sound amazing," Col. Hartney said, "but they are based on figures used by Maj.-Gen. Mason M. Patrick, chief of the Army Air Service himself, in a recent lecture before students of New York University. Gen. Patrick declared not more than eight tons of explosives were dropped on London in the combined Zeppelin and airplane raids of the Germans.

GREAT CAPACITY

"The S-35, designed and built by Ignor Sikorsky for Capt. Fonck's flight, under normal condition, could fly 250 miles and return to her base after dropping four tons of explosives. During the flight she would travel at such speed as to be virtually invulnerable to antiaircraft fire and if necessary, could reach an altitude of 15,000 feet without the use of superchargers on her motors."

Col. Hartney explained that for the New York-to-Paris flight the S-35 will be given an extra wing section of twenty-four feet which will increase her fuel-carrying ability and therefore her range. This will reduce her speed to about 110 miles an hour. In this form, one military ship alone of her type, in a single flight, could carry the full eight tons of bombs that fell upon London, he said, but the factor of safety and fuel reserve would be less.

"To me," Col. Hartney continued, "the military importance of the S-35, great as it is in our scheme of national defense, is of but secondary significance. What the development of this plane means to commercial aviation is the great thing.

"There is every reason to believe Capt. Fonck and his two American aides, Lieut. Alan P. Snody and Capt. Homer Merry, will succeed in flying from here to Paris. Their success is mathematically certain, barring accidents and unforeseen weather conditions which might mean failure.

SAFETY FACTOR

"If they make it they will have flown 3660 miles without stop, carrying in addition to food for themselves, radio equipment and other special apparatus, a fuel reserve for more than 600-mile flying. That means they will have flown 1700 miles farther than Alcock and Brown did when they hopped across the Atlantic from Newfoundland to Ireland in 1919, and that they actually could have flown more than twice as far.

"But it means a lot besides. The S-35 from the moment she gets into the air at Roosevelt Field, L. I., weighing a gross total of 24,000 pounds, will be able, if necessary, to fly on any two of her three 425-horsepower Gnome-Rhone Jupiter aircooled motors. This is a factor of safety Alcock and Brown did not have and it makes the difference between a daring stunt, liable to utter failure through motor trouble, and a sound undertaking to demonstrate the increasing possibilities of modern aircraft. Commander Byrd relied on the same principle of safety from multiple motors when he flew to the North Pole and back.

"A nonstop flight from here to Paris means that a regular trans-Atlantic air service from Newfoundland to Ireland—the route blazed by Alcock and Brown—is now a practical business probability. The S-35 with her long-distance extension wing (the 101-foot span that Capt. Fonck will use) could make this trip with ease in eighteen hours on a regular performance basis carrying a 100 per cent fuel reserve and a pay cargo of mail or passengers up to 4000 pounds."

OPENS WIDE FIELD

Planes in such service, Col. Hartney said, always would have a safety margin of one motor to safeguard them against a forced landing in the sea should engine trouble develop, as engine trouble still does despite all the progress that has been made in aeronautical power planes. Normally, the third motor would lend the plane more speed or permit all three engines to be throttled to the most economical speed. If one balked it would be stopped and repaired in flight, while the other two held the plane up and carried it on its way at a slightly reduced speed.

"The public does not half realize the possibilities of this plane Mr. Sikorsky has built right here in the outskirts of our largest city," Col. Hartney declared enthusiastically.

"With its normal, high-speed wing (seventy-seven feet) the S-35 will be able to fly from New York to San Francisco without a stop from dawn to dusk, carrying ten passengers and 1000 pounds' additional pay load.

"This is the same flight Lieut. Russell Maughan made in 1923 in a standard army pursuit plane, carrying only himself and stopping several times en route for fuel. It is more than 2500 miles and the S-35 can average 135 miles an hour for the entire trip without overtaxing her motors.

REGULAR SCHEDULE

"The same plane, or another like her, could operate on a regular nonstop schedule between New York and Chicago on a five-hour basis. The over-night air mail between these same cities takes more than nine hours and operates in four relays. The Sikorsky plane would not stop at all and would carry several times the load of the present single engined air mail ships."

Col. Hartney believes the Newfoundland-Ireland service will be initiated within the next few years. He thinks the best plan at the beginning would be to send mail or passengers for the trans-Atlantic flight by train from New York to Montreal and thence in a single flight to New Foundland. The train journey could be made overnight in ten or twelve hours; the overland flight would take another six or seven and eighteen hours later the trans-Atlantic ship would be at its eastern terminal.

Smaller planes then would relay its cargo to London, Paris or other European airports. Thirty-six to forty-eight hours from New York to London and Paris instead of six days. The subject is worth some thought, air enthusiasts have spun fine dreams before but this vision has solid realities at its foundation.

LOW RENTS FOR CLERKS AT CAPITAL

Unnamed Promoter Gives Offer to Aid Government Workers at Washington

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (AP)—More than 60,000 Federal employees here were considering today the latest proposal to break the "high cost of rent" in Washington.

The offer, made by "a man of standing in the community" through the Commerce Department, would provide attractive apartments for the employees at a monthly rate of $12.50 a room, with bath free, within ten minutes of the business center of the capital.

Secretary Hoover called the chief clerks of the governmental departments together yesterday to outline the proposal. He asked them to obtain the employees' views on the support that the project would receive.

The idea, the Secretary said, "is to construct attractive apartments at charges simply covering cost of construction, operation, necessary interest, taxes and amortization charges."

The promoter, the department announced, "would carry out the transaction in the sense of public service without speculative profit." The architects and builders are known to be leaders in their respective fields.

The identity of the sponsor of the plan, described by government officials as a "man of wealth," was not revealed.

BLAST FEAR SHAKES VICTIM

Marines Who Went Through Lake Denmark Explosion Found in Crazed Condition

TOLEDO, Aug. 7. (AP)—His memory gone, his nerves unstrung and his heart aching for home, Oliver C. Bliss, 18 years of age, Waterville, O., nestled in the arms of his mother today trying to piece together events which have happened since July 10, when lightning struck the Picatinny Army Arsenal, Lake Denmark, N. J., and with him, blindly groping through the misty haze of a lost mentality, Paul W. Moreau, 21, New Britain, Ct., is sharing hospitality of the Bliss home.

The two marines, both shell-shocked, were found at the interurban station today by Verne Bliss, Oliver's father. First indication that the men were at Toledo came yesterday, when a cousin, Ralph Bliss, reported he had seen Oliver on a Toledo street. Search for Bliss immediately was instituted. The father, going to the interurban station this morning, recognized Bliss.

REPULSES FATHER

When found, Oliver denied his identity to his father. "Hello, Oliver," the lad's father said, as he seized him by the hand.

"Get away. My name ain't Oliver."

"Why, sure, you're Oliver Bliss, my boy. Don't you know me?" the old man asked, his heart torn with emotion.

"No, I don't know you, and if you don't leave us alone, I will call a policeman and have you arrested for molesting us," the boy retorted.

After a bit of coaxing, Mr. Bliss and Henry Gomoll, uncle of Oliver, persuaded the boy to accompany them.

It was more than an hour before Oliver recognized any of his relatives and then only intermittently.

Neither of them could say how they got to Toledo, but the father said he believes they walked. Oliver had $1.75 in his pocket and Moreau 75 cents.

FEARS EXPLOSION

A huge hole in the back yard of the little farm causes Oliver to shudder and cling to his mother, sobbing and crying that the ammunition will explode again. Mrs. Bliss, her eyes filled with tears, holds her boy to her bosom much like she did when he was just a mite of a lad and tries to comfort him.

"It was the hand of God that directed my boy to Toledo," Mrs. Bliss said as tears of joy streamed down her face. "No, I don't notice any change in Oliver."

Oliver's account of the explosion which destroyed the ammunition depot is hazy.

"We had been swimming at Mount Hope," Oliver said. He paused a minute. "A storm was coming up, and it was lightning hard. And then I remember a flash and a terrific explosion. I was lifted up off my feet into the air, and that's all I can remember," and he shook his head as if he were trying to loosen thoughts in his mind.

ALL HE REMEMBERS

"We were about one mile from the barracks," Paul replied when asked how near they were when the first crash sounded. "That's all I can remember, is the first crash."

When asked what his mother's first name is, he thought pensively and drawled: "Augusta, I guess," and then added, "I think so, I saw that some place today."

Both boys are officially reported missing by the Marine Corps in Washington. They were taken to Detroit late today where guards will be supplied and they will be sent to the United States Army Hospital in Washington.

Shoot to Kill Order in Strike at Fish Plant

MONTEREY, Aug. 7. (AP)—With unrest increasing in the Italian quarter this afternoon as a result of the scuttling of two launches last night, the F. E. Booth Company, leader in attempts to break the sardine-fishing strike here, placed five armed watchmen on guard at its local plant.

The guards, deputized as special city police, were ordered to shoot to kill if any attempt was made to harm the company's property, according to Joseph Alves, assistant superintendent in charge of the plant

—GAYLORD WILSHIRE

By GAYLORD WILSHIRE
Inventor of the I-ON-A-CO
Founder of Wilshire District

It is only human nature to doubt the things which lie outside of one's own personal experience. For instance, a man who had never seen nor heard a radio, would probably declare it was a fake. Yet you and I know it operates.

Now the I-ON-A-CO is no more marvelous than the radio. Both are based upon scientific principles. And as proof of the results which the I-ON-A-CO is producing every day, I ask you to visit the offices of Wilshire I-ON-A-CO. Experience these results for yourself. Take a delightful 10 minute treatment.

I can think of no fairer, no more reasonable way, of demonstrating what the I-ON-A-CO will do.

IMMIGRATION ISSUE FLARES

"National Origin" Plan May be Thrown Out

Congress to Get Question at Winter Session

Radical Revision of Quotas Causes Trouble

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Readjustment of immigration quotas on a "national origin" basis as provided by the Immigration Act of 1924 may never be made effective.

The whole subject is to be reopened at next winter's session of Congress, according to Representative Johnson, Republican, Washington, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration.

Representative Johnson is doubtful if the commission in whose hands rests the working out of the national origin quotas will be able to present a satisfactory plan. In any event, he intends that the House Immigration Committee shall go into the entire question exhaustively.

The 1924 act provided that the national origin system should go into effect July 1, 1927. The plan calls for a pro rating of 150,000 quota immigrants, according to the origin of the peoples resident in the United States at the time of the 1920 census. Such a scheme would represent a radical departure from the quota system now in effect, under which all certificates are made on the basis of number of foreign-born persons resident in this country. Giving consideration to the origin of ancestors of persons born here would mean that quotas from certain countries, notably Great Britain, would be greatly increased, while others would be sharply reduced.

EXPERTS AT WORK

As the situation is shaping up, the national origin provision of the law may be nullified either by its repeal by Congress next winter or by failure of a commission comprised of the Secretaries of State, Commerce and Labor to work out a satisfactory set of quotas. Experts attached to the commission are at work and hope to complete recommendations in time to present them to President Coolidge before Congress convenes in December. The law provides that after the commission works out the quotas the President on or before April 1, 1927, shall issue a proclamation making them effective on July 1. There is a clause in the law, however, which provides that if for any reason no proclamation is issued, the old quotas system shall remain in effect. Some members of Congress apparently believe that this may be the outcome even if the provision is not repealed.

The quota system now in effect is on the basis of 2 per cent of the number of foreign-born individuals resident in continental United States as determined by the census of 1890. The minimum quota of each country is 100. The total of all quotas is 164,667. The national origin system reduces the total by more than 14,000, besides upsetting the ratios now in effect.

TABULATIONS MADE

While no official set of quotas under the national origin system thus far has been worked out, two unofficial tabulations have furnished a basis of discussion. One of them was submitted by Senator Reed, Republican, Pennsylvania, author of the national origin provision, while it was under discussion in the Senate in 1924. The other was prepared by John B. Trevor of New York. Differences between the two indicate the possibilities for controversy in working out the quotas. The two tabulations, however, are enough alike to show in a general way the effect on quotas of the larger European countries.

The present annual quota for Great Britain and North Ireland is 34,007, which represents about one-fifth of total quotas from all countries. Under the national origin system, according to the Trevor estimates, the quota for Great Britain and North Ireland would be boosted to 85,135, or considerably more than half of all quotas.

The Irish Free State quota now is 28,567. Under the national origin system, according to the estimate, it would be reduced to 8330.

Germany now has a quota of 51,227, which is the largest of any of the countries. It would be cut to 29,028 under the Trevor estimate.

Other European countries which would suffer reductions in quotas similarly, include Sweden, which would be cut from 9561 to 3072; Norway, from 6435 to 2053; Poland, from 5982 to 4535; France, from 3954 to 1772; Czecho-Slovakia, from 3073 to 1359; Denmark, from 2789 to 945, and Switzerland, from 2081 to 783.

Countries where quotas would be increased include Italy, which now has 3455 and under the Trevor national origin table would have 5716; Russia which would be boosted from 2485 to 4002, and The Netherlands from 1648 to 2762.

Announcement of official proposed quotas under the national origin system is certain to provide a bitter controversy. If the announcement is made by the time Congress convenes it unquestionably will give impetus to the movement for repeal of the national origin provision.

Members of the House who figured prominently in immigration legislation in 1924 did not champion the national origin provision but accepted it in the final conference report in order to end a sharp difference of opinion between the two houses and obtain the enactment of some sort of a measure.

It is believed likely that Representative Johnson will lead a movement for the repeal of the national origin provision and that he will be backed by the House Immigration Committee.

The House went on record against the national origin scheme in 1924 in defeating an amendment offered on the floor by the late Representative Rogers, Republican, Massachusetts. The bill as it passed the House did not include any such provision. The national origin provision was offered by Senator Reed on the floor of the Senate and was adopted after being amended. The conferees of the Senate and House finally accepted it after a further revision.

Opponents of the plan contend that it never received proper consideration. They point out that it was not discussed by anyone at the hearings of the House Immigration Committee during the reading of the 1924 act and that Mr. Trevor was the only witness to urge its adoption before the Senate Immigration Committee. In view of this situation, consideration of the bill next winter promises to furnish one of the chief controversies of the session.

OKLAHOMA ROAD LAWS WIERD

Older Rules Specified Autos Must be Painted Color of Scenery

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—During one of the early sessions of the State Legislature, Senator R. E. Stafford of Oklahoma City introduced a bill setting out rules to be observed by motorists in the public highways. According to former Senator O. J. Logan, it provided that when a motorist was about to meet a horse-propelled vehicle he should move far to the side of the road, stop, climb out and stand between the car and the horses until the latter had passed. Several amendments were offered, Logan says.

One provided that the car should be painted the color of the scenery in the country through which it passed. Another commanded that the motorist on reaching the intersection of highways should stop and honk the horn for one hour.

Charlestoning Too Strenuous for Mexicans

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7. (AP) — The Department of Health has issued orders forbidding the dancing of the Charleston in public dance halls. The ground taken is that it constitutes such violent exercise that it is likely to cause heart failure.

The department order adds that the dance is ugly and ungraceful; that it consists of contortions and the loosening of the joints, which are prejudicial to health and that it is antagonistic to all artistic appearances.

The department's control is only over dance halls where admission is charged. It has, however, appealed to cafes and organizers of private balls to abandon the Charleston for the foregoing reasons.

ANGELENO BITTEN BY SNAKE AS HE SLEEPS

BAKERSFIELD, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Nick Hollman, 755 East One Hundred and Tenth street, Los Angeles, was bitten by a rattlesnake, yesterday while sleeping on the ground in the mountains south of Bakersfield. He lay down on the ground to sleep after a hunting expedition in the hills and while resting the snake struck him on the thumb. First aid was given by persons on the Cuddy ranch where he was hunting. He then was rushed to Bakersfield for treatment at the Mercy Hospital. Dr. W. H. Moore, who is attending him, said that his entire arm is in a serious condition. Mr. Hollman is an employee of the General Petroleum Company at Lebec. His wife accompanied him to Bakersfield.

two things are necessary for a happy Vacation.
Safe Money and personal Service
American Express Travelers Cheques supply both

The carrying of loose money in your pocket is a temptation to criminals and a danger to yourself. Lost or stolen money is rarely recovered.

American Express Travelers Cheques are known everywhere. They are accepted as cash at ticket offices, hotels, resorts, banks, garages, etc.—practically everywhere. About the size of a dollar bill, sky-blue in color, they are easy to get—convenient to carry. They come in $10, $20, $50 and $100 denominations; and they cost only 75 cents per $100—a mere "tip", but a tip that gives you peace of mind wherever you go.

You simply sign your name in one corner when you buy them. When you spend them you sign your name a second time, in the presence of the acceptor. The agreement of your two signatures is your identification. If these Cheques are lost or stolen you get their value back.

Everyone should carry them on every trip. They are especially desirable for vacationists, motorists and women traveling alone with children. They are absolutely necessary for a really happy vacation.

You can buy them at 22,000 banks, American Express and American Railway Express Offices.

OURNALISM IN ROLE FOR PEACE

ute of Politics Hears of International Project

Move Described by Associated Press Chief

Inspired by Parade of Allied Troops in Paris

WILLIAMSTOWN (Mass.) Aug. 7.—"all-inclusive" journalism power for international and for the spread of public were described in an address today by Kent Cooper, general of the Associated Press, at Institute of Politics.

Mr. Cooper declared that the history of today is found in newspapers that it is upon the facts presented by the Associated Press dis that the judgments of 80,- readers are swayed toward and nations.

related how the impressive of the Allied troops as they under the Arch of Triumph in 1919, inspired the idea "all-inclusive" journalism, was the belief that in the of journalism something could to bring to the people of country a better understanding conditions of life abroad. The impressed him with the that merely the change of would have fitted any of one nation into the ranks other nation, leading to the that men throughout the who had fought each other, believed they had nothing in common with their enemies only because there was no "day by day information to newspapers, broadly, that told them of the simple happenings among the millions."

IDEA CARRIED OUT

"And so today," said the speaker, "when you read a brief little cable from some Associated Press man in a byway of Europe, some little happening that you think of trifling importance to you, interested as you are in the views of statesmen, remember this: That unfortunately there are millions of newspaper readers who have not yet the degree of interest that you have in foreign affairs and who will not read of what statesmen are doing but will read, easily enough, of some picturesque happening in which the only actors are in the same walks of life with the reader who is remote from that occurrence.

"I contend that the commendable intent is to interest people in the world in which we live. The larger the interest the more thoroughly will the information be absorbed and the more general and the more enlightened will be the public opinion on matters of prime importance."

USED AND REPAIRED DOGS FREE

STOCKTON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—A local veterinary, having a number of cats and dogs to give away, adopted the following unique manner of describing these animals to the public: Several cats and dogs brought in for repair during the past year. Bobtail malemute, long wheelbase, gone less than 30,000 miles. Japanese shepherd, high speed, guaranteed fast color. Alaskan airedale pup. Almost new. A snap for somebody. Spitz, white speedster, gone less than 500,000 miles. Maltese poodle, short wheelbase. Excellent on hills. Brindle hound. Wonderful pick-up. One look will convince you. Mongolian spaniel. Guaranteed durable. Will go anywhere and does. Combination terrier. You will want no other dog for five years. Crossbreed bull. Take him and you will never want another dog as long as you live. Norway-Swiss hound. Assembled job. Running gear in good order.

Employees of Vatican Given Pay Increase

ROME, Aug. 7. (AP)—Pope Pius has approved a new scale of wages for Vatican officials and employees, drawn up by a special commission of cardinals, whereby their pay will be brought to a figure equaling five times that received before the war. At the same time the Pontiff expressed a desire that the working day of the employees be increased, effective in October. At that time the working day, which seldom amounts to more than three hours' actual toil, will be lengthened to five or six.

The new wage scale will burden the annual Holy See budget by between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 lire.

Recently there has been agitation among the Vatican employees for increased pay, some of the gardeners going so far as to declare a strike.

ADAM REED, EXPERT ON FEET, DIES

Well-Known Specialist in Pedal Ailments Succumbs to Injuries at Long Beach

LONG BEACH, Aug. 7.—Dr. Adam Reed, inventor of the Reed cushion-sole shoe, and considered one of the foremost foot specialists in America, is dead here at the age of 76 years. He had been a resident of Long Beach for the past three years. Dr. Reed's death is said to be indirectly due to injuries received last September in an automobile accident. Five weeks ago he was forced to take to his bed and his condition grew steadily worse from that time.

Dr. Reed was born in Buffalo, N. Y., March 10, 1850. He began early in life the study of foot aliments and, while practicing as a foot specialist at St. Joseph, Mo., thirty years cialist, he perfected what has since become nationally known as the Dr. Reed cushion-sole shoe.

Dr. Reed served as a drummer in the Civil War with the Sixty-fifth Regiment of Buffalo. He was an active worker in the G.A.R. and organized the drum corps of the Long Beach post.

He leaves his widow, Mrs. Claire Reed of 3009 East Fifth street, this city, and one son, David A. Reed, secretary-treasurer of the Dr. Reed Shoe Company of Los Angeles.

Funeral services are to be held Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the undertaking chapel of L. R. Comera & Co., Long Beach. The place of interment has not been selected by members of the family.

WILL IRWIN RIDDLES CAMERON'S DENIALS

Noted Author of Colorado Expose Retorts to Arizona Senator's Charges in Congress

BY WILL IRWIN

SCITUATE (Mass.) [To the Editor of The Times:]—As a manipulator, Senator Cameron of Arizona has my honest admiration. Readers of The Los Angeles Times may remember that I have just published a series of six newspaper articles on his singular career, and his unparalleled position in our scheme of government. I expected, of course, some kind of comeback. But Senator Cameron held his peace. Now a dignified silence does not somehow fit my picture of the statesman from Arizona; and I got much innocent diversion by speculating on the point where he was going to strike. He did the unexpected, and in most dramatic fashion. By what trading in cloakrooms and chambers I know not, he got exclusive possession of the Senate floor during the last valuable hour of the session and used that time for his answer to my charges.

Only those who know the ways of the Senate and the present state of Arizona politics can fully understand the beauty, utility and ingenuity of Senator Cameron's method. Had he made that speech in the middle of the session, probably half a dozen opposition Senators would have risen and sheared through his rhetorical evasions to the main issue. And if, for any reason, the Senate had failed of this, he would certainly have received his answer in the House, where Compson of Michigan already has torn the hide off him.

But Cameron so managed things that when the gavel of Vice-President Dawes rapped an end to the session, he was still talking. No one can answer him in kind until the rump session of next November, by which time the political future of Senator Cameron may be a matter of no importance. In the meantime Senator Cameron will run for re-election. And this speech, in spite of its transparent evasions, its utterly false counter-charges, makes a useful campaign document. It is aimed in every sentence not at the United States Senate, but at the voter of Arizona.

Matter appearing in the Congressional Record is "privileged." The author of a speech in this sacrosanct publication, the printer or editor who reproduces that speech, stands exempt from the law of libel. A Senator or Representative willing to abuse the privileges of his office can introduce into the record any lie, no matter how damaging; the only way the lie can be set right is by the answer of another Senator or Representative. Through his device of getting the last hour in the session Senator Cameron has rendered such answer impossible until after the November election. That is the point, always the point—the election.

The structure of thought under Senator Cameron's hardy frontier rhetoric is so wobbly that I find it hard to make a cold and logical analysis of his counter-charges. But here, in a general way, is what he seems to be saying:

WHAT HE CHARGES

There is a plot against him. The head and front of the cabal are Hon. Stephen T. Mather, superintendent of National Parks; Harry Chandler, publisher of The Times, "the gentleman who is to be my opponent in the election" — meaning probably Representative Cary Hayden of Arizona—and the copper interests. I, "needing the money," am merely the poor, weak tool of these sinister conspirators. I was hired with the dirty money of the copper interests to write the series attacking Senator Cameron. For months and perhaps years these sinister persons kept investigators, "working in pairs," on his trail.

The conspirators, as created by Senator Cameron, wobbled a bit in their main intention. First, it seems to have been a mixture of revenge and desire to thwart Senator Cameron's benevolent intentions toward the Colorado River. But it degenerated in the end to blackmail. Emissaries of the conspirators, Senator Cameron charges, visited him in his office and offered to "kill" these articles for $20,000. The Senator, instead of turning the blackmailers over to the police, instead of unmasking them in the Senate—before the last hour—told them in his frank, manly, western way to go to hell.

THE FACTS

Now what are the facts?

In the autumn of 1925, Senator Cameron was coming under fire. Harold Baxter, special prosecutor of the Department of Justice, had for the moment raised the curtain on his operations along the Colorado. The impending expose had begun to attract some attention. Even certain New York newspapers sent reporters to Arizona; some of their stories were perhaps as damaging, in inference, if not in fact, as my own. A large newspaper syndicate, of which the Los Angeles Times is a member, smelled copy in all this. After preliminary investigation, they sent for me proposing that I write for them a series of articles on Senator Cameron and his relations with Colorado River development. The management picked me, I suppose, partly because I had written for them before and partly because as an old-timer of the Far West, I know something about the mining game.

I ran through the evidence, satisfied myself that Senator Cameron's activities should be ventilated for the public good and accepted the commission. To the best of my memory this happened during the first week of last October.

I found the story so complicated as to need considerable investigation. With two other men, I undertook that task. One of my associates, who had also done the preliminary job of finding whether "there was a story in Cameron" worked in Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia and other Eastern cities. I took care of New York and Boston and made two trips to Washington. The third man went to Arizona. This constituted the corps of investigators "working in pairs" to which Senator Cameron refers. My two associates showed unusual acumen in getting at the facts; and we all had extraordinary luck. When I looked over the material I felt that in twenty years of free-lance national journalism I had never before seen such complete proof of a big story. We had Cameron forty-seven ways from the jack. Best of all, the strongest evidence did not depend upon mere uncertain human memory but on documents—many in Cameron's own handwriting.

Now as to my own heavy emoluments from the copper interests—or someone. For my work on the investigation I received the per diem fee which I always charge when I undertake that kind of work.

I received about $2500 for my services in writing and investigating the Cameron expose. That is all speaking commercially—I ever got out of it, all I expect to get. I can show any interested party the canceled checks. They are drawn by my newspaper employers, not by the copper interests.

THE "BLACKMAIL"

Now as to the blackmail charge, so blithely and carelessly fired by Senator Cameron from behind the entrenchment of Senatorial privilege. Senator, who among us conspirators "sent emissaries" offering to withdraw the story for $20,000? Surely not Stephen Mather. In your speech you dwell upon Mr. Mather's accumulated millions, the luxury in which he lives and travels. A mere $20,000 would be nothing to Mr. Mather in comparison with his sweet revenge. Surely not Mr. Chandler; and for much the same reason. You yourself have spoiled a page of the Congressional Record in describing his wealth and his personal stake in the Colorado. Surely not Mr. Hayden. He did not even know we were investigating Senator Cameron until our investigation was well on its way. And after we saw him, he showed an understandable aversion to having anything to do with the story. He felt, I suppose, that to assist us would seem like hitting his opponent in the dark. Surely not the newspaper syndicate. It comprises a hundred large American newspapers, fifty large foreign newspapers. If such a combination is stooping to pick up $20,000 in blackmail money, an average of less than $150 gross per member, then is the palladium of our liberties rotten indeed, and the sooner Trotsky or Mussolini comes and takes us, the better. But the remaining conspirator, the "magazine writer who needed the money"—meaning me—

Well, nowhere in his speech does Cameron say that I am the particular conspirator who tried to touch him off for $20,000; but with a subtlety astonishing in this direct western character, he suggests it. By means of my clipping bureau, I find that certain pro-Cameron newspapers in Arizona have translated the Senator's hints into fact.

No, Senator, I didn't try to blackmail you or offer to withdraw the story for $20,000. Pardon me if to you, who have called me a liar, I retort "You're another" and doubt if anyone tried to blackmail you. If I had, I would be a deeper-dyed crook than even the villain of your imagination. For the story was never mine either to print or to suppress. It belonged, in law and professional custom, to the syndicate which started the investigation. And the vital documents were locked up in a safe to which I had no access. Had I offered to withdraw these articles on payment of $20,000 or $2 I should not only have committed blackmail; I should have been offering for sale goods which I did not possess. My family tells me that I should feel indignant over this charge—the foulest crime in journalism. But every time I think about it, I laugh—it is so absurd.

When one dips his hands into such muck as surrounds the career of Senator Cameron, he must do business with devious characters. It is possible that some crook or another, knowing of these articles and perhaps underestimating the Senator's worldly wisdom, crawled into the Senatorial office and professed the ability to stop their publication. Possible; but not likely. It is much more likely that the honorable Senator from Arizona, looking for a counter-charge as a smoke-screen and having the protection of the Congressional Record, lit upon blackmail as a nice, damaging and credible charge to bring against a journalist. It is how his mind would work.

Now—briefly as it deserves—to the substance of Cameron's defense.

He spends much of his speech in approving his course in the Grand Canyon during the years when he was fighting the Santa Fe for control of the tourist trade. There is nothing new in this stuff. For two decades, Cameron has made political capital of his struggle against a great corporation.

That, after all, is the least important part of my series, "Cameron and the Colorado." I inserted an account of his Grand Canyon ventures mostly by way of showing how this man had for thirty years played the game of running oreless mining claims over land which someone else intended to use for other purposes; and so leading up to the really important thing—his present hold on the great damsites of the Colorado. When it comes to that point Cameron grows hazy; his answer to my charges is no answer at all. He speaks of the valuable mining claims which he and Mr. Stetson hold on the Colorado. He does not even try to explain away the fact that he, Mr. Stetson, or their agents, have often called these holdings not a mining proposition, but a power proposition. He does not explain the extraordinary coincidence by which these claims—laid side by side along twenty-five miles of the river—cover exactly the area wanted by the government and the Southern California Edison Company for the sites and reservoirs of Boulder Canyon, Black Canyon and Bullshead Canyon dams. That much and no more; the rich placer deposits which he and Mr. Stetson say they have found begin where these dam locations begin, end where they end.

He does not explain away that other miraculous fact; that the one lode claim which he, Stetson, and their associates have located in this region runs straight across the site of the proposed Bull's Head Dam. He does not mention my charge that nearly half of these claims were located after the land was withdrawn from entry by the government; said claims being recorded and allowed mostly by appointees and political henchmen of his own.

He does not even allude to that singular financial venture, the United States Platinum Company. This passage in the story, as printed a few weeks ago in The Times, includes a most curious case of mine-salting. Senator Cameron must at least suspect who salted the United States Platinum samples; but he refuses to satisfy my burning curiosity. Who salted United States Platinum, Senator? And how did it happen that Louis Van Riper, convicted financial crook and blue-sky promoter, sold its stock on the Boston market?

Finally and most significantly he says no word about the sack, the curious slush fund, which insured his election to the United States Senate. That seems to me the most damaging count in the indictment. I showed that he and Mr. Stetson were virtually partners in a scheme to throw mining claims across the Colorado River on areas which the government or private corporations wanted for other purposes. I showed that since they were in conflict with the Federal government, a little influence at Washington would help greatly. I showed that persons close to Mr. Stetson contributed between $50,000 and $60,000 to the Senator's primary and general campaigns. The proof in this last instance was the best possible bank statements and Western Union telegrams exchanged between Cameron and H. N. Williams, Mr. Stetson's secretary. And Cameron, swearing in his election expenses, deposed with his characteristic blithe audacity that he spent only $2000 in both campaigns, and that he received no contributions whatever!

This is a very damaging accusation; especially to the ears of a Senate which has been growing of late a trifle sensitive about excessive campaign contributions from persons who wish to influence legislation. And Cameron answers with silence, complete silence. He missed a trick there, I think. He already has accused me of blackmail. Why didn't he accuse me of forgery also—say that I wrote those Western Union telegrams and appended his name? The two charges would have been equally easy to invent; and ensconced behind the immunities of the Congressional Record, equally protected from disagreeable comebacks. He doesn't even mention Harold Baxter once special prosecutor of fraudulent claims along the Colorado River. Will the Senator from Arizona, when he returns next autumn to the rump session of the Senate, explain why this faithful and honest public servant lost his job so suddenly?

He has dodged everything vital, but after all the poor, trapped devil had to say something. The futility of his answer merely proves that he has no adequate defense; the loudness of his howl, how deeply he is stung. Yet that speech, with its smoke-screen of counter-charges, rhetoric and sentimentality, is doubtless the very heart of his bid for re-election. He and his orators will shout it forth from every platform in the State of Arizona. Will the voters fall for it? If they do, they will vindicate H. L. Mencken's opinions concerning the boobery of the American people.

HAUNTING EYES BRING FORTH FRENZIED TALE OF TRAGEDY

ORLEANS (France) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Mme. Rose Levque, a pretty peasant from the little village of St. Avit, yesterday sobbed out a story worthy of a Greek tragedy at its starkest.

When her 5-year-old daughter, Lucienne, was found strangled in a hay loft in 1922, the child's father, Pierre Levque, confessed that he did it to shield his wife, believing she did it in an infanticide fit of madness when about to give birth to a second child.

So piteous was the father's state of mind that the jury condemned him only to five years of solitary confinement.

Yesterday Mme. Rose threw herself at the feet of the prosecutor, after four years of mental torture, and said she knew all the time that her 69-year-old mother strangled little Lucienne because she was too niggardly to support a second grandchild.

"I had to let Pierre bear the blame, mama's eyes haunted me so," the young mother said. "I wandered like a wild beast in the forest in recent months and Pierre's eyes began to haunt me, too. I must make a choice—mama did it."

Pierre Levque will be freed, while his aged mother-in-law has been clamped in jail.

CASH GIVEN SPOUSE NOT TAX EXEMPT

Board Rules Wife Cannot Pay Husband and Deduct as Business Expense

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (AP)—A wife who contracts with her husband to give him half her income cannot deduct that amount as a business expense from her taxable income, the Board of Tax Appeals held today.

The decision was given in the case of Mrs. Edwyna Applebye Robinson of New York, who explained that she and her husband, a sea captain, agreed upon their marriage in 1900 that she would give him half of her income and pay half of the home expenses if he gave up the sea.

Testimony showed that all was lovely until the husband heard the call of the sea again as a result of his experiences in the Navy in wartime. The contract, meanwhile, had been destroyed in a fire but another was signed, reading:

"I hereby agree, for value received and on condition that my husband, William Applebye Robinson, gives up the seafaring profession and takes up no other that will take him away from home, to divide all monies coming to me from every source whatever, share and share alike, he to take half, and I to take half, as long as we live together; all home and other expenses to be shared equally."

Under her mother's will, Mrs. Robinson was paid $12,645 in 1920. She gave half to her husband but the board held that the entire amount was income and taxable against her.

Break in Levee Inundates Rich Delta Acreage

STOCKTON, Aug. 7. (AP)—More than 3600 acres of rich delta agricultural land in the Sherman Island district, twelve miles north of here, were under ten feet of water today as the result of a break in the right bank of a levee bordering the San Joaquin River. No loss of life was reported, but ten ranch houses were said to have been submerged.

Workmen were recruited here to aid the more than 400 men who are rebuilding the break in the levee. Special pumping equipment has been sent to the scene. It was estimated it would take several days to repair the break and drain the flooded area of water.

The break was said to have been started when workers bored into the levee in order to get an added flow of water with which to combat a grass and brush fire, which was sweeping over a large ranch.

ATTORNEY WILL OPPOSE HAYDEN

Rutherford Policy Backs River for Arizonans

Hunt's Democrats Drive for Cameron

Republican Revolt May Stem Insurgents

PHOENIX, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The Hunt and Highline element of the Democratic party has succeeded in finding a candidate for United States Senator, to oppose Carl Hayden. The new light is Charles H. Rutherford, a Phoenix attorney, recently removed from Jerome, and with two terms of experience as a member of the State Senate, elected from Yavapai county. He has been resident in Arizona for twenty years, is a judge advocate in the reserve and is president of the Reserve Officers' Association of Arizona.

Naturally, Rutherford's platform consists in a declaration that the Colorado River must be saved for Arizona, with assertions that Hayden's stand on the compact "is exceedingly dangerous to the very welfare of the State." Though his petitions were started only a couple of days before the final day of filing, he states he will make a thorough canvass of the State and that speaking dates have been arranged for him in many towns.

IN LINE WITH POLICIES

From Democrats have come observations that provision of a new candidate for Senator is quite in line with the policies of the Hunt faction, giving an opportunity to show the strength of the party opposition to Hayden. At no time this year has Hunt given public support to Hayden, although this is not remarkable, for Hunt usually speaks only for Hunt.

There is expectation that the Hunt strength will go also to Rutherford, a menace to Hayden in the primaries in which the latter till now has been considered secure. Hayden has stated that he will make no campaign till after the primaries. He now is expected to go on the warpath at once, with full information that the radical element of his party not only has a primary candidate, but is prepared to vote for Cameron for Senator in the general election.

Many prominent Democrats of the Hunt persuasion, together with about all the Highline canal advocates, already are campaigning for Cameron and against Hayden. The only objection stated to the latter appears to be his willingness to make some agreement with the other lower basin States with regard to the Colorado's water and power. Whether Cameron's record on the Colorado River, as shown by many court actions and by decisions adverse to him, is any better does not seem to be taken into consideration. In a nutshell, there appears to be no admiration for Cameron among these radicals and river visionaries. They would vote for anyone who might oppose Hayden.

RIVER ISSUE PRETEXT

The river issue is believed merely a pretext. Back of it all is jealousy of Hayden, with resentment over the manner in which he is seeking advancement to an office to which Hunt is understood to have been an aspirant. Hayden always has led the Democratic ticket. Hunt always has been at the tail end. Yet Hayden, till this year, never has had real opposition. With a very large part of his own party scheduled to desert him, he will need all there is in the Democratic registration majority to elect him.

Of the Republican registration of about 30,000 or less, 5000 or more Republicans will vote against Cameron. With them, also, the opposing candidate matters little, though they appreciate that Hayden is a conservative and that he is being fought by a very curious combination of partisan Republicans and radical Democrats. So, the main question in the approaching election is whether this Republican revolt against what is considered an unworthy candidate will be enough to stem the tide of Democratic insurgency, a tide that has in it the same strange elements that piled up 17,000 votes for La Follette in the last general election.

MAY AID CAMERON

Report has come that the National Republican Committee may furnish support for Cameron in large measure and that eastern speakers will appeal to revolting Republicans to support him that the Senate may be kept Republican. This argument, of course, has two sides, as the same thought might be used with the Democratic majority in Arizona to assist in obtaining Democratic Senatorial control.

Yet, back of it all, may be presented the strange spectacle of radical support of a Republican Senatorial nominee and conservative support of a Democratic nominee. To this extent, party lines may be broken down in Arizona in November. There can be no doubt that Cameron's chances for re-election would not be helped in the event of Hunt's defeat for renomination in September, for the Hunt strength very largely is embraced within an element that would flock to any other gubernatorial candidate in the hope of preserving present State employment, and that thus would be more susceptible to a plea to "vote her straight."

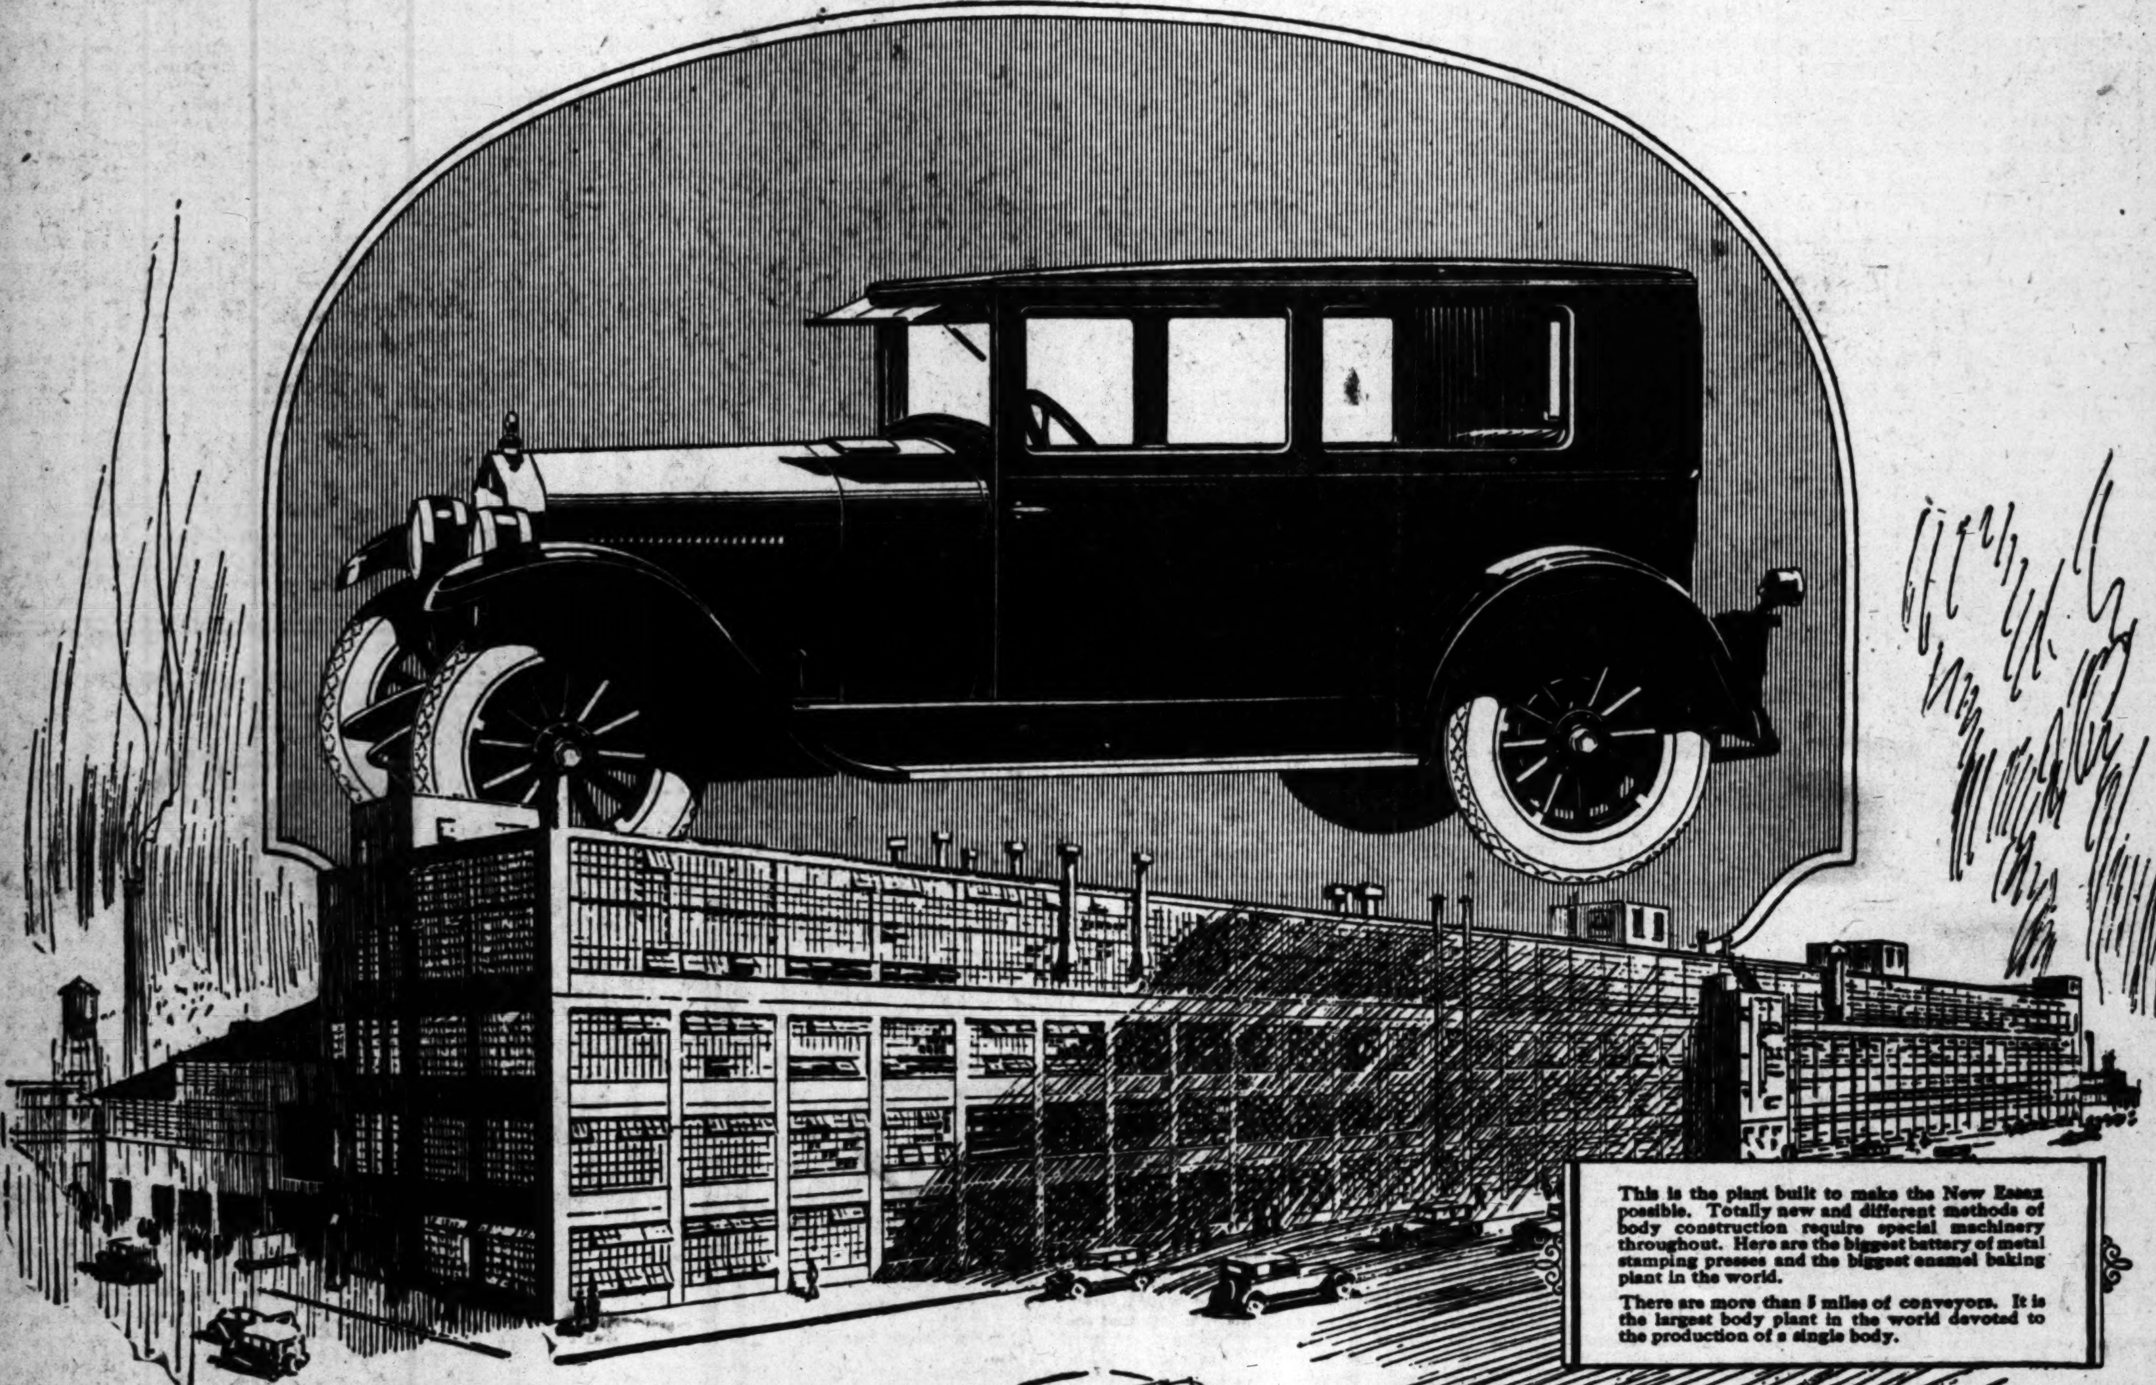
We Built a $10,000,000 Body Plant to Make This New Essex Possible



This is the plant built to make the New Essex possible. Totally new and different methods of body construction require special machinery throughout. Here are the biggest battery of metal stamping presses and the biggest enamel baking plant in the world.

There are more than 5 miles of conveyors. It is the largest body plant in the world devoted to the production of a single body.

The New ESSEX "6" COACH

With All-Steel, Bolted and Riveted Clear Vision Body

$795

F. O. B. Detroit, plus War Excise Tax

Standard equipment includes:
Automatic Windshield Cleaner, Rear View Mirror, Transmission Lock (built-in), Radiator Shutters, Moto-Meter, Combination Stop and Tail Light.

Many of these advantages you will recognize at a glance. But you will have a higher appreciation of their meaning when you know that a plant of 18 acres which, with equipment, approximated a cost of $10,000,000, was first built and that special machinery had to be designed, to make possible this New Coach now on display.

Again Essex "6" offers in the design and construction of the New Coach as radical an improvement as was the original Coach itself.

It is all steel, bolted and riveted, and so rigid that squeaks, rattles and distortions, are as unlikely as in a steel building. Doors are so hung that a man may hang on an open door while the car is being driven over rough roads, without springing it out of true.

And it is so designed and constructed as to permit the use in a totally new manner of a high baked enamel, most lustrous and lasting finish. This has made possible new combinations in finish that will please your eye.

There has been constant improvement in the chassis from the first Essex shipped. Every week has seen some betterment. But only by the accumulation of the resources, the information, experience, and the skill that have resulted from the purchase of 350,000 Essex "Sixes" in a short period of time, was it possible to erect the plants, to perfect the machinery, to create the designs that have resulted in this car which we ask you to inspect and to drive as the best looking, best value, best Essex ever built.

HUNT FOR "HIGHER-UPS" IN ARSON CASE STARTS

Four Arraigned on Accusations of Aiding $1,000,000 Ring in Plot to Burn for Insurance

Coincidentally with a revelation that the District Attorney's office is in possession of information indicating that property in Los Angeles worth more than $1,000,000 was scheduled to be burned for its insurance by a so-called arson ring which resulted in five arrests Friday, it was announced yesterday that more arrests are to be made in the case. Investigator Ramsey of the District Attorney's detective staff and Dep. Dist.-Atty. McIsaacs made both facts known late yesterday, adding that "higher ups" are being sought.

Four of the five men in custody were arraigned in the court of Municipal Judge Ambrose yesterday. The fifth is scheduled for arraignment Monday.

Hearing in the first four cases was set for the 23rd inst., but the District Attorney's office expects to take the matter before the grand jury at its Tuesday meeting in an attempt to obtain indictments and thus obviate the necessity of a preliminary procedure.

The four men who were arraigned yesterday are Benjamin Rossow, Fred Kaplan, Max Rachoff and M. Meyers. H. Leviton is under arrest and will be arraigned Monday, it is said.

Rossow is said to be owner of the California Cloak and Suit Company, 618 South Spring street. A fire occurred there recently. Kaplan is an accountant, said to be implicated in the fires through juggling of accounts presented to insurance companies.

Rachoff and Leviton are owners of a millinery store. Meyers is proprietor of the Meyer Fur Company, which burned last month with a loss of $80,000.

According to Ramsey, a highly inflammable substance was used in starting several of the fires ascribed to the ring. It was ignited through a connection with a telephone wire.

Kaplan, Rachoff, Leviton and Meyers are charged in complaints filed yesterday, with arson and burning insured property in connection with the fire which destroyed Meyers's stock last month.

Kaplan, Rachoff, Leviton and Rossow are charged with the same crimes in connection with a fire at the California Cloak and Suit Company.

On the request of the District Attorney's office, and in spite of the objection of Attorney Howell Richardson, who appeared for several of the defendants Judge Ambrose set bail at $25,000 on each complaint. Those who were named in both complaints therefore are under $50,000 bond.

The "ring" of which the five men are said to be members is directly responsible for approximately 100 recent fires, it is charged. The ring has been under investigation since last September, but arrests were not possible until this week.

COMPLAINTS IN AUDITORS' CASE ISSUED

Four Named Defendants in Asserted Forgery of County Warrants

Four men were named as defendants yesterday in complaints issued by Dep. Dist.-Atty. McIsaac in connection with charges that county warrants were forged and cashed by county grand-jury auditors after being returned unpaid.

Robert H. MacLeod and Clarence A. Watson were accused in one complaint of forgery of an indorsement to a warrant for $50, made payable to Donald Burke. Leo Kruanoff was accused of forgery of an indorsement of a warrant for $20 to Mary Kennedy. Richard Sides was accused of forgery of an indorsement to a warrant for $50, payable to A. L. Fulkerson.

Druggist Seized and Accused of 'Raw' Rum Sale

Retail distribution of moonshine liquor under the guise that it was bonded beverage of the highest quality was said to have been discovered yesterday by Federal prohibition agents when they raided the Harris Pharmacy at 2801 South Central avenue and arrested the proprietor, E. D. Harris, on charges of illegal sale. Two cases of foul liquor were confiscated, according to John H. Wynkoop, chief field agent.

The "green" liquor was being dispensed illegally as pure bourbon stock, according to the agents' report, and it was further charged that hundreds of pints had been sold during the past few months.

RUPTURE EXPERT HERE

F. H. Seeley, of Chicago and Philadelphia, the noted expert, will personally be at the Rosslyn Hotel, and will remain in Los Angeles this Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Mr. Seeley says:

"The Spermatic Shield will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in ten days on the average case. Being a vast advancement over all former methods—exemplifying instantaneous effects immediately appreciable and withstanding any strain or position no matter the size or location. Large or difficult cases, or incisional ruptures (following operations), especially solicited. This instrument received the only award in England and in Spain, producing results without surgery, injections, medical treatments or prescriptions.

CAUTION—All cases should be cautioned against the use of any elastic or web truss with understraps, as same rest where the lump is and not where the opening is, producing complications necessitating surgical operations. Mr. Seeley has documents from the United States Government, Washington, D. C., for inspection. He will be glad to demonstrate without charge or fit them if desired. Crew Fights to Save Lives of Trapped Miners

PADUCAH (Ky.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Grimly determined, rescue crews tonight continued thier efforts to penetrate the mass of rock and mud that poured into the drift of the Hudson Zinc and Spar Company's mine near Salem in Livingston county Thursday night entombing five miners.

A crew began work of sinking a diamond drill through the roof of the tunnel today, through which it is hoped food and air may be piped into the shaft to sustain the miners, until the main tunnel can be reopened.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—James M. Shields, San Francisco building contractor, today filed suit in the United States District Court against R. G. Brady of Tucson, Ariz., for $184,000 damages for asserted breach of contract in connection with a plan to erect a business building in Tucson.

GOVERNOR REVIEWS GUARD

Richardson Loud in Praise of Efficiency Shown by Coast Artillery Unit

California's National Guard has attained a high state of efficiency, declared Gov. Richardson during his review at Fort MacArthur yesterday of the Two Hundred and Fifty-first Coast Artillery. The Coast defense regiment, composed of guardsmen from Long Beach, San Diego and San Pedro, is in the midst of its annual two weeks' encampment.

The militiamen paraded yesterday with the snap and ease of professional soldiers under Lieut.-Col. Walter G. Gastil, commanding the regiment. With Gov. Richardson in the reviewing stand was Brig.-Gen. Robert A. Mittelstaedt, Adjutant-General of the California National Guard, and former chief of coast artillery of the State militia. The review was also witnessed by Maj. Lincoln B. Chambers, commanding the Third United States Coast Artillery at Fort MacArthur, and by Col. D. A. Smith, C.A.C., retired.

Gen. Mittelstaedt was also highly pleased over the showing made at yesterday's review.

"The organization has shown vast improvement since its inception a year ago," he declared. "They performed this morning like regulars."

Yesterday's review culminated a week of intensive infantry and artillery drill for the guardsmen, while this week will be given over to target practice with the fourteen-inch disappearing rifles and the twelve-inch mortar batteries at Fort MacArthur.

Gov. Richardson, upon his arrival at the lower reservation, was accorded a salute of nineteen guns as commander-in-chief of the California National Guard.

GLOBE SIGHTS

POLICE ASKED TO FIND CARPENTER FOREMAN

Detectives of this city were asked to aid in the search for Charles D. Hoefs, 56 years of age, of 1513 Girard street, who disappeared from the Salvation Army post at Santa Barbara, where he was employed, on July 27, last. His wife made the request yesterday at Central Station. Hoefs was foreman of carpenters at the Salvation Army quarters at 36 West Haley street, Santa Barbara. Hoefs, according to his wife, has been subjected to lapses of memory during the last year. He was wearing a dark gray suit, gray cap and a light shirt when last seen.

Indictment Ends Long Search in Mail Fraud Case

Indictment warrants charging Charles W. Havens, a representative of the Pacific Textile Corporation, with using the mails in a scheme to defraud in Philadelphia two years ago were served on Havens yesterday by Deputy United States Marshal Mangarina after the government had hunted for the defendant in all parts of the United States.

Havens's dereliction is said by Federal officials to have been in connection with promotion of the Downington Woolen Mills at Philadelphia. It is asserted in the complaint that Havens issued false financial statements and paid dividends out of paid-in capital.

The prisoner was lodged in the Los Angeles County Jail to await arraignment Monday before United States Commissioner Head. He was arrested at the Key West Hotel at 533 South Grand avenue.

Prisoner Flees While Deputy Has Tie Pressed

Being a Beau Brummel while on duty "is the old bunk," sadly declared Deputy Sheriff Ed Milner of Imperial county yesterday, after a prisoner escaped from him at Fifth and Spring streets while the peace officer was having his necktie pressed.

Milner was bringing E. L. Stairs, wanted in El Centro for passing worthless checks, from Sacramento. At the Central Station here they left the train to transfer. Milner decided he'd have the old cravat pressed and thereby make a jaunty appearance when he returned to El Centro with his captive.

Stairs fled while Milner was in the pressing emporium.

Local deputy sheriffs are assisting the Imperial county officer's efforts to recapture the erstwhile prisoner.

Spring Street Business Men to Plan Fight

Under the joint auspices of the Downtown Business Men's Association, and the Building Owners' and Managers' Association, a meeting has been called of the chief property and financial interests of Spring street for 3:30 p.m. Thursday, in a committee room of the Chamber of Commerce.

Aroused by the diversion of street cars to other sections and the possibility of Civic Center plans making Spring street a "stub end" street with no direct street-car outlet, to the north, "big business" on Spring street is preparing to take a decided stand at this meeting.

Among those who have proposed to attend are John C. Shaw, City Engineer; Gordon Whitnall, director of the City Planning Commission; J. O. Marsh, general manager of the Board of Public Utilities, R. B. Hill, operating superintendent of the Los Angeles Railway Company; Clarence R. Snethen, secretary of the Los Angeles Traffic Commission; Acting Mayor Workman and City Councilman Barnes of the Street Opening and Widening Committee, and other representatives of the city government.

Irving Hellman has been invited to be the presiding officer at this meeting.

Miss Evelyn Barlow, London's only woman auctioneer, is specializing in the sale of etchings, foreign coins and fine prints.

PIONEERS MEET IN HOLLYWOOD

Early Mayors and Officials of Old Town Gather

Growth from Farm Section to City Recalled

Colorful Program Offered as One of Features

Hollywood's pioneers, including its Mayors, first postmistress, town marshal and other city officials who served during the time it was a separate municipality, gathered at Plummer Park, 7405 Santa Monica Boulevard yesterday for their third annual old settlers' picnic and program of entertainment. More than 700 persons attended the affair, which also marked the twenty-first anniversary of the establishment of Hollywood's pioneer bank, the Hollywood branch of the Los Angeles Security Trust and Savings Bank.

The district's growth and development from the time when the community was famous for its citrus fruits and winter vegetables rather than its present position of the world's film capital and famous for its studios, styles and stars, formed the chief topic of discussion among the pioneers, many of whom formerly owned orange or lemon orchards facing Hollywood and Sunset boulevards. Brief addresses by many of the old-timers, old-fashioned picnic sports events, strolling Spanish musicians in colorful costumes, Spanish dances and many other events were a part of the entertainment program.

Senor Eugene Plummer, Hollywood's oldest pioneer, who has lived in the historic hacienda where the picnic was staged since 1867, was host to the old-timers. He is 75 years of age. He formerly owned 160 acres of land which he farmed for thirty years and which is now occupied by Hollywood homes and business establishments. He at one time owned Hollywood Bowl and used the land for grazing purposes.

Among those present for the occasion were Sanford Rich, 84, and George Dunlap, 94, only Mayors of Hollywood when it was a separate municipality; Robert Young, City Attorney; Arthur Alber, Mrs. M. E. Moll, teacher in the old Cahuenga Pass school; William Beesemyer, G. G. Greenwood, pioneer banker; G. T. Gower, 97, first town marshal; O. E. Roberts and J. B. Rapp, who used to grow bananas and pineapples on Hollywood hillsides; P. B. Chase, Mrs. E. L. Sackett, 78, first hotel keeper; Mrs. Emila Hartwell, 89, mother of Mrs. Daeida Wilcox, founder of Hollywood; Miss Mary Sackett, first postmistress, and Rev. Arthur Evans, Hollywood's first minister.

In the sports events, Billy Henry won the pie-eating contest; Bobby Jones, watermelon-eating contest, and Ethelyn E. Leader, nail-driving contest for women.

The Hollywood Security Trust and Savings Bank sponsored the picnic, with G. G. Greenwood, its vice-president and manager, chairman. Girl employees of the bank dressed as senoritas served ice cream, coffee and cold drinks.

CHAMBER SHOW STARS PRACTICE

"Fashions and Follies of '27" Will be Produced

Program Planned as Feature of Trade Exposition

More Than Hundred on Bill to Entertain Retailers

"The Fashions and Follies of 1927," futuristic in name and Californian in spirit, yesterday was rehearsed in at least a dozen parts of town in preparation for the industrial and trade exposition to be given in the Shrine Auditorium, the 16th to the 22nd inst., by the Chamber of Commerce. Considerably more than 100 persons took part.

Designed as a means of entertaining some 7500 out-of-State retailers invited to the exposition to study Los Angeles merchandise and to make the exposition nights merry for the general public, the show as directed by Norman Manning was declared vibrant and refreshing. Later, the units in rehearsal yesterday will be assembled, it was said, into a gorgeous style show, vaudeville enterainment, motion-picture pageant and what-not with Californians taking lead roles throughout.

STARS SCHEDULED

As planned, the show will include Bill Dooley as comedian; Herbert Rawlinson as host of the evening; Gaby Koppes with a Mexico City dancing act, a group of Los Angeles children well schooled in stage craft by Ethel Meglin; Monroe Jocker's "Sunny Californians," a group of nearly fifty California girl dancers and at least fifty Los Angeles fashion models wearing the gayest and latest of modes originated in their own city.

Motion-picture studios have joined with the chamber's exposition project, announcing their most famous artists will take part in the shows each night and in return the occasion will be dedicated in the name of one of the studios.

While the "follies" were occupying the attention of one group of chamber officials another group of officers was engaged in laying out the exposition. It was said the show will reveal every Los Angeles industry and will be the largest concerted move for establishing a city as a market place ever taken in the West.

SUCCESS PREDICTED

Arthur G. Arnoll, secretary and general manager of the chamber, stated the exposition bears every ear mark of scoring a resounding success. "It is entirely for Los Angeles, and the result is that Los Angeles is for it as a unit."

Reports from over the Southland, according to Mr. Arnoll, are that the city will be well filled with out-of-town visitors on the occasion of the exposition. Railroad announcements have been made that excursions will be run here and low rates will be in effect.

Commenting on the value of the products to be displayed in the merchandising show, G. B. Kirker, a committeeman, said: "The value could not be estimated in hundreds or even thousands of dollars. The show will put on display million of dollars in Los Angeles merchandise and equipment."

AUTO CRASHES KILL TWO

Toll in Los Angeles Traffic Accidents Mounts; One Hit by Train Dies

Three dead, a woman, a man and a 2-year-old child, and serious injury to three others, formed the toll of traffic accidents in Los Angeles and vicinity yesterday, according to police records. The man who met death was struck by a Southern Pacific train in Alhambra. The others were victims of automobile accidents. All the injured, two men, one of them a county traffic officer, and an 18-months-old child, were reported in serious condition and likely to die. In one instance a hit-and-run driver left his victim lying in the street.

Mrs. Anna Bean Castaned, about 45 years of age, of 1234 West Sixty-ninth street, died at the Receiving Hospital a few minutes after she was taken there from Seventieth street and Vermont avenue. She was crossing the intersection, according to the police, when an auto struck her.

D. O. Teasdale, 524 1-2 North Market street, driver of the automobile truck that struck Mrs. Castaned, was not held following an investigation of the accident by Detective Lieutenant Kirk of the Seventy-seventh-street Station.

Samuel Fellheimer,, 59, suffered a basal skull fracture and numerous bruises when he was struck down by an auto in front of his place of business at 618 South Spring street. Police reported the driver of the car, which was described as a large sedan, did not stop after the accident. He was given emergency treatment at the Receiving Hospital.

George Rousseau 18-months-old child of A. B. Rosseau of 1737 East Forty-third street, was hurt probably fatally in another accident that occurred at Forty-third street and Long Beach avenue. The boy suffered internal injuries and a broken left arm when, according to the report of Motorman Frank Conley, he was struck by the step of an inbound San Pedro train of the Pacific Electric. The small victim was first taken to the Receiving Hospital where Police Surgeon Carey pronounced his injuries as very serious. The child was later removed to the General Hospital.

A man believed to be Angelo De Salva, from papers found on his person, was almost instantly killed when he was struck by a Southern Pacific train in Alhambra. Efforts to learn the man's address were futile. He is thought by Alhambra police to have been a transient.

Kazu Nakayo, a 2-year-old Japanese boy, died in a private hospital in Gardena after being thrown from a truck in which he was riding with a party of several adults and children. He was tossed from the vehicle as it rounded a curve.

George Booth, county motorcycle officer, lay in the General Hospital near the point of death as the result of an accident which came about when he heard that his baby girl was seriously ill. Notified by Deputy Sheriffs Luker and Bowers that the child was ill, he is reported to have swung his vehicle around in front of a car driven by William Sobel, 1167 North Edgemont street. The officer received a skull fracture and is not expected to live. The accident happened at North Edgemont street and Santa Monica Boulevard. The officer was taken to the hospital by Sobel.

HONORS FOR SUBMARINE RECOVERY

Medals, Navy Crosses and Promotions Reward Work of Salvage

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (AP)—Award of three Distinguished Service Medals and nine Navy Crosses to officers and men who played major roles in the recovery of the submarine S-51 was announced today. In addition eleven enlisted men were advanced one grade in ranking; eight petty officers were enrolled on the eligibility list for promotion to be chiefs as vacancies occur and fourteen other officers and men received letters of commendation.

Those receiving the medal were Capt. E. J. King, commanding the New London submarine base and in charge of the salvage operations; Lieutenant-Commander E. Ellsberg, Naval Construction Corps, salvage officer, and Lieut. H. Hartley, commanding the submarine rescue ship Falcon.

The crosses went to the divers who risked their lives to locate the wreck and prepare her for lifting to the surface. They are Boatswain R. E. Bawes of the Falcon; Thomas Eadie, chief gunner's mate (reserve,) and Divers James W. Frazier, Raymond C. Wilson, William S. Wickwire, Francis G. Smith, John R. Kelley and Seamen William Badders and Soloman Schissel.

WOMAN WINS TOMB SUIT

AUSTIN (Tex.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Suit for payment of $130 asserted to be due on a tombstone erected for relatives of Ada Blackmore was won by the woman, a jury in the Travis county court returning a verdict against H. C. Griffin, who filed suit. Griffin was ordered to pay court costs on the grounds that the work was defective.

CRIPPLED SIXTY-THREE YEARS DUE TO BITE

MAYFIELD (Ky.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Thomas Dublin, 76 years of age, is dead here after having been an invalid from a snake bite for sixty-three years. One day in 1863, when a boy 13 years of age, Tommy Dublin was playing around a pond in the rural part of this county and a rattlesnake bit him. He was able to reach aid soon, but the poison entered his system and despite all efforts made him an invalid, his ailment affecting him through life. He married, however, and leaves several children.

MORE FLEE CHINA AFTER CHURCH RAID

Missionaries Driven From Interior by Soldiers Who Take Over Edifices

CANTON (China) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Five more American missionaries have been driven from the interior of South China by the present anti-Christian and antiforeign movement, and have sought safety at Canton and at Hongkong.

The latest arrivals, who fled in fear of their lives after seeing the work of years undone, are American Baptist missionaries from the mission in Kweilin, Kwaigsi Province, where a church seating 1200 persons has for years been crowded at every service by native converts. The church is now used as na army barracks, as are the schools maintained in the mission compound for Chinese boys and girls, the former accommodating 180 students, and the latter ninety.

The trouble began six weeks ago when the anti-Christain agitators kidnaped one of the Chinese mission employees and tattooed on both his cheeks Chinese characters meaning "foreign slave." Rioting and stone throwing followed, until finally the soldiers intervened, supposedly in the interests of peace.

The soldiers, however, looted the compound and then moved into all the buildings, after which they warned the missionaries to leave for outside ports.

Complaints have been made to the Canton government, but no satisfaction has been received. This lack of official response is not surprising.

The last three persons to be made to feel the weight of the government's antiforeign policy are Dr. Philip Todd head of the Gung Yee Hospital here, Mrs. Todd, matron of the hospital's training school, and Dr. J. M. Wright, a hospital surgeon. Each of these Americans holds a contract with the government for two years more, but all three of them have been dismissed by letter.

The letters of dismissal admit that contracts are being broken, but say that this "is in line with our determination to have only Chinese at the head of our institutions."

Meanwhile, the Canton government continues its official antiforeign propaganda, using such slogans as "Down With Foreigners" and "China for the Chinese" in all of its censored publications, and on posters and handbills.

CHILD SWIMS FIVE MILES

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—With her heart set on swimming the English Channel some day, Gwen Fairburn, 12-year-old daughter of G. M. Fairburn of Comox, swam from Comox to Roynston wharf yesterday, a distance of five miles. The swim was made in two and a half hours, the child using an untiring Australian crawl, which she has mastered to perfection. The youthful swimmer was accompanied on the trip by her trainer, J. A. Thorimbert.

SHADES OF NIGHT HALT FELINE HUNT

When Darkness Descends Posse Hunting Leopard in Swamp Call Halt

RED BANK (N. J.) Aug. 7. (AP)—The hunt for the leopard which escaped a private zoo at Middletown Thursday was called off for tonight when darkness and the misfortune of a lost trail overtook the posses on the outskirts of Nut Swamp, several miles south of Lincroft.

The searchers, armed with big-game rifles, picked up the trail early today on the farm of Lawrence Carton at Lincroft. Carton saw the spotted beast slink after him when he started to pasture with his cow at 5:30 a.m. Carton and the cow hurried back to the barn.

The posse followed what appeared to be tracks of a large cat until brought upon an asphalt road which runs along the swamp. The leopard evidently crossed the road into Nut Swamp. While the searchers were endeavoring to locate the point at which the animal entered dusk descended and the hunt was abandoned. Blood hounds are expected to be brought here to aid if some definite trail is picked up.

IDENTIFYING OF HUT DISCOUNTED

Landowner Doubtful About Mrs. McPherson's Belief

Douglas Pastor Brings Data on Discovery to City

Committee Declared to be Sure It is "Prison"

Doubt that the Mexican desert shack identified from pictures by Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson is the one in which the evangelist says she was held captive by a trio of kidnapers seeking $500,000 ransom, was expressed yesterday by Joe Ruiz, owner of the property on which the cabin is located, according to dispatches received from Douglas, Ariz., last night.

Close on this announcement came one from Angelus Temple that Rev. Joseph E. Howard, pastor of the Douglas Baptist Church, had arrived here yesterday afternoon aboard the Golden State Limited with all data pertaining to the cabin the evangelist believes is the captivity hut. Mr. Howard came as a personal envoy from the Douglas committee working in behalf of Mrs. McPherson. He carried with him maps and blueprints of the cabin and trail over which the committee says it believes the evangelist walked after her asserted escape from the kidnapers.

According to the statement of Ruiz, he visited the shack identified by Mrs. McPherson more than a month ago in company with five cowboys and at that time he declared it showed no signs of having been occupied within recent months.

However, Mr. Howard and Lieut. Gatliff of the Douglas police force told the evangelist they found empty food cans in the house as well as an oil can answering the description of the one on which Mrs. McPherson says she severed the thongs with which the asserted kidnapers had tied her hands. A large can, which the Douglas committee asserts is the one which aided her escape, is shown in front of the cabin in one of the pictures sent the evangelist.

POSITIVE IT'S FOUND

New information purporting to bear out the evangelist's kidnaping story was brought to the temple by Mr. Howard, it was announced, but the minister himself would not divulge what it is.

"The Douglas committee is positive we have found the right shack," Mr. Howard said. "It is very isolated and on a road mostly obscured at its source, where it branches off one of the main roads leading from Agua Prieta," where the evangelist first appeared June 23, relating a story of a seventeen-hour hike through the desert.

"The shack is in the country over which Mrs. McPherson traveled during her second trip to the desert in search of the cabin, but because of its peculiar location it was not seen that day," Mr. Howard continued.

"Lieut. Gatliff of the Douglas police force found the place more than a week ago, and at that time informed the committee the place answered the general description given by Mrs. McPherson and that he believed it was the shack referred to. His belief, we believe, has been vindicated."

Whether Mrs. McPherson will make another trip to Douglas personally to identify the newly-discovered shack depends on the contents of the report now on its way here, Mrs. Kennedy intimated. No definite plans have been made for a new trip into the desert, according to Mrs. Kennedy.

"Our work is far behind here at the Temple and we have made no definite plans, for the present at least, for another trip to Douglas," Mrs. Kennedy stated. "There is a possibility Sister may go later, but no certain date has been fixed.

"We have absolute faith and confidance in our Arizona committee and the matter has been left entirely to its hands. For this reason it is possible it will not be necessary for us to go back again."

Mrs. Kennedy declined to make public the full contents of Lieut. Gatliff's telegram.

"No hasty action is going to be taken," the evangelist's mother continued, "and we will be fully advised before anything is done. In the meantime we will busy ourselves with our work at the temple and leave this matter in the hands of our committee."

Reports from Douglas were to the effect that Mrs. McPherson had informed the Angelus Temple committee there that she would make the trip. Mrs. Kennedy declined to discuss this and denied reports Mrs. McPherson would let her congregation decide the advisability of such a trip.

Superior Judge Keetch, legal adviser of the grand jury, refused to make a statement yesterday when questioned regarding reports that at least one member of the inquisitorial body is to be ousted for asserted violation of the oath of office.

"I have nothing whatever to say," Judge Keetch asserted. "I am trying to impress upon the jurors the importance of keeping their work in secrecy and therefore must follow the same rule myself."

Significance was attached to the fact that Judge Keetch plans a visit to the Hall of Justice next week, although he is on his vacation. He admitted his intention yesterday. He declined to discuss the nature of his proposed visit.

Rumors have been current for the past several days that an occurrence of extreme importance took place at a meeting of the grand jury last week and that severe action may be the result. Members of the grand jury have remained absolutely silent on the reports

In answering rumors he planned to discharge the grand jury in its entirety because of the McPherson case, Judge Keetch said:

"My straightforward talk and written statement to the grand jury early in the week was merely to post them again as to their duties under the laws of the State. There are many splendid men on the grand jury now, and I would not think of casting any reflection upon them by any such movement as a dismissal of the body as a whole."

Mrs. McPherson made her picture identification of the shack from photographs of nearly a score of other cabins. These photos were received from Mr. Howard and Lieut. Gatliff. The others on the evangelist's Arizona committee are President Hubbell of the Douglas Chamber of Commerce, an Arizona newspaper man, and Mayor Hinton of Douglas.

She based identification principally on the location of a window in the building.

Dist.-Atty. Keyes, asked if he will send an investigator to Douglas to see the newly discovered hut or if he knew the identity of the mysterious "Miss X" who occupied a Carmel bungalow with Kenneth G. Ormiston, formerly radio operator at Angelus Temple, Md. Keyes said:

"I'm not talking about the McPherson case any more."

"Then it is a closed incident now as far as your office is concerned?" he was asked.

"You bet, as far as I am concerned," was his response.

He made this statement in the face of consistent reports he is conducting a secret investigation requested by the grand jury and that a search is being made at his direction for Ormiston to produce the mysterious "Miss X."

ARRESTS IN PAPER ATTACK

Two venders of the San Diego Herald, containing a torrid attack on Aimee Semple McPherson, yesterday were arrested on charges of violating a city ordinance covering the sale and distribution of indecent, vulgar and obscene literature.

The men arrested are Harry Smith, 22 years of age, a newsdealer with a stand on Hill street near Seventh street, and Samuel J. Steinberg, 33 years of age, who operates on Eighth street near Broadway. They were arrested on John Doe warrants sworn to by Assistant Captain of Detectives Jones of the Crime Prevention Bureau and were held for bail in the amount of $500. A third warrant was yet to be served last night.

According to City Prosecutor Friedlander, who issued the warrants, complaint against the sale of the San Diego Herald, in which a particularly virulent attack was launched against Mrs. McPherson, was made through Arthur L. Veitch, attorney for the Angelus Temple leader. The formal complaint later was signed by Captain Jones and the men were arrested by Policewoman Toomey and Officers Powell and Service of the Crime Prevention Bureau.

The newspaper was finding a ready market on the street and prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents a copy were being obtained with ease, according to authorities. The San Diego Herald is understood to be a weekly paper published by A. R. Sauer.

AVERAGE OF INDUSTRIALS AT NEW HIGH

Rails Also Advance in Bull Movement; Trading in Bonds Negligible

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—A big "bull" movement in the stock market, which carried the average of twenty leading industrial shares to the highest level ever recorded and the average of twenty leading rails to the highest figure since 1913, easily outshone all other developments in this week's financial and commodity markets. While the buying of stocks undoubtedly received marked impetus from the publication of the famous "Cochran interview," it also was influenced by the unusual midsummer expansion of business, the publication of a series of remarkable industrial earnings statements, record-breaking freight traffic and rail earnings and continuance of easy credit conditions.

Bond prices showed only slight improvement with new offerings the lowest of any week this year, indicating that the stock market was attracting both speculative and investment funds.

Commodity prices were mixed. Sugar prices pointed upward as refiners drew heavily on raw stocks, due to the heavy demands of the canning season. Wheat prices broke sharply on the publication of an upward revision of Canadian crop estimates and better weather in certain wheat-growing sections. The cotton market was quiet, with prices drifting lower, pending publication of the government report next Monday. The general average of commodity prices, as shown by Dun's index number, is now at the lowest level in over two years.

A sharp rally in French francs, which carried them above the 3-cent level for the first time in several months, reflected the progress being made by the new Poincare government in the rehabilitation of French finances Other continental rates improved in sympathy while sterling exchanges held relatively firm. The silver exchanges turned weak on the prospect of India's switching from the silver to the gold standard.

Municipal and State Financing Drops in July

State and municipal borrowing declined sharply in July, the total of $89,671,130 showing a drop of approximately $50,000,000 as compared with the preceding months and a $33,000,000 decrease from the July, 1925, total. In four out of the seven months of this year the volume of new issues of municipal bonds has been less than in the corresponding months of 1925. As will be noted in the following comparison prepared by The Daily Bond Buyer, of New York, the current year's total is running considerably under that of both 1925 and 1924:

	July.	7 months ending July 31.
July	$ 89,671,130	$835,779,807
1925	123,301,213	873,209,064

CHEER PARK DECISION

Protestors at Hearing Applaud Move to Keep Diamond Lake Separate

MEDFORD (Or.) Aug. 7. (AP)—The President's co-ordinating commission, following four days of public hearings, last night unanimously voted to recommend that Diamond Lake remain under Forest Service jurisdiction, and not be included in Crater Lake National Park.

The decision was greeted with applause by the 100 persons present representing chambers of commerce, sportsmen and State game officials.

DIVIDEND RISE SIGNIFICANT

Standard of New York Increase Shows Ability of Group to Pay Large Distributions

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Standard Oil of New York seems to have set a precedent for the Standard Oil group in the matter of dividends. It is not unusual for a Standard company to reward stockholders with stock dividends, or even disburse extra cash dividends, as Standard of Indiana does. But it is news of real importance when one of this group boosts the regular rate even 20 cents a share annually.

The new annual rate of $1.60 on Standard Oil of New York is, however, not so important in itself as in the amount of the total disbursement involved. Previously the company has paid $1.40 a year, which is considerably below the $2 rate paid by most of the Standard companies and many of the so-called independents. By increasing the rate to $1.60 the directors merely have placed the stock on the equivalent to a $2 basis on the amount of stock outstanding prior to the declaration early this year of a 25 per cent stock dividend. In reality, no new precedent has been set.

DISPARITY RECTIFIED

With the former General Petroleum stockholders, who were given the opportunity to exchange one share of General Petroleum for two of Standard of New York, the situation is different. General Petroleum paid $3 yearly on its stock, while at the time the basis of exchange was announced Standard of New York was only paying $1.40 annually, or a dividend disbursement for General Petroleum stockholders of $2.80 annually, an amount less than they were receiving on one share of General Petroleum. The new increase rectifies this situation and places the former General Petroleum stockholders in an excellent position since they now receive $3.20 instead of $3 on their former stock.

Of more significance than the annual rate is the total amount that the directors of Standard of New York believe the company can pay without difficulty or embarrassment. After giving effect to the 25 per cent stock dividend and the amount of stock exchanged for General Petroleum, the outstanding capital will probably total 16,700,000 shares, which means a total distribution to stockholders on the new rate of $26,720,000.

At first glance this seems an enormous amount for an oil company to distribute, but one other company, the Standard Oil of New York, is paying out considerably more than this. Including extras it is estimated that this company will pay in the neighborhood of $32,000,000 this year, or an amount substantially higher than Standard of New York will pay. These figures suggest that it is possible for some of the other large Standard companies to disburse amounts of approximately the same magnitude. Standard of California, for instance, is one that the stock market has touted recently as a possibility for higher divided payments.

INCREASE POSSIBLE

On the 12,602,434 shares of the new company outstanding the annual rate of $2 entails a distribution of $25,204,434, or less than both Standard of New York and Standard of Indiana. If the rate were raised to $3, as the market has conjectured, the annual payments would total about $37,807,302, considerably in excess of any of the other Standard companies, and an amount that would represent a ponderous burden on any oil company. Probably a rate of $2.50 would more nearly approximate the probable, as the total distribution would then involve about $31,700,000.

The case of Standard Oil of New Jersey is somewhat similar. On the basis of $1 on the common and 7 per cent on the preferred this company is now paying about $34,500,000 in dividends each year. Should the directors retire the preferred, as has been rumored, the only dividend charge would be $20,588,241 on the common, which would suggest the probability of an increase in the common rate possibly to $1.50. On this basis the annual distribution would run almost to $31,000,000.

Through one of the leading New York Stock Exchange houses it is reported that an interesting analysis of Standard Oil of California will be released for publication tomorrow. The analysis is expected to show the company in a far better light than the public has been permitted to glimpse, and strongly suggests the likelihood of higher dividends.

Bond Election Results Given Out for Month

During the month of July bond election results in the aggregate of $25,518,800 were reported in the columns of The Daily Bond Buyer. This total is comprised of the authorizations of 137 municipalities located in twenty-eight States.

The largest issues voted during the month were $2,000,000 each in the cities of Aberdeen, Wash., and Savannah, Ga. The next largest issues were $1,904,000 in St. Joseph, Mo., and $1,500,000 in Will county, Ill. New Currencies Established in Europe at Par

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Of the eleven new currencies appearing in Europe in the last two years, the Polish zloty alone has failed to remain approximately at par, says a review published today by Dominick & Co., investment bankers here.

Referring to the multiplication of currency units the review says that Austria, Hungary and Czecho-Slovakia, which formerly had the same monetary unit, now have three, and that Russia, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia and Esthonia, which formerly dealt only with the ruble, now have five separate currencies.

CANADA REMOVES BAR ON TRAPPERS

SPRING EXPECTED TO SEE MANY SEEKING FUR-BEARING ANIMALS

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The five-year closed season against trapping fur-bearing animals in British Columbia south of the Canadian Pacific Railway will terminate December 31, and next spring trappers will be permitted to resume operations in that area.

All fall trapping of water animals has been prohibited in the interests of conservation.

The Game Board has decided to make uniform the season for migratory birds in the coast region, as it has been found that weather conditions in the coast districts are almost the same.

Opening the area south of the railroad to trappers is expected to stop the illegal catching of beaver and muskrats in that area and their smuggling into Spokane and other United States cities for sale.

OILS ACTIVE ON LOCAL MARKET

United Features Trading in Week Just Closed

Los Angeles Investment Up on Earnings Report

Fresh Buying Evidenced in Bank Securities

BY FRANK L. GARDNER
Banks, Huntley & Co.

Leaping to new peak levels United Oil commanded enthusiastic speculative attention at the outset of last week's stock market on the Los Angeles Exchange, with considerable interest evidenced in subsequent trading. Announcement of plans for the formation of the Richfield Oil Company of California with a $60,000,000 capital to take over the United-Richfield properties, accompanied by well-founded rumors that the exchange of new stock for United will be on basis of three for one, and the new dividend rate $2 per annum, created the incentive for the board movement in prices. Opening sales at 75 were followed by a strong demand and a sharp upturn, culminating at a record high price of 80. Heavy profit taking was indulged in throughout the week and the market was called upon to absorb substantial offerings, resulting in a reaction to 75 1-4, followed by a sharp recovery to 78 1-4 and close at 77 1-8. Approximately 30,000 shares were dealt in.

Good buying made its appearance again in Union Oil and the issue was a prominent trader all week between 53 and 54 3-4. Latest gossip links recent accumulative buying in Union with Tidewater-Associated bankers, looking toward a combination with that concern. Union Associates was in strong demand around 56, but offerings of stock were conspicuously absent.

Disappointment over the failure of Standard of California directors to increase the dividend at Wednesday's meeting accounted for a moderate reaction from 61 1-4 to 59 1-8, although final sales were at 59 7-8.

California Petroleum showed nearly a point gain on top sales at 33 7-8 but closed at 33 1-2, while Shell Union fluctuated within narrow limits between 28 1-4 to 28 3-4.

JULIAN MOVES HIGHER

Julian Petroleum preferred moved forward 1 1-4 points from 14 to 15 1-4, closing at the top, while the common slumped from 2 3-4 to 2 1-2. Rio Grande Refining sold actively from 24 3-8 up to a new high at 24 7-8, and Marine was well absorbed on an upward scale from 1.45 to 1.53. Definite announcement of details regarding Marine's absorption by California Eastern was expected daily, resulting in a firm undertone in the stock.

Holly Development recorded a 13-point gain to 1.70 and Bolsa Chica Oil changed hands at 5 to 5 1-2. Around 31 1-2, Buckeye Union preferred maintained its recent trading level and the common was dealt in around 16 1-2 and 17. Henderson Petroleum at 85, Gilmore around 8, Olinda at 25 and United States Royalties at 12 1-2 were all quiet and practically unchanged.

Publication of semiannual earnings for Los Angeles Investment revealing a net income from all sources, before Federal income tax, equivalent to 20 1-2 cents per share, was responsible for a resumption of bullish activities on a moderate scale advancing quotations from $14 to $22. Approximately 9 1-2 cents per share was earned from real-estate operations and 11 cents per share was represented by oil royalties.

Goodyear Tire preferred sold at 96 and 96 3-4, and Textile Mills changed hands a point lower. California Delta Farms at 9 and Globe Grain preferred at 99 were unchanged. Globe common was under pressure and sold off to 52. Sun Realty held steadily at 6.

BANCITALY STRENGTHENS

Fresh buying interest was in evidence in Bancitaly Corporation which traded actively between 80 and 80 5-8 while Bank of Italy remained at its recent pegged price, 455. Demand for Merchants' National carried the bid up another 10 points to a new record high at 360, and Security Trust held firm at 386. First National appeared slightly stronger around 402 and Citizens' National sales were unchanged at 385.

Public utility stocks were fairly active and fractionally higher. Los Angeles Gas preferred advanced to 97 7-8 and Pacific Gas preferred was higher at 100 3-4. San Joaquin prior preferred was well absorbed between 104 1-2 and 105, and the Series A issue in demand at 102 1-2.

Edison common fluctuated narrowly between 31 5-8 and 32 with final sales at 31 3-4. but the 6 per cent preferred sold fractionally above 25 and the 7 per cent around 28 1-4. Southern Counties Gas preferred moved between 104 and 104 1-2.

No definite trend developed in the mining issues. Big Jim rose a point to 16 1-2 and Lucky Boy slumped 2 points to 5, then recovered to 6. Boundary Cone was active at a half-point rise, 7 1-2 and North Star gained a point on top sales at 9. On sales at 55, Tom Reed showed an 8-point drop, and United Western declined 3 points to 25. San Francisco Gold moved forward from 14 to 15.

BUSINESS PHILOSOPHY

BY WILLIAM FEATHER

ADVERTISING is still an experimental science in the sense that few of its laws have been formulated and demonstrated to be invariable in their action.

The most successful advertisers have been those who have featured their best goods in their advertising. They have offered the public quality, economy and value, taking a smaller margin of profit on their advertised lines than on their unadvertised lines.

Much harm has been done to the cause of advertising in fiction and in the drama, the writers of these having given out the impression that advertising is a magic touchstone that will sell anything.

The fact is, of course, that the best business-getter now, as always, is a superlative product.

MINERALS IMPORTANT HERE

Fifty-four Commercial Products Mined in California; Los Angeles County Leads in Output

Fifty-four commercial minerals are produced in California today, giving some idea of the value of California's great natural resources and of their potential worth, states Rush T. Sill, mining engineer, in the current issue of Southern California Business.

Los Angeles county produces 45 per cent of the State's mineral output, which makes it rank first in the State as a mineral producer. The nonmetallic mineral industry has been and is of particular importance to Southern California, which is now in the midst of a great era of industrial and manufacturing development, Mr. Sill writes.

"Structural materials produced here," he states, "include crushed rock, sand and gravel, brick, terra cotta, hollow building and roofing tile, magnesite, gypsum, granite, lime, marble and tuff. Industrial minerals include asbestos, barytes, pottery, clay, dolomite, feldspar, gems, graphite, diatomaceous earth, limestone, lepidolite, mineral water, shale oil, silica and talc. The salines, including borates, calcium and magnesium chlorides, potash, salt and soda, are very important products of Southern California.

OIL OUTPUT HEAVY

"In 1924 there were produced in California 230,000,000 barrels of petroleum; 250,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas; 11,800,000 barrels of cement; $17,000,000 worth of crushed rock; sand and gravel, brick and hollow tile to the value of $10,200,000; 64,000 tons of magnesite; $2,600,000 worth of granite, lime and marble. Further than this the industrial minerals added $6,000,000 and the salines, $5,000,000.

"In point of tonnage consumed in Los Angeles, crushed rock, sand and gravel are probably first on account of the immense building developments and public improvements, and it is closely estimated that in 1925 it was not less than 3,000,000 tons. Next in tonnage is cement with about 3,000,000 barrels used in Los Angeles in 1925.

CLAY SHIPPED HERE

"Riverside county ships to Los Angeles for use in the pottery and clay-working plants 120,000 tons of clay yearly, in addition to the 54,065 tons mined in Los Angeles county. Several silica deposits of good quality exist, which have waited for market growth that would make their development easier.

"Southern California talc on the basis of quality and purity is steadily replacing imported talc in the toilet trade. San Bernardino and Inyo counties produced a total of 16,179 tons of talc in 1924 valued at $242,770, which was used mainly in toilet powders, paint, paper and rubber manufacture and in part in the magnesite stucco and flooring.

"During 1924 a total of 33,107 tons of potash salts of all grades were produced in Southern California, valued at $747,407, and there were imported 692,250 tons. valued at $13,376,282. The Southern California production includes potassium chloride from salt works bittern and from Searles Lake, San Bernardino county, and brine, and sulphate from Portland cement dust. These products are utilized mainly for the manufacture of fertilizers."

Construction in Eastern States Shows Decrease

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—July construction in the thirty-seven States east of the Rocky Mountains totaled $518,393,900 says the F. W. Dodge Corporation. This area includes approximately 91 per cent of the total construction volume of the nation. The decline from June was about $26,000,000 or approximately 5 per cent. Construction in July last year was about 5 per cent higher than this year.

AMERICAN WATER WORKS EXPENDS

FORT MADISON (IOWA) CONCERN ADDED TO STRING OF THIRTY-ONE PROPERTIES

American Water Works and Electric Company, Inc., has added to its holdings in the water-works field the Fort Madison Water Company, which recently purchased from the Citizens Corporation the water-works system serving the city of Fort Madison, Iowa.

Fort Madison is located in the southeastern part of Iowa on the Mississippi River and has a population of approximately 14,000. The city is the home of several important industries including factories of the Shaeffer Pen Company and the American Fork and Hoe Company.

The company has approximately 2000 customers served through twenty-three miles of mains, while its annual pumpage exceeds 350,000,000 gallons.

With this acquisition the American Water Works and Electric Company now controls and operates thirty-one water-works properties located in fifteen States serving more than 322,000 customers or a total population in excess of 1,600,000.

PIERCE PETROLEUM SHOWS SMALL LOSS

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—A net loss of $136,084 after expenses, depreciation and interest is reported by the Pierce Petroleum Corporation and its subsidiaries for the six months ended June 30. This compares with a net profit of $490,557, after expenses, interest and depletion in the first half of last year.

PRICES SOAR IN RUSH OF BUYING

General Motors Pushed Up to New Level

Industry List Average Near Record Peak

Rail Group Shows Highest in Thirteen Years

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Another sensational outburst of buying in General Motors, which soared 9 3-8 points to a new record high for all time at 217, featured the resumption of the upward movement in today's stock market. At the close the average of twenty leading industrial issues was within 1-2 point of the highest level ever recorded, while the average of twenty leading rails was at the highest point since 1913.

Despite the crippled wire service to western points, brokerage houses reported a further expansion in public participation, which was borne out by the broadening demand for stocks. Except for the publication of a few semiannual earnings statements, which compared favorably with those of the same period last year, there were no new developments to account for the brisk demand for stocks which appeared to reflect a growing speculative belief that current prosperity in most lines would carry through until the end of the year. The relatively small increase in stock exchange members' loans last month, in view of the marked increment in quoted values, was regarded as a favorable omen, and widely construed as an indication that stocks had passed into strong hands.

POOLS ACTIVE

Pools again were active, particularly in some of the low-priced industrials. New peak prices for the year or longer, were recorded by a wide assortment of issues, including Amalgamated Leather, Bloomingdale, Butterick Publishing, Consolidated Cigar, Cudahy Packing, Douglas Pectin, International Harvester preferred, R. H. Macy, Onyx Hosiery preferred, Ray Consolidated Copper, Union Carbide, United Cigar Stores, Warner Pictures and Westinghouse Air Brake.

The rapid advance in several of the high-priced industrial specialties indicated a scarcity in the floating supply. Air Reduction was bid up 10 1-8 points to 133, Du Pont jumped nearly 10 points to 304 3-4, and American Linseed. American Radiator and Loose Wiles Biscuit showed net gains of 3 to 5 points. American Brown Boveri moved up over 2 points to within a fraction of the record high on rumors of important developments affecting that company.

RAILS IMPROVE

Rails were not as active as the industrials, although Atchison, New York Central and Southern Railway

Wise vs. Unwise Exchanges of Securities

CHANGING from one bond to another can be beneficial—or result in just "swapping dollars"—or gradually ruin a splendid investment list.

Some investors refuse to consider making revisions in the belief it involves speculation. An attitude as extreme as this really deprives an estate of protection.

Again, there are investors who consider it proper to replace securities whenever they sell a little above their cost. No comparison is made of the future outlook of the securities involved in the revision. This attitude deprives an estate of essential protection.

Students of investment know revisions frequently benefit and preserve an estate. It is possible to make changes—maintaining or increasing the security and income—and, occasionally, improve the outlook for future values.

Members of this organization are instructed to give careful thought before recommending revisions to clients and, finally, each recommendation should be submitted for the approval of an officer of the company.

This service is open to all investors and the good accomplished is limited only by the extent of their co-operation in placing before us their investment problems.

BOND QUOTATIONS

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Trading continued dull in today's short session of the bond market. Foreign issues again held the spotlight with French, Belgian, German, Polish and Italian all registering gains.

French 8s were up 1 1-8 and the 7½s and 7s rose 3-8 and 1-4, respectively. Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean 7s climbed 1 1-4 and the 6s of the same country were up 3-4. Seine 7s advanced ½ as did Nord Railway 6½s.

Belgian 7½s mounted 3-4 and Italian 6½s and 7s both were up 1-8. Polish 6s gained a full point.

Rheinelbe Union 7s, however, attracted the heaviest buying of the day, mounting to a new high at 106½.

Mexico 4s, small assented, continued to erase the weakness of the first part of the week, being 1-8 higher.

In the domestic list several of the public utilities showed strength, among them Detroit Edison 5s, New York Edison refunding 5s, North American Edison 6s, and Metropolitan Edison 6s "B," all of which were fractionally higher, with the exception of the latter, which scored a gain of 2 3-4 on small trading.

Activity was apparent in some of the rails, notably Atchison general 4s, Chicago and Eastern Illinois 5s, Illinois Central, St. Louis and New Orleans 5s, International Great Northern adjustment 6s, and St. Louis-San Francisco 5s "A." All were slightly higher, while considerable trading at unchanged prices was recorded in Baltimore and Ohio, Pittsburgh, Lake Erie and West Virginia division 4s, Baltimore and Ohio, Toledo and Cincinnati division 4s, and Missouri-Kansas-Texas 5s "A," 4s "B" and adjustment 5s. Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul convertible 5s of 1914, certificates and 4½s of 1924 certificates, both were 1-4 off.

United States government issues were steady and inactive.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars,) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission, close is omitted when same as low, and both low and close when same as high.

Citrus shipments activity was confined almost wholly to Southern California during the past week. With no fruit at all moving from Florida and practically none from Central and Northern California, Southern California showed a total of 1030 cars of oranges, 369 cars of lemons and seven cars of grapefruit started rolling in the seven-day period.

Central California shipped two cars of oranges during the week.

The comparative table of citrus shipments to date this year and last year, compiled for the government by the Associated Press with complete reports from railroads, follows:

WOOL BUYING LIGHT

BOSTON, Aug. 7. (AP)—Wool trading continues slow and spotty. Manufacturers are the principal operators, buying mostly for current needs. Prices, however, remain firm. The trade is showing some confidence in the immediate future and stocks are in strong hands. Territory wools have been the most active. Ohio quarter-blood has sold at 45c, estimated to cost for clean basis.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The tropical storm reported off Bermuda yesterday having turned northward, apprehension subsided today after yesterday's covering movement that rallied prices to a maximum of 20 and 25 points from Thursday's closing.

This, with the lower Liverpool cables, caused enough reselling from the opening this morning to send prices off about 15 points on the average.

October went down to about 17.22 cents; December, 17.20; January, 17.25; March, 17.46, and May, 17.56, before enough support from local trade bulls developed to check the decline.

Liverpool closed rather weak with futures 6 to 7 of their points below yesterday's, or 4 more than due. Private cables reported some further liquidation by Manchester and some continental selling. In addition, the day's weather reports from the cotton belt were better than expected. It was mostly clear over the belt except in Alabama, Georgia and Arkansas, and along some sections of the Atlantic Coast. No important rains occurred except local thunder showers in the Vicksburg, New Orleans, Montgomery, Thomasville and Augusta districts. Temperatures are of seasonal character with the weather conditions mostly favorable.

Nothing but slight scattered and local showers is indicated over Sunday for parts of the Atlantic and East Gulf States, and probably also for Eastern and Pan-Handle Texas.

The market is now mostly in a waiting position for Monday's government crop report.

CATTLE—Receipts the past week were a little less than the previous one. The market on better grades of steers and of she stock developed a stronger tone, although the quotable advance was small. Common and low medium grade steers and cows have been slow to a shade lower, meeting a dull, sluggish trade and easier prices. Bulls also declined, being 25@35c lower than the high time last week. Several strings of cars of low good grade steers of handy weight brought 8.25, and a few cars of the smoother class of medium grades, 7.75@7.90. Most of the plain grass steers, however, sold at 7.25@7.50, with common light and rough heavy stock at 6.00@6.50, with a few up to 6.75. Very common kinds sold down around 5.50.

Better types of fat cows and heifers have been relatively scarce. Mixed cows and heifers brought 6.25@6.35, with a few lots of good young cows up to 6.50. Part loads of desirable heifers sold at 7.00. Bulk of the she stock, however, has been barely steady, selling in a price spread of 5.25@5.85, with thinner stock at 4.50@5.00. Cutters sold in a range of 2.50@4.00. Few bulls got above 5.75 in a small way, and medium grade butcher bulls in load lots stopped at 5.25, with plainer kinds down to 4.50 and 4.75.

CALVES—After last week's strength the calf market turned weak and sharply lower, closing today at the bottom. Prices are fully 1.00 off, and some rough, medium quality grass calves registered even a greater decline. Top on choice veal is quoted at 11.00, with other good vealers at 9.50@1.050. Good handy weight grass calves declined daily, landing at 9.00 today, while medium and heavy calves sold from 5.75@7.50, as to quality.

HOGS—The hog market rallied under relatively light receipts, but rather light demand during the week. Advances have almost overcome the declines of the previous week, smooth 188-pound eastern butchers selling up to 15.65 today, compared to 14.85 on Monday. Bulk of the week's trading on handyweights was 14.85@15.40. Nearby hogs, as to weight, sold from 13.50@14.50, and packing sows 11.50@12.50.

SHEEP—Receipts on sheep and lambs have been nominal, no carlots having arrived this week. Packers' supplies coming direct on contracts show little quotable change, and the market is nominally steady at 13.50@14.00 on choice handyweight lambs, with light kinds 11.00@11.50. Fat ewes are quoted at 5.00@7.00.

THE INVESTOR

Vast Industrial Growth of Country Has Afforded Wider Range of Securities for Investors to Choose From—Has Tended Also to make Selection More Difficult.

[Copyright, 1926, by New York Evening Post, Inc.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—As a direct result of the vast industrial growth of the United States in the last quarter-century, investors have a proportionately wider range of stocks and bonds from which to choose in finding employment for their surplus funds. By the same token, the problem of placing one's funds to obtain the greatest possible benefits has shown equal growth and is responsible for the need today of more scientific investing.

Just as every ailment of the human body requires different treatment, so the needs of every investor must be diagnosed and the proper investment purchased if their desire are to be satisfied.

Investment banking houses and many other financial institutions have recognized this situation for years and have bent every effort toward meeting it in the most satisfactory manner. They have employed large forces of experts to see that the needs of their clients are properly filled.

Perhaps few institutions have made greater efforts along these lines or have met with greater success than the William R. Compton Company. This concern has prepared for distribution among its clients various booklets designed to help in the selection of investments. It has also prepared a questionnaire which when filled out is of material aid in helping its experts to make suggestions for purchases or as substitutions.

In its questionnaire seven basic inquiries are made. These are subdivided in such a manner as to go into every minute detail. The seven inquiries are as follow:

(1.) What is your principal objective in investing?

(2.) How are your securities divided among the main classes of investments?

(3.) Have you had your security holdings reviewed recently by a competent authority in order to anticipate the favorable or adverse effects of changing conditions upon general classes or specific issues of securities?

(4.) How are your holding balanced with regard to character, type, maturity and stability of price?

(5.) What callable bonds do you own?

(6.) Considering the present Federal tax rate upon your taxable income, what yield must you receive on a taxable security to give a net return equivalent to the yield on a tax-free security giving 4, 4 1-4, 4 1-2, 4 3-4 and 5 1-4 per cent?

(7.) How much will your present estate be depleted by estate and inheritance taxes, not including fees, waivers and administration costs?

The foregoing questions are all relevant and tend to show some of the various factors which should be considered either in selecting new securities for investment or in revising those already owned.

"Contrary to a belief widely held among those of large and moderate incomes," says a Compton circular, "investing money is not a simple task which any individual of good judgment and intelligence can best perform single-handled."

COTTON STATUS SURVEY ISSUED

Memphis Paper Makes Cut in Crop Condition

Bottoms of Plants Impaired Most Seriously

Possibility of Fair Yield Not Entirely Removed

MEMPHIS (Tenn.) Aug. 7.—Reports to the Commercial-Appeal by cotton correspondents indicate that the condition of the crop on the 1st inst. was 68.9 per cent of a normal, compared with 71.5 per cent at July 16.

The government, as of July 16, placed the condition of the crop at 70.7 per cent of a normal, and the indicated yield at 15,368,000 bales.

Correspondents report that the crop, since July 16, fruited about as well as is ordinarily expected. The bottom crop, owing to poor fruiting or hopper injury earlier in the season is impaired, and this deficiency is a permanent handicap.

The possibility of at least a moderate yield per acre has, however, not been removed by the fact that the bottom crop is scanty. The rapidity with which the plant for two or three weeks has been fruiting suggests large possibilities.

CROP LATE

The great danger lies in boll weevil. The plant averages late as to age and delay in starting fruiting makes it that much later. The plant, except in portions of the Atlantic States, where drought was persistent, is oversize, rangy and of sappy growth, but the tap root, except in Oklahoma, is good. Cultivation is good, and stands better than average, but not as good as last year.

So little of the crop, from the standpoint of fruitage, is far enough advanced to be safe from weevil that, speaking broadly, the whole crop is susceptible to weevil depredations and should weevil strike in great numbers further fruiting could be prevented.

Boll weevil have been found this year in scattered counties practically all over the belt. Reports indicate that infestation is light, notwithstanding very favorable weather through June and July for weevil propagation, damage so far has been negligible, but it has been the experience of the past that weevil do not become very destructive prior to about July 25. It is entirely possible that weevil may become very destructive during the next two weeks and many correspondents express the fear that this will be the case.

THREE LEADERS

Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas continue to lead the crop prospects. Both Oklahoma and Arkansas show considerable improvement during the reporting period. Texas has about held its own, but insects of many varieties are increasing in that State and there are many local complaints of shedding.

The Carolinas have improved in response to better moisture conditions, but in recent drought areas the plant is small and there are some complaints of poor fruiting. North Georgia shows improvement, due to relief in recent drought areas, but other sections have gone backward somewhat, owing to unfavorable weather conditions and insect injury.

In Alabama and in Louisiana the prospect is somewhat less promising than it was two weeks ago because of insects and unfavorable weather. The better fruiting in Mississippi has improved the prospect in that State slightly, but weevils in alarming quantities have been reported at a few points.

WEATHER FAVORS

Weather conditions over the belt during the period from July 16 to the 1st inst. were mostly favorable from the standpoint of plant growth, however, under boll weevil conditions, hotter and drier weather would have been better. Temperatures dropped below seasonal normal at some time during the period, in practically every section of the belt, but dips were not low enough to result in damage.

Texas received too much rain during the second week of the period which followed by hot sunshine probably accounts for excessive shedding complained of in reports. Gulf Coast sections, including east coast sections of Texas and the southern one-third of Georgia, received too much rain throughout the period. Most of the belt east of the Mississippi River was too wet during the last ten days of the period. Very heavy rains, the product of a tropical storm which swept from the Bahamas to lower Florida east coast and up the Atlantic seaboard, occurred at scattered points in Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina. These rains were washing but the general results are described as beneficial. While the plant is large and fine in appearance it is not as hardy as last year's and will not stand as much hot, dry weather having grown under different conditions; but hot dry weather, to the point of actual injury to the plant, will be the best assurance against boll weevil.

MURDER AND SUICIDE LAID TO WEATHER

Oklahoma and Texas in Grip of Heat Waves as North Gets Relief

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 7. (AP)—Oklahoma and Texas continued in the grip of a heat wave today, while States to the north enjoyed relief from the excessive temperatures of mid-week.

Two killings in Texas were indirectly attributed to the extended hot spell. William Mueller, a farm laborer believed to have been crazed by the heat, wounded his cousin, C. J. Mueller, at the latter's farm near Cuero, Tex., last night, shot and killed Mueller's wife and then ended his own life.

In Western Oklahoma temperatures again rose over the 100 mark today, Okeene reporting a maximum of 110. The high mark at Oklahoma City was 101.

The mercury neared the century level in Eastern Oklahoma, but cooler weather was forecast for tomorrow. No relief was in sight for Western Oklahoma, however.

Government crop experts said the heat was ideal for maturing cotton.

The high temperatures of yesterday were repeated in Texas, with no break in prospect.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Substantial support was given the different groups on the curb exchange today. Most significance in the early dealings was attached to the rallying power of some issues that were in supply on recent days. Chief of these movements was a sharp upturn in Industrial Rayon which rose a point to 9 5-8 which compares with yesterday's low for the year at 6 1-2. Libby Owens recovered a point from the year's low, selling to 126. Durant Motors rose about a point from the previous closing and a firm tone prevailed in the other industrial and public utility securities.

Mining shares were prominent as a group in activity and strength. Newmont Mining rose to a new high, selling to 68.

With the exception of a sharp advance of 3 points in a miscellaneous oil issue, the trading in that section held narrowly. New York Transit rallied 1 1-2 points after an opening at the year's low at 33.

Nevada Consolidated Copper new as moved up about 2 points to a new high at 97 1-2. Moderate strength was noted in most other issues of that department.

In the final hour when the demand broadened and lifted most quotations to the day's high level, several issues scored material gains. Among them were a 7 3-8-point rise in General Gas and Electric Delaware "B," and an active upturn in Glen Alden of 1 5-8 to 170.

Persistent buying in Warner Brothers Pictures advanced the quotations more than 6 points to a new peak for the year at 23 1-2. Consolidated Gas Baltimore, improved a point and a like gain was recorded in United Gas Improvement.

The closing price is omitted when same as the low, and both low and close when same as the high.

London Daily Radio

BY ARTHUR W. KIDDY

[Copyright, 1926, by New York Evening Post, Inc.]

LONDON, Aug. 7. (By Wireless) Considerable interest is being displayed here over the announcement that the government is sending a delegation to the United States and Canada for the purpose of studying industrial conditions, with special reference to relations between employers and employed.

The franc reached to 162 today, but there is a firmish undertone to the market. The sudden suggestion that Poincare may ask for the ratification of American-British debt agreements before vacation together with other developments like dealing in currency by the Bank of France, suggests that some sound financial advisers conceivably are coaching him.

GOSSIP

Earl Carroll, the theatrical producer, was talking rather bitterly to a New York reporter about his sentence to a year and a day in jail.

"Gossip," he said, "is what made all the trouble. There was too much gossip. It reminds me of the anecdote:

"A very loquacious lady talked a man pretty nearly to death at a dinner party, and then, as she got up with the other ladies to go into the drawing-room, she tapped him on the arm with her fan and said:

"'I talk a lot, don't I? But if you men told the truth I believe you'd all admit that you like talkative women better than the others.'"

"'The others?' said the man. 'What others?'"—[Exchange.

PLANES REACH CHICAGO

Tiniest Craft Alights Few Moments After Large Ford Machine in Reliability Tour

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Twenty-four airplanes of various makes and models rested safely at Airmail Field, Maywood Suburb, tonight, after completing in two hops the first leg of the second commercial airplane reliability tour. One plane was unaccounted for, but it was understood it had developed magneto trouble and had put back to the factory at Bryan, O.

The twenty-five airplanes, contesting for a silver trophy donated by Edsel Ford, left Detroit this morning, flew 127 miles to Kalamazoo and this afternoon hopped to Chicago, 128 miles.

The aerial tourists have an easy day tomorrow, with a ninety-mile flight up the shore of Lake Michigan to Milwaukee. Monday they will fly to St. Paul.

The huge triple-engined all-metal Ford plane with an inclosed cabin capable of carrying ten passengers, the largest in the contest, was made the object of a rush by thousands of persons, but by the time it had taxied into line the smallest craft in the flight was upon the field and the big ship was for the moment deserted.

BABY FLIVVER

The "flivver," a tiny Driggs Dart, was threatened with serious damage by the spectators and to save it from being wrecked in the stampede to view it it was not wheeled into line, but was taxied to the air mail hangar and hidden under one of the wings of a big air mail ship. Between the top of the Dart and the lower wing of the mail plane there was room to spare.

C. S. (Casey) Jones, a veteran, was the first flyer to reach Chicago, whirling a Curtiss Oriole out of the East. He was second in the contest last year. It was not known whether he had won the $1000 offered by the Ford dealers of Chicago for the best time from Detroit, however, as officials had not checked against starting times tonight.

WOMAN PASSENGER

When the passenger riding with Lieut. John Paul Riddle in a Waco plane stripped off cap and goggles she was revealed as Mrs. Susan H. Embry of Cincinnati, O., the only woman in the race. She is not yet a pilot, but the ship in which she is riding will be hers after the tour, and she expects to fly it.

Vance Breese, piloting a Ryan monoplane, motored with a 200-horsepower Wright whirlwind engine, had not enough flying for the day and after checking went aloft for an exhibition of loops, slips and zooming. He sent his powerful mount straight into the skies and his run for a take-off measured less than fifty feet.

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

While definite plans for following up their success at Seal Beach have not been completed by the Marland Oil Company, it became known yesterday that the general program calls for the immediate drilling of several new wells. The terms of the Marland lease on the Bixby property, and also on the Selover & McGrath lease, call for the starting of a well within sixty days of the completion of a producing well, but it is generally considered unlikely that the Marland will take advantage of its full sixty days.

No announcement of the Standard Oil Company's plans has been made, and the Standard is also silent regarding the terms of its lease, but practically all leases protect themselves against offsetting by requiring immediate drilling when a well is brought in on adjoining property, and it is probable that the next few weeks will see one or more wells going down on the Standard's property, particularly in view of the fact that the Marland Oil Company's leases offset the Standard lease on three sides.

Where a few large operators hold a monopoly on a field, a conservative drilling policy is generally followed. This is not always the case, as was evidenced in the development at Inglewood, and the peculiar circumstances of the Marland Oil Company may result in more drilling at Seal Beach than might otherwise be the case. The strike is the Marland's first big opportunity to become a factor in California production, and this may cause the company to pursue a more intensive development policy than if it already possessed a production commensurate with its size and importance.

After Deep Sand

A. J. Delaney, one of the leading operators at Los Cerritos is rigging up to carry his No. 8 well on down to the McKeon zone, according to field reports. Delaney No. 8 has been producing from the upper zone for several months, but recently has been showing considerable water.

Near Completion

The Umpire Oil Company expects to have its No. 39 well on production in the McKeon zone some time next week. The well is down 4765 feet, and will start drilling into the oil sand today or tomorrow.

Gets New Property

James E. O'Donnell has acquired the Burgess property on the north side of the Signal Hill field at Long Beach, and plans to begin immediate drilling, according to field reports. A well already has been started on the property, but is down only about 1000 feet, and O'Donnell will start operations by finishing this project, it is said. The Burgess lease has room for three or four wells, and if the first is successful, O'Donnell will drill up the rest of the property in short order.

Well Shuts Down

The W. O. Brubaker well which is wildcatting the are east of San Fernando is idle at 2700 feet, with a fish in the hole, according to field reports. The well is several miles northeast of the Petroleum Securities Company's Sesnand No. 1 near Zelzah, which is drilling in sticky, brown shale at about 2800 feet. The Sesnand well is generally considered to have a good chance for production.

Gets New Lease

The Superior Oil Company has acquired eighty acres in the Poso Creek district, from the Marland Oil Company, according to official reports. The acreage is located about ten miles southeast of the Shell Company's discovery well.

Will Spud Soon

The California Petroleum Development Company expects to spud in its well in the San Juan Capistrano district about the end of next week, according to unofficial reports. This company has built a derrick about two miles from the town of San Juan Capistrano.

MAN SAVED FROM LEAP DIES OF ACID

LONDON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Stating as a joke that the man sitting on the edge of "Suicide Cliff" at Eastbourne was going to end his life, Maj. Dalbos had the horror of seeing the stranger suddenly throw up his hands and start to slip over to his doom. The major managed to grasp the suicide by the coat and pulled him to safety only to find that he had died from the effects of a drink of acid which he swallowed just before he tried his leap. The man was identified as Alfred L. Hearsum of Essex.

RUSSIANS SEEKING WORLD COAL TRADE

PARIS, Aug. 7 (Exclusive)—During the last month fifty-six new shafts have been opened in the Donnetz coal fields of Russia in an attempt to wrest some of the coal trade from other foreign countries. The miners have agreed to lengthen their working day from eight to ten hours without any increase in pay, it is learned. The new mines are to be equipped with American mining machinery in the majority of cases.

GUIDING INSURANCE BUYERS

This is one of a series of articles appearing in The Times three times a week dealing with all phases of insurance.

LVI.—WHAT IS A BAIL BOND?

I suppose most of those who motor through the countryside at this season of the year have, on some occasion, had experiences with constables of the vaudeville type, as well as with the modern State trooper mounted upon a motorcycle. I recall an incident of some years ago, in which I was spared much inconvenience by the fortuitous circumstance that the "taown kunstabel's" grandfather had lived in the State by which my automobile had been licensed.

We were skimming along in New Jersey. The road was good, the weather mild and we had just enjoyed a satisfying luncheon, which had terminated thrillingly with a juicy pie full of red, red cherries, thousands of whose brothers and sisters we could, as we ate, see hanging on a venerable tree just outside our country landlord's window.

The car, too, was in fine fettle and was thoroughly responsive to our every whim or need. Villages were not far apart, and my eye had not failed to observe the frequent signs which announced to the world, as it motored through Manhattan's favorite jest, that twenty-five miles an hour was the legal maximum.

Nor did I forget that certain persons—cynical New Yorkers—had warned me that on this particular route more than one justice of the peace and his lurking police aids followed the practice of summer resorts and made enough off the vacationists to assure comfortable hibernation.

We were jogging along at about twenty-five miles an hour as we passed a signboard bearing a welcome sign (oh, the irony of some of those welcomes painted in mammoth upper case!) I relaxed the tension of my throttle-foot a little as we slid up a slight grade over which were visible the roofs of the first houses.

About a hundred yards beyond the crest of the slope was gathered a typical Sunday village group—half a dozen men, all standing save one, who sat on a wooden box ten or twelve feet from the road. All of them were watching us as we approached.

The sitter arose, stepped into the middle of the road and raised his right hand in a manner of authority. Automatically I shifted my right foot from throttle to brake-pedal, and we came to a stop at a respectful distance from the man who had interrupted our progress.

He came slowly to the driver's side of the car and asked, with menace in both eye and voice, "How fast do you say you were going as you came up that hill?"

"A little under twenty-five miles an hour."

"Twenty-five miles!" He turned to his satellites with a pitying smile. "Twenty-five miles! Fastest twenty-five miles I ever see." He looked hard at the watch which he held in his hand, as if he expected it to laugh back "Twenty-five miles!" Then he said: "I suppose you keep your eyes on your speedometer all the time, don't you?"

"How fast do you think I was going?" I parried.

"Thirty-one miles an hour."

"Thirty-one. That's drawing it pretty fine. Tell me, what is your system? How can you estimate the speed of a car as it approaches you?"

"Estimate! I don't estimate. I calculate. I figure it out."

"Well, that beats me," I ventured, trying to register admiration in the tone of my voice. "What's the secret? Tell me how you do it."

He actually smiled back at me, and now the satellites drew near to hear again, for perhaps the thousandth time, the story of how the speedfiends were caught by the intelligent device of their guardian of the peace.

"Simple as anything," was the reply. "Nothing's any trouble, if you know how. I have measured the distance from that box to the place on the hill where I can first see the top of an automobile coming up, when I'm sittin' on the box. An' this is a stop-watch, an' a good one.

"I just count the number of seconds from the time I see the automobile top 'till the car gets opposite the box; and from that an' knowin' the distance I can tell right away exactly how fast a car was going."

Here he turned to his satellites, who nodded their heads and smiled at one another.

"Well," I said, "I wouldn't argue with a man who had so clever a scheme. That's a new one to me. I don't see how you do it. I never saw an officer in my State who could do that."

"Where you from?" he asked, stepping in front of the car. Both of us said, "Connecticut" in chorus, he with a rising, I with a falling inflection. And he added: "My grandfather was born in Connecticut."

"That so? Where?"

"New London."

"Beautiful place. Ever been there?"

"No. Never have."

"Never been in Connecticut?"

"No."

"Connecticut is beautiful. And it seems to me you ought to go up there some time and see where your gradnfather lived."

"I mean to, some time."

"That's right and, if you do, look me up; maybe I can be of some assistance. Here's my card."

"Thanks. I'll sure do it, if I come. But I'm afraid I won't. You see," he added almost sadly, "I don't ever get a chance to go anywhere; just stay on and on in this burg all the time. Gets kind of monotonous, too.

"Well, good-by; an' say—watch out in the next village. They're pickin' 'em up every day; an' it's twenty-five dollars if you take it easy, and more if you get mad and scrap."

"All right. Awfully good of you. Thanks ever so much." I stepped on the starter, we waved good-by and got a fine response from satellites and everybody.

On the back seat they began to figure out what we could do with the twenty-five dollars we had saved.

I said: "It wasn't so much the fine I was afraid of as the bail. I wouldn't have paid the fine without a trial. It is Sunday. I haven't much money with me. So they would have held the car and we should have been obliged to park here 'till tomorrow or go on by train and return for the trial. It would have been a good thing to have a bail bond."

"A bail bond; what's that?" from the back seat.

We'll explain the bail bond one day soon.

FINANCIAL VIEWS IN LONDON

LONDON, Aug. 7. — While by no means challenging the Prince of Wales' assertion at Oxford that science must form the basis of Britain's future industrial prosperity, the fact remains that nothing can serve as a substitute for the exertion of the maximum amount of individual effort and the effective co-operation between capital and labor.

Until that truth is proclaimed and acted upon here by government and the people, England's industrial program must be retarded, and the unreadiness virtually to face facts, explains most of the French and British currency and industrial problems, respectively.

Meanwhile firmness in securities is quite remarkable. Nothwithstanding industrial depression, all stocks offered are easily absorbed to pay recent dividends.

The railways were compelled to sell large reserves in British government stocks, but everything was easily absorbed without disturbing prices.

Cause of the Absorption

Of course, the stagnation in trade with its consequent decline in commercial demands for credits is partly responsible for the absorbing power, but it is believed that foreign purchases also are contributing to the strength in stocks. Moreover, while some revival in trade is hoped for it is the coal deadlock which gradually terminates the continued firmness in stocks and in itself expresses an instinctive feeling among capitalists that British industrial problems are not likely yet to be solved on lines promising a big revival. Despite the extent of the American boom in stocks it is not believed that any big prolonged slump is necessarily impending, but occasional jerks, like earlier in the year, are possible as a result of the Federal Reserve Board's steadying policy.

Foreign investments by America since the war have enormously increased, not only the American holdover exchanges, but also American commercial activities in other countries. It is considered that the outlook in America probably never was more promising than now, although something must, of course, depend upon European development.

It is impossible for the international trade of the gold-standard countries to revive in a decisive, permanent fashion until the French, Belgian and Italian currencies became steadier. While those countries may derive temporary export activity from falling exchange, the moment probably will be reached when disadvantages will outweigh advantages. It is feared, however, that reforms in France may be long hindered by the short-sighted policy of the American debt settlement and also by the confirmed tendency to hoard gold which should be used for steadying exchanges.

France's Prewar Attitude

Even before the war France imposed absurd restrictions on gold movements, which threw the onus of a free-gold market responsibilities on Britain and America.

While the Indian currency reporting is generally approved, the proposal to create a new central reserve bank, displacing in some respects the imperial bank, is creating considerable controversy, especially as with the appointments of a governor, deputy governor and certain directors being in the hands of the Governor-General, India is thought to be in some danger of undue political control.

British national revenue is still keenly affected by the strike so that receipts to date are about £30,000,000 down, compared with an anticipated gain for the whole year of £13,000,000.

KELLOGG SILENT ON NEW NOTE

Secretary Will Not Make Comment on Epistle Sent Mexican Government

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Official comment on the latest note sent to the Mexican government by the State Department in connection with the long-pending discussion of land and petroleum laws was withheld today.

Secretary of State Kellogg would not discuss the matter, but did not attempt to deny that the note had been transmitted.

Such information as was available was to the effect that the note could not be regarded as in the nature of an ultimatum, but was a diplomatically worded reiteration of the American government's views respecting features of the Mexican land and petroleum laws which have been regarded by Americans owning land in Mexico as confiscatory and retroactive.

Whether the latest note will be made public was not disclosed. The two governments carried on a correspondence on the subject for a long period before it was agreed that the various communications should be made public last winter. The publication was at that time agreed to after demands for the correspondence had been made in the Senate. It is considered possible that the present note may be withheld from the public at least until the Mexican government has had an opportunity to make a reply.

Secretary Kellogg said no definite arrangements had been made for a conference with Ambassador Sheffield, who is returning soon from Mexico. Mr. Kellogg plans to go to White Pine Camp to see President Coolidge in about two weeks. Whether or not he will see Mr. Sheffield before that time is uncertain.

PERIL FORECAST IN DEBT TERMS

Lord Rothermere Blames British Statesmen

Predicts Radical Revision in Few Years

Denies Authorship of 'Mail's' Attack on America

LONDON, Aug. 7. (AP)—A radical revision of all the war-debt settlements and the steady growth of tariff walls in most countries, including Great Britain, are foreseen by Lord Rothermere, widely known British publisher, in an article appearing in the Sunday Pictorial.

Asserting that Anglo-American amity is essential for world peace, Lord Rothermere disclaims personal responsibility for recent articles in his paper, the Daily Mail, which characterized the United States as playing the part of Shylock.

Although Lord Rothermere thinks that the United States is in no way to blame for the "onerous terms" of the settlement made with Great Britain in 1923, he gravely doubts whether the continued payments of immense sums by debtor nations will in the long run be advisable.

AMERICA NOT TO BLAME

"My own belief is that by general consent there will, in a few years, be a radical revision of all the debt settlements whether with the United States, Great Britain, or any other of the Allies," writes Lord Rothermere. "It will be undertaken by the United States and Great Britain in their own interests. They are, as at present constituted, an active contribution toward the destruction of international trade."

Already it is evident that continental countries with low currencies are being forced to protect themselves behind prohibitive protective barriers, he asserts, and it appears only a question of time until there will be no outlet for the manufactures of intensely industrialized, high-currency countries like the United States and Great Britain.

"Great Britain, so far," he writes, "has made only a modest advance along the road of tariff imposts, but all the indications are that within two or three years, she will become a definitely protectionist country with almost yearly ascending tariffs."

This movement, Lord Rothermere sees as particularly dangerous to the United States, since "America's rapidly increasing industrialization requires growing markets over-seas for her products."

CALLS STATESMEN INEPT

Disclaiming responsibility for the Daily Mail articles, Lord Rothermere says:

"One of my newspapers, the Daily Mail, jumped in at the deep end of the recent discussions of inter-allied debts, and splashed about saying that American war-debt collection methods resembled the methods of Shylock. I entirely disagree with this attitude. The opinions are those of the editor and his staff. They are not mine."

Lord Rothermere remarks that the editor's opinion is one held in many quarters of Great Britain and France.

"Our present plight," he says, "is not due to American rapacity but to the incredible ineptitude of British statesmanship."

The proper course should have been for Great Britain to declare her willingness to meet her obligations, but to insist that the whole question of inter-allied indebtedness should be settled simultaneously.

GOLD COIN FOUND AFTER FORTY YEARS

SPRINGFIELD (Mo.) August 7. (Exclusive)—Irby E. Murray, a farmer residing south of Ash Grove, has a $20 gold piece which lay for forty-one years lost on the old Murry farm, a part of which he now owns. Murray's father lost the coin in 1885. A short time ago a man plowing on the farm turned the coin out of the ground. The coin is as bright as when it was lost and bears the date of 1866.

LIQUOR-PLOT PRISONER'S WIFE AHEAD

Mrs. Langley Seeks Kentucky Congressional Seat Vacated by Mate

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 7. (AP)—Congressional primary elections in eight of eleven Kentucky districts today failed in most cases to arouse the interest of the electorate, the vote generally being the lightest ever cast, early returns tonight indicated.

W. Voris Gregory, Mayfield, former United States District Attorney, apparently had defeated two opponents. Nearly complete, unofficial returns gave him a plurality of more than 400 votes.

Atty.-Gen. Frank E. Daugherty and Henry D. Moorman were running a close race in the Fourth District Democratic Congressional race, with Moorman in the lead.

In the Tenth Mrs. John W. Langley, who is seeking the seat vacated by her husband when he resigned and went to the Atlanta penitentiary to serve a two-year sentence on conviction of conspiracy to violate the prohibition law, was leading Congressman A. J. Kirk, for the Republican nomination. Kirk is serving the unexpired term of Langley. There is no Democratic opposition in the Tenth.

Orie S. Ware of Kenton county, on almost complete unofficial returns, won the Democratic nomination in the Sixth District to succeed A. B. Rouse, Democrat, who is retiring. The same returns indicated that Emmett H. Daugherty, Ludlow, won the Republican nomination.

Bay Elks Break Ground for Fine New Clubhouse

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

SANTA MONICA, Aug. 7.—More than 600 members of the Elks of this city participated in the ground-breaking ceremony here tonight for the new $500,000 clubhouse to be erected for the Santa Monica Bay lodge. Arthur C. Verge, Exalted Ruler of the Bay Lodge, and Clyde A. Skull, chairman of the building committee, pulled the levers that sent the steam shovel working on the first scoop of dirt on the new site.

The new building will be located on the block bounded by Pier avenue, Main street, Marine street and Washington Boulevard. Before the exercises, a delegation of Elks led by William Ostrman and the lodge band paraded from the old club house at 1811 Ocean avenue to the new site. Addresses were made by Arthur C. Verge, Exalted Ruler, H. W. Brown, Past Ruler, Mayor J. W. Speele, Commissioner of Finance Frank A. Helton, and John Morton of the Board of Public Works.

Thompson Will Visit Visayan Islands Group

MANILA, Aug. 7. (AP)—Carmi A. Thompson, representing President Coolidge in a survey of conditions in the Philippines, will leave Manila Monday night for a two weeks' visit to the Visayan Islands, the central group of the Philippine Archipelago. The Visayan Islands include the land of the Igorrotes and the richest sugar growing section of the possession.

Officials of the Provinces of the Visayan Islands are preparing many receptions and dinners for Mr. Thompson.

Today the President's envoy motored into Nueva Ecija Province, north of Manila and returned tonight.

Denial Given on Jugo-Slav Note to Bulgarians

BELGRADE (Jugo-Slavia) Aug. 7. (AP)—Foreign Minister Ninchitch in an official statement today, denied that the note which is to be dispatched to Bulgaria concerning the recent frontier incidents will have the character of an ultimatum. The notes which Rumania and Greece also intend to send to Bulgaria, he says, are along the same lines as the Jugo-Slav note.

TOPEKA (Kan.) Aug. 7. (AP)—On returns from all but eighteen of the State's 2641 precincts, and with the vote official from ninety-five of the State's 105 counties, ex-Gov. Davis has a lead of 438 votes over Donald Muir of Anthony for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Dry Officer and Sheriff Killed in Duel

BLUEFIELD (W. Va.) Aug. 7. (AP) C. Pridemore Fleming, Sheriff of Dickenson county, Virginia, was killed and James S. Mullins, State prohibition officer, was seriously wounded in a revolver duel between the men on the Courthouse steps at Clintwood tonight.

FISHER FOLK TOAST GIRL CHANNEL VICTOR

BOULOGNE (France) Aug. 7. (AP) Gertrude Ederle, American swimming marvel, was toasted by veteran fisher folk all along the Pas de Calais coast tonight as Neptune's favorite daughter, because of her victory over the treacherous English Channel.

Judging from the sheaves of congratulatory messages from all parts of the world, which continue to pour in to Miss Ederle's quarters on Cape Griz-Nez, it is evident that admirers of sea exploits are of greater number than those interested in the most brilliant aerial exploits.

RESCUE AT SEA MADE BY LINER

Skipper Turns Venezuela Out of Course to Aid

Eleven Passengers Taken Off Disabled Vessel

Plans for Liberia Ship Line Nearer Fruition

Bringing first news to this port of the rescue of eleven passengers off a disabled ship on the Salvador coast, the Panama Mail liner Venezuela arrived from New York and Central American ports at daybreak yesterday with a capacity list of passengers and freight.

Capt. R. E. Judson, commanding the ship, reported diverting his ship to the southeast end of San Salvador, where the British steamer Port Kemblo had been driven ashore in the recent Caribbean storm, while en route from London to New Zealand. Boats were lowered and three women, three children and five men were taken off the crippled ship and left at Panama awaiting passage to the Antipodes. Skipper and crew remained aboard the crippled ship, and had jettisoned 2000 tons of coal in an effort to float her.

Samuel Haskell disembarked from the Venezuela here, having completed work as construction engineer for the Andean National Corporation on the 450-mile oil pipe line to Cartagena for the Tropical Oil Company, a subsidiary of Standard Oil. The completion was celebrated July 1, last, by the dispatch of the first tanker, the T. J. Williams, for Bayonne. Haskell said, while the field is still young, with only 115 producing wells, it is destined to influence the world's markets when developed.

William R. Carter walked down the gangplank to California soil for the first time, after recently disposing of his Jacksonville (Fla.) holdings. Florida has the stamina and shortly will recover from its debacle following the boom, he declared. Other passengers were Prof. William B. Allison of Occidental College, and Mrs. Allison, returning from a tour of Guatemala; Andrea Novoa, engineer from Nicaragua, and Henry Opferman, manager in Central America for W. R. Grace & Co.

The liner stopped at Manzanillo, Mex., five days ago, where it was learned the religious turmoil had not reached the West Coast, not a single ecclesiastic seeking passage out of the country and no economic boycott apparent.

LIBERIA SHIP LINE SCHEME PROGRESSES

Another move toward realization of Rev. J. E. Lewis's dream of a Church of God Line, with a passenger and freight ship plying between here and Liberia, was noted yesterday, when the steamer Chiapas of the Mexican States Line arrived from San Francisco. The Mexican vessel is in process of purchase from James Irvine by Lewis's Liberian Transportation Steamship Company and Excelsior Mining Company. That is, $5000 has been paid Irvine, and the ship is expected to remain here until he receives the balance, amounting to several times the initial payment.

Capt. Harry Anderson, former municipal pilot, was employed to bring the ship here. He docked her at berth 87, Los Angeles Harbor, where an "open house" will be held today, according to Lewis and his associates. Of the latter, Victor L. Goodstein, a former rancher and tailor, appeared as spokesman yesterday.

Goodstein volunteered the information he is not experienced in steamship business, but added that he is a resourceful business man and he envisioned not only one, but "four or five ships running between here and Liberia soon." He was advised yesterday it would not be necessary to apply to the State Railroad Commission for rates to carry passengers and freight to Liberia under the Liberian flag, as he proposes.

The line is expected to offer special rates to missionaries and wild-game hunters. Goodstein disclosed no details regarding freight offerings, but repeated he is resourceful. He permitted the impression to spread that he and his backers have "plenty of money."

Although Lewis, the colored pastor and founder of the idea, yielded to Goodstein to do most of the talking, he insisted he still is to be president-general of the company. Goodstein is general superintendent, with A. Atkins as assistant superintendent. Then there are C. J. Darrow as manager, and Michael Haber as assistant manager; J. K. Veller as vice-president and chairman of finance; H. H. Franklin and Dan Frazier as additional vice-presidents, and Miss Cleo Stewart as secretary-general.

Irvine expects to keep the liner here under the Mexican flag until the additional payments are forthcoming, when, Lewis says, she will fly the Liberian flag, the first ship under those colors.

PROUD OLD SCHOONER SOLD FOR FISH BARGE

The proud old, bald-headed schooner Fox is soon to join the hulks of what once were five other noted windjammers, now doing humble service as fishing barges off Redondo. The craft has been bought from the Fox Film Corporation by O. C. Olson of Redondo, who has shorn her of her masts, and converted her into a de luxe barge with cabins, lunch counter and other conveniences for fishermen. As the Allan A. she made many smart passages, tripping it to Honolulu from Eureka in twelve days and returning in eight, under Capt. V. C. Iverson, now municipal port pilot at Los Angeles Harbor.

The new Danzig motor tankship Thalia arrived, took on 100,000 barrels of naptha and sailed yesterday for Hamburg and Rotterdam. She is one of eight tankers of the Baltic American Petroleum Import Company, seven of which are Dieselized, now operating between here and Northern Europe. She averaged eleven knots to the canal, and twelve from the canal here, according to Capt. W. Moebus.

Between seventy-five and 100 steamship men and civic officials will be guests of the Wilmington Transportation Company on the trial cruise of the new Diesel-electric towboat Milton S. Patrick to Catalina Island the 17th inst., it was announced yesterday by David P. Fleming, secretary of the company. Milton S. Patrick, manager of floating equipment at the island, for whom the craft is named, will be host on the trip. The start will be from the Catalina terminal at Wilmington at 9 a.m. The party will proceed to Patrick Cove, formerly Fourth of July Cove, for a barbecue, and will return to the mainland at 5:30 p.m. The tug is a sister craft of the John N. Stewart, recently completed for the same company. The two are the first Diesel-electric tugs on this Coast and are equipped with two 350 horsepower Winton full Diesel engines, with Westinghouse electric control. They were built at William Muller's yards in Wilmington at a cost of $125,000 each. William Wrigley, JR., owner, is expected to be present on the trip.

Henry Ford's big freight steamer East Indian is due from New York today for bunkers, en route for the Orient and on around the world, with millions of parts of Ford motors in her holds. It will be her first trip to this port, although the Onondaga and the Oneida of the Ford Line have called here regularly in the intercoastal service.

The yacht Talayha, owned and skippered by Lazard Lippman, harbor capitalist, returned yesterday from Alaskan waters, where Mr. and Mrs. Lippman and party went two months ago on a fishing and hunting expedition. Trout were so plentiful in Alaskan streams the sportsmen developed sore arms merely hauling them in, according to Lippman.

The Mongolia of the Panama-Pacific Line is due from San Francisco today, and will sail tomorrow for New York with 400 passengers and holds full of California freight.

Canned vegetables of the west coast are expected to invade Cuban markets in volume with the rapid increase in transportation facilities to that island from this Coast, according to B. G. Sherwood of the General Steamship Corporation. Heretofore Spain has sent Cuba 66 per cent of her purchase of canned goods, amounting to 24,-000,000 pounds annually. The General has monthly sailings for Cuba, the next vessel being the motorship Finn on the 25th inst.

After more than a half century at sea, Capt. T. J. Macgenn, master of the McCormick coastal liner Rose City, retired from active sea life yesterday and will devote his time to shore pursuits and writing. He is succeeded by W. M. Westerberg, former chief officer on the Rose City. The veteran skipper ran away from home and signed on shipboard fifty-eight years ago. Forty-five years ago he was given his master's ticket, and for three decades has sailed this Coast, the last fifteen on the Rose City; although the liners Bear and Beaver also long bore the imprint of the old master on their bridges. Capt. Macgenn, aside from being a navigator, is known as the "poet of the Pacific," and has several volumes of rhymes and prose to his credit.

Included in the list was the Panama-Pacific liner Mongolia, which sailed for New York by way of Los Angeles with a capacity passenger list and cargo.

Preparations are being made by the Southern Pacific Coast to let contracts for five ferryboats to be used in the transbay service.

The Southern Pacific ferry San Mateo was adrift for several hours on the bay early today, due to engine trouble, which was repaired by the crew and the craft made shore unaided.

SEATTLE, Aug. 7. (AP)—The Charles Christenson, which has been lying idle here for the past ten weeks, is to load Monday for the east coast in the service of the Arrow Line. The vessel will take out 4,000,000 feet of lumber and 1000 tons of general cargo.

With only a few days of the fishing season remaining, packers in the Bristol Bay region are preparing to cease activities and ship the pack. It was announced here today that the three units of the Libby, McNeill & Libby fleet in the Bristol Bay district, together with auxiliary craft, were expected to leave there for Seattle not later than Monday. The fleet will be expected here on or about the 17th inst. The fleet includes the steamers Osego and W. C. Gorgas, the motorship Libby Main and the bark Oriental, the latter being used as a barge.

The steamer Cadaretta is expected here Tuesday with a cargo from the Carlisle Packing Company canneries in the vicinity of Naknek.

Advices received here today reported that the Admiral-Oriental liner President Madison is due here from the Far East the 15th inst. She is bringing 287 passengers and freight cargo consisting of 4500 tons, including 3750 bales of raw silk.

PORTLAND, Aug. 7. (AP)—With 300,338 bushels of wheat, one of the largest cargoes to leave here in the past two years, the Swedish motorship Bullaren started for United Kingdom ports today. The wheat, destined for Dublin and Cork, has a declared value of $426,757. Kerr, Gifford & Co. are the exporters.

The same concern has the steamers Benlawers and Ethel Freda, both Britishers, here for wheat cargoes.

Balfour, Guthrie & Co. are loading the British steamer Peterton with wheat at the Crown Mills dock.

Three carloads of apples have been booked for shipment to Europe on the Dutch steamer Kinderdyk, scheduled to leave here the 19th inst. The shipment will be the first of its kind this season, unless a few boxes arrive in time to go out on the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's motorship Loch Katrine, which will leave here the 12th inst.

TACOMA, Aug. 7. (AP)—The Italian motorship Cellina arrived today from Naples with European freight for discharge and loaded lumber, doors, flour and canned goods for the return trip to Southern Europe. The ship sailed down Sound late today.

Shortridge Will Not Debate With Clarke in Fresno

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Headquarters of United States Senator Samuel Shortridge announced today that the Senator had declined to meet Judge Robert M. Clarke, candidate for the Republican nomination for Senator, opposing Shortridge for re-election, in a debate at Fresno.

In announcing the refusal of Senator Shortridge, his headquarters said it believed acceptance of the invitation to debate would "get Clarke audiences, which he has thus far failed to attract." Judge Clarke issued the challenge to debate when he learned that Senator Shortridge would be in Fresno on the same evening as Clarke was scheduled to speak there.

TWO TAKE OWN LIVES IN ONE DAY

Charles E. Griffith Uses Gun While Mrs. Kate Martin Inhales Gas

Despondent over failing health, Charles E. Griffith, 57 years of age, 8936 Estara street, last night shot himself through the head in the region of the ear, dying shortly thereafter. According to police reports, Griffith had been helping his brother in the work about a filling station at 3415 San Fernando Road. He was found by Police Officers Seagraves and Armstrong, who answered a summons. The body was removed to the County Mortuary.

Mrs. Kate Martin, 60 years of age, was found dead in her room at 4958 Marathon street, last night, apparently having ended her own life by turning on the gas. Her body was discovered by the landlady, Mrs. Ballard, who detected the fumes, and promptly called both the police and fire departments. Members of the fire department worked over the woman for more than an hour, using an inhalator, but were unsuccessful in their efforts.

MOTHERS OF HEROES PICK OFFICIALS

Gold Star Staff Chooses Heads, Votes Indorsement of Reapportionment

Election of officers and indorsement of the legislative reapportionment plan which has been placed on the November election ballot featured the monthly meeting yesterday at the Disabled Veterans of the World War Hall, 246 South Hill street, of the Gold Star Mothers' Staff of Los Angeles. Plans also were made for a picnic to be held on the 18th inst. in Echo Park.

Officers elected were: President, Mrs. Leona Stahl; first vice-president, Mrs. Grace Kitt; second vice-president, Mrs. Rose Ringer; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Helen C. Flick; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Velma Shepherd; auditor, Mrs. Ella Noel; sergeant-at-arms, Mrs. Tula L. Copening; chaplain, Mrs. Ida Oefinger. Mrs. Agnes B. Spencer is the retiring president. She had served in that capacity two years. Installation of officers will take place at the September 4th meeting.

Following an address on reapportionment by Helga M. Qually, secretary of the All-Parties Reapportionment Committee, a resolution was passed declaring the organization members unanimously in favor of the measure and urging members to support the issue at the fall election.

Mothers and sisters of those who lost their lives in the service during the World War are invited to the organization's picnic on the 18th inst. at Echo Park. A program of entertainment is being arranged.

Gay Plumage of Girl Lands Pair in Prison Cage

Fine feathers make beautiful birds, but they also make detectives suspicious. Thus it was that the elaborate plumage of titian-haired Frances Williams, 22 years of age, aroused the suspicions of Captain of Detectives McMahan and Detective Lieutenants Ryan and Martin. They saw the auburn-haloed girl breezing about in an automobile with some boy friend, noted that the car bore a significant license number, and followed it.

All day yesterday, they waited in the vicinity of 1226 Georgia street. Near nightfall, up rolled Miss Williams and with her, Jay Gould, 22, both of whom had been sought upon telegraphic requests from Chief of Police Dan O'Brien of San Francisco. According to reports from the northern city, the pair are wanted there for having a part in several "big time" burglaries. Both are being held here on suspicion of burglary charges, awaiting the pleasure of San Francisco authorities.

POISON PLOT CHARGED BY DYING MAN

Victim Withdraws Charge Against Wife, But Insists Someone Gave Him Potion

Charles Renfroe, 40 years of age, died in the General Hospital last night of poisoning. Informed shortly before death came that he would not live, he withdrew the charge that he had been poisoned by either his wife or her relatives, but insisted that the poison had been left in a glass by other hands than his own.

The man was first taken to the Receiving Hospital late in the afternoon of Thursday, last. He asserted at that time that his relatives had attempted to poison him, but hospital diagnosticians asserted he was suffering from acute alcoholism. He was sent home. Upon this visit to the hospital, he announced his address as either 5162 or 5152 West Twentieth street.

Precisely forty-eight hours later, the hospital received an ambulance call to 1410 West Washington street. Arriving there, they found Renfroe, apparently ill, and again insisting that he had been poisoned, naming his wife and her relatives. A small glass, containing the remnants of the poison, was found. Renfroe asserted, according to the police, that he had swallowed it, believing it to be alcohol. Later, he is credited with saying merely that he didn't know who left the drink there.

Subsequently, he was removed to the General Hospital, where he died. Investigating officers declare he had been drinking heavily. Mrs. Renfroe was taken to the detective bureau for questioning, but was released.

DIRECTOR WALKS OUT ON WARNER

Lewis Milestones Quits in Huff Over Delivery of His Pay Check

Because Warner Brothers, his employers, refused to mail his salary check to his home, and he in turn would not call at the company offices for it, Lewis Milestones, motion-picture director, has broken with the organization, it became known last night.

"Milestones 'walked out' on Harold Lloyd—to whom we had loaned him to direct the comedian's latest comedy—last Wednesday night on ten minutes' notice," J. L. Warner, of the producing firm, said last night. "He broke his contract with us—which had four more years to run—and we intend to enforce it to the extent that he doesn't work for any other organization during that time."

The motion-picture head declared that Milestones had "seized upon a technicality" as an excuse to break his contract. "He insisted we mail his salary check to his home, when all other employees call at the office for their money," Warner said, "and when we didn't mail it he left in a huff. I understand he desires to quit the motion-picture industry and go abroad."

Milestones has been directing for only a year, but is said to have made several successful pictures. He could not be reached last night for a statement.

NOTAS TELEGRAFICAS

El Cólera Mata Diariamente Millares en las Poblaciones Chinas

SHANGHAI (China) Agosto 7.—El cólera morbo, el terrible azote del Oriente, está cobrando cantidad espantosa de víctimas chinas en el barrio de naturales de Shanghai, y también en el conocido por el nombre de Pootung, al otro lado del rio Whangpoo. La terrible enfermedad está matando más de 1000 personas diariamente, según cálculos hechos. Los extranjeros han sufrido relativamente bien poco, pues habitan en distritos de concesión bien acondicionados, y con todos los adelantos sanitarios modernos. Tan sólo han sucumbido dos de los 20,000 residentes extranjeros. Es imposible obtener un cómputo exacto de las defunciones entre los chinos, que habitan barrios antihigiénicos, y en los que vive apiñada una población de 1,500,000 habitantes.

Ha aliviado ligeramente la epidemia y hecho decrecer el número de los accidentados por el intenso calor, la circunstancia de que el termómetro marcó hoy cuatro grados menos que ayer, día en que llegó la temperatura a 102.2 grados, cifra que constituye el record de estos últimos treinta años.

Los hospitales de los chinos están atrasadísimos en punto de facilidades modernas; a ese pesar, están recibiendo y atendiendo a millares de pacientes. Las autoridades chinas están estableciendo muchos hospitales y adoptando otras medidas de alivio, pero convienen en que la situación demanda algo muy superior a sus fuerzas. El único alivio posible sería un aguacero y un descenso de temperatura; por lograr ambas cosas están rezando los chinos. En los templos se están celebrando imponentes y extrañas ceremonias, y se ha prohibido que se sacrifiquen animales en los mataderos.

Bañista en Cueros Vivos, que se Ve Desamparado

BOSTON, Agosto, 7.—Antonio Recupero tuvo que ser conducido a su casa en una camilla de la policía, bien envuelto en frazadas.

Antonio tenía por costumbre meterse a nadar en el mar cerca del parque de Wood Island, antes del desayuno, a una hora en que está permitido bañarse sin traje de baño. El día a que nos referimos, salió nuestro bañista del agua y se encontró con que alguien se había robado su ropa. Metióse de nuevo al agua, y, sin sacar más que la cabeza, empezó a dar voces pidiendo auxilio. Al fin diose cuenta un transeunte del predicamento del bañista, y fue a pedir por teléfono una ambulancia de policía.

De allí que tuviera que ser llevado a casa en una camilla, sin padecer de más enfermedad que de un pudor justificado.

NOTAS LOCALES

Comparecieron Ayer ante un Juez Cuatro Sospechosos de Incendiarismo

Al mismo tiempo que alguien revelaba que obraban en poder de la fiscalía informes relativos al propósito de un circulo de incendiarios de prender fuego a algunos edificios de Los Angeles, valuados en más de $1,000,000, para cobrar los seguros, anunciábase ayer que van a hacerse, con motivo de este asunto, otras aprehensiones a más de las cinco realizadas el último viernes. Ayer a última hora hicieron conocer estos dos hechos el investigador Ramsay, del personal de detectives de la fiscalía, y el teniente fiscal McIsaacs, quienes agregaron que ahora anda la policía tras los pollos gordos complicados en este asunto.

Cuatro de los cinco detenidos fueron citados ayer para comparecer en la sala del juez municipal Ambrose. El quinto comparecerá el lunes.

Ramsay ha revelado que este circulo de incendiarios ha estado haciendo uso de una sustancia altamente inflamable para provocar varios de los incendios que se le imputan. Se la encendía mediante una conexión con el alambre telefónico.

DEPORTES

Natación

BOULOGNE (Francia) Agosto 7.—Gertrude Ederle, conquistadora del canal de la Mancha, volvió a Francia este tarde para recibir una ovación triunfal.

Se había congregado una gran muchedumbre de sus admiradores, y, en tanto que un grupo de fotógrafos cinematográficos, reproducía la escena, se ofreció un gran ramo de flores a la nadadora norteamericana.

La señorita Ederle va a pasar la noche en su antigua habitación del cabo Gris Nez, lugar donde comenzó ayer su famoso recorrido a nado.

NUEVO YORK, Agosto 7.—En su ya histórico y famoso nado a través del canal de la Mancha, Gertrude Ederle dio muy cerca de 20,000 brazadas. Cuando la norteamericana llegó a las costas inglesas, iba usando un estilo de nado, en el que se dan como 28 brazadas por minuto. Si en toda su travesía hubiera nadado de esa manera, el número de brazadas habría llegado a 24,388.

DOVER (Inglaterra) Agosto 8.—A las 11:30 de la mañana de hoy saltó de la cama Gertrude Ederle, declarando que estaba lista para nadar otra vez. No se le advirtían huellas ningunas del terrible esfuerzo realizado en su ordalía de ayer, en la que luchó por catorce horas, treinta y un minutos contra las traicioneras corrientes del canal de la Mancha, que atravesó a nado de la costa francesa a la inglesa, batiendo el record de tiempo.

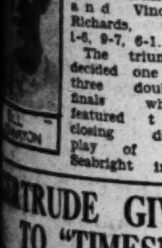
amic Driving of "Little Bill" Overwhelms National Champs; Bunny Ryan Again Victor

SEABRIGHT (N. J.) Aug. 7. (AP)—"Little Bill" Johnston ...fornia came back today to reclaim his place as one of ... remarkable match players in American tennis.

...with all his old power and ... the doubles partner of ...legiate champion, Edward G. Chandler, Johnston was the main factor in an unexpected victory over the national champions, R. Norris Williams and Vincent Richards, 6-3, 1-6, 9-7, 6-1.



The triumph decided one of three doubles finals which featured the closing day's play of the Seabright invitation tournament.

Elizabeth Ryan of California, who conquered both Mrs. Molla Mallory and Helen Wills in her march through the women's singles, added to her victories today. In the women's doubles, as partner of Eleanor Goss of New York, she defeated Mrs Mallory and Catherine Porter of Philadelphia, 6-1, 6-3, while in the mixed doubles she paired with Cranston Holman of Stanford University, to triumph over Miss Wills and Chandler, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0.

Johnston, beaten in the singles competition on Wednesday by Takeichi Harada of Japan, indicated today that the week's play here had smoothed the rough edges of his sharp volleying game and prepared

She was full of pep for all that, however, and with Burgess's consent, donned a swimming suit and dashed through the large crowd already assembled awaiting a glimpse of this wonder girl, and ran out across the beach for a twenty-minute swim to "loosen up," as she explained it.

Chief Deputy Sheehan Aids in Senators' Defeat

Les Wallops in Three Runs and Stars in Field

BY ROBERT RAY

"Sheriff" John Singleton, keeper of the peace and guardian of the law in Coconino county during the winter and a pitcher of baseball during the summer, acted in the latter capacity to such a degree of success yesterday at Wrigley Field that he hurled Oscar Vitt's Hollywood Stars to a 6-to-3 victory over the sinking Solons from Sacramento. It was the Stars' fourth win in five starts against the Sacs and clinches the series for the Movie City athletes.

However, Sheriff John was not without help in his task of subduing the Solons, his chief deputy being none other than Les Sheehan, who gets into the Hollywood line-up only against southpaws. It was well for Hollywood that Buddy Ryan worked

She said: "I have talked to no newspaper man or newspaper woman, nor to anyone else, for that matter, but my father, sister and trainer, and my chaperone, Julia Harpman, representing the New York News, Chicago Tribune, Los Angeles Times, and associated newspapers since I swam the channel, and anything you said under my name except the copyrighted articles I am dictating for Chicago Tribune-New York News Service is a deliberate and conscienceless fake."

BOULOGNE (France) Aug. 7. (AP) Gertrude Ederle, conqueror of the English Channel, returned to France this afternoon to receive a triumphal welcome.

GERTRUDE EDERLE

A great crowd of admirers had gathered, and the American swimmer was presented with a bouquet while the motion-picture operators filmed the scene.

Miss Ederle is spending the night at her old quarters on Cape Criz-Nez, from which point she began her record-breaking swim yesterday.

USED 20,000 STROKES IN FEAT

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—In her record-breaking channel crossing, Gertrude Ederle swam somewhere in the neighborhood of 20,000 strokes.

When the American reached the English shore she was using a crawl timed twenty-eight strokes to the minute. If she had continued this rate for the fourteen hours and thirty-one minutes she was in the water the stroke count would be 24,388.

But it was believed that as the hours passed and the battle against wave and tide continued there must have been some diminution in the speed of the swimmer's stroke. Men conversant with long-distance swim-

FISTIC MONARCH MUST ANSWER INJUNCTION SUIT

Champion is Cited to Pay Visit to Federal Tribunal on 17th Inst. Relative to Harry Wills Bout

DENVER (Colo.) Aug. 7. —Jack Dempsey today was ordered to appear in United States District Court the 17th inst. to answer an injunction suit recently filed by the Chicago Coliseum Club, which claims to have a contract with the champion to engage in a bout with Harry Wills, negro challenger.

Dempsey claims that the contract was voided through failure of the club's representative to live up to financial arrangements made at the time the contract was signed.

DEMPSEY TAKES BRISK WORKOUT

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Shifting his previous plans, Jack Dempsey put on the gloves today for the first time in a week and stepped through an hour's brisk workout at a local gymnasium to keep himself from going stale during his enforced stay in New York.

Jack Dempsey

The heavyweight champion boxed three rounds with Johnny Dundee, the veteran former featherweight champion, then stepped two more with a Canadian lightweight, Mickey McGowan, after which he shadow-boxed and punched the bag for several minutes.

Considering his long absence from competition, Dempsey's speed and timing of blows were impressive and convinced observers that a few weeks of hard work will put the title-holder in close to old-time form.

HERRINGTON WINS TITLE IN OREGON

Los Angeles Tennis Player in Straight-Set Victory of Men's Singles

PORTLAND (Or.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Two California tennis stars, Mrs. Ream Leachman of Vallejo and Alan Herrington of Los Angeles, won the feature events of the annual Oregon State tennis tournament here today.

Mrs. Leachman captured the women's singles crown for 1926 with a victory over Carolyn Swartz of San Francisco, last year's champion, 7-5, 4-6, 6-4. Terrington won the men's title easily from Henry Neer, Portland star, in three straight sets, 6-2, 6-2, 6-2.

Alan Herrington, paired with Carolyn Swartz, in the mixed doubles, won the championship of that event by defeating Mrs. Leachman and Ray D. Johnson, Vallejo, 6-2, 6-3.

WORLD SWIM RECORDS GO

Champion Sets New Mark for Half Mile; 220-Yard Breast-Stroke Title Falls to Miss Geraghty

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7. (AP)—Two more world's records were broken today by mermaids of the Women's Swimming Association of New York in the final day's events of the Women's National A.A.U. Swimming Championships in the Sesqui-centennial Lake pool.

Martha Norelius, W. S. A., national quarter-mile champion, using the crawl stroke, won the half-mile title in world's record time of 12:47 1-5, or 11 seconds faster than Ethel McGary's time in the 1925 championships at Detroit.

Agnes Geraghty, W. S. A., breast-stroke expert, swam the 220 yards in 3:29 1-5, three and one-fifth seconds faster than her own mark established at Detroit last year.

A third member of the W. S. A. team, Esther Foley, won the plain and fancy high diving title. These three first-place victories, coupled with a sprinkling of seconds and thirds, gave the Manhattan club an overwhelming margin of 68 points to win the team trophy.

The Carnegie Library Club team of Homestead, Pa., finished second in the race for team honors with 15½ points with the Illinois A. C. third with five points. Other teams scored as follows: Philadelphia Turngemeinde 3, Pasadena, Cal., 3, Brookline, Mass., 3, Cleveland 1, unattached 1.

YOUNGSTER STARS

Florence Goga, 13-year-old member of the Carnegie Library team of Homestead, Pa., finished five yards behind Miss Norelius in the half-mile event and Ethel McGary, the 1925 champion, third.

Agnes Geraghty was out in front at the start of the 220-yard breast stroke event and she was never headed. Mathilda Shurick of the W. S. A. placed second in this event

YOUTH COPS GOLFING CROWN

BUFFALO (N. Y.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Lester Bolstad of Minneapolis won the national public links championship today by defeating Carl Kauffmann, Pittsburgh stenographer, three and two in the thirty-six-hole final match.

It was no easy victory for the Minneapolis youth, who is just 18 years old and was playing in his second national tournament. Although Kauffmann never was in the lead, he came from five down in the morning round to square the match at the twenty-fifth hole.

Hold Annual Silver Gate Swim This Afternoon With 397 Contestants in Ev

FOUR HUNDRED ENTRIES SET WORLD RECORD

Dope Indicates That O'Connor and Chambers to be Dethroned as Man and Women's Champs

Two new faces will be picked from among the 397 swimmers, said to be a world record for number of entries in a swimming meet, who will compete today in the annual Silver Gate swim. The event, held over a course that is laid out across the entrance of San Diego Bay and approximately 700 yards in length, is being held for the seventh time this afternoon.

The women engage in the first race at 3 o'clock with the men's event following at 3:30.

Wallace O'Connor of the Venice Plunge Swimming Association and Florence Chambers of San Diego are the winners of last year's race. Each is defending his title this year.

O'Connor would seem to be facing the impossible task of beating Stevenson of Stanford, a slightly built but powerful swimmer. Stevenson defeated O'Connor a week ago in a mile swim held at Long Beach, and outdistanced him by about 125 yards. O'Connor has an alibi if he cares to put it forward, because he had an attack of the influenza a month or so ago and has not recovered from it entirely as yet. He will not be in top form for today's race. Another entry that looks better than O'Connor is his teammate, Fred Wadley. He placed second to Stevenson in the mile swim at Long Beach.

TOUGH COMPETITION

Like O'Connor, Miss Chambers is facing a field that is going to be tough to beat. She looks like one of the first three place winners, but it would be an optimist who would pick her for first place with such entries as Cecily Cunha, Adelaide Weyland and Hilda Curtis opposing her this afternoon. Florence has three times won the swim, but never in sensational time. In fact, her best time is shadowed by approximately two minutes by the former Viola Hartman who made the women's mark the same year, 1924, that Tommy Blake set the best mark ever made by the men.

Miss Cunha, one of Frank Holborrow's Club Casa Del Mar entries, is a strapping big girl. She is about six feet tall, strong as an average man swimmer, and in fine shape for the event. Adelaide Weyland of San Diego is a mere beginner in years of competition, but she is one of the classiest entries and should she be trained right for the 700 yards, will be the most likely of 150 starters to win the dash across the entrance of the bay. Should she fail, then there is Miss Cunha and Hilda Curtis to worry last year's champ.

The number of entries in the meet today is thought to be the largest number of swimmers to ever start in one event. This statement is based on an opinion given by Fred Cady, veteran Southern California swimming coach and head of those activities at the L.A.A.C. He says that he has never seen a greater number of competitors anywhere and he has been actively engaged in competitive swimming first and later in coaching for the greater part of his life.

LADIES FIRST

The women's race is held first and followed directly by the race for the men. The entry list shows that the field is just about evenly divided between the men and women. Miss Curtis of the Neptune Club at San Francisco is probably the northernmost entry and one of the very few who will travel from a greater distance than Los Angeles for the contest.

him for the Davis Cup tests next week, at Forest Hills.

His terrific driving and spectacular net play were the dominant forces of the California team's attack. With smashing strokes off his forehand, he drove back the service of both Richards and Williams for placement after placement as the easterners came to the net in a vain effort to stop the rush of the Pacific Coast team.

Williams proved the vulnerable link in the championship pair's defense. The Davis Cup captain was unable to guide his usually effective volleys over the net and although Richards saved the team repeatedly with high, deep lobbing, the powerful driving of Johnston, ably seconded by Chandler's fast service and all-around steadiness, prevailed.

After driving the first two sets, each team fought hard for the third, in which service prevailed for ten straight games. At this point the national champions broke through Johnston, only to have the Californians make a counter break. Williams then lasped into a spell of wildness at the net, and dropped his own service in the sixteenth game to lose the set.

DYNAMIC DRIVING

With a stretch of dynamic driving such as he has seldom paralleled before, Johnston carried his team through the final set in the remarkable time of nine minutes, giving the losers only fifteen points.

De Lara Plays Duff Today in Park Net Meet

Jack De Lara, former Franklin High School tennis star, faces Al Duff, of the local University of California, in the feature match of today's tennis matches in the annual Lincoln Park tournament. De Lara has been the sensation of the tournament this far in both singles and doubles while Duff has experienced no difficulty in winning his matches.

Bob Laird, Duff and Patten were the winners of yesterday's singles matches. Duff won easily from Bob Hall, 6-2, 6-1. Saunders fell before Laird, 6-3, 6-2, who was in turn defeated by Patten.

In today's doubles matches, Laird and Duff are scheduled for two matches and are overwhelming favorites to win them both. They should meet De Lara and Weesner in the finals. The schedule:

8:30 a.m.—Laird and Duff vs. Brandenburg and Davis.
9:30 a.m.—Duff vs. De Lara.
10:30 a.m.—Patten and Leipe vs. Faird and Duff.

Exercise Gives Mental Change to Outdoor Man

"Recreational sports as a diversion are of as much benefit to the man who uses his muscles daily—and thereby keeps physically fit—as they are to the office man," declared J. A. Rosenkranz, president of the National Automotive and Electrical School yesterday following his return from an extended trip east.

"It is a mistaken idea that the only man who needs exercise is the office man," he continued. "And that is the reason why, on the golf links, you will find mechanics today. The diversion from their usual interests is as good for them as if they actually needed the exercise to keep fit physically. The only difference between them and the office man is that the mental relaxation of golf or rowing or fishing or any other physical exercise gives them a fresh atmosphere.

"A lot of sport is made of the postman who goes on a hiking trip in the mountains for his vacation, but he returns refreshed because he gets a different slant."

Mr. Rosenkranz will be the guest of honor Tuesday evening at a dinner at the City Club tendered by the faculty and employees of the local school. An elaborate speaking and musical program has been arranged.

ANALYSIS OF GERTRUDE EDERLE'S SWIM STROKE

The photo shows the powerful stroke from start to finish that enabled the New York mermaid to plough across the English Channel at such a rapid rate that she set a world's record unequaled by any of the five men who have navigated the tricky channel. MAC SMITH CANADIAN CHAMPION

New York Pro Hurdles Fine Golf Field to Finish Under Visiting Stars

MONTREAL, Aug. 7. (AP)—Playing the last two rounds in seven strokes under par, McDonald Smith, crack professional of the Lakeville Country Club, Great Neck, N. Y., today won the Canadian open golf championship after a three-day struggle that found a group of stars from the United States fighting it out among themselves all the way. Americans carried off the first six places.

Mac Smith

Smith finished the 72-hole title test with a fine aggregate card of 283, equalling or bettering par in successive rounds of 71, 73, 69 and 70. His sensational finish today enabled him to come from behind and beat out two fellow New Yorkers, Johnny Farrell and Gene Sarazen, both of whom went to pieces after leading the field by three strokes at the start of the fourth round this afternoon. A terrific thunderstorm which Smith just escaped, played a part in the downfall of Sarazen and Farrell, who finished their rounds in 76 and 81, respectively, for aggregates of 286 and 291.

Despite his poor finish, Sarazen's score gave him second place, a stroke ahead of Joe Turnesa, Young Fairview, N. Y., professional. Leo Diegel, of White Plains, N. Y., who has held the Canadian crown for the past two years, finished fourth with 290, while Farrell wound up in a tie for fifth place with Tom Amour of Washington.

It was the most decisive sweep invading professionals have ever scored in the tournament and sent the title across the border for the eighth year in a row. The first Canadian on the final list was Charlie Murray, "pro" at the Royal Montreal Club, where the tournament was played. He landed seventh prize.

Smith's triumph gives him his fourth major "open" championship. He lifted the metropolitan open title from Gene Sarazen recently after a record-breaking 54-hole play-off. In addition he holds the Long Island and western open championships.

FRANCE WELCOMES EDERLE

Used 20,000 Strokes to Swim 35 Miles in Frigid English Channel; World Congratulates Girl

ming hazarded the opinion that the average for the whole distance was twenty-five to the minute, which would make the count 21,775.

HOW TO SAY THE WORD

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Thousands of persons know today that Gertrude Ederle swam the English Channel, but most of them are doubtful of the pronunciation of the swimmer's last name. Newspapers reported numerous inquiries on this point.

A member of the Ederle family today explained that the name was pronounced "Eder-ly," with the first "E" short as in "Bed," and the final syllable clipped briefly, as in "Pretti-ly."

IN WATER FOR SWIM AGAIN

DOVER (Eng.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Gertrude Ederle bounced out of bed at 11:30 o'clock this morning, declaring she was ready for another swim.

She showed no traces of the terrible strain of yesterday's ordeal, when she battled the treacherous currents of the English Channel for fourteen hours and thirty-one minutes, crossing from France to England in record time and becoming the first of her sex to perform the feat.

The New York girl was full of pep and in good humor when she arose, and proceeded immediately to get ready to catch the afternoon boat from Folkestone to Boulogne, where her training quarters were established.

Miss Ederle was in the water again off Dover Beach a short time after arising. She explained that she never could face a day without a swim, and was sure she could swim back to Boulogne today if she tried.

"The great point in my swimming at all," she said, "was to show that a girl could do it, that an American girl could do it, and that I was the American girl."

Asked to say something regarding her experience Miss Ederle replied:

"All I can say is that, when I started off, I was determined to stay until I had planted my feet on the English shore, and I am glad to say I did. I feel proud, indeed, and so would you if you were receiving all these letters, telegrams and cables of congratulation."

"You can't imagine the difficulties surrounding such an endeavor unless you have a swimmer in actual competition against the tides," she said. "The real battle is timing the tides."

Gertrude swam a course which resembles the letter Z. She swam out from the coast of France, then was swept five miles up with the tide and when the tide changed, came back down to the English coast.

CORSETS GONE PROBLEM SOLVED

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Corsets, petticoats and fear kept women thirty years ago from achieving athletic victories such as that of Gertrude Ederle, Tom Robinson, swimming instructor at Norwestern University for seventeen years, said today. Robinson coached Sybil Bauer, Dick Howell, Bob Skelton, and other notables.

"A woman could not possibly have accomplished the same feat thirty years ago," he said, "for corsets and other ridiculously unnecessary clothing hampered her physical condition and deprived her of the muscular freedom so necessary in the development of a good swimmer.

PARIS, Aug. 7. (AP)—Gertrude Ederle being France's guest, her feat in swimming the English Channel is greeted with enthusiasm, particularly by the womenfolk, who regard it as a triumph for feminity.

DOVER (Eng.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Miss Clara Belle Barrett, New Rochelle, swimming instructor, who came within two miles of swimming the English Channel last Tuesday, was among the first to congratulate Gertrude Ederle on her success last night.

Miss Barrett told the correspondent for Associated Press that she believed Miss Ederle's record of fourteen hours and thirty-one minutes would not be beaten by either man or woman.

Despite the fact that Miss Ederle has achieved the distinction of being the first woman to swim the channel, Miss Barrett has not been deterred from another effort herself. She feels that she would have accomplished the feat herself on Tuesday if it had not been for fog.

UHLAN, DAHEE MIX AT SAN FRANCISCO

OAKLAND, Aug. 7. (AP)—Red Uhlan of Oakland and battling Dahee, negro middleweight of Memphis, Tenn., have been matched by Promoter Tommy Simpson for the six-round main bout at Oakland Auditorium Wednesday night. Dahee fought Tiger Flowers seven times before the latter became middleweight champion, winning one decision and earning two draws.

AVALON WATER MEET ON TODAY

Stunts, Races to be Staged in Annual Carnival

Catalina Swim Club Features Island Celebration

College Athletes to Perform for Holiday Crowds

AVALON (Catalina Island) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—A water carnival under the auspices of the Catalina Swimming Club will be held in Avalon Bay tomorrow afternoon, beginning at 2:30 o'clock. Features of the carnival will include a series of illustrations of how accidents frequently occur at the beaches and demonstrations of proper life-saving methods. Participating in this event will be members of the volunteer life-saving corps of the American Red Cross Society, assisted by members of the Catalina Swimming Club.

Many unique events for the entertainment of the thousands of spectators thronging the bay front appear on the carnival program. A human angling contest with the use of regulation Tuna Club tackle is a distinctive Catalina feature and always the source of much fun. Prizes will be awarded to the strongest swimmer and the most skillful angler. A tug o' war between rowing teams and skiffs will be another feature.

COMEDY STUNT

A comedy stunt will be a canoe race in Avalon Bay without paddles. The contestants will be required to upset their canoe at some point during the race, scramble back into the boat and finish at the starting line. Other stunts planned will be a demonstration of swimming with hands and feet tied by J. D. Holbrook, who will be tossed overboard from the S.S. Catalina, and swim fifty yards to shore.

This is the second year of the existence of the Catalina Swimming Club which is composed of athletes from the various California universities, including Stanford, Berkeley, University of Southern California, Southern Branch, Pomona College, Occidental and Whittier. The test for eligibility and active membership in the Catalina Swimming Club is the successful swimming across Avalon Bay by a candidate. A cup is being offered by Prof. Albert Dowden, a member of the club, and swimming instructor of Catalina, for the best time made in a swim from Avalon Bay to Descanso Bay, a distance of one and one-half miles.

SPONSORED BY CLUB

Swimming meets held at Catalina July 4 and July 18 were under the auspices of the Catalina Swimming Club, which to date has the following membership: Henry Apfel, Pete de Catte, Joe Guion, Art Jones, Francis MacGrath, Howard Pearson, Robert Sides, Al Snidow, Kryne Van den Akker, Ed Williams, Jack Hughes, John Parsons, Carrol Wynn, Wilbur White, George Thomas III, Halsey Bardin, John Shields, Loui Farris, Albert Dowden, John Minney, George Minney, Jack Williams, Harold Ingham, J. D. Holbrook, W. B. Van Dyke and Bill Kendall.

McLARNIN HERE FOR RING DATE

Belfast Spider Returns to Los Angeles; Will Box at Vernon Next Month

Jimmy McLarnin, who at various times has been referred to as the coming lightweight champion of the world, arrived yesterday from his home in Vancouver, B. C., after an absence of almost five months. With Jimmy was his younger brother, who is to make his ring debut in this city, and Manager "Pop" Foster.

Jimmy McLarnin

The two McLarins are booked to appear at Vernon early in September, Jimmy in the top spot against some opponent yet to be selected, and Sammy in a preliminary bout. Sammy, though younger, is heavier than Jimmy and already a lightweight, while the latter scales only 130 pounds.

However, Jimmy has gained four pounds since his last bout here, which was an unexpected defeat at the hands of Johnny Farr of Oakland.

PAPKE, TOVAR DRAW IN MAIN STREET GO

Tony Tovar and Young Papke fought six rounds to a draw at the Main Street Athletic Club last night. Papke almost had Tovar out on his feet in the fifth, but Tovar withstood the gaff and came back to win a draw. Ad Hammersley kayoed John Chico in the first round. Thirty-two seconds after he entered the ring, Chico was knocked out.

Manuel Valderno quit after the first round with Tom Herrera. Paul Monticelnoz defeated Henry Miano in four rounds. Jack O'Brien won all the way over Manuel Tujuerer. Pancho Aquilla defeated Rufe Taylor in the opener.

LONG BEACH CARDS AQUATIC TOURNEY

Mickey Riley of the Los Angeles Athletic Club and Stan Kistler of the Pasadena Athletic and Country Club, who were nosed out of second place in the fancy high diving and ten-foot springboard diving, respectively, in the recent national championships by Dave Fall of Stanford University, will have a chance to agenge their defeat when the trio with many other famous mermen will compete in the Pacific Coast championships at Alamitos Bay, Long Beach, on Labor Day.

OBSERVATIONS

BY THE INNOCENT BYSTANDER, BILL HENRY

"A QUARTERBACK, a quarterback, my kingdom for a quarterback." That was the big cry last year—as it is every year—and it looks as though it would be the big yell again this year. Football teams are, generally speaking, about as good as their quarterback and that's the chief reason why quite a few of them weren't so good last year. The two best quarterbacks in the Pacific Coast Conference—or probably we should say the three best—graduated last season and as a result there is a chance for pretty nearly any good man to make a name for himself this fall.

Of the quarterbacks who are left, the two outstanding candidates are "Butch" Meeker of Washington State and Kelly of Montana, a mighty nice pair. Of the two Meeker is the best for the simple reason that he's more of a quarterback than Kelly, the Montana wonder just naturally being a great halfback who happens to be calling signals. Meeker, besides being a tough young man with the ball under his arm, is an inspiring leader and played with good headwork down here against the Trojans which was the only time we saw him perform.

The leading quarterbacks on the Coast last year were Scoop Carlson of California and Muggs Mitchell of Stanford, both of whom really came into their own in the big game. Mitchell, who had previously been a good quarterback, became a really great signal shouter against the Bears, Carlson, benched a good part of the year, showed what he could do when they put him in the game, by changing the Bears from a bunch of beaten sheep into a ripping, tearing outfit that had the Cards very much on the run for a while.

Down at U.S.C. they had a new quarterback every few minutes but the outstanding performer of the lot in a pinch was Bill Cook. And he's gone. The Trojans still have Morton Kaer, who was almost great, and Howard Elliott, who was almost greater. Neither is likely to lead the team next season. Drury did well for a while. They say young Don Williams, late of Santa Ana is the best of the bunch. Anyhow if they keep on swapping horses in the middle of every quarter the way they did last year they'll meet with about the same success.

California still has Rich Blewett, who shouted signals the larger part of the season and who is a great defensive player and a fine punter. Stanford is experimenting with a whole flock of players practically all of whom are unknown to fame as signal callers. They do say that Fred Swan and Eli Post, both guards, look like the best prospects to be ordering Bogue and Murphy to run those doggone reverse plays that everybody knows about and nobody can stop next fall.

They really haven't an outstanding quarterback on the Coast in sight right now. Butch Meeker looks like the best prospect of them all on form and it looks very much as though anybody who was going to grab off all-coast honors would have to beat the energetic little Cougar for the position. None of the veterans look like very good prospects to do it and the best chance seems to lie with some one of the ex-freshmen who will be coming up.

BATTLING DRUGGIST MEETS PICO RAMIES

Doc Snell, the famous Peshastin pharmacist, arrived in town yesterday to trai for his fight next Wednesday night at the Wilmington Athletic Club with Pico Ramies, Wilmington's featherweight pride, in the ten-round main event. Snell, well posted on the ability of the harbor flash, who has the scalps on his belt of Joe Salas, Eddie Macy, Andre Dupre, Joe Gorman, Bud Ridley, Don Levy, Tiger Burns, Jimmy Powell and Pedro Amador, has besought himself to get some south-paw sparring partners in his daily workouts. Although Pico has done little fighting outside of his own section of Southern California, he looks to be on the threshold of a great career, and this is the jumping off place.

PENN OARSMEN TO ENTER BRITISH EVENT

Decision of the Penn Athletic Club to send its senior eight and also Joe Wright, Jr., to the Royal English Henley regatta next July will help keep up international athletic rivalry. The Philadelphia club, coached by the veteran Canadian oarsman, Joe Wright, Sr., will present a real crew as Wright knows rowing and besides competing in the English regatta took several Argonaut eights there years ago, in the same quest, that of lifting the famous Grand Challenge Cup.

Los Angeles Invitational Last Local Major Event Before State Play at Del Monte

Annual Los Angeles Event to be Golf Treat

Hunter, Neville, Armstrong Leading Favorites

Tarrant Golfed to Pro Fame in Last Classic

BY BILL WISE

Capt. A. Bullock-Webster of Hollywood, Northern State champ, and runner-up in the event last year, will make a great golfing bid for tourney honors in the annual Los Angeles club invitational that will get under way with an eighteen-hole qualifying round that may be played either one week from tomorrow or the day following.

Jack Tarrant, winner of the event last year golfed his way to the professional berth at the then new El Caballero Country Club, and since that time has made great tee and greens strides in the local big ranks.

Jack Tarrant.

Southern California golf is suffering from too little real championship competition, but Howard Hughes, Rancho; E. S. Armstrong, Midwick, and Jack Neville, Lakeside, have profited through their daily play in the foursome completed by George Von Elm, and will be three of the outstanding favorites in the coming event.

Dr. Paul M. Hunter of Annandale, southern amateur titleholder, and one of the real veterans of local golf, is also just about due to win the Beverly invitational and expects to use the local event as a tuning-up feature for his anual title drive in the State championship at Del Monte that will follow a few weeks later.

Players may qualify, eighteen holes, either one week from tomorrow, or Tuesday. Match play in all flights will start Wednesday of invitational week. Medal play will be in foursomes and entries will be accepted and starting times allotted by phoning the Los Angeles Club, OXford [illegible], before the event is officially under way.

THAT elusive will-o'-the-wisp of the links, the hole-in-one, is a common subject for discussion wherever golfers gather, but there are certain phases in the making of "aces" that should be interesting to non-golfers as well. Unlike the perfect game in baseball, a hole made in one shot in a game of golf is almost entirely luck, and some of the one-shotters recorded would be quite unbelievable if they were not duly witnessed and authenticated.

Walter Hagen once said that an ace "happened" on an average of once in every 20,000 shots. Yet Sir Walter himself didn't make his first "one" until last year in a practice round before the United States open at Worcester. But Hagen's figures are refuted by veterans like Harry Vardon and John Ball, each of whom has made only one hole-in-one in a combined total of eighty years of golf; or by Charles Hutchinson, who scored an ace the very first time he ever played the game!

It is hard to decide which is the most remarkable incident on record. Mike Brady's three aces in one round (this happened at the Siasconset (Mass.) Country Club, September 4, 1917) or the feat of the professional of the Jericho Golf Club at Vancouver, Alex, Duthie, who made two "ones" in succession in 1911.

A hole was halved in one twice in England last year. Miss G. Clutterbuck and Mrs. H. M. Robinson each got an ace at the fifteenth hole at St. Augustine's. Ranisgate, on May 8, 1925, and on August 9, W. S. Evans and R. L. Matthews halved the fourteenth hole at the Claremont Golf Club, Swinton. Americans who have done the trick are George Stewart and Fred Spellmeyer, at the eighteenth hole at Forest Hills, N. J., in October, 1919, and two lucky boys named Jesse Baugh and Earl Aldridge, at the fifth hole at Fort Worth, Tex.

Besides Rev. Nesbit's 375-yard ace, other golfers who have sunk long tee shots are Frank Mellus, Los Angeles Golf Club, 343 yards in 1924, and George Aulbach, 335 yards in 1925. Several other one-armed golfers besides Jim Drain have made holes-in-one, but in Drain's case the hole was not even visible from the tee.

Sometimes the tee shot even lands in the hole on the carry and stays in the cup, but an Irishman named Powell once sliced his drive badly, landing out of bounds on the roof of a cottage, the ball bounding back onto the fairway and eventually rolling onto the green and into the hole!

CITY TITLE GOLF TILT AT GRIFFITH

Martin and Gaines Meet for Municipal Crown Over Long Route This Morning

David Martin, Southern California junior champ, a member of the Rio Hondo Club, and incidentally, one of the best golfing youngsters in the State, and J. S. Gaines will meet for the city municipal golf title at Griffith Park today.

The golfing dispute will be over the long thirty-six-hole route and the two stellar contestants will tee off for the first eighteen holes at 9 o'clock this morning. The second round will get under way at 1 o'clock.

The championship match will naturally have the right of way over all other games and while no particular gallery arrangements have been made, Griffith Park, a natural golf bowl, offers scores of advantageous places from which the match can be followed, hole by hole. There will be no gallery admission charge and the match will be worth watching.

STRATEGIES THAT WON

Sarazen's Golf Courage Expected to Carry Him Far in Fight for Professional Title Over Salisbury Links This Year

BY "BUNKER"

Gene Sarazen's performances during the summer golf campaign have completely borne out the contention of his friends, based on his splendid showing in the South last winter, that the former open and professional champion has definitely come back. This writer selected Sarazen as one of the ten players having the best chance to win the 1926 national open. Gene justified the confidence placed in him by finishing in a tie for third place with Bill Mehlhorn, Leo Diegel and Johnny Farrell. His score of 299 was four points back of Bobby Jones's but the records show that such a score, or worse, has won the title on more than one occasion.

Gene, always a great match player, obviously has all the fighting courage he ever had and he has as good a chance as anyone to win a national title when the professional gentlemen gather at Salisbury for a championship which Bobby Jones has no chance to annex.

SARAZEN
LENGTH OF HOLE - 200 YARDS

In 1921, at Inwood, Gene had emerged from the hinterlands of golfdom to surprise the experts by beating Hutchison in an early round, eight and seven. Between the P.G.A. championships of 1921 and 1922, the [illegible] had captured the 1922 national open title at Skokie. And at Oakmont, Jock was out to beat the brilliant youngster who had toppled him at Inwood.

At the twenty-seventh hole in the afternoon, he seemed in a fair way to get his revenge, for he had Sarazen three down. With only nine holes to go and with Jock playing good golf the open champion seemed doomed to defeat.

FOUGHT ON HOME STRETCH

But Gene had the thoroughbred spirit to battle it out on the home stretch. After the tenth was halved he sank a six-foot putt on the 360-yard [illegible] hole for a birdie three that cut Jock's lead to two up. He halved Jock's four on the 580-yard twelfth, won the thirteenth, halved the fourteenth, made a birdie two on the 200-yard fifteenth to square the match, halved the sixteenth and pulled a birdie three on the seventeenth to beat the Chicagoan.

This was masterly playing, although it must be admitted that Hutchison had some hard luck. For instance, on the 280-yard seventeenth, Jock played perfectly off the tee, but his ball rolled into a deep bunker short of the green, from which it was impossible to get out on the first attempt. Sarazen, on the other hand, after hooking his drive, stopped a miraculous 50-yard mashie niblick shot twelve inches from the pin for a certain three.

That match, however, was really lost for Jock on the 200-yard fifteenth hole, to which Sarazen had come with the chance to make the first play, since he still carried the honor won on the thirteenth.

The green of this hole sloped away a bit to the side, with a side-hill roll approaching. It was easy to go over the green, which had a nasty trap at the rear, but Gene decided that his best strategy would be to play boldly. This he did, the side-hill roll catching his ball and carrying it to the green.

Now the front edge of the green was sufficiently high that it was about the only part of the affair visible to the eye. Moreover, a peculiar glare in the sunlight made accurate vision difficult. So that when Sarazen's ball passed the front of the green it was only possible to guess its location by the speed it had last been seen to travel.

Gene didn't know where his ball was going, but he remarked to his caddie in a voice loud enough for Jock to hear:

"Gee! that one's stone dead!"

"You're kidding yourself," retorted Jock. "Your ball's way over the green and into the trap."

GENE MADE BIRDIE TWO

The psychological effect this play had produced in Hutchison was visible in his tee-shot. He was short of the green, and when he got up to it, found Gene's ball only a foot from the pin. He made a wonderful attempt to hole a long putt, but had to take a three, while Gene got his birdie two easily.

Jim Barnes has won the P. G. A. twice. So has Sarazen, while Hagen, the present title-holder, is a triple winner. These three are likely to be the principal contenders this year, with Hagen fighting like a bear-cat to retain his crown, because, having failed to win either the British or American opens he will be without a national title if he is dethroned at Salisbury. Sarazen will be tough meat, whether he wins or loses.

EGAN ENTERS STATE EVENT

Former National Amateur Champ in Great Shape For Championship Play at Del Monte

Chandler Egan, the great Pacific-Northwest stylist, former national amateur champ, and medalist in the State championship at Del Monte last year, has already signed to play in the same classic that will open at the upstate resort the fourth day of next month and should be one of the leading favorites to cop the crown vacated by George Von Elm, of Rancho.

The invading star is one of the finest sporting gentlemen in the tee and greens game today and his hardest task to win the coveted State title will be to eliminate a flock of youngsters who were not born when he crashed through to his first national crown over the historic Baltusrol (N. J.) links just twenty-two years ago. Egan also won the national amateur the year following, 1905, at Wheaton.

CHANDLER EGAN.

In the championship last year, Egan qualified with Harold Thompson, and the local youngster from the Oakmont club stole enough of the veteran's form to defeat him in a second-round title flight match a few days later.

With the exception of George Von Elm, the greatest ever, the field opening play in the State classic will be practically the same as last, the most noted exceptions being youngsters from this vicinity. Frank Dolp, runner-up, and Chuck Hunter, also of the Northwest, have been invited to participate and will probably accept. Dolp has been going great guns all season and will be one of the most dangerous players in the tournament.

Southern California is going to be represented by more than a dozen of the best youngsters in the West, headed by Fay Coleman of California and Harold Thompson of Oakmont, including Lester Coleman, California; Buddy Thompson, Oakmont; Allen Moser, Lee Pendergrass, Norman MacBeth, Jr., Wilshire; Eddie Meiberg, Julian Cahn, Hillcrest; Les Henslie, Long Beach; David Martin, Rio Hondo; Gilbert Eckles, Oakmont, and others.

Darsie L. Darsie, popular tourney chairman at Del Monte, is responsible for setting the two ball mixed foursome event for the first Sunday of resort golf week and the move will greatly increase the field, besides providing a fine chance for men and women championship contenders to loosen up before starting their respective tourney qualifying rounds.

Sweetser Out of National Amateur Play

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (AP)—Jess Sweetser, first American-born golfer to win the British amateur championship, will not compete in the American amateur title event in Baltusrol September 13-18, according to his brother, Ted Sweetser.

The former Yale star, who returned in poor health from his European invasion a month and a half ago, has decided that further competition this year might endanger complete recovery from an attack of influenza and consequently will appear at the Short Hills (N. J.) course merely as a spectator, his brother said.

Sweetser's decision to refrain from further play, a reversal of plans he announced shortly after his arrival, has led to the belief that his progress has not been as rapid as anticipated. He is now recuperating at Lake Joseph, Ontario, Can.

WALL AND PHILLIPS WIN GOLF TOURNEY

SANTA CRUZ, Aug. 8 (Exclusive) Bill Wall of San Francisco and Roy Phillips of Santa Rosa won the honors in last week's Northern California pro-amateur tournament on the Santa Cruz Golf and Country Club course, with a 64. Harold Sampson and A. B. Norris of Burlingame came second with a 66.

Other leading scores were as follows: Joe Mozel, Marysville, and Charles H. Griffen, Jr., Santa Cruz, 67; Arthur Brooks and Dick Richmond of San Jose, 67; Bob Macdonald and Sam Tarrant of Sequoia Club, Oakland, 68; Al Abrego and C. J. Klein of Santa Cruz, 69; Jack Harris and Joe Clydes of San Francisco, 70; N. Welder and John Grady of Petaluma, 70.

MERCURY CLUB RUSHING WORK

New Course Offers Perfect Golf Layout

El Sereno Plans Promise Successful Future

Merritt's Busy With Club Plans at Urban

Golf experts who have inspected the land on which the new Riviera Country Club's first 18-hole course is being built under the eagle eyes of George C. Thomas, Jr., and William Bell are of the opinion that, when completed, the Mercury golfers will have a golfing test second to none in all the West. It will match up with the splendid 36-hole layout belonging to the New York Athletic Club at Travers Island, New York, which is hailed as one of the finest in this country.

George Clark, who acts as the able golf commissioner of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, looked over the property along with Frank Borzage one day last week and both were tremendously impressed with the excellence of the work being carried out by Messrs. Thomas and Bell.

George Thomas, who is heralded far and wide as one of the great golf architects, is firm in his belief that William Bell will turn over to the Los Angeles Athletic Club the most up-to-date golf course he ever had anything to do with and that it will vie with America's best in every detail.

Leo V. Starr, a member of the Los Angeles Athletic Club and a golfer of low handicap at the Wilshire Country Club, said today that he was anxious to see the work already done at Riviera as many of his golfing pals had told him of how splendid it all is.

EL SERENO CLUB HAS GREAT FUTURE

With preliminary grading now complete and the work of piping fairways with water being rushed so that seeding can be started by next week, Frank Walsh, head of the advisory board of the new El Sereno Country Club, which is building an 18-hole grass golf course on the Valley Boulevard near the Ascot Speedway, announced today that the layout of the links will stand as now planned.

This means that the hole-by-hole layout is completely finished and no further changes will be made. The course, according to the card, will measure exactly 6053 yards by the figures of Engineer Muirhead, who has made an accurate survey of every hole. Par will stand at 72, 36 out and 36 in, which indicates a very practical and standard test of golf.

John Duncan Dunn, the golf course expert, who laid out the links, arranged the holes so that there are three par three's, three par fives and the remainder par four's. The longest hole is 572 yards, calling for two tremendous wooden shots to get within reach of the green for the niblick shot if one hopes to get down in par. The shortest hole is 112 yards, which can be reached with a mashie niblick but the shot must be true and accurate for plenty of trouble will be encountered if one is over or short.

The permanent hole-by-hole description of the course as it will stand when opened for play November 15, the date selected for initial play, is as follows:

Hole	Par	Yards	Hole	Par	Yards
1	4	348	10	4	270
2	4	342	11	4	344
3	5	465	12	4	342
4	4	343	13	4	392
5	4	347	14	5	518
6	3	222	15	4	311
7	5	572	16	4	333
8	4	329	17	3	252

MERRITT BUSY AT URBAN

Grading work on the first nine holes of the new Urban Golf Club, located on Telegraph Road near Santa Fe Springs, is now complete, according to George Merritt, Sr., golf expert in charge of the construction.

Preliminary construction on the second nine is under way this week and as soon as this is finished the work of piping the various fairways so that grass seed can be planted will start.

According to Art Merritt, secretary of the club, everything is shaping up as per schedule and not a single hitch in the construction plans has yet been encountered which means that Urban members will get on their completed course ready to play sometime around January 1.

WISE AND OTHER WISE

Before leaving for the national amateur classic that will be played over the historic Baltusrol, N. J., course early next month, George Von Elm, the blond answer to California's appeal for championship golf, paid Bobby Jones the greatest possible compliment.

"There are two kinds of golf—the kind Bobby plays and the kind the rest of us play," George said. Von Elm, who tied with Walter Hagen for third place in the British open, four strokes behind the Georgia flash, who won the event, has been beaten by Jones twice.

Von Elm is one of the finest sportsmen golf has ever known and he was very sincere in his statement regarding Jones. Bobby could well afford to say the same thing about Von Elm. George is just about as good as he can ever hope to be—in California. If he were back East, meeting the stiffest kind of competition daily, George's game would be several strokes better, and he would be even greater than the indomitable Bobby Jones of today.

Von Elm has the heart and the head of a golfer. He puts everything he has in every shot but can meet the best players in this State, miss several strokes and still win handily. Back East, where slips mean lost matches, Von Elm would quit missing and it wouldn't be long before things would be all changed around and George would be in the driving seat—where he belongs.

Von Elm will have his greatest chance in the amateur this year. He proved conclusively overseas that he is several strokes better than the best of the fine crop of youngsters maturing yearly. Bobby Jones can't go on forever and while Bobby has been at his best in their two previous encounters, Von Elm is playing better now than ever before—and—but anyway, we would sooner have Von Elm playing to a 24 handicap, than not have him—so while we're all wishing him luck this year, we are remembering—and sort of praying, that this may be the year.

Fred Johnson, new Rancho president, has stepped right in at the head of a mighty fine club, and with a policy that is going to work wonders for the organization that has been noted for hospitality in the past. Johnson is working for a club for members—and friends of members.

Every member of Rancho has been brought to feel that they are rightly joint owners of the organization — that everything possible will be done for their comfort—if, in return, they will just do something for everyone else.

In other words Johnson is fostering the spirit of "what kind of a club would my club be if every member were just like me?" Rancho has some of the most regular fellows in the association, and building around such a comforting nucleus promises wonders for the club in the future.

Incidentally, Fred Johnson is a regular fellow himself—blessed with a personality and perspective that is always caring for the other fellow—and the property owners of the organization are to be congratulated for their foresight in securing such a valuable leader—for it was a tough job to step in and take over the job vacated by Frank Collins, who was one of the most progressive officials in local golf.

FAIR GOLFERS AT SAN PEDRO

Mrs. A. E. D. Trabue, and her high-powered auxiliarites will invade the San Pedro Golf and Country Club for a two-class medal tourney Thursday. The seaside course is one of the most beautiful in the Southland and has received very little press notice in this city. The enthusiastic reports of the more than forty local entrants in the feminine event will be the finest kind of advertising and the layout deserves it. A special buffet dinner will be served visiting golfers.

Penn Eleven to Begin Practice in September

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 8. (Exclusive)—Louis A. Young, head coach of the University of Pennsylvania football team, announced today that preliminary football practice for the squad would start on Tuesday, September 7, at Sea Girt, N. J.

Invitations have gone out to over fifty veterans, freshmen from last year and scrub players of last season who displayed possibilities to report at camp ready for practice. This is the largest squad Young has taken away since he became head coach.

The loss of a number of veterans from last year's team makes it incumbent on the coach to take a huge squad for experimental purposes. Serious gaps in the backfield and line must be filled before the season opens, graduations having played havoc with the veterans.

Mixed Foursomes Open Event the 18th Inst.

Allen Moser to Defend Title at Bay Resort

Allen Moser, of the Wilshire Club, winner of the $1000 Spreckels Cup in the annual classic last year, will clash with the pick of the golfers in the Southland, in defense of his crown in the current event that will open with a thirty-six-hole qualifying round, over the Coronado Club course, one week from next Wednesday.

Moser plans to go to San Diego several days earlier this year and spend all available time tuning up for the classic that promises to draw the best field in the history of the event.

Alan Moser

A two ball mixed foursome tourney to be played Sunday, the 29th inst., has been included in the golf card arranged by Major Colin G. Ross and his Coronado club assistants and the competition will draw at least two score teams from this vicinity who will welcome the opportunity to spend the greater part of the week at the beautiful down-State resort.

Bob Simpson, Coronado pro, has been working hard with his club players and will have a fine representation in the cup flight. There are at least ten players from the San Diego district, exclusive of Coronado club members, who will have an equal chance at the beautiful trophy, but the sweeping invasion of Los Angeles and vicinity is going to be a hard one to stem.

Semifinals and finals in the cup flight will be over the long thirty-six-hole route. Maj. Ross states that the Coronado course is at least 10 deg. cooler than the coolest in this vicinity and the overtime yardage will but stimulate the golfing ability of all entrants.

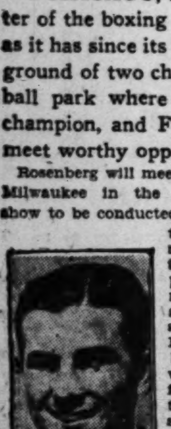
Fidel La Barba Fights Emil Paluso in Chicago Thursday; Rosenberg on Same Bill

TWO CHAMPIONS DISPLAY TALENTS IN WINDY CITY

Middle Westerners Anxious to See La Barba in Action; Sangor is Banty Champ's Opponent

BY WALTER ECKERSALL

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Chicago, which may become the center of the boxing world if the commission continues to function as it has since its inception a few months ago, will be the battleground of two champions on Thursday night at the Cubs' baseball park where Charley Phil Rosenberg, the bantamweight champion, and Fidel La Barba, holder of the 112-pound title, meet worthy opponents.



FIDEL LA BARBA

Rosenberg will meet Joey Sanger of Milwaukee in the feature of the show to be conducted by Jim Mullen, the leading promoter of the section. The champion's title will not be at stake as the weight agreed upon is 124 pounds. The bout, however, will give boxing fans of the section a chance to see Rosenberg in action and determine his chances of winning from Bud Taylor of Terre Haute, Ind., in their championship bout in Chicago on September 10.

La Barba will take on Emil Paulso of Salt Lake City who is under the management of Leo P. Flynn, one of the best-known managers of fighters in the game. Fidel's title will not be at stake as the agreed weight for this match is 118 pounds. The fans, however, are so anxious to see the little coast gladiator in action that Promoter Mullen decided to use him.

In neither fight, will the champion have an easy time. Sangor is of the boring in type who will make Rosenberg fight in every round. Joey is game to the core and will go down fighting if Rosenberg proves to be the master. Sangor has put up some great fights during his career and is credited with a technical knockout over Sammy Mandell, the present world's lightweight champion. This fight took place when Sammy was appearing as a bantamweight. Sangor sent Mandell to the canvas with a right cross. Mandell missed his count and after getting partly to his feet went down without being hit. He was disqualified and Sangor given credit for a technical knockout.

La Barba, in his first visit to Chicago since he won the title, has made many friends. The little champion is a credit to the game. He is a gentleman and although boxing is his business, he rarely talks about the manly art of self defense. Football is his hobby and he can name the star players of eastern teams which have journeyed to the Coast in past years to meet coast elevens in the intersectional struggles played during the holidays.

Joey Sangor

In Paluso, the flyweight champion will meet a formidable opponent, a fighter who is coming all the time and throws his punches from any angle. Emil is tough and rugged and should give the champion one of the most interesting fights of his career not excepting those which Fidel had with Jimmy McLarnin.

These two fights involving champions will be supported by two other ten-rounders. Spug Myers of California will meet Russie LeRoy of Fargo, N. D., Lee Wax, who claims the welterweight championship of Australia, will clash with Clyde Hull of Texas.

Since the passage of the boxing law in the State of Illinois some excellent shows have been staged thanks to the splendid rulings of the boxing commission of which O. W. Huncke is chairman. In some cases, promoters, managers and fighters have tried to evade commission rulings but they have been summarily punished.

Tommy Ryan of McKeesport, Pa., met Bud Taylor of Terre Haute, Ind. in a recent show. At the next meeting of the boxing commission, Ryan and his manager, Hugh Shannon, were called before the body. Tommy could not offer a reasonable excuse for his tactics and he was fined $250 and suspended from appearing in the State for ninety days. On other occasions, fighters tried to evade rules by not being on the ground five days in advance of the contest and not permitting six days to elapse between appearances. These fighters were given to understand the rules must be obeyed. Consequently shows were postponed so that rules could be lived up to.

RABBIT PUNCHES

BY PAUL LOWRY

IF NOTHING else, the various snags which the Dempsey-Tunney match for the heavyweight championship is encountering day by day are acting as a tremendous ballyhoo for the affair. And nothing so gladdens the heart of any fight promoter as the ballyhoo. It is the something that serves as a curiosity fillip to the public mind and makes the boys glad to stand in line, ready to cough up their dough for ducats and tell their friends they were at the killing.

Gene Tunney may not have the least chance in the world with Jack Dempsey, but the events of the past year have made him excellent material for which, coupled with the subpoenas, injunctions and what not in New York and Chicago, combine make the match a certain success.

Tunney knocked out Tommy Gibbons in fourteen rounds and Gibbons stayed fifteen rounds with Dempsey at Shelby. Tunney flattened Bartley Madden in four rounds and the latter was in the ring at the end of the fifteenth round with Harry Wills. These kayoes by the Greenwich Village marine afforded pretty fair stuff for the ballyhoo artists, but the legal entanglements with B. C. Clements and the Chicago Coliseum in the background will get them columns in the newspapers until the gladiators get down to intensive training. Then we can have a few knockouts of sparring partners to justify the assertion both Messrs. Tunney and Dempsey are mankillers. Yea, verily, the ballyhoo is great.

It is to be hoped that the wrist Bud Taylor injured while training for his bout with Jimmy Mendo in St. Paul August 9 will not cause the postponement of his fight with Dixie La Hood at the Olympic the middle of this month.

It will be Bud's last appearance here or anywhere else before he meets Phil Rosenberg for the latter's bantamweight crown in Chicago next month, and local fans will be anxious to see in action again the boy many of them have picked as the next 118-pound champ.

The action of Bud Taylor's manager, Eddie Long, in taking over Jimmy Delaney at this time is not quite clear, unless he sees some latent talent in the St. Paul light-heavyweight boxer that the latter never revealed while on the Coast. And Jimmy's challenge of Jack Delaney, the new light-heavyweight champion, seems just a little out of turn.

Jimmy was easily whipped by Young Stribling at Vernon last year, and the so-called "Georgia schoolboy" was a cinch for Paul Berlenbach, who recently dropped the crown of the 175-pounders. On this basis of reasoning there doesn't seem to be much excuse for a Jack Delaney-Jimmy Delaney match, although Long is rated as one of the best managers in the country and he may be able to get something out of Jimmy that Mike Collins, his former manager, found impossible. However, Jimmy's best days are apparently over. He was a great prospect three years ago, but he never fulfilled his early promise as a fighter. There was something lacking.

The postponed Baby Joe Gans-Mushy Callahan bout at Vernon has stirred up more street-corner gossip than any local fight for months. This is probably due to the fact that both boys are products of Los Angeles rings, and again, to the fact that Callahan is the only white lightweight of class hereabouts who has been willing to risk his hide in the squared circle with the colored lad.

FORM ARCHERY CLUB

Dr. Edwin P. T. O. Osbaldeston, nongenarian and veteran of the Crimean war, residing at Asbury Park, N. J., is planning a "Robin Hood" archery club. He said that, with the possible exception of fencing, it is the most valuable sport in existence fully to exercise the mucles.

GODINEZ HERE FOR HERNANDEZ BATTLE

Johnny Godinez, Pacific Coast bantamweight boxer, who holds two draws with Georgie Rivers will make his Culver City debut Tuesday night against Checkie Hernandez. Matchmaker "Sy" Saenz was compelled to make a shift in his original match between Frankie Grandetta and Godinez, owing to the fact that Frankie was signed to box in Pasadena, previously.

Walter Beck, hard-hitting San Berdoo welterweight will tangle with Dario Barron for siv rounds. The balance of the card, all four-rounders, follows:

Gasper Sorio vs. Benny Djaz, Joel Lopez vs. Jack O'Brien. George Brady vs. Lou Contreras. Morrie Goodman vs. Happy Romero.

WISE MOVE BY COMMISSION

CHICAGO, Aug. 8. (Exclusive)—Fifty dollars a seat to see a couple of fighters go through ten rounds, sometimes twelve or fifteen, of boxing, is a pretty steep admission fee when you figure all angles.

Box seats at world's series baseball games are high at $5 per and the same can be said of box seats at world's tennis-tourney games, also championship football contests. Grand-opera stars seldom play to houses where the prices are over $5 per and never over $7.50, and all that with the seating capacity from 2000 to 5000 at the most, with a company of from thirty to forty actors and actresses to take care of.

The Illinois Boxing Commission did a wise act when it put the limit of $15 on seats for championship or any other matches. With seating arrangements for from 20,000 to 100,000 people there is no reason why exhorbitant prices should be charged.

BUD TAYLOR ON WAY TO COAST

Terra Haute Terror Billed to Meet Dixie LaHood

Local Bout Last Before the Rosenberg Engagement

Indianan's Foe Has Scored Notable Victories

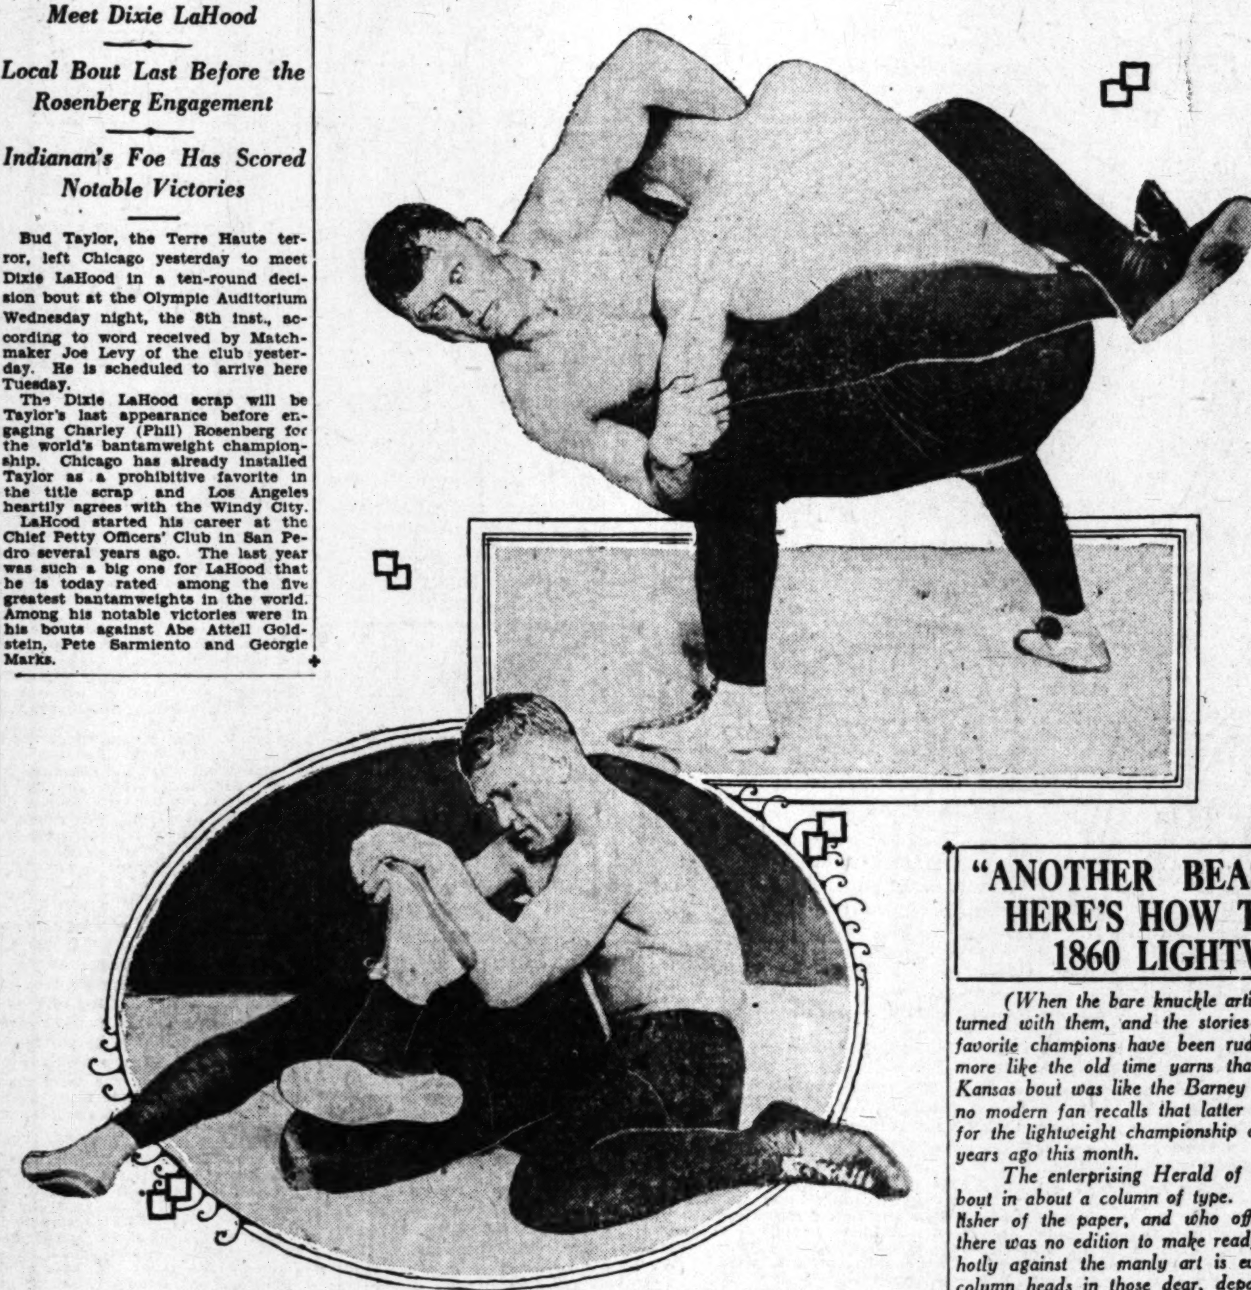
Bud Taylor, the Terre Haute terror, left Chicago yesterday to meet Dixie LaHood in a ten-round decision bout at the Olympic Auditorium Wednesday night, the 8th inst., according to word received by Matchmaker Joe Levy of the club yesterday. He is scheduled to arrive here Tuesday.

The Dixie LaHood scrap will be Taylor's last appearance before engaging Charley (Phil) Rosenberg for the world's bantamweight championship. Chicago has already installed Taylor as a prohibitive favorite in the title scrap and Los Angeles heartily agrees with the Windy City.

LaHood started his career at the Chief Petty Officers' Club in San Pedro several years ago. The last year was such a big one for LaHood that he is today rated among the five greatest bantamweights in the world. Among his notable victories were in his bouts against Abe Attell Goldstein, Pete Sarmiento and Georgie Marks.

THE "TIGER MAN" IN ACTION ON THE MAT

Herewith is John Pesek, who meets Nick Lutze at the Olympic Wednesday night, demonstrating a couple of his favorite tricks. At the top he is riding his foe with a body scissors and paving the way for a headlock. Below he is working on an opponent with a torturing toe hold. John is ranked as one of the cleverest heavyweights in the game.



ROSEN GETS RETURN GO WITH HOPPE

New York Scrapper Out to Reverse Decision Friday Night at Hollywood

Charley Rosen, New York lightweight, will get another crack at Dick Hoppe in the Hollywood Legion Stadium ring Friday night. The boys were signed for a rematch because of the interest manifested in their last fight, when Hoppe outboxed the Gotham Hebrew after a furious ten-round bout.

DICK HOPPE

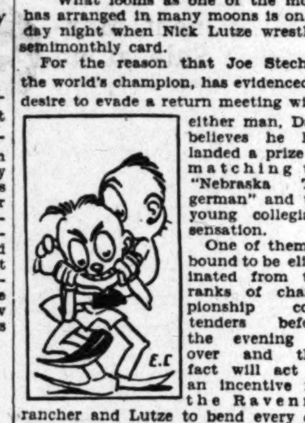
Eddie Sears, who handles Charley, wants to wipe out that blot on his protege's record. Charley McDonald and Dick Hoppe give Sears the horse laugh and claim Dick will not only repeat his win, but in a more decisive manner. The fight is a natural as both are favorites and among the best lightweights in California today.

PESEK WRESTLES LUTZE

Predict Bitter Mat Battle As Nebraska Tigerman Faces Former Notre Dame Gridder

What looms as one of the most attractive wrestling tid-bits Lou Daro has arranged in many moons is on tap for the Olympic Auditorium Wednesday night when Nick Lutze wrestles John Pesek in the main event of the semimonthly card.

For the reason that Joe Stecher, the world's champion, has evidenced a desire to evade a return meeting with either man, Daro believes he has landed a prize in matching the "Nebraska Tigerman" and the young collegiate sensation.



One of them is bound to be eliminated from the ranks of championship contenders before the evening is over and this fact will act as an incentive for the Ravenna rancher and Lutze to bend every effort to get two out of the three falls.

Wayne (Big) Munn and Ed "Strangler" Lewis — both former world's champions—have been offered a bout with the winner. If Lou Daro can carry out his plan of elimination the question of who's who among the bone-bending fraternity of the heavyweight division figures to be settled once and for all.

"Dopesters" have been given a tough one to pick in Wednesday night's tussle.

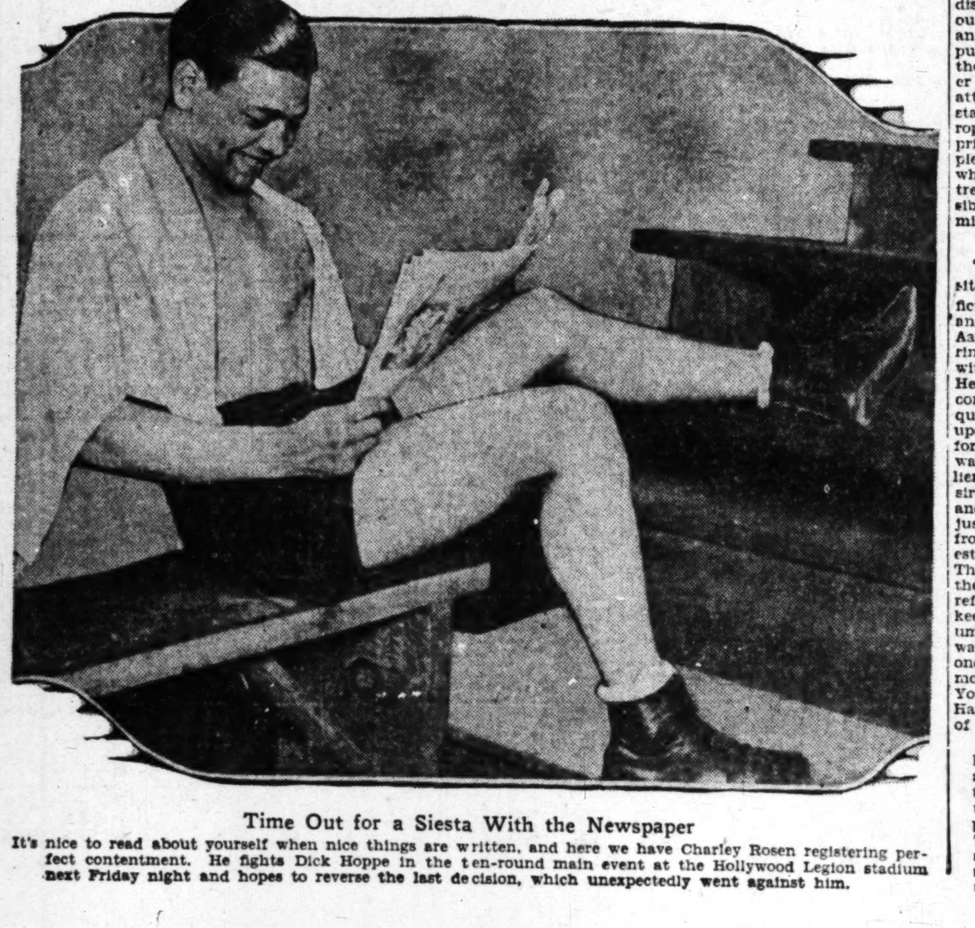
Both men have apparently "everything" when their ability is analyzed and they stack up pretty closely.

Lutze's speed has been a big factor in his success in local matches. The former football star proved faster than either Jim Londos or Stecher in his "big shots" here.

Pesek, however, will even have an edge on Lutze in that respect. The "Tigerman" has displayed swiftness in rambling about the mat in his previous bouts here that puts him in a class by himself. Not one of his previous opponents—Sigmond, Lewis, Taylor, Sampson and others—appeared to know what it was all about when the Ravenna rancher started tying them up and tossing them about.

Lutze's strength should be his big advantage. The young "phenom" is as strong as a couple of the w.k. oxen and he knows how to use his strength when pulling on a toe hold, clamping on a double wrist lock, crushing an opponent into submission with a headlock or in any other grip.

One thing, however, seems certain, and that, more than any other reason, should bring out a capacity crowd of fans for hte match. Pesek, the "Tigerman," is going ot be forced to show his claws.



Time Out for a Siesta With the Newspaper

It's nice to read about yourself when nice things are written, and here we have Charley Rosen registering perfect contentment. He fights Dick Hoppe in the ten-round main event at the Hollywood Legion stadium next Friday night and hopes to reverse the last decision, which unexpectedly went against him.

RETURN TITLE TO OLD CHAMP?

Johnny Dundee May Get His Feather Crown Again

New York Commission Gives Up Idea of Tourney

Idea is Nice Tribute to a Great Little Fighter

NEW YORK, Aug. 8. (Exclusive)—The New York Boxing Commission might do the handsome thing and appoint Johnny Dundee champion of the featherweight class.

In August, 1924, Johnny felt that it was a hardship for him to make the featherweight limit of 126 pounds and furthermore it was unfair to his friends to try and do it when he was weakened greatly thereby. He resigned the championship and in a tourney held in New York under the auspices of the New York commission Kid Kaplan was selected as successor to Dundee.

Now Mr. Kaplan, realizing that he can no longer make the weight and be strong, has resigned the title and has entered the lightweight class.

Johnny Dundee, since Kaplan resigned, declares that he can now make the weight without trouble and asks that he be recognized as champion by the same commission.

The New York body had intended running a tourney, similar to the one at which Kaplan was chosen, but Chairman James Farley announced the other day that it had been given up again, but that New York promoters may take it upon themselves to conduct such a tournament.

LEONARD QUITS RING FOR GOOD

Ex-Lightweight Champ Denies Comeback Rumors

Retirement to Stick, Says Undefeated Fighter

Waxes Eloquent Over Benefits Derived From Fighting

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Benny Leonard has settled one much-discussed question most convincingly and that is, we will never see him doing a comeback.

His retirement from boxing was sincerely inspired and, despite all rumors to the contrary, he has at no time given real thought to fighting again.

"I pride myself on the fact that I have always kept faith with the public," explained Benny. "I gave my reasons for retirement and they were sincere ones. To attempt a comeback under the conditions under which I said good-by to the ring would seem too much like bunking those who have believed in me.

"If I can help boxing in any way and at any time by going through an exhibition contest I will be ready any time I am called upon. But it will be exhibitions only. When it comes to a genuine contest—the gloves are hung up forever for Benny Leonard.

NO REASON TO GO BACK

"There's nothing to call me back to the ring in the way of really attractive purses; that is, provided money meant so much to me that I was ready to go back on my word that I am through.

"Although it would not be such a hardship to make the lightweight limit, I would want to fight at around 140 pounds now to be at my best. That is to say, I would have to fight as a welterweight. Do you think any promoter could offer me anything special in the way of inducements to box the present champion, Pete Latzo?

"Even if the money was there I have told the public that I am through with the ring and you can make it as strong as you like. I will never go back on my word."

At this point Benny grew eloquent.

"Am I not a better advertisement to the boxing game than if I was a beaten-up wreck of the ring? Isn't it for the good of the sport that after fifteen years in the ring, during which I met all of the best boys of my weight (and there were some mighty good ones,) and never drawing the color line, doesn't it speak well for the boxing game that I have gone through all this with my features unmarked and my faculties unimpaired?

"Does it not serve as an example to those who are always harping on the brutality of the fistic sport when the well-wisher of the game can point to Benny Leonard and say: 'In what way has the ring harmed this man? Does he look much different from any of us who have had the good sense to keep physically fit?'

"And they might add: 'What has the ring done for Benny Leonard?' And I'd be glad and proud to tell them.

"Boxing has made me independently wealthy; it has given me an education and, what is worth more than all, it has brought me in contact with many wonderful people and given me many worth-while friends. Not so bad for a little East Side kid from the tenements. I am not ashamed of my humble origin. I am proud of my association with the boxing game.

"Look at Packy McFarland, Jim Corbett, Marty McCue, Eddie [illegible] and hundreds of others. Has the prize ring had any brutalizing effect on them? In appearance, deportment and intelligence can't they make themselves welcome anywhere? Haven't they been able to make a success of their afterlife once they had grown away from the ring?

"That's what I intend to do. You cannot make it too strong that I am retired for good."

"ANOTHER BEASTLY FIGHT;" HERE'S HOW THEY REPORTED 1860 LIGHTWEIGHT TITLE GO

(When the bare knuckle artists turned to gloves, the sports writers turned with them, and the stories the sport fans now read after their favorite champions have been rudely bumped off their thrones are no more like the old time yarns than the recent Sammy Mandell-Rocky Kansas bout was like the Barney Aaron-Sam Collier affair. Probably no modern fan recalls that latter duo, but they fought for 48 rounds for the lightweight championship of the world back in 1866—just 60 years ago this month.

The enterprising Herald of New Philadelphia, O., describes the bout in about a column of type. That V. P. Wilson, editor and publisher of the paper, and who officiated as minister on Sundays when there was no edition to make ready for—it being a weekly paper—was hotly against the manly art is evident. They used no flaring eight-column heads in those dear, departed days, but Ye Editor makes up for whatever lack of quantity he may have experienced, by some extraordinary sarcasm. Under the bold black head, "ANOTHER BEASTLY PRIZE FIGHT" he describes the lengthy battle as follows:—Ed.)

"A prize fight came off on the 20th ult., at Pohick Landing, Va., about twenty miles from Washington.

"The principals were Barney Aaron of New York and Samuel Collier of Baltimore, and the contest was for a purse of $500, and the championship of the lightweights. Aaron is well known among the sporting fraternity, and has been engaged in several contests for the honors of the prize ring, and was, up to yesterday, recognized as champion of the lightweights. His first fight was with Robinson in New York in 1856, and he subsequently fought with Evans of New Orleans; with Monaghan, in Rhode Island; and with Scotty of Brooklyn, in Canada, seven years ago. In all of these contests, except the latter, he was successful, and it is claimed for him that he lost the latter through unfairness. He is 31 years of age, has a powerful muscle, and weighed 123 pounds yesterday. Collier is a much younger man, both in age and puglistic experience. His only fame in that way, hitherto, having been won in contests with English some time ago, and with Horatio Bolster of New York in May, last. His weight was 126 pounds.

"Such persons as had purchased tickets and desired to witness the "mill" to the number of 600 took passage at 1 o'clock a.m., on the steamers Winnisimmet and Marines, the first named containing Aaron and his party, and the latter Collier and his party. There were, it is said, some Congressmen aboard as well as a large number of journalists.

"They arrived at their destination just as day dawned, and proceeded about a quarter of a mile, through fields of growing corn, much to the disgust of the owners thereof, to the outskirts of a growth of timber, in an open space of which, and along a public road, the parties commenced the work of staking the 'ring.' After the usual quarrels, and bickerings attendant upon this operation, the stakes were finally driven and the ropes were properly adjusted, and the principals were advised of the completion of the arrangements. Meanwhile the overhanging branches of trees were occupied as fully as possible by spectators, who were determined upon having a good time of it.

ANNOUNCED BY SHOT

"After many delays, which necessitated the adjustment of several difficulties between individuals, a shout announced an arrival and Barney Aaron tossed his hat gaily into the ring, and followed it, occupying a seat with his back to the morning sun. He was in exceedingly good humor, conversed pleasantly with his acquaintances, and appeared to look upon the contest as a certain victory for him, and it was noticed that he was in excellent fighting trim. Collier failed to arrive as early as was desirable, and other quarrels resulted, and other difficulties had to be adjusted. Another long delay arose from the fact that the parties interested could not agree upon a referee. This was, however, finally settled by the selection of Charles Godfrey as referee, and of Ned Price as time keeper. William Riley was selected as umpire for Collier and John Tiernay was umpire for Aaron. Collier's seconds were Jack Fitzgerald of Baltimore, and Denny Harrigan of New York. Aaron's seconds were Duncy Harris of Baltimore and Dan Kerrigan of New York.

"As soon as the preliminaries had been perfected the combatants were, by the casting aside of their outer garments and the usual sponging operation, prepared for the contest before them. The two champions looked squarely at each other, and seemed to take in at a glance to some extent what they would have to contend with. A toss up for the choice of corners resulted in favor of Aaron, who retained the one he had first occupied, with his back to the sun, and Collier was compelled to content himself with the opposite one, which was not so favorable by reason of the effect of the rays of the sun. At this time the odds were decidedly in favor of Aaron and bets of two to one were offered on him. Indeed, so confident were his friends of his superior ability, that bets were offered that he could not even receive a black eye during the fight.

"At 8 o'clock the contestants shook hands, and at 8:07 the contest commenced in earnest.

FORTY-SEVEN ROUNDS

"The fight continued until forty-seven rounds had been fought, and the contestants suffered severely.

"Time was called for the forty-eighth round. Collier made a move toward the scratch when Aaron's seconds throw up the sponge, at 9:56 o'clock, and Collier was declared the victor.

CAVLIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

Mick Grealis, the man that put Johnny Kilbane on the Los Angeles fistic map, is fast forging to the front in the managerial line. Under Mick's practiced eye (this from Beany Walker) Al Ziemer and Joe Guerrero have flowered into great crowd pleasers. Grealis has also added Freddie Block, Cleveland middleweight, to his string. Block is regarded by many easterners as about the best middleweight in the country. He is training at the Main street club and is sure to be seen in action in the near future at one of the swell local clubs.

Last week, Mushy Callahan was having his hair singed with a lighted taper in a subterranean barber shop. At a pool table nearby, two envious ginks leered at the battler. Said one to the other—"Gee—they're hunting them in Mushy's head with a candle."

Sam Haller, the greatest show manager in America, is with us again, and Sam declares that if the Big Fellow Above is good to him he will never wander again from his dear old Los fireside. Haller has just returned from the Sesquicentennial at Philadelphia where he had charge of the big fire show in which 200 people participated. Sam returned by way of the Panama Canal on the steamer Mongolia and is sure sweet on the trip. He will probably have charge of Dick Donald's next open-air entertainment.

Here are some of the ringworms that answer to the persuasive call of Si Masters twice every month (Si is the baby that stands by the guns of the big Vernon Coliseum)—Edward Clark of Warner Brothers; Tom Darmody, dean of local fight fans; H. H. Christie; Lee Belden; Ira Ginsberg, prominent jeweler; H. L. Wellborn, W. E. Wilson. Also the Western Pipe and Steel Co., fourteen strong, and the L. A. Lithograph contingent. Si looks upon 'em as Ceasar looked upon his Tenth Legion.

Joe Levy's name has come to be synonymous with success since the rotund little match maker has swivel chaired it at Grand Avenue and Eighteenth streets. He is regarded by many local experts as the classiest man in the fistic-pairing line Los Angeles has ever known. When Joseph has paired 'em to his taste, that old Olympic roof surely gets a shaking. Numbered among his clientele is Marco Hellman sitting with arms folded right behind Seth Strelinger (The man that knew how.) Then there is Maj. Rupert Hughes, a literatus of the purest ray serene. Rupe sits close to where action flows most copiously. Look who's here, Master Peter B. Kyne pretty close to the bucket and hose. Pete, although not very demonstrative is always there with a calm looks of indwelling delight. Then there is Chuck Reisner not far from Chaplinville; Bill Russell, I. W. Birnbaum, (police commissioner) State Senator Pedrotti, patron saint of California boxing; Chief of Police Davis; Health Commissioner Dr. Parrish, and among the big movie producers, Joe Schenk, Louis B. Mayer, Jesse Lasky, Sid Grauman (he of the fried hair,) Fred Niblo and Cecil De Mille. If you can beat this bunch you sure will have to go some.

Hats off to Dynamite Freddie Mack the only lad that has ever put K. O. Kelly where the birds warble sweetly in the spring time. Mack is under the keen eye of Willie [illegible], the only man that is greeted as [illegible] around the Christie Hotel. Willie has put Joe [illegible] out of the running in the Valentino line. Young Jack Thompson, who put the [illegible] on Harry Whybrow out Ascot way recently, is under the wing of Thomas [illegible]. He is working daily at the Main Street. Many are of the opinion that Thompson will soon prove to be one of the best in his class on the Coast.

Southland Regatta Ends With Flying Colors

YACHTSMEN SET SAIL FOR HOME

Annual Event Sets Records for Local Waters

Star Fleet Features Great Week of Racing

Aloha Newport Difficult for Corinthians to Say

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Aloha Newport—sadder words than these were never spoken by Southland yachtsmen as they prepared to cast off their moorings and set sail for home waters this morning.

For the past six years, the annual Southern California regatta has been a barometer to determine the growth of yachting along the Coast from San Diego to Santa Barbara. The 1926 event, which closed last night with the awarding of 108 trophies to the victorious skippers, shows a growth in yachting for the past twelve months that is astounding unless the figures lie.

JOE BEEK

There were six days chock-full of good fellowship, record-breaking races, serious mishaps, and funny experiences. Aeolus, god of the winds, has the zephyrs on good behavior and there was not a day of heavy weather or real light calms, except Wednesday, when the winds blew strong enough to lay the tiny Stars almost flat with the green water, and gave even the bigger craft a mean workout. The jetty was as placid as a mill pond all week and not a single serious accident marred the regatta.

The remarkable increase of the Star sloop fleet, and scrappy races that were held over the six-mile course was the feature of the entire regatta. Twenty-five of the twenty-two-foot racing machines, breaking all Pacific Coast records, were entered in the series. Every brush was a classic. First Joe Jessup's famous Windward from San Diego would spurt into a lead by seconds and then Commodore B. Rey Schauer's Nettie Star I would show her heels to the fleet. While the champions were battling for first place, the rest of the boys were right astern by a few points and threatening to win right up till the last race was over.

Then there was H. B. (Skip) Warren at the Main's stick, C. F. Beardsley's Barbara J., the Webster boys in the Tom Robin, and all the rest fighting for every inch of way. It was a great collection of boats and skippers.

B'S SHARE IN GLORY

While the Stars were more numerous, the B sloops, the fastest craft for their inches that float, sailed some pretty races and vied with their bigger brethren for top honors. Clar Young skippered the Santa Barbara sloop Alert III into an early lead. Syl Spalding's Debra found Tuesday's weather much too light, but Wednesday's breeze carried her home a winner. The Alert III proved to be an adaptable craft by taking second place. Right behind was "Pier" Davis's Patricia, Tommy Lee's Pirate, unfortunately out of the first race. Lyman Farewell's California, Al Christie's Canuck, Vic Dalton's Gloria and Owen P. Churchill's Galliano III.

The handicap-sloop class was a battle all week between O. Bahn's Gretchen, flying the San Diego Yacht Club burgee, and Byron Farewell's Lady Betty. The sloops put up a nip-and-tuck battle with the Lady Betty winning the championship.

Clem Stose's Teva, Charles Wiseman's Wimitch, and Don Lee's Monsoon were the class of the bigger craft. The Teva sails in any weather with equal success. Her big club tops'l was a joy to see when full of wind for it pulled like a team of mules. Milton B. Schock simply walked the Monsoon in rings around the whole fleet. The little schooner is a sweet craft and won the admiration of the salts, young and old.

Charles Ullman's Huson, skippered by Harry Grant, was on the job all week as the committee boat and by the end of the regatta was a fixture at Balboa. The regatta committee worked aboard the boat and the smooth way in which it functioned helped put the regatta over in fine style. A. Lester Best, "Skip" Warren, Ellis Taylor, Fred Bosbyshell and Commodore Joe Beek were on the bus every minute. The regatta room was the busiest place at the yacht club.

The boys from San Diego left a world of good feeling behind them. From Clem Stose and Commodore Thompson right down to Joe Jessup, the Border City Corinthians proved to be the salt of the earth. They were in the midst of everything, scrapping for every trophy, and playing the game every minute. But a small portion of the silverware that leaves the Newport Harbor Yacht Club trophy case will reside in the San Diego clubhouse.

Down from Santa Barbara came the Wimitch, Emerald and Sapphire, manned by a corking good bunch of sports. They raced down the Coast for Commodore Boulton's cup, but light winds made it more of a drifting match than a race. The Channel City boys are getting their much-sought-after breakwater for a safe anchorage, and also a new clubhouse that will be the finest on the Coast.

Of course, the California Yacht Club, Catalina Island Yacht Club, Southland Sailing Club and Los Angeles Yacht Club were well represented. The Newport gang was on hand in full force lending a hand here and there and giving the visitors the time of their lives.

Hard-working Jim Webster saw to it that the youngsters were well taken care of, and Commodore Davidson of the Southland Sailing Club was the official starter for the boy class. Sailing marions, snowbirds, sea mews and bay sloops, the kids had a sweet time and got as much fun out of the regatta as their elders.

It was a splendid regatta from any angle and should set a goal for the Corinthian club that gets next year's event. To beat the Newport Harbor Yacht Club's hospitality, co-operation and harmony is a well worth-while ambition, but not easy to at-

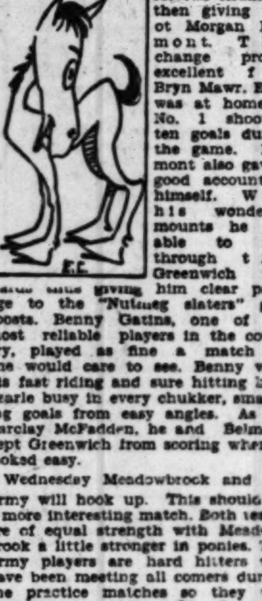
MIDWICK POLOISTS FAVORED

Picked to Furnish Meadowbrook Four With Tough Competition for National Open Title

BY JOHN W. LYMAN

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The opening of the junior championship tournament a week ago Saturday did not prove anything exciting. Owing to a slight injury to young Rodman Wanamaker, back on the Meadowbrook team, the Westbury players gave way to the Greenwich team against Bryn Mawr. The Greenwich four proved an unbalanced combination which caused them to be swamped by the Philadelphians to the tune of 19 to 40. "Red" Barrett of Yale and Allisno at back, seemed to be the only players knowing anything about team polo. There were many times when Greenwich had excellent chances to score but in their anxiety to hit the ball Greenwich either hit to some Bryn Mawr player or sent it wide the goal.



The Quakers showed up well. They played a strong combination at all times. George Earle III played back for two chukkers, then giving way ot Morgan Belmont. The change proved excellent for Bryn Mawr. Earle was at home at No. 1 shooting ten goals during the game. Belmont also gave a good account of himself. With his wonderful mounts he was able to ride through the Greenwich forwards and giving him clear passage to the "Nutmeg slaters" goal posts. Benny Gatins, one of the most reliable players in the country, played as fine a match as one would care to see. Benny with his fast riding and sure hitting kept Earle busy in every chukker, smacking goals from easy angles. As for Barclay McFadden, he and Belmont kept Greenwich from scoring when it looked easy.

Wednesday Meadowbrook and the Army will hook up. This should be a more interesting match. Both teams are of equal strength with Meadowbrook a little stronger in ponies. The Army players are hard hitters and have been meeting all comers during the practice matches so they will be in tip-top form. On Saturday Bryn Mawr will meet the winners for the championship match. It is to be hoped that this final game will draw larger crowds than last Saturday. The junior championship is not receiving the proper kind of support from polo lovers. Perhaps this is due to the lack of teams. What polo lovers like to see is teams from different parts of the country as well as new players. The year the Midwicks won the junior there was a big attendance at Rumson. The Californians introduced some great players in Pedley and Burke.

The "big boys" from England sailed last Wednesday on the steamship Homeric for New York and should arrive Monday or Tuesday. Among the celebrities are Lewis Lacey, Jack Nelson, Lord Wodehouse, Maj. Lockett, "Laddie" Sanford, Bobby Strawbridge, Freddy Prince, Capt. C. T. I. Roark and some of the new Argentine players. It is expected that the Midwicks will arrive within the next ten days or so and together with Milburn, Hitchcock, J. Watson Webb, J. Cheever Cowdin, Tom Ewing, Roddy Wanamaker, Louis E. Stoddard, the cream of the polo world will be on hand at Meadowbrook. It is expected that the Californians and the Argentines will play in several exhibition matches at both Rumson Country Club and Philadelphia. Any games between the Midwicks and the Argentines will create a great deal of comment. These two teams would bring out one of the largest crowds of the season.

PLAYING BETTER

Reports have come East that Pedley is playing better polo this year than ever. That being the case there is a likelihood of the Midwick four again capturing the open championship. This year every team will have a fine array of ponies. The Meadowbrook teams have an exceptional fast lot of mounts and these ponies have been showing fine speed. Dr. J. D. Richards, one of the best-known trainers in the country, and Godfrey Preece have flashed some of the best ponies seen on Meadowbrook fields this season. The Preece ponies ridden by his two sons, Terrence and Stewart, in the Hempstead cup matches, were not outstripped by the famous mounts from the Harriman or Von Stodde stables. W. R. Grace has a beautiful pony in "Two Step," an Irish mare. "Two Step" has shown her heels to a lot of 'em this season. On several occasions she carried her master past several players at critical moments in a game. Belle of All, Louis E. Stoddard's great mare, is still one of the best in the game. Whenever Mr. Stoddard wants to pep up his team all he has to do is ride Belle of All and it is seldom that his side is scored on in that chukker.

Down at the Rockaway Hunt Club polo has taken quite a brace this year. In former years Rockaway vied with Meadowbrook for polo honors on Long Island. The Rockaway polo field is the oldest in this country. Many great matches have been played on this field facing the clubhouse. Games between Rockaway and Meadowbrook are now being played. At every one of the games one finds the stands crowded. When Rockaway gets its new field completed it is hoped that polo will again take the place it held in years gone by.

ERNIE HOOD MATCHED WITH GEORGIE LOPEZ

Ernie Hood, the great little Pasadena flyweight who now ranks as about fourth in the class in this country, will take on a tough one next Thursday night at the Pasadena Armory when he meets Georgie K. O. Lopez, the Wilmington sensation.

Lopez has been upsetting a lot of good boys lately. He beat Joe Rickey, who last Thursday defeated Frankie Grandetta at the Armory. Also he has beaten Eagle Thomas and fought draws with Young Magdaline and Bennie Diaz.

Other bouts will be: Six rounds each: Jack O'Brien vs. Joe Cortez, 142 pounds; Joe Cardoza vs. Chuck Nash, 156 pounds. Four rounds each: Avelina Arceniega vs. Al Molina, 110 pounds; Willis Durham vs. Strother Phillips, 180 pounds.

SINGLETON IS SACS' MASTER

Sheriff Hurls Vittmen to 6-to-3 Victory

Sheehan's Hitting Factor in Stars' Win

Hollywood Clinches Series With Sacramento

a left-hander yesterday for Chief Deputy Sheehan contributed a home run with one on and a single that drove in a run to swell the Stars' total of markers by 3. Not only that, but Chief Deputy Sheehan robbed Wilbur Davis of at least a two-base hit in the fourth inning when he raced over to the foul line and snagged the Sacramento first-sacker's torrid drive to left.

Toiling on the mound against the Sheriff was Lefty Louis Vinci, who will be remembered here as the gent who blanked the Angels, 1 to 0, in twelve innings on the Senators' last visit to these parts. If you don't recall this contest, just ask Elmer Jacobs, who happened to be pitching for Los Angeles about it and he'll more than refreshen your memory.

HURLED GOOD BALL

At that, Lefty Louis pitched a good brand of ball yesterday, but two homers and a triple ruined his afternoon. Those three extra-base hits accounted for four of Hollywood's runs. The other two Star markers were achieved in the third through the medium of an error by Ray French, a couple of singles, and a double-steal that was successful because of a rather doubtful decision at the plate by Umpire Billy Phyle. You can't very well blame Vinci for those two markers, but you can for the other four, and the quartet would have beaten him anyway, so justice didn't go out of her way any by bestowing the victory on a guardian of the law instead of Lefty Louie.

The Stars started the scoring in the first, when, after two were out, Frank O'Doul walked and trotted home when Chief Deputy Sheehan lined—and it was lined—one of Vinci's slants over the left-field wall. Sheehan's drive went out to the barrier on a line and just had enough height to clear the bricks. The ball was plenty kissed, as the saying goes.

In the third inning the Stars stretched their lead to four runs by getting to Lefty Louie for the two doubtful markers. After Frederick had been retired, Chuck Gooch reached first when French booted his grounder. O'Doul's single to right sent Gooch to second, from where he scored when Chief Deputy Sheehan singled to left. O'Doul took third on the hit. While Roy Leslie was swinging viciously at a third strike, O'Doul and Sheehan put on a double steal that allowed Lefty to score, although it looked as if Catcher Shea had him blocked off the plate. However, Umpire Phyle ruled otherwise, and that was his story and he stuck to it despite the protests of Buddy Ryan, who is becoming known as the chronic kicker, and several other Solons. Sacramento scored one in the fifth when Hoffman, French and Vinci lined out successive singles after Shea had fanned. With men on first and second Singleton forced Cunningham and Monroe to fly to Chief Deputy Sheehan to end the inning.

KERR TRIPLES

Hollywood got that run back in the sixth when Johnny Kerr tripled over Hoffman's head in deep center and scored on Cook's roller to Monroe.

The Solons caused a lot of commotion in the seventh but could get but one run out of all the exictement. Shea walked to open the inning and took second on a wild pitch that nearly tore Cook's meat hand loose from his arm. Hoffman hit to Lee and all hands were safe when Shea slid into third ahead of Dudley's throw to Gooch. French walked, filling the bases with none out. Vinci hit into a double play and Shea scored. Cunningham also walked. At this point Cunningham and Hoffman essayed a double-steal but it went "flooey" when Kerr threw to Gooch and picked Hoffman off third, while Cunningham was trapped between first and second.

Sacramento's last run arrived in the eighth, when Monroe singled. Knight popped out, Davis singled to center, Osborne walked, filling the bases, and Shea grounded to Gooch, Monroe scoring on the play. Gooch made a neat stop and quick throw of Shea's sharply hit ball, knocking it down and recovering in time to get his man. Hoffman lined to Lee for the third out.

LESLIE HITS HOMER

Roy Leslie iced the contest for Hollywood in the home half of the eighth, when he lifted one of Vinci's offerings high over the left-field fence for a homer, giving the Stars the three-run lead that lasted through to the finish.

Pinch Hitter Sweeney doubled with one out in the ninth and Monroe walked after Lee had snagged Cunningham's fly to short center, but the Sheriff was determined to lock up the contest in the cooler so he fanned Knight to end the activities. Score:

Addition of Koenig and Lazzeri Revamped Yankees into Pennant Contenders Agai

JAKE RUPPERT WAS LUCKY TO REBUILD CLUB CHEAPLY

When Championship Squad Faltered Yank Owners Replaced It for Less Than $200,000

BY IRVING VAUGHAN

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Rebuilding a ball club that has run down with old age is no simple or inexpensive task but the officials of the New York Yanks, coming champions of the American League, accomplished the task with no great expenditure by Col. Jake Ruppert, nor much loss of time. Much has been written about the decline of the outfit that had won its way into the world's series of 1921-1922 and 1923.

The experts moaned the decline of a great pitching staff, the passing of a veteran shortstop and a few other things. One was led to believe that what survived of the one-time formidable machine might as well be taken out and dropped in the ocean.

Col. Ruppert was almost convinced that his palatial stadium with room for 65,000 would become the most desolate spot in New York. But he merely spent a few dollars and big crowds and the current percentage table of the Ban Johnson league are the result.

"It required only about four alterations to make the Yankees from nothing into something, but the same results probably would have been acquired had nothing more been added than a couple faces around second base. The faces are Lazzeri and Koenig and, while the latter has toppled at times, it sems safe to figure that the work of this pair, not only in the field but at bat, has gone a long way to bring about the revival.

Lazzeri, who a year ago was standing the Coast League on its beam end, was picked up for a mere matter of 50,000 of Col. Ruppert's dollars. Koenig, obtained from the St. Paul club last season, cost about $25,000 in cash and players. Ruppert never got more for his money, whether it was hops for his brewery or talent for his stadium.

Other investments made for this season alone do not run into much coin. Gazzela, once a collegian and now used for utility, cost practically nothing. This is the first year he has stuck, several seasons in the minors having given him the needed polish. Catcher Pat Collins was purchased from St. Louis for about $10,000 and when he was hurt there was no hesitancy on the part of the club to pick up another seasoned backstop.

Washington tried to get waivers on Hank Severeid because he had a big contract. New York claimed him but Foxy Griff wouldn't let the player go for the waiver price of $4000. But he was willing to talk business so when he named $8000 the Yank officials lost no time writing a check. It was a wise move, because an old head like Severeid will come in handy more than once before the race is run.

The only other important difference of the present Yanks and the team of several years are Combs in center where Witt performed and Gehrig, who took Pipp's place at first. Combs came high, his price being around $75,000. Gehrig represents only street car fare, because he was a New York school kid when Ruppert employed him. Both these fellows have been around for a couple years and if there is any doubt remaining as to their hitting ability consult some of the pitchers who face them.

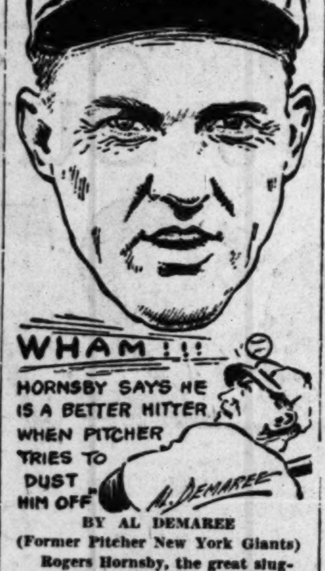
The old hurling staff was changed somewhat with the swapping of Bush for Shocker. It proved a wise move. Myles Thomas was added this year at a cost of $20,000 and he has helped here and there. Braxton, a southpaw, was picked from the New England league for a nominal sum and has saved not a few games. In the main, however, the old staff has carried the brunt of the burden.

It has been said that the Yanks, although leading the league by a big margin, do not play good baseball. They don't have to. They crush their opponents by sheer batting strength. Teams that can hit and have good pitching at the same time don't have to trouble themselves with so-called inside baseball.

When Col. Ruppert counts up his world's series receipts this fall some anxious magnate may remark "how do they do it?"

Ruppert can say in reply that he did it by spending less than $100,000 this season and by paying salaries that keep his men contented.

Rogers Hornsby Says Hitting is All Confidence



WHAM!!!
HORNSBY SAYS HE IS A BETTER HITTER WHEN PITCHER TRIES TO DUST HIM OFF
Al Demaree

BY AL DEMAREE

(Former Pitcher New York Giants)

Rogers Hornsby, the great slugger of the St. Louis Cardinals, tells me it makes him a better hitter when the opposing pitcher tries to intimidate him by dusting him off with a "bean ball" to drive him away from the plate.

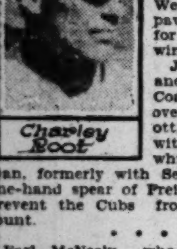
"First of all," says Rogers, "every time the pitcher shoots a ball at your head, he puts himself that much in the hole. If he lets go two balls at your head he has to groove the next one and you are always sure of getting a good ball to hit. Hitting is nine-tenths confidence, anyway, and when the batter knows the pitcher must come through with a ball, it adds to his confidence.

"There is also the extra determination of the batter to consider. He knows the pitcher's idea of throwing at his head is to intimidate him and if he is the right sort he is doubly determined to get even with the opposing hurler by low-bridging him with a base hit."

WHAT THE EX-COASTERS ARE DOING IN THE MAJORS

SUNDAY

In a game that was filled with feats of ex-Coasters, Doug McWeeny, former Seal, bested Charley Root, erstwhile Angel, in a hot mound duel at Brooklyn, the Robins beating the Cubs, 2 to 1. Root allowed but five hits and McWeeny seven, but paved the way for Brooklyn's winning run.



Charley Root

Johnny Butler, another ex-Coaster, drove over Bill Marriott, former Oak, with a single, while Babe Herman, formerly with Seattle, made a one-hand spear of Preigau's drive to prevent the Cubs from tying the count.

Earl McNeely, who went up to Washington from Sacramento, got two hits but the Solons lost to St. Louis, 8 to 7.

"Sheriff" Blake, George Milstead, and Bill Piercy, all ex-Coasters, combined to pitch the Cubs out of their losing streak by turning back Brooklyn, 5 to 4. Piercy got credit for the victory.

Ken Williams, former Beaver, hit his twelfth homer of the season with one on, but the Browns lost to Washington, 14 to 11. Before he was knocked out of the box by the Browns, Dutch Reuther banked for the circuit for Washington.

TUESDAY

Tony Lazzeri's fourteen homers of the year came with two on and played an important part in the Yankees' 7 to 6 victory over the White Sox. "Sloppy" Thurston, former Bee, was driven to cover by the Yankees attack.

Ken Williams clouted his thirteenth circuit swat and the Browns turned tables on Washington by trimming the Senators, 7 to 6.

Paul Waner and George Grantham hit the ball hard for Pittsburgh and helped the Bucs smother the Phillies, 14 to 2. Grantham included a homer in his safeties. Heine Sand, Philly shortstop, who used to play with Salt Lake, also hit for the circuit.

WEDNESDAY

Ernie Nevers, ex-Stanford gridiron star, pitched the Browns to a 3 to 1 victory over the Athletics. It was Nevers's first start. Jack Quinn, veteran spitballer, who used to perform with Vernon, opposed Nevers.

Ken Williams drove out his fourteenth homer and his third circuit clout in three days. Rice was on base and the wallop gave the Browns their winning margin.

Vic Aldridge and Ray Kremer were batted hard by the Braves, who turned in a 14-to-0 win over Pittsburgh in the first game of a double-header. Grantham got two hits but none of the other Pirates could hit with him.

Willie Kamm collected three hits when the Chisox upset the Red Sox, 7 to 2.

HUGGINS HAS HIS WORRIES

Yankees Are Way Out Ahead But Boss is Bothered

Cleveland Indians Causing Pilot to Lose Sleep

Midget Manager Predicted Trouble from Tribe

BY JACK GALLAGHER

"Times" Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—To all appearances one would think that Miller Huggins, diminutive leader of the slugging Yanks, was sitting on top of the world with not a worry on his mind, except which team in the National League will be the softest picking in the post-season classic, the Pirates, the Giants or Rogers Hornsby's Cardinals.

MILLER HUGGINS

The Huggmen have a lead of ten games, a most formidable handicap for any team in the American League to overcome. If they win only half of their remaining games they will finish at the top of the ladder, with room to spare.

Such a feat does not appear difficult to a team that, on paper at least, has so many outstanding strong points. The Yanks are batting .300 as a team; they are fielding well, their pitching staff is a splendid one and their backstops are by no means weak.

HUGGINS WORRIED

Nevertheless, Huggins is worrying aplenty about the American League flag this year. Every assertion he makes about his team is prefaced with "if." Miller is worried about his pitchers and he seems to find his young infield a constant source of grief. His greatest worry, however, is the sudden perking up of the Cleveland Indians, who seem to be taking the junior circuit by storm. Huggins senses the fact that should his team run into any snags, such as a slump, a series of accidents or failure of pitching or fielding, especially at this critical period in the race, his big lead would melt like ice cream in a child's mouth. Washington, Philadelphia and the Indians are lying in wait for his Yankees like packs of hungry wolves. Detroit may be relied upon to do battle to the finish and St. Louis is no longer easy pickings. And he still has another western trip to make after this one.

"The Cleveland Indians are the team we have to beat," said Huggins as he discussed the American League pennant race just before the Yankees left here last week. "I told that to Mark Roth seven weeks ago when we were in Washington. The Athletics still were in second place then and everybody was talking about the A's being the most dangerous and the White Sox having an outside chance. But I picked the Indians and I'll tell you why: Because of their pitching staff. They had shown me some good pitching in Cleveland.

They showed me some more there recently. I was figuring them as they looked at home against the eastern clubs and I told Mark that if they had a good eastern trip what I said went double. They have had a good eastern trip and they are proving to be very hard to beat at home.

"We are going west with a long lead, and some club, the Indians, for instance, will have to go fast to overhaul us even if we play no better than .500 ball for the balance of the season. But don't count us as being in yet. Remember we have to go through the West again and that we must look for rough going in each of the four western cities. While I rate the Indians higher than any of the other clubs in the league except our own I have a lot of respect for the Tigers and the White Sox. The Tigers can hit and when they get good pitching, which they do part of the time, they're very tough customers. The Sox have not looked good here, but they are always dangerous.

HARD TO FIGURE

"As far as our club is concerned, I don't know what to say. This is a hard club to figure. One day we look great and the next we look terrible. It is the pitching we get will decide whether or not we will win the pennant. These fellows can hit. The outfield is good and now that we have Severeid the catching staff is all right. But we've got a young infield. If the pitching stands up everything will be all right. If the pitching breaks down and the burden is thrown on the young infield we shall have to see what will happen. I think these kids of mine will stand up, but I don't know for sure whether they will or not for the simple reason that they haven't been put to the test.

"These young infielders have a lot of mechanical skill, but for the most part their major league experience has been very limited and too much must not be asked of them yet.

"We'll have to fight every step of the way for the flag if we get it, but we can do that."

GUY COOPER WILL MANAGE OGDEN CLUB

Guy Cooper, prominent in Sawtelle baseball for a lengthy period, has left Lincoln, of the Western League, to manage Ogden, of the same circuit, according to advices received locally. In five starts in the box, Cooper has won as many games, reports said.

Since Cooper joined Ogden the club is playing better ball. Aside from his managerial and pitching talents, Cooper has a strong wallop at the plate.

THE RUBE'S A RIOT - - - - - - - - By Feg Murray

The surprising rise of "Rube" Bressler to top place among the National League batters after ten years of hit-and-miss work as a pitcher, outfielder, and first baseman has few, if any, parallels in major league history. That this utility man, this old-timer hanging on by the skin of his teeth and the grace of Jack Hendricks, should suddenly blossom forth into a Hornsby is most astonishing. When "Rube" was smacked in the ribs, about July 4, last he was batting .371 in sixty-three games.

Raymond Bloom Bressler, like Babe Ruth, George Sisler, Bib Falk, Charley Jamieson, and other batting stars, started out as a left-handed pitcher. Unlike them, however, the "Rube" bats right-handed. To prove that is not just a flash in the pan, or a "Raymond who Blooms" only when the Hornsbys and Bottomleys are slumping, Bressler will remind you that he hit .347 in 1924 and one point higher than that last year.

The Cincinnati team missed "Rube" a lot, just as Detroit missed its hard-hitting catcher with the name like Bressler, Johnny Bassler, who, curiously enough, was also out with a cracked rib. What with Lucas and Luque, May and Mays, and Donohue and Rixey for mound duty, and this ex-pitcher and utility first-baseman and outfielder leading the league in batting, Porkville fans began to think that there was a reason for this team leading the league, after all, and, what's more, they began to talk of a pennant.

The "Rube" was born in Brookville, Pa., and will be thirty-two in October. When he was twenty-two he was playing with Atlanta, and then finished the season with the Reds under a special agreement. If Bressler continues to hit as he did before he was injured, five other National League clubs, all of whom have a chance to finish first, would like to make a special agreement that he finish this season with Atlanta.

DELANEY HAS GREAT RECORD OF FIGHTS

Jack Delaney, 26 years of age, the new world's light-heavyweight champion, began professional fighting in 1919. His real name is Ovilla Chapelaine, and he is a French-Canadian. In sixty-five matches, Delaney won twenty-eight by knockouts, twenty-seven by decision, lost two decisions, was knocked out twice, had three no-decision fights and one bout was declared no-contest. During his ring career he has earned about $300,000.

DETROITER WINS AND SETS WORLD RECORD

"Detroiter," the big gas balloon, won the Elks' national balloon race and is believed to have broken a world's record for distance covered when it landed at Jennings, Fla., 854 miles in an airline from Chicago, Ill., the starting point. The prize consisted of $1000 and a loving cup.

SPIDER BAUM HURLED IN MANY OF LEAGUE'S LONGEST GAMES

BY LEO MORIARTY

One of the most remarkable of all Coast League games was played at Oakland on the morning of June 4, 1916. Oakland and San Francisco played eighteen innings with Oakland the victor by a score of 1 to 0. The game came to a close in the last minute of the time limit of two hours and thirty minutes. There probably never has been a game played on the Coast where the brand of baseball was better or where two pitchers have more calmly withstood the strain that was encountered in that famous battle.

"SPIDER" BAUM

Charlie Baum twirled the full eighteen innings for San Francisco. Bill Prough worked seventeen innings for Oakland and was taken out for a pinch hitter. He was forced to stand by while the victory was chalked up to Sammy Beer, who worked just one inning.

With no possible chance to continue the game beyond the eighteenth inning Dutch Klawitter was sent in to bat for Doc Cook, the centerfielder. A stone hidden somewhere in the grass in front of Jack Coffey gave to Klawitter a bouncing single over the shortstop's head and to Davis the one run of the long contest.

SCORE TIED, 0-0

At the end of the seventeenth inning with the score 0 to 0 and a bare four minutes remaining the umpires and rival managers decided to go on for one more inning.

The Seals were quickly retired. Bobby Davis, first man up for the Oaks, drew the one walk that Charlie Baum issued in eighteen innings. Billy Lane sacrificed on a grounder to Baum. Klawitter, batting for Cook, hit the ball straight at short. Coffey stood waiting to field the ball and then watched it strike a pebble and bound high over his head. Davis easily scored from second base.

Of all the players who participated in that very famous game of ten seasons ago the only one still to remain in the Coast League is Billy Lane, now a member of Wade Killifer's Seattle Indians.

Charlie "Spider" Baum was the hero of many other famous games during his long career in the Coast League. The real old-time fans probably will recall a thirteen-inning, 1-to-0 game played between Portland and Los Angeles back twenty years ago. Charlie Baum was the Los Angeles pitcher in this game. Bill Essick, for years manager of the Vernon Tigers, and now scout for the New York Yankees, was the Portland hurler. These two twirlers each allowed only five safe hits and Kitty Brashear, Los Angeles shortstop, was the only player to secure an extra-base hit.

Capt. Tim Flood of the Looloos, as the Angels were called in those days, lost the game for his team. With two outs he fumbled, allowing Cook to reach first base. McLean and Hoffman followed with singles, scoring the only run.

SLATS DAVIS UMPIRED

"Slats" Davis umpired this game singlehanded. Davis has returned to the Coast League after an absence of many years. Score:

Baum for Sacramento and Stewart for San Francisco pitched eighteen innings to a 1-to-1 score just sixteen years ago this month. Sacramento scored its one run in the second inning, while San Francisco put over its lone marker in the seventh. No substitutions were made in the line-ups of either club during the eighteen innings.

Oscar Vitt, now manager of the Hollywood club, was then a rookie and played third base for San Francisco. "Ping" Bodie, just blossoming out as a home-run hitter, was in left field. Van Buren played first base for Sacramento and batted .238. He was rated a heavy hitter. George (Rip) Van Haltren, one of the very firstof California's list of great baseball stars, had rounded out a long career in the majors and had returned to his native State to umpire in the Coast League.

Just two pitchers twirled in that remarkable twenty-one inning game played between Sacramento and Los Angeles on September 15, 1911. They were "Spider" Baum for Sacramento and Jack Halla for Los Angeles. The contest lasted over three hours and was called on account of darkness, with the score 4 to 4. In this game Baum allowed just ten hits, hit three batsmen and issued two passes. Four of the Angels' hits and three of their four runs came in the first inning. Baum's pitching then took on wizard-like tendencies. During the final seventeen innings Baum held his opponents runless. Thirteen of these innings were of the hitless variety.

VAN BUREN TIED SCORE

Van Buren's single in the eighth scored two runs for Sacramento, thereby tying up the game.

Sacramento used but nine men during the twenty-one innings. Los Angeles sent in Ivan Howard, now the manager of the Oakland club, to hit for Lober in the seventeenth and that was the only change in the original Los Angeles line-up.

YANK FANS CONFIDENT, MAKE WORLD SERIES APPLICATIONS

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Hundreds of applications for world series tickets have been made to the New York office of the Yankees, according to Ed Barrow, business manager of the club. The first applications, according to Barrow, came more than a month ago and were accompanied by certified checks.

Following the usual custom the club refused to accept any applications until it is mathematically certain that the Yankees will win the American League pennant and participate in the series.

New York hotel managers said they were "booked up for the rest of the season" and explained they had no way of telling what reservations in early October were being made by world series fans.

BREWER STARS SOLD TO M'GRAW

Orwell and McMenemey Bought from Milwaukee; Pair Join Giants September 1

NEW YORK, Aug. 8. (Exclusive)—The recent scouting trip made by John McGraw through the territory of the American Association was not in vain. On September 1 there will report to the Giants "Orry" Orwell, ablest pitcher on the staff of the Milwaukee club, and his battery mate, McMenemey. For these players McGraw will send Chick Davies, Andy Cohen and Paul Florence to the brewers.

Orwell used to be an outfielder. He is a good one, too, but he wanted to pitch and when he got the opportunity he proved he had plenty. McMenemey is rated the best catcher in the association and ranks right up with the leaders as a hitter. Davies, Cohen and Florence are only part payment. It is reported a lot of cash will go with them. Otto Borchet has had many offers for his star this season and is understood to have driven a hard bargain.

By purchasing McMenemey, McGraw is making partial provision for the expected retirement of Pancho Snyder.

SISLER TO BE TRADED BY BROWNS

Macks, Solons Seek Star, Rumor Has It; Moriarty May Pilot St. Louis

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—The impression prevails here that George Sisler will play first base for the Senators next season. Philadelphia, too, has hinted that the deal by which the Athletics got Jacobson for Miller was not the last that Connie Mack expects to put through with the Browns, and, further, Sisler is a possibility because the Athletics have just as good trading material as have the Senators.

GEORGE SISLER

None will deny that Sisler will not manage the Browns next season. When he was urged by friends to resign he declared emphatically he would not quit until he was fired, and if fired he would never play another game for the St. Louis team.

Washington is willing to bid as high as any other team for him. Mack will match any one bid for a player he thinks will help his team. He admits he wants to make a change at first and has his son, Earl, looking over First Baseman Kelly of Buffalo, who has made thirty-odd home runs this season.

Mack is not telling his plans, and Griffith is equally silent. Phil Ball, owner of the Browns, is not saying anything either, but it is known he would like to get George Moriarty to boss his outfit, and failing to land the arbitrator to run his club, he possibly would consider Roger Peckinpaugh.

Among the rumors heard here about the proposed deal for Sisler is one that includes Goose Goslin, Joe Judge, and Peckinpaugh. Judge would be an ideal man for the Browns, but whether Washington would toss in Goslin remains to be seen.

LAWSON WINS BOUT

SANTA ROSA (Cal.) Aug. 7. (AP) Johnny Lawson, San Francisco lightweight, won a popular ten-round decision over Jimmie McCann, Cleveland, in the main event of the Santa Rosa Athletic Club card here Friday night. Jean Coulon, San Francisco, lost a decision to Butch Marinioni, Petaluma, in the six-round semi-windup.

ANGELS RETURN TO FACE SEALS

First and Last Clubs Open Series on Wednesday

Seraphs Hope to Pick Up on Solons-Oaks Tangle

Hollywood and Missions in Bay City Struggles

After what can hardly be termed a highly successful road trip, Krug and his band of league-leading Angels will come home Wednesday to open a series of seven with Nick Williams's Seals guarding From San Francisco. With little home ing under their belts, the Angels should and hit their stride once for the not the year.

NICK WILLIAMS

The Seraphs will be home for the series and should pick up quite a bit of ground in the chase for the bunting, for while they are battling the Seals and Mission Monks at Wrigley Field, their nearest contenders, the Oaks and Solons, will be cutting each other's throats for the next two weeks in Oakland and then Sacramento. The schedule for the next two weeks is a break in favor of the Seraphs for those two series ought to put either the Senators or Acorns out of the running. If the Seals and Oaks break fairly even in their fourteen games, that ought to be so much better for the Angels, who should pick up more ground on the two nearest contenders.

Skipper Krug, from now on, is going to play simply to prevent the opposition from making any clean sweeps on him. Krug announces that he will gamble at least two games a series with his weakest hurlers in order to give his mainstays a day's rest when they need it. Krug intends to shoot good pitching against the opposition in at least four of the seven games and will take a chance on two of the contests to do so. The Angel doesn't believe in overworking his pitchers and will give them all the rest coming to them even if he has to lose a game or two doing so.

If for no other reason, the Seals will be a welcome attraction here because they will bring the Great Mails with them. The Great Mails always gives the fans their money's worth whether it's pitching or kidding. On his last visit here Duster engaged in fisticuffs with Mickey Finn of the Missions and split four mound duels with Jim Elliott so he is probably more chesty than ever. It will be Mails's first appearance against the Angels, who are pretty well fortified against southpaws.

While the Angels and Seals are performing in their first vs. last series down here, Oscar Vitt's Hollywood Stars will be up in San Francisco tackling Walter Schmidt's Mission Monks. After meeting the Monks the Stars will stay over in the Bay City another week to take on the Seals. The Stars should get well acquainted with the San Francisco fans before their two-weeks' stay is over.

The other series on this week brings together Portland and Seattle on the Indian's home lot. This looks like a tough series with nothing at stake. The Wednesday game will be played in Vancouver, so the Seattle fans will not be bored by all seven of the contests.

Autos in Pikes Peak Climb on September 16

COLORADO SPRINGS (Colo.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The eighth annual Pikes Peak hill climb race will be held as usual this year on Labor Day. This contest which has become a classic in American sporting events is undoubtedly the most spectacular event in the racing world: It is run over the famous automobile highway to the summit of Pikes Peak starting at Crystal Creek between mile post 5 and 6 and finishing on the extreme tip-top point of the Peak, 14,109 feet above sea level, a distance of twelve miles plus 2200 feet with an average grade of 7 per cent and a maximum grade of 10½ per cent and notwithstanding the fact that the road is a continuous succession of curves around precipitous mountain sides, it is one of the finest roadways in the world.

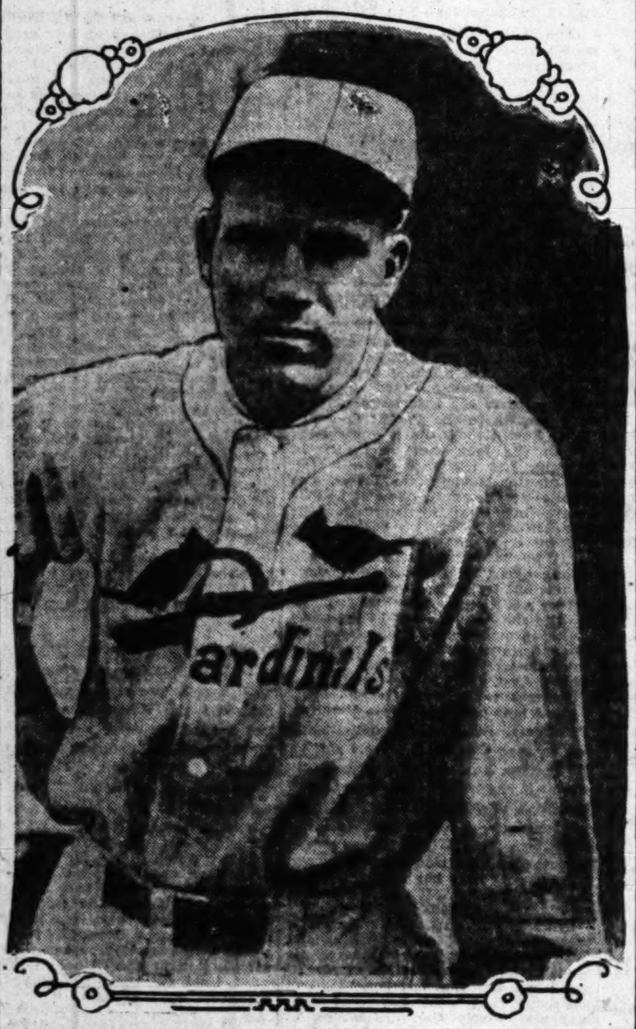
URY LEADS MERCHANTS OUT TO BATTLE TODAY

While the Pacific Electric had its ups and downs during the greater portion of the Major Summer League, the clouds have a silver lining; Loren Toy's Pasadena Merchants will play host to the Electric aggregation Sunday at Brookside Park, and in line with past endeavors Charlie Hill wants another victory. While these well-known teams are very evenly matched, Hill feels that another victory would not come amiss, and is prepared to repeat past performances. Either Roy Duncan or Gus McIsaacs will pitch for the Railroaders, with Ralph McClain behind the bat, while Lefty Smith will be on the mound for the Merchants, and Rennie catching.

TAKES HORNSBY'S PLACE

Have a look at Lester Bell, hard-hitting third-sacker of the Cardinals who is now topping the St. Louis outfit in hitting. Hornsby, who generally clouts around .400, hasn't been hitting as he did in the past five seasons, but Bell's terrific clubbing is partially making up for "Rajah's" deficiency.



CUYLER TOPS RUN MAKERS

Pirate Outfielder Slugs Way Back Up to Challenge National League Leaders for Honors

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Long noted as a speedy base runner, Hazen Cuyler of the Pirates took the lead this week in runs scored in the National League this season, and did it with his bat instead of his spiked shoes. Climbing back into the leading ten hitters of the National League, Cuyler scored eight runs on eleven hits in the last six games and his blows included a homer, a double and a triple. His total of twenty-two stolen bases is still high mark. Cuyler has scored seventy-seven times.

George Grantham of the Pirates, moved back into third place, in the first ten and the Pirates generally enjoyed the best hitting of the week in the National League.

HACK WILSON

Hack Wilson of the Cubs and Jim Bottomley of the Cardinals, continued their neck-and-neck race for home-run honors of the league, adding one each to reach fifteen.

Lee Meadows of the Pirates moved into second place among the pitchers in games won, with fourteen victories, one less than Pete Donohue of the Reds. Donohue was credited with one defeat this week, making his record fifteen won and ten lost. He is far in the lead in the league in innings pitched with the equivalent of twenty-two games.

Hunnefeld of the Chicago White Sox and Ed Rice of Washington each added a stolen base this week and are still tied at seventeen.

Tribe Splits Double-header With Solons

CLEVELAND, Aug. 7. (AP)—Cleveland divided honors with Washington today, winning the first game of a double-header, 8 to 5, and losing the second, 9 to 2. In the second contest, when the score was 9 to 0, Manager Speaker took all of his regulars off the field and the second stringers played better than the originals, holding Washington to no runs during the last five innings. They were unable, however, to bunch their hits, and Coveleskie breezed through the last half of the game as easily as the first.

Joe Shaute outpitched Alvin Crowder in the first game, in which Jamieson of the Indians made fixe singles in five times up. Scores:

ENGLISH TRIM CANADIANS

The English association football eleven recently beat the best Canadian teams in matches played throughout the Dominion of Canada. They won in all twenty games in seven weeks play, rolling up 105 goal to opponents' 18. Lack of cohesion and understanding were the chief faults they found in the Canadian team's work.

CARDINALS IN SPURT TO TOP

Vance Routed by Hornsbymen in Opener, 6 to 3

Alexander Blanks Brooklyn in Second, 3 to 0

Cubs Take Fourth Straight from Phillies, 6-5

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) Aug. 7. (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals climbed closer to the National League leaders today by a double victory over Brooklyn, 6 to 3, and 3 to 0, making it five straight over the Robins.

Rogers Hornsby

Dazzy Vance, making his first start in almost two weeks, was ineffective and wild in the opening game.

Alexander twirled the shutout in the final struggle, allowing but four hits, and did not walk a batter.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7. (AP)—The Chicago Cubs made a clean sweep of the series with the Phillies by taking the fourth game today, 6-5. Barfoot and Oeschger Lose to Oakland Crew

Jimmy Reese Hits Home Run to Open Contest

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Harry Krause, Oakland's veteran southpaw, blanked the Missions, 3-0, today. Clyde Barfoot, who started for the San Francisco club, lasted until the eighth when he on the offerings was yanked after one tally had been scored off of him. The Oaks rallied, however, to push over two more runs of Joe Oeschger, who took up the mound burden.

HARRY KRAUSE

Jimmy Reese, the Oaks' second-sacker, contributed a home run when he hit the first ball pitched in the opening inning out of the lot. Score:

Joe Edwards held the Athletics to four scattered hits in the nightcap and won over Ed Rommel. The Chisox scored the only run of the hurling battle in the seventh. Scores:

Seraph Medicine Man Scores Tenth Straight Win

Cherubs Make All Six Runs in Big Fourth Inning

SEATTLE, Aug. 7. — Wayne "Doc" Wright, the leading pitcher of the Coast League, turned in his tenth straight victory here today when he hurled the league-leading Angels to a 6-to-4 win over Seattle. Wright was touched for twelve hits, but he kept them fairly well scattered and was given bang-up support by his mates.

DOC WRIGHT

The Seraphs won the contest in the fourth inning when they drove John Miljus to the showers with a six-run onslaught. Five hits, including a couple for extra bases, were registered by the Angels in the big inning and a walk and a couple of errors helped the visitors along.

"Lefty" Peters relieved Miljus after the fourth and blanked the Seraphs the rest of the way, but the damage had already been done. The Angel win tied up the series, three games to three. Score:

Concentrated Effort Takes Place of Long Hours of Coach Jones' Program for Trojans

COACH CHANGES GRID PRACTICE

Football Players Need Lots of Sleep, Says Mentor

Short Workouts, But Everyone on Deck, Demanded

Newer Ideas Supplant Older Methods of Training

HOWARD JONES

Concentrated work with no overtime efforts on the part of his football men is the keynote of the system Coach Howard Jones employs in developing his squad at the University of Southern California, according to the Trojan mentor himself. The Southern California coach is not a believer in the old-time plan of running each practice session from an early afternoon hour until after dusk and the use of blackboard talks night after night.

Approximately ten hours of practice, including something like six hours of actual scrimmaging, are undergone by the Trojan pigskinners prior to each game on the schedule. Jones calls his men to practice at 4 o'clock each afternoon. After a half-hour of punting, passing and line work, scrimmage starts and continues until between 5:30 and 6 o'clock. That ends the daily work under Jones's system.

"Men can become stale through excessive mental work as quickly as, if not quicker than, by physical overexertion," Coach Jones says. "Last year I never gave the men a blackboard talk. This fall, I intend to do some early afternoon work around the blackboard, more for the benefit of the sophomores than the others for my old men already know my system. I have known coaches to take their men from training table right to a skull-practice session which lasted until 9 o'clock. I went through that myself at Yale.

"Why put your men to sleep with this stuff after they've gone through an afternoon's work? Send them to bed, where they will get more benefit."

The one thing Jones demands of his men is attendance at every practice throughout the season.

"Coaches are continually making changes in play or perfecting fakes," says Jones, "and the men must be on hand. Last season I came to practice with a definite plan worked out for a trick play, depending on one particular man. He wasn't there that day, but there wasn't a night after that when he wasn't on the field."

NO TIRESOME PRACTICE

The famous fundamentals which gridsters have always chalked off as being the most irksome part of practice, are not on the Jones system. He doesn't use tackling practice with the dummy, falling on the ball or setting-up exercises.

"In my collegiate gridiron career my coaches used to throw the ball along the ground and yell 'go get it'," says Jones. "Gosh, how a man hates to go wrap himself around that leather. I don't ask my men to do it because I feel that even among high school players when the occasion comes for a man to cover a loose ball he will do it correctly by natural instinct. The things he is taught through long hours of dropping on the ball won't aid him in the tension of the actual crisis."

Coach Jones doesn't believe a man can learn how to bring down a ball-carrier by grappling with a dummy.

"A runner isn't standing still," he says. "Besides, when a man tackles a dummy, he likes to leave his feet at the edge of the pit and sail through the air. If he would do that on the playing field the runner would be gone. My men are taught to get up close, but not too close, to the runner, before making the tackle. Even then, he wants to have his feet on the ground to keep charging.

"No real athlete needs setting-up exercises. The men don't like to do them, either. The one thing they should cultivate is shiftiness and if I had charge of my men all the year around I'd put my heavy linemen, such as Gorrell and Friend, to boxing as much as possible. It is the footwork they need more than arms upward, sideward, downward and the like."

SCRIMMAGE TEACHES GAME

Coach Jones doesn't use signal practice where a team goes trotting up and down the field for an hour at a time, running through plays. He says they do not learn football that way. "Let them learn it at scrimmage," Jones says.

A firm believer in protecting his men at all times, Jones does not favor the fancy type of playing, such as the rolling interference, where the legs are whipped about or the tackle into a man's knees.

"Legs are a man's biggest asset in football," Coach Jones believes. "If those legs are thrown into a man either for interference or to spill interference, the man is in danger of a Charley horse, and then of what use is he?"

Speed, shiftiness and the natural ability to keep the eyes always looking head, are the three attributes of an ideal ball carrier, Jones believes. The most important of these is the latter, he says. The man who lowers his head and charges into the line or over the forewall is "out" under Jones's system.

All of which indicates that Coach Jones's mind is now well centered on the coming football season. The Southern California mentor's first appearance with his men will be on Bovard Field September 15, next. Incidentally, when practice starts the Trojans will have two completed gridirons on which to work, grass having been planted on the new portion of the field, which doubled the size of Bovard Field, when recent alterations were started.

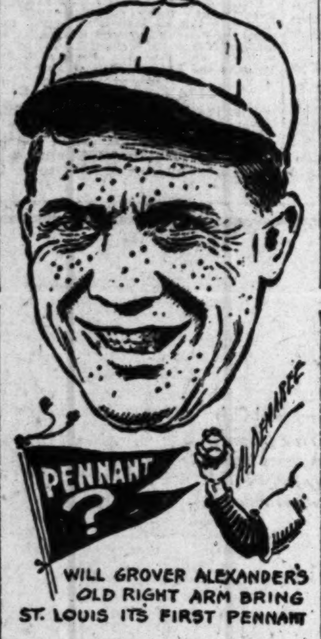
Alexander May Aid Cardinals Get First Flag

BY AL DEMAREE

(Former Pitcher, New York Giants)

When Grover Alexander, one of the greatest pitchers who ever shook off a catcher's sign, was sent to St. Louis for the waiver price by the Chicago Cubs, I thought he was through.

After "Alex" had hurt his arm he became embroiled with the Cub management in some argument concerning club rules and waivers were asked. I couldn't imagine fifteen clubs waiving on such a pitcher unless they absolutely knew his arm was completely gone.



PENNANT

Al Demaree
WILL GROVER ALEXANDER'S OLD RIGHT ARM BRING ST. LOUIS ITS FIRST PENNANT

The Cardinals were wise enough to claim him and since then he has pitched good-enough games to show the judgment of Rogers Hornsby and Bill Killefer.

"Big Pete" was the biggest single factor in bringing the Phillies their first and only pennant in the history of professional baseball in 1915, and if history repeats itself this year he will pitch the St. Louis Cardinals to their first flag.

And what a lot of "second guessing" there will be if he does.

Plestina's Mat Challenge Yet to be Accepted

John DePalma believes he pulled a faux pas when he announced last week that Marin Plestina would meet an opponent at Vernon on the 17th inst. Since that announcement, heavyweight wrestlers have been hard to find, according to the promoter, and it was not until last night that John was able to get a line on a possible match for the "Tarzan of the Mat."

As soon as Plestina came out with his sensational challenge to Lutze, Londos, Podubbny, Kotsonaros and Gardini and Wladek Zbyszko, those grapplers, as well as all the other leading heavyweights hereabouts stuffed their ears with cotton and if their silence means anything, they haven't yet heard the challenge.

Saturday night, DePalma proposed Bill Demetral as an opponent and the Greek champion, while not extremely anxious to meet the big European, asserted if satisfactory terms could be made, he would take the match. Whether or not DePalma can meet what Demetral calls "satisfactory terms," has not yet been determined, but the promoter is doing all he can to make some arrangements.

Do not forget the State tournament which will start in the local clubrooms on September 6. D. C. Whitehill has been appointed official referee and all contestants can feel assured of receiving fair and impartial treatment.

All who have not paid their $1.00 dues to the California State Checker Association since the last tournament should do so at once. Send your dollar to the secretary, J. L. Wilson, 4816 Eleventh avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

The local players have very nice clubrooms at 921 Union League Building, corner of Second and Hill streets, and all chess and checker players in the city should avail themselves of the opportunity of joining. The dues are $12 per year, payable quarterly in advance.

Weekly Health Talk

by Barclay L. Severns

LET GOOD ENOUGH ALONE

Most of us are apt to be satisfied with our physical condition, if we are able to go to business every day. We are, no doubt, far below par the greater part of the time; but we won't admit that we are sick because we are not bedridden. We are apt to console ourselves with the thought, or common expression, "let good enough alone."

Many persons have suffered a breakdown at the time of life when they should have been at their best, just because they were willing to let good enough alone for a few years previous.

One who is enjoying the best of health may be breaking the laws of nature, but owing to that superb health will not notice any ill effects for the time being; but later on must inevitably pay the penalty with poor health.

Many persons change their diet, and feel certain they have struck the keynote to health; but through lack of knowledge of the scientific principles of food combinations—chemical actions on certain foods—the necessity of certain foods over other foods, according to one's occupation, have made little progress toward the end to which they hoped to gain.

One will read an article on conserving one's energy; and after a careful study of same, decided to form new habits in their everyday life, so as to correct the mistakes they have previously made; and say to themselves, "now I have the thing at last which will give me pep." But through ignorance, are wasting more energy in another direction. There are more ways than one to waste energy. It is also very important to understand the principles of recharging the body with new energy daily. It is true one should learn to conserve energy—it is also true that one should understand the natural method of supplying energy, and by so doing keep a reserve force on hand. Then know how to use that energy in a way that the body will respond in the right way at the right time. There are those who have an abundance of energy, but do not know how to control it; and by wrong usage waste unnecessarily energy that should be put to better use.

OLYMPIC CHIEF LAUDS FRANCE

Garland Refutes Rumors of French Discourtesy

International Games to be Here in 1932

Plan Additional Airplane Facilities Soon

DEL MONTE, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—William May Garland of Los Angeles and Pebble Beach, member of the International Olympic committee, today told directors of the California Development Association, meeting at Del Monte, that the real spirit of the people of France was never more friendly to America than at present. He has just returned from an extended tour of Europe.

"There are now upward of 300,000 Americans in France," he said. "During my stay I was made to feel that we as a class were welcome and that the French people had a deep sense of gratitude toward American people and the American government for the part we played in the World War.

"There is no doubt as to the agitation of the French people due to the fluctuation of the franc, but this has in no way turned the people of France against America or Americans."

Garland stated that final plans for holding the 1932 Olympic Games in California had been reached during the trip abroad. He added that plans were now being formulated to make this event as great a success as was the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

The need of the adequate airplane landing fields was pressed by R. E. Fisher, Chairman of the aeronautical committee of the organization. Paul Baily, State engineer, discussed the water situation in California and gave data relating to the redistribution of water through California.

HOOVER WINS SINGLE SCULLS CHAMPIONSHIP

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7. (AP)—Walter M. Hoover of the Undine Boat Club, Philadelphia, repeated his 1925 triumph today when he won the championship single sculls, feature event of the fifty-fourth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen on the Schuylkill River. The time was 7:36 4-5.

YACHTING COMES FIRST AND APPENDIX AFTERWARDS, SAYS COMMODORE B. REY SCHAUER

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—You can't hold a good man down. So goes an old saying that still holds true despite its age. It might apply to any of a hundred men, but in this particular instance it applies to a corinthian, yachtsman, sportsman, and good fellow—Commodore B. Rey Schauer of the Southern California Yachting Association.

B. REY SCHAUER

Commodore Schauer made the statement early in the yachting season that he was going back on Long Island Sound the first week in September in hopes of bringing back the International Star sloop regatta to the Pacific Coast in 1927. Furthermore, he is going back despite the fact that immediately following the last race he will step out of the Movie Star II into the hospital for a serious operation. Evidently intestinal fortitude can be found in other sports besides the gridiron and the ring.

A back talking appendix is a dangerous proposition at any time, but trying to hang on to the tiller of a quivering Star boat, while she bounces and bangs her way through choppy seas, is not only painful but dangerous. Still Commodore said he was going back East and that seems to be the end to it even though his physicians urge him to stay home.

However, his doctors advised him not to race the Movie Star I during the regatta, but he did, and not only retained the Santa Barbara Lipton Trophy, but showed all the boys his transom after a series of brilliant races. The Movie Star is one of the neatest Star class sloops on the coast, but Schauer sold her and will bring the Movie Star II back from the East after the International classic.

Schauer was enthusiastic over the prospect of once more racing the world's best Star boat skippers. He lauded the eastern spirit of corinthianship, the fine sportsmanship of the boys that went East last year, and particularly the fine sailing of Joe Jessup and the Windward.

With modesty that was not in the least put on, Commodore Schauer explained that his finishing third out of fifteen fleet champions was only luck and that the Windward's finishing ninth was not Joe's fault. The freaky waters and variable winds made each day's race more or less of a toss-up.

This year Southern California will be represented by four crews. B. Rey Schauer's Movie Star II will fly the Los Angeles Harbor fleet flag; Walton Hubbard, eighteen-year-old skipper, is taking the Tempe back under the Newport Harbor Yacht Club flag; Commodore Thompson is sending a crew back to race for the San Diego Yacht Club, and Harry Fisher may take the Dona Bertha back.

With that aggregation of leading skippers, Southern California may be able to snatch the regatta for next year, and it would be the big event of the year. If Joe Jessup goes back for the San Diego club, the combination of Schauer and Jessup should be a hard pair to beat. Hubbard is rather young and much cannot be expected of him. The Dona Bertha should go good in the heavy weather usually met on the East Coast.

No matter how the West Coast boys finish, they are going back East to battle against big odds, and they will be fighting all the time to carry the message of Southern California Corinthians to the East. As the popular Star class is the biggest one design class in Southern California, the skippers plan to give the boys a big send-off.

CHANCE SHOT WINS SARATOGA SPECIAL

SARATOGA SPRINGS (N. Y.) Aug. 7. (AP)—J. E. Widener's Chance Shot, with Earl Sande in the saddle, today captured the Saratoga special, valued at $15,750, after a terrific finish with Mrs. W. M. Jefford's Scapa Flow. The winner's stablemate, Osmand, was third and W. S. Kilmer's Sun Forward, fourth.

The race was the feature of today's Saratoga card and provided the most thrilling finish of the meeting so far. The first three horses were heads apart at the wire. Chance Shot came up with a rush in the stretch after Scapa Flow had tired from the swift early pace set by Osmand.

The race was for 2-year-olds and attracted a field of nine. The winner's time for the six furlongs was 1:13.

LOS ANGELES SETS TWO WORLD RECORDS FOR RATE OF GROWTH

THIS CITY ADDS MORE PEOPLE YEARLY THAN DOES NEW YORK

Outstrips All Other Large Cities Both in Numerical Increase and Percentage Ratio, State Controller Shows; South Runs Away From North

BY CHARLES SLOAN

Los Angeles has not only set and maintained a record as the fastest-growing major city of the United States—which means the world—for the past 56 years, but it is now showing a greater annual numerical increase in population than any other city and greater than those of Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and San Francisco combined, according to statistics recently made public by the California State Controller.

Comparison of these figures with a survey of Census Bureau reports and latest obtainable official and unofficial estimates from eastern cities above the half-million mark, shows that, if present rates of growth of the respective cities continue, Los Angeles will be the fourth city in size in the country in 1930, will pass Philadelphia in 1938, Chicago in 1945 and that eventually Southern California will become the most thickly settled territory on earth.

Among the revelations made by the statistics gathered by State Controller Riley are these:

WHAT FIGURES SHOW

That Los Angeles alone is increasing in actual number of people—more than three times as fast as the seven leading cities of the north half of the State—San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose and Alameda.

That for fifty-six years Los Angeles has averaged an increase of [illegible] per cent in population every decade, with Detroit running second with a percentage of 62.85; Cleveland third with a percentage of 45.31; Chicago fourth with a percentage of [illegible] and New York fifth, with a percentage of 38.885.

That if only the same number of new residents arrive to make their homes in Los Angeles each year as have been averaging annually for the past sixteen years, Los Angeles in [illegible] will have a population of [illegible], in 1975 a population of [illegible], in the year 2000 a total of [illegible], and that if her amazing average of 177.35 per-cent increase each decade is maintained as her population mounts, she will have in [illegible] a total of 4,753,522 persons and in 1950 a total of 13,167,-[illegible].

That [illegible] new residents are being added each year to the combined populations of Los Angeles, Long Beach, Glendale, San Diego, Pasadena, Santa Monica and Santa Barbara, the leading cities of the Southland, as against a total of only 40,230 to the cities of San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose and Alameda.

That Long Beach alone is growing faster in actual number of new people added each year than Buffalo, Pittsburgh and St. Louis combined and that the growth of Glendale is eclipsing the combined cities of St. Louis and Buffalo.

That since 1910 the city of Glendale has doubled its population every twenty-two months—with the astounding average percentage of 536.5 every ten years; and that Long Beach, since 1890, has been increasing at the rate of 251.65 per cent every decade—or doubling its population almost every four years.

THE TABULATION

In the accompanying tabulated statement, which contains a summary of Census Bureau returns, estimates from the State Controller's office as to California, and the best obtainable estimates concerning other cities, the story of the rise of Southern California is perhaps better told than in any other presentation heretofore.

This statement is roughly divided into two groups; the first dealing with cities which showed a total population in excess of 500,000 by the 1920 census and including Los Angeles and San Francisco, and the second giving figures and percentages of increases on the seventeen largest California cities, excluding the two principal ones.

In the first group the record made by Los Angeles over the period of years is readily apparent. Its growth from a population of 11,183 in 1880 to the State Controller's estimate of 1,260 315 for 1926, is not even approached by any other city. In examination of these figures it may be noted that when Los Angeles had 11,183 people, San Francisco had 233,959 Boston had 362,839, Baltimore 332,313 and St. Louis, 350,518 at the same time. All of these cities have now been passed by Los Angeles.

DETROIT SECOND

Detroit, with a growth of from 116,340 in 1880 to a present estimated population of 1,310,425, shows the second greatest increase over the same period of time, with Cleveland running third and Chicago, fourth.

In three separate decades, it is shown, Los Angeles has recorded a greater percentage of gain than has been granted to any other major city over a similar period—350.6 per cent from 1880 to 1890, 211.5 per cent from 1900 to 1910, and 118.5 per cent from 1920 to 1926. New York City made the nearest approach to this record with her gain of 126.83 per cent from 1890 to 1900, with Pittsburgh running second with her increase of 119.9 per cent from 1880 to 1890, and Chicago's growth of 118.53 per cent over the same ten years' placing third.

The record for the greatest gain in actual number of people has remained with New York for the whole period since 1900, for in the ten years previous to that time the eastern metropolis added 1,921,901 persons to her total of residents. But Los Angeles, if her present rate of increase holds good until 1930, will almost equal that record with an estimated ten-year gain of 1,139,400—a figure never approached by any other city save New York. The present annual numerical growth of Los Angeles is much larger than New York's.

That the 1930 census returns will reveal an interesting change in the respective alignment of the major cities is also predicted through this survey. In the 1920 census the cities, grouped in relation to their population, stod in this order: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, Buffalo, and San Francisco.

If the 1930 census verifies the present estimates Los Angeles will have moved from tenth to fourth place, Baltimore will have moved above St. Louis, and Boston and San Francisco will have eclipsed Pittsburgh and Buffalo—the new alignment being: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Baltimore, St. Louis, Boston, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, and Buffalo.

The survey shows St. Louis and Philadelphia to be the most conservative of all cities in matters of growth St. Louis averaging but 17.345 per cent increase per decade, and Philadelphia only 18.13 per cent. Baltimore, however, holds the record for the smallest percentage gain over a ten-year period, that of 9.73 per cent from 1900 to 1910.

IN CALIFORNIA

The statistical estimates of the State Controller as to the relative growth of California cities are equally interesting, for they form a definite landmark in the straight forward march of the Southland.

For the first time, in fact, definite figures are offered to show that the southern half of the State has actually outstripped the older northern half in the race for settlers. Taking, for instance, the six cities of San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda and San Jose as representative of the north half of the State and the six cities of Los Angeles, Glendale, Long Beach, Sar Diego, Santa Ana and Santa Monica as representatives of the south half, we find that in 1890 the total population of the northerners was 422,815 as against 72,326 in the south; in 1910, 507,708 in the north as against 130,419 in the southern group; in 1910, 727,789 as against 395,607; in 1920, 953,625 as against 751,222 and in the present estimates the northerners are able only to show 1,201,054 whereas the southern group roll up a total of 1,626,990. It might also be noted that the State Controller's estimate of the population of Los Angeles is now 1,260,315, more than the combined totals of the six northern cities grouped in the beginning of this paragraph.

LONG BEACH RECORD

The greatest percentage increase over a ten-year period recorded in this section of the survey was that of Long Beach from 1900 to 1910 when a gain of 690.8 per cent is shown. Over the six-year period from 1920 to 1926, however, Glendale is credited with an increase of 456.3 per cent, which ratio, if continued until 1930, would result in a total of 760.4 per cent in the decade. Other cities which have at various times reported increases of more than 200 per cent are Pasadena with 232.2 between 1900 and 1910, San Diego with 512.8 between 1880 and 1890, Berkeley with 205.9 between 1900 and 1910, Glendale with 392.9 per cent between 1910 and 1920, Long Beach with 281.6 per cent between 1880 and 1890 and 212.2 per cent between 1910 and 1920 and Los Angeles with gains of 350.6 per cent between 1880 and 1890 and 211.5 per cent between 1900 and 1910. The smallest percentage of increase shown in any ten-year period was that of San Diego of 9.5 per cent from 1890 to 1900.

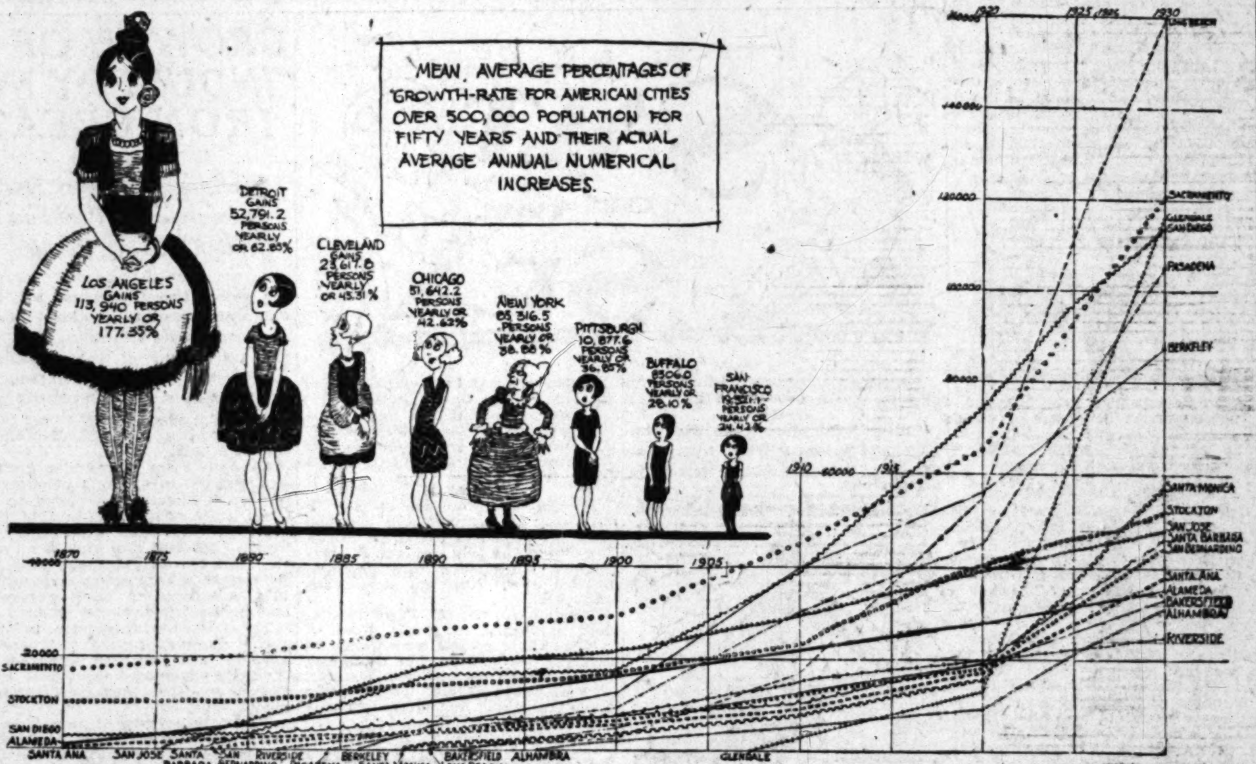
GLENDALE BIGGEST

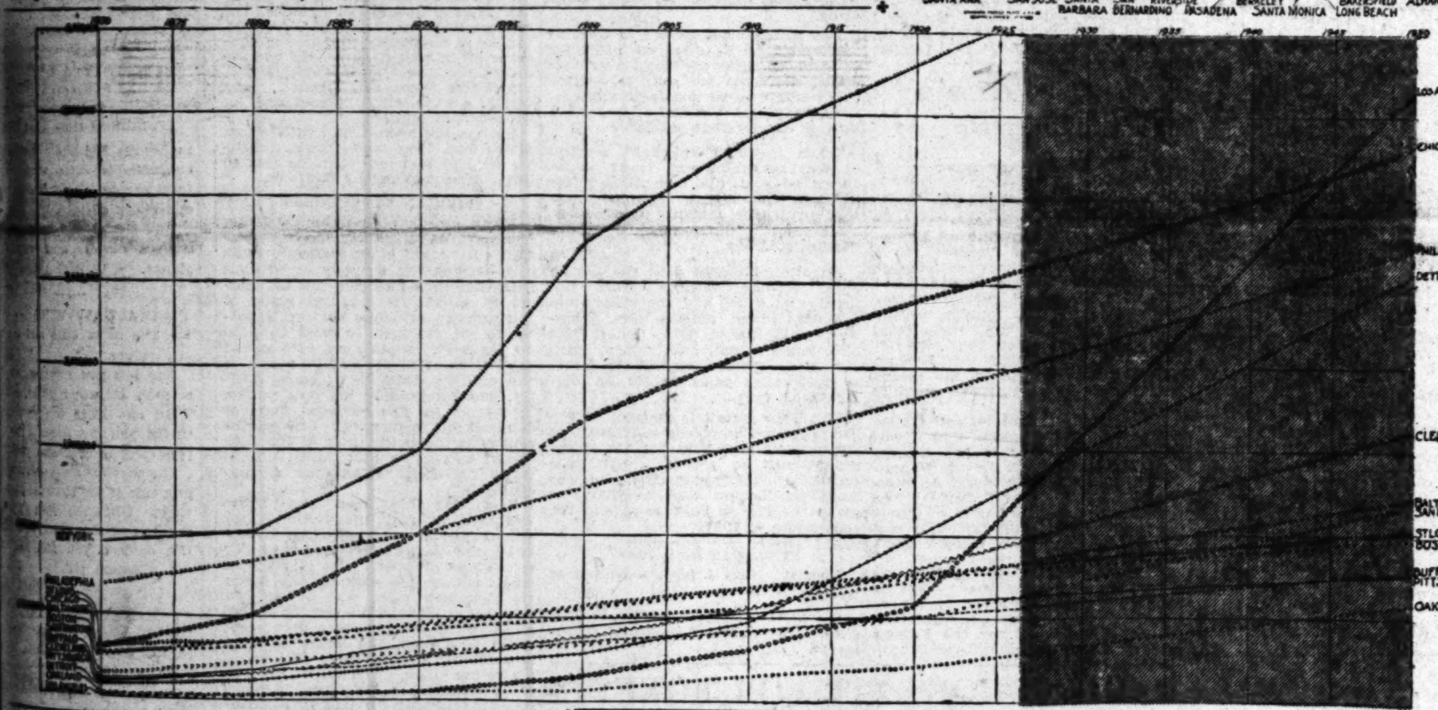
The largest average percentage of gain revealed is, of course, that of Glendale, a total of 536.5; this being due partly to the youth of the city in comparison with its rivals. Long Beach, however, is credited with an average decade gain of 251.65 per cent, San Diego with 136.2 per cent and Santa Monica with 131.75 per cent. Los Angeles with an average decade increase of 177.35 per cent is third on the list.

As to actual increases in numbers of residents, Los Angeles leads the field by far, with San Francisco running second, but with South Coast towns not far behind.

In the accompanying graphs the relative positions of the various cities as to population growths are clearly shown, the lines of increase in that concerning the major cities of the country being projected as far as 1955 that future alignment of the cities involved may be predicted.

And just one more word—wouldn't it be interesting to clip this story and save it until the returns from the 1930 census are announced—and then compare the figures?





What Fifty Years of Population Records Show

The feminine figures show, by their relative heights, the comparative rates of average annual percentage increase in population since 1870 of the eight fastest-growing large American cities. With each is also given the present average annual numerical increase. Below the figures is a graph showing how California cities have grown since 1870, the lines being extended to show what the population of each will be in 1930 if the present rates are maintained. Below is a similar graph showing the growth of American cities with a present population of over 500,000. Here the lines have been extended to show populations in 1950 if present rates are maintained. The shaded area represents the future.

NAVY FOOTBALL SEASON OPENS

Service football games in the battle fleet and at western naval stations will start on September 26. Ships crews have started workouts on a light scale. The season will end on December 5, when the fleet championship games will be scheduled. The submarine divisions of this coast won the championship from the flagship California's pigskinners last year, although the "Prune Barge" eleven took every team in the battleship and base force divisions.

The Lancer

THIS is an open letter to a young lady:

I have been keeping her for some years; but I don't see very much of her.

She is a good deal like the Portuguese army in the late war: the only way to mobilize her is when she is hungry, or broke.

Her personality is so symptomatic of the times that she interests me hugely She is 18.

LEARNING ABOUT WOMEN

Sometimes when I come to breakfast in pajamas and a splendiferous bath robe, I find her and some of her pals in bath robes; and we have coffee and eggs together. And I learn about the generation that will be America when the worms are dining on the rest of us.

THE FURY OF ENERGY

She is lazy—with a chronic disinclination for routine toil. But when the spirit finally moves her, she has the direct, ruthless efficiency of an army sergeant. I am appalled at the way she drives unerringly to the point without lost motion

VERY "UP STAGE"

Two characteristics impress me about her and her friends.

One is their poise; the other is their judgment.

When I get a pair of new shoes tried on, the salesman always

ROYAL ETIQUETTE POST-MORTEM DISCLOSES KING IS PLAIN SIR

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Yes, we should have dug up all this valuable information a couple of weeks ago, when it might have allayed much suffering for all concerned.

But we shall need it again. Oh, we shall surely need it again. It is a form of preparedness we should all undertake. One never knows when one will be called upon to chat affably with royalty and persons of high rank in Los Angeles.

Very well, then. It should occasion considerable relief to know that the proper way to address a king or a queen in direct conversation is just plain "Sir" or "Madam."

"Your Majesty" should be reserved for strictly formal addresses and even then it is bad form to overdo it. This also goes for "royal highnesses." It was, for instance, quite comme il faut for our public officials to formally address Crown Prince Gustavus of Sweden as "Your Royal Highness" at the outset of the peroration, but not afterward, unless it proved imperative for the euphonious delivery of suitable rhetoric.

LETTER MORE FORMAL

But in personal conversation, the Prince should have been addressed simply as "Sir," and the Princess as "Madam." Even Queen Victoria was just plain "Madam" in direct conversation.

The same holds good for a personal letter, which should begin "Sir," and conclude with "Your majesty's obedient servant," or "Your royal highness's obedient servant"—which is a form of courtesy with no more binding significance than the "Yours very truly" with which we conclude lettres to fellow-commoners.

AH, YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS!
PLEASED TO MEET CHA', YOUR MADGE-JISTY!
GOOD MORNING, YER HONOR!

Chatty letters written by Los Angeles residents to say, King Albert of Belgium, or the Crown Prince of Sweden, cementing the pleasant friendships made here, must be addressed a bit more formally on the envelope.

"To the King's Most Excellent Majesty

Brussels, Belgium.

"To His Royal Highness the Crown Prince,"

Stockholm, Sweden.

In the case of Princes, other than heirs to the throne, "To His Royal Highness Prince E. . . . . ." is correct.

In this respect dukes are a shade more imposing than monarchs. And a bit harder for Americans to talk to, because the proper address is "My Lord Duke," unless one is on a sufficiently pally footing to say, "But, Marlborough, my dear chap. . . . ." A personal letter must begin that way, too, and conclude with, "Your Grace's most obedient servant," and be addressed on the envelope "To His Grace the Duke of —" and not omitting any special distinctions as signified by say K. T. (Knight of the Order of the Thistle) or K. P. (Knight of St. Patrick.) Her Grace is also "Madam" in direct conversation.

And the chairman of the day will be quite right in having "much pleasure in presenting His Grace the Duke of —" to make his little speech at the Breakfast Club.

MY LORD MARQUIS

Marquis is "My Lord Marquis," but he gets "lordship" in place of "grace." The Marchioness is "My Lady," and "her ladyship," but, of course, there are conditions under which we may just call her Gloria and leave it at that. Informally, a Marchioness is, say, "Lady Aberdeen," a marquis is "The Most Honorable the Marquis of —" on the envelope.

Earls, viscounts and barons ought to come easier for democratic Americans. For, although they are formally entitled to "My Lord," and "your lordship," their intimates just comfortably use their name title. So that, if you can confidently convince yourself that your social standing permits it, it is perfectly all right to say to the Right Honorable Lord Astor, for instance, "but, Astor, do you really feel that Great Britain and the United States are —?" etc. Otherwise you are out of luck, because it is bad form to drag his title into the conversation, although you may call his attention with a simple "Lord Astor."

Letters to earls, viscounts and barons should either begin "Dear Astor" or "My Lord" acording to your social complex, but most commoners get round it by writing "Dear Lord Astor," for instance, which is quite aceptable. They are "Right Honorable" on the envelope.

Their wives are all "My Lady" and "Her Ladyship," but "Countess dear" gets by in America. In her own country "Countess, dear," would be called by her first name by people intimate enough to use the "dear." "Dear Lady Clanarty" is acceptable in an informal letter. . . . And Lady Clanarty will now give us a little talk."

The unmarried daughters of earls, viscounts and barons use their first name—as "Lady Gertrude Clanarty," and "Lady Gertrude," for short.

MADAM NO INSULT

On the envelope a countess is "The Right Honorable the Countess of B. . . ." A viscountess is "The Right Honorable the Lady Viscountess Astor," for instance, and a baroness is "The Right Honorable Lady F." There are some tricky pitfalls regarding those "of's."

It is jolly to know one cannot insult any kind of a peeress by calling her "Madam," since that is perfectly proper for royalty down.

Baronets and knights are "Sir"—but never forget to add the "Bart" —after a baronet's name on the envelope. A baronetcy is heredity and passes on to the eldest son. A knighthood is for the life of the incumbent only. But their wives are both "Lady . . . ." and call for no right honorables or pitfally "of's" anywhere.

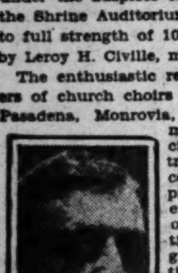
Sir Henry Wood, for instance, is a knight, and "Sir Henry" goes for all informal occasions. And a letter to his wife should simply be addressed to "Lady Wood."

But if knights do not get a "bart" after their name, they usually have some distinguishing letters—as, for instance, "F. R. C. S." if he is a fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, of "L.L.D." if he is a doctor of laws Or he might be an R. A. (Royal Academician) or a "Mus. Doc." (of music.) These letters are very important, and almost every kind of a titled person of rank has some of which he is more proud than of his title, since he has usually earned them.

PAGEANT CHORUS FILLED

Singers Respond to Call for Musical Extravaganza "Down in Alabam'" at Shrine

Choruses for the musical pageant, "Down in Alabam," to be presented under the auspices of the Federated Church Brotherhoods of California at the Shrine Auditorium Friday evening, the 27th inst., have been recruited to full strength of 1000 voices, according to announcement made yesterday by Leroy H. Civille, manager.



HERBERT F. KENNY

The enthusiastic response of singers of church choirs of Los Angeles, Pasadena, Monrovia, Glendale, Pomona and other cities of the district, assures success of the enterprise, the largest ever undertaken by the Federation and the greatest production of its kind ever attempted in Los Angeles.

Group rehearsals are being held in the various communities in preparation for a general rehearsal of the entire chorus in Los Angeles in the near future, Mr. Civille said. Musical direction is by Ray Howard Crittenden, while stage direction is in the hands of J. Bassett Willard, originator of "Down in Alabam."

KENNY PLAYS LEAD

Herbert F. Kenny, Pasadena realtor, will play the leading masculine role, that of "Col. Lipscomb," plantation owner and genial Southern gentleman, Stage Director Willard announced yesterday. Mr. Kenny is musical director of the Altadena Methodist Episcopal Church and secretary of the State Sunday School Association.

The role of Mrs. Lipscomb will be taken by Laura Oakley Moore of Altadena, who began her career as a character actress at the age of seventeen, playing the part of "Dame Durden" in "Robin Hood" with the famous old Bostonians.

A committee of fifty sponsors, including many of the most prominent business and professional men of the city, has been named. The list includes Judge Scott, J. Dabney Day, Mayor Cryer, John C. Austin, Judge Bledsoe, Sid Grauman, Dave F. Smith and C. E. Toberman.

Production of "Down in Alabam" is virtually the first activity of a program recently launched by leaders of the Federation, which is composed of laymen of nearly every denomination of Protestant churches. The total membership of the organization is the result of the formation, more than ten years ago, of brotherhoods and men's Bible classes in many churches. These groups were not affiliated. In 1922, the United Church Brotherhoods and the Federated Men's Bible Classes were formed. Merging of these two organizations into the Federated Church Brotherhoods of California took place in January of this year.

CAMPAIGN PLANNED

Virtually the entire man-power of the Protestant churches of California is represented in the federation, the pivotal point about which the majority of the activities of the church laymen center. Proceeds from "Down in Alabam" will be used as the basic funds for carrying out such brotherhood activities as boys' welfare work and bringing into the church many "church-shy" men, Mr. Civille pointed out.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson of the First Presbyterian Church of Hollywood, is president of the Federation; Mr. Charles L. Mason of the Christian Church of Huntington Park is secretary.

Official publication of the federation is "The Broadcaster," which has been in existence seven years. It is circulated among the membership of the various brotherhoods and Bible classes which go to make up the organization. Improvement and enlargement of "The Broadcaster" are some of the first steps of the new federation program, Mr. Civille said.

Boy Scouts to Close Vacation With Jamboree

A last "wild fling at freedom" will end the summer vacation season for Los Angeles Boy Scouts when the entire 6000 participate in an all-day "jamboree," with the Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce as hosts, Saturday, the 28th inst.

An extensive program for the day is being worked out by the Redondo Chamber officers, Scout leaders of Redondo and Scout Executive E. B. DeGroot of Los Angeles Scout headquarters. Everything is to be wide open to the Scouts from the time the first special electric trains arrives in the morning until the last bonfire has burned out at night.

Field and water sports meets will be held and special fishing barges will be operated to the deep sea angling grounds. Pennants will be awarded to the troop with the largest percentage of attendance, the one with the best showing of Scout leaders, the one that has the most mothers and fathers represented, and for other points.

The Redondo City Park will be turned over for the day for the exclusive headquarters of the Los Angeles Scouts who will pitch camps and arrange their cooking facilities. Many formal exercises will be held there including the sunset lowering of colors. The land features will be offset by the beach activities, and especially the demonstrations in lifesaving and swimming.

Gladys began to cry, then she remembered how perfectly horrid she looked when she cried. Besides, she was sure her sailor boy would telephone before his ship left. She looked at the clock. The ship would shove off from the dock in ten minutes.

She watched the minutes tick by. It seemed an eternity. In five minutes now the ship would sail. Her heart sank. Perhaps he would not telephone after all. That would mean all was over. Four minutes. Three minutes. Two minutes. He was not going to telephone.

She dashed cold water on her face. It felt so hot and fevered. She slipped on her pink frock. She brushed her hair. She powdered her nose. Never had she looked more charming.

Then she called up her civilian boy friend. He loved her so dearly and he could be over in fifteen minutes.—[Training Station News.

ANGELENOS FLY PLANE FROM EAST

Lawyer and Doctor Make Transcontinental Flight in Quick Time

Dr. Frederick Whitney, dean of Southern California aviators, and Theodore T. Hull, Los Angeles lawyer and member of the Chamber of Commerce aviation committee, gave a practical demonstration last week of what aerial transportation will do in putting the East into quick contact with Southern California when they flew from Troy, O., to Los Angeles in thirty-five hours and forty minutes, flying time.

The Los Angeles men used five full days in making the trip from this city to the Ohio town where, after closing a contract for State distribution for California for the "Waco," a plane enjoying wide popularity among eastern fliers, they determined to make the return journey by air.

Dr. Whitney, who is a well-known figure on Southern California aviation fields, has been flying continuously for twelve years and Mr. Hull is also an experienced aviator. With a plane equipped with dual control, they were able to fly continuously except for necessary stops for gasoline and oil and while they were not trying for a speed record, they made the journey in about one-third the time required by rail. They flew around a number of rainstorms and climbed above hot weather, being able to find a temperature of 60 deg. even while crossing the desert.

Their route took them over Cincinnati, Louisville, Nashville, Memphis, Little Rock, Texarkana, Dallas, El Paso, Lordsburg, Tucson and Yuma. They had no difficulty in finding satisfactory landing fields throughout the trip and declare that it is simpler to find one's away across the United States by air with map and compass than for a stranger to pilot his automobile successfully in, through and out of the larger cities.

The "Waco," the first of its type to reach the Pacific Coast, is receiving much attention from flyers at Clover Field.

Aerial Regatta Plans Taking Definite Shape

With Donald Douglas, president of the Southern California chapter of the National Aeronautic Association, in the East in the interests of the meet, and a working organization now nearly perfected here, plans for the forthcoming second annual world flight commemoration air regatta are rapidly being whipped into shape. Mr. Douglas hopped off in the Salt Lake City air-mail plane last Thursday morning on the first leg of a cross-nation sky trip in the interests of the coming sky carnival. Friday morning he was in Chicago and is scheduled to arrive in New York some time today, after a two-day stop in the Windy City.

From New York he will go to Washington to meet secretaries for air in both the Army and Navy departments and discuss the importance of the big meet to be held here, honoring the intrepid airmen who circled the globe by plane. He also will confer with officials of the parent National Aeronautic Association of which the local chapter is a part and also meet with various commercial flying interests to stimulate an entry list for the September meet here that will outdo the first commemorative event last year.

At a recent meeting of the local chapter, which is originator and sponsor of the annual air regatta to be held on the anniversary of the world-flight finish, or as near thereto as possible, Roy S. Gradle was made chairman of the operations committee; Arnold Kruckman, chairman of publicity; Donald Douglas, chairman of program and entertainment. Chairman of the contest and finance committees have yet to be named. These five chairmen, with one to be named from each "port of call" to be made by the contesting flyers, will form the executive committee.

VIRTUE OF GOSSIP

Long before a man's sin is generally known and gets into the newspapers, a few know about it; and it is a virtue if these few industriously engage in the virtue of gossip.

GROWTH OF INDUSTRY IN IRON GREAT

Washington Report Shows Increase of 50 Per Cent in Nation During Decade

A report issued yesterday by the California Institute of Steel Construction quotes figures compiled by the Department of Labor showing that in the iron and steel industry of the nation the productivity per man has increased almost 50 per cent, figuring on the 1914 rate of production as a base.

An even more spectacular growth was recorded in the field of automobile production, now declared to be three times as great as in 1914. Notable increases also were registered by the boot and shoe industry, and the producers of paper and pulp. In the former, the increase per man since 1914 is asserted to be 34 per cent, and in the latter, 17 per cent.

The tremendous increase in efficiency disclosed in the steel group, however, has not been attended by the price advantages that were experienced in other lines, the institute report disclosed:

While the average of general commodities stands at 51 per cent above the 1913 level, according to the Department of Labor index, the level of steel and iron products is only 44 per cent higher than the 1913 prices.

Athletic Meets for Youths of City Suggested

Two great city-wide athletic meets for boys every year, with every policeman on a beat as sponsor for a group from his territory, with police athletes acting as year-round trainers and coaches, and directors of boy organizations and public school teachers fostering the semiannual carnivals are proposed by Police Officer J. L. Kimbrough of Newton street station as one of the means of bringing to a minimum juvenile delinquency.

The detailed proposal of Officer Kimbrough is incorporated in a voluminous boy survey of Los Angeles made for the Council for the Promotion of Boys' Work through instructions of Police Chief Davis. The dat are now in the hands of President Homer B. Wright for study and will be the subject of many conferences of officers of the Council.

Valuable data in the reports are to be annotated for the benefit of the boy welfare organizations whose representatives make up the membership of the Council for the Promotion of Boys' Work.

AUXILIARY OF LEGION HAS DRIVE

Membership Campaign of Upland Unit Followed by Work for Funds

The American Legion Auxiliary of Upland, annually begins the fiscal year with a membership drive. As a result this unit now has eighty-three enthusiastic workers, loyal to the principles as symbolized by the organization emblem: The rays of the sun that form the background signify loyalty and the light of justice, freedom and democracy, dispelling the darkness of violence, strife and evil. The star, the heart of the emblem, stands for service.

The next endeavor is to swell the treasury. Food sales are held, benefit bridge parties organized and a "hope chest," filled with dainty, hand-made lingerie for the June bride.

The money thus earned is used in welfare work. Layettes are made for children of disabled World War veterans; garments are sent to bedridden war nurses in hospitals, and embroidery pieces for them to work during convalescent days.

When the new veterans' hospital at San Fernando was ready to be furnished and the day nursery for children established, checks were sent until the treasury was empty. Then more food sales, benefit bridge parties, etc.

An annual picnic with the Legion boys, all-day sewings with hot lunches at noon, and the visits from the department officers, Mrs. Chapline, Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Decker and Mrs. Dobbins, and gala events, when the ladies gather around to listen to instructive talks or for an old-fashioned visit.

The Upland unit is grateful to The Times for realizing the worthiness of the organization and for its splendid "plan," so popular with the units, for helping members of the American Legion and auxiliary to make the trip to Paris to attend the convention in 1927.

HAROLD DOES BIT FOR FORESTS

Comedian Voices Need of Saving Trees

Lloyd Planting Evergreen Tree on Estate

REFORESTATION is one of the pet hobbies of Harold Lloyd, who has just become a foundation member and one of the incorporators of the American Green Cross, an organization formed to bring to the attention of the American public the appalling decrease in the forests of the United States and to advocate remedies for controlling the situation.

"Everyone who belongs to the Red Cross should have membership in the American Green Cross," according to Mr. Lloyd, "for in its way it is just as important. Most Americans are unaware of the situation facing this country through the denuding of our forests, either by the cutting of timber or the tremendous acreage lost annually through fire and other causes. Most people do not appreciate this situation because they have given no thought to the subject of what would happen to a nation without forests. They can tell them in China, where they are lugging plants and water hundreds of miles to help reforest the barren areas that scientists tell us are responsible for the terrific storms China endures.

"We are depopulating this country of trees so rapidly that it will not be many years before our forests will be barren wastes, unless we get back of the American Green Cross in its advocacy of reforestation."

The comedian found time to talk on this situation between scenes for his newest production for Paramount distribution, which will be ready for the public this fall.

A WILDERNESS WISE MAN

(The International Sunday-school Lesson for Aug
"Jethro's Wise Counsel"—Exodus xviii:1-17.)

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

"You can lead a boy to college, but you can't make him think," paraphrased George Ade.

In these boom days of college mass production it is refreshing to have a Sunday-school lesson which compels millions of persons to consider the difference between wisdom and book knowledge.

This generation is making a fetish of "book learning." So it is well to tarry for a time to make the acquaintance of an unlettered sheikh of Sinai, a wilderness wise man, whose sensible counsel saved the palace-taught leader of the Israelites from wasting his powers. Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, but his father-in-law, Jethro, a dweller in the black tents of the desert, a mere pastoral Bedouin, excelled him in common sense.

This Jethro type has become very familiar to me; and I have come to admire the elderly Arabs, with their lined faces and deep, quiet eyes, who have looked long on life and learned its lessons in the school of necessity and experience and self-reliance. The average Bedouin sheikh is unlettered, but he is spaciously wise in the concerns of human nature. He has acquired the understanding which only meditative years can impart, and which always takes precedence of book-taught wisdom.

Such a one was Jethro, with whom Moses had lived and whose daughter he had married when he fled to Sinai after killing the Egyptian.

SLOGAN OF SUCCESS

Like most philosophers, Moses lacked practical ability for organization. He could work tirelessly himself—though not serenely or without irritation—but he could not set others to work. He had no grasp of the primary principle that it is better to set ten men to work than to do the work of ten men. He lacked that element of leadership which is the gift for distributing responsibility, and for holding his own powers in reserve for the essential tasks of counsel and inspiration. One apothegm puts the truth thus: "The genius of success is the ability not to waste five-dollar talents on a two-cent job."

Everybody has seen the Moses weakness in real life — the fussy school master who disdains assistants; the pastor who is errand-boy as well as prophet; the storekeeper who can't see his work for the tasks; the business man who never can take a day off, and who works nights at the office doing what a good clerk could do better; the housewife who is mastered by her cares instead of mastering them. The roll is endless. It is responsible for most "nervous breakdowns" and for lack of smooth-running efficiency.

ADVISER FOR THE LEADER

Because Moses is in the Bible is no reason why we, any more than Jethro, should be blind to his blunder of trying to do everything himself. It was a form of conceit which made him think that only he in all that vast company, had the ability to do every task that needed doing and to make every decision that had to be made. By so doing he was wrecking the capacity of God's indispensable man. He was not saving his highest powers for their best use, which is the golden maxim of real success.

When Father-in-law Jethro came pridefully to see the family great man at work, he straightway perceived the futility and folly of the methods of Moses. Thank God for relatives who love us enough to try to save us from ourselves. In the loneliness of eminence, the mighty man usually lacks close trustworthy and disinterested advisers. Highly-placed men find sycophants commoner than faithful friends. Moses, solitary in his leadership, stood in sore need of just the counsellor that Jethro proved himself to be. And he showed his real qualities by accepting the wise advice given him. It was a great day for wandering Israel when Shephard Jethro came to camp.

LATENT LEADERSHIP

Had it not been for Jethro, Moses might never have discovered the qualifications of the many men whom he set over hundreds and fifties and tens, after his visitor's stern, "the thing thou doest is not good," and set himself to undertaking a complete reorganization of his task. There is more human capacity lying around unused than any other sort of potential material. The war revealed that.

This weakness which Jethro uncovered in the situation of the Israelites existed also in the apostolic church. The Apostles found themselves called upon for all sorts of labors which kept them from their higher responsibilities. So they appointed deacons to look after the poor and the temporalities of their new organization. In the revised version of the Song of Deborah there is a significant change in the rendering of the text.

"For that the leaders took the lead in Israel.

"For that the people offered themselves willingly,

"Praise ye Jehovah."

How to get potential leaders to lead is no small problem for the present generation. Our greatest single shortage is in human leadership.

POLITICS

THE WATCHMAN

Trend of Political Thought and Action

—BY THE SENTRY ON HIS BEAT—

[illegible] Goodcell, candidate for the [illegible] nomination for Governor, [illegible], apparently, to that point in [illegible] where Romeo's friend, Mercutio, arrived with regard to the [illegible] of the Montagues and Capulets.

In any event, Mr. Goodcell's denunciation of Hiram Johnson, Kent Parker, C. C. Young, Gov. Richardson, [illegible] Randolph Hearst, the Southern Pacific Railroad and the publisher of The Times strongly suggests [illegible] immortal ejaculation:

"A plague o' both your houses!" [illegible] Goodcell going Mr. Mercutio a few [illegible] and heartily praying for a [illegible] on all the houses in sight.

The fact that The Times failed to [illegible] his candidacy for Governor [illegible] a fair excuse for Mr. [illegible] resentment toward The [illegible] publisher, but if ever a man had genuine reason for feeling resentful toward another, Mr. Goodcell [illegible] reason with regard to Senator Johnson.

Not only did Mr. Goodcell take the [illegible] in the Senator's behalf in [illegible], when Mr. Johnson needed all [illegible] friends he could muster, but he [illegible] did what he could in the Sen[illegible] behalf when Mr. Johnson [illegible] to take the Republican Presidential nomination away from President Coolidge. Logically, or illogically, he looked to Mr. Johnson for [illegible] and comfort in his own gubernatorial ambitions.

But Mr. Johnson had other political fish to fry; the Senator chose Lieut.-Gov. Young and rebuffed Mr. Goodcell in the most cruel manner. Political ingratitude, as Mr. Goodcell [illegible] discovered, is not a matter of [illegible] but more particularly concerns [illegible] expediency and the immediate interests and aspirations of the ingrate.

Mr. Goodcell complains, also, that [illegible] is getting no publicity and that [illegible] views are not being properly reported by the newspapers of the State. [illegible] as he more or less [illegible] his ideas on the gubernatorial situation in a brief comment [illegible] Glendale a few days ago. The [illegible] takes pleasure in quoting [illegible] Goodcell to the following effect:

"I here charge that the collar of [illegible] Southern Pacific Railroad is [illegible] the neck of Gov. Richardson [illegible] the brand of Harry Chandler on [illegible] back.

"I charge that C. C. Young has the [illegible] of Hiram Johnson around his [illegible] and the brand of William Ran[illegible] Hearst upon his back.

"I am just a maverick. I have never [illegible] collar on my neck or a collar [illegible] my throat. I am just roaming [illegible] serve the people of California [illegible] give the State an administration that is calculated to bring happiness to the people of the State of [illegible]."

[illegible] The Watchman must confess [illegible] certain amount of ignorance [illegible] horses, mules and such [illegible] and is, therefore, unable to [illegible] a maverick in his, or its, proper category. Those versed in [illegible] matters, or those sufficiently interested to make inquiry, must decide for themselves.

[illegible], the time having arrived for the band-wagon riders to [illegible] a decision and begin the usual [illegible] scramble to line up with [illegible] candidate, there is a suspicious eagerness developing here and [illegible] to be known as original dyed-in-the-wool Richardson supporters. [illegible] may mean much or nothing; it [illegible] here merely as a phenomenon of politics.

There is this much to be said in behalf of the judgment of the habitual band-wagoner, however, he waits as [illegible] as he can with safety, then [illegible] aboard, takes a seat and assumes an air of importance and [illegible].

The country editors of California, [illegible] elected Mr. Richardson Governor [illegible] and who are supporting his [illegible] for re-election, afford an [illegible] of a type exactly the antithesis of the band-wagon jumper. These men, each a leader in his [illegible] and each close to and in [illegible] with the fundamental [illegible] of his locality, cannot be paid [illegible] political support nor tricked into [illegible] a candidate lacking in worth [illegible]. Their enthusiastic in[illegible] of Gov. Richardson is [illegible] on a knowledge of the man and [illegible] extending over a period [illegible] than two decades in which [illegible] been the president of the California Editorial Association and the [illegible] friend of that bulwark of [illegible] ideals—the small-town [illegible].

When the politicians charge the [illegible] with adding to State costs [illegible] editors do not waste [illegible] in exposing the falsity of the [illegible] they draw attention to the [illegible] surplus in excess of $15,000,000 and thank providence—and the [illegible] administration—for a [illegible] of unprecedented prosperity. When the politicians say the [illegible] has failed properly to support the schools, facts are supplied showing that education under the Richardson administration has received in excess of $115,000,000—an [illegible] in four years approximating [illegible].

The average country editor is a [illegible] and a doer who is interested [illegible] people and desirous of promoting [illegible] general good. Prior to his election as State Treasurer and Governor, [illegible] Richardson was known as one of [illegible] outstanding country newspaper [illegible] of California. Although naturally of a modest disposition, it is [illegible] opinion of The Watchman that [illegible] Richardson is tremendously [illegible] of his newspaper career and of [illegible] that it was developed in [illegible], despite the best efforts of its [illegible] of Commerce, must be designated as a small town.

[illegible] Small, who writes in a delightful [illegible] concerning political affairs, is furnishing the newspapers [illegible] information in huge quantities [illegible] the candidacy of John B. [illegible], former collector of internal [illegible], for the Democratic nomination [illegible] United States Senator. [illegible] Small is responsible for the [illegible] Elliott forces, throwing their [illegible] into the saddle at the last [illegible], are riding hard to make up [illegible] time, and a fighting organization [illegible] already been whipped into [illegible]. They have a number of stout [illegible] in their camp including such Democratic warriors as William G. McAdoo, one of the foremost [illegible] figures in politics; Col. John [illegible], Nestor of the Southern [illegible] Democrats; Tom Storke of Santa Barbara, John B. Coulston of [illegible], Carl Alex Johnson of San [illegible], Tom Duckworth of San Bernardino and Charles M. Brown of [illegible].

[illegible] the women the Elliott [illegible] has also won influential support [illegible] Mrs. John C. McFarland, [illegible] C. Tyler, Mrs. Martha Nelson McCan, Mrs. Tom McClellan, [illegible] Mitchell of Glendale, Mrs. [illegible] Lee and scores of others of equal prominence as active members of the Elliott campaign committee.

"The first statement of the campaign by John B. Elliott is an interesting one. He is ready to answer fully and flatly all questions as to exactly where he stands on public questions. But he is against the man seeking the office, the frenzied solicitation of votes and the expenditure of large sums of money in primary elections. Of that he leaves no doubt.

"The statement was made in a letter to John P. Carter, chairman of the Elliott campaigning committee, in reply to a letter from Col. Carter notifying him of the certification of his candidacy to the voters."

Although the Democratic Senatorial contest, so far as actual results are concerned, seems more closely related to the Presidential aspirations of Smith and McAdoo than to the political fortunes of Mr. Elliott and his energetic opponent, Isidore B. Dockweiler, Democratic national committeeman, there is as much activity in the two camps as would be justified by a more tangible promise of reward. Mr. Dockweiler is earnest, Mr. Elliott is earnest, the followers and friends of each are earnest. The Watchman hesitates to contemplate the probable scenes of carnage and fury that would develop if a Democratic nomination in California ordinarily meant more than mere personal satisfaction.

Voters in the Ninth Congress District, and particularly those who are registered as members of the Republican party, are having occasion for serious thought in connection with the attempt of Councilman Randall, who is running as a Republican-Democrat-Prohibitionist, to capture the nomination. With Randall as its Congressman (a misfortune that once befell the district) the people would have at Washington a so-called Representative with whom the Republicans would not associate; for whom the Democrats could do nothing, and who could command no attention for the needs of his constituency.

This situation is causing a general drift to the camp of W. E. Evans of Glendale, who was indorsed by the Ninth District conference, who has the general backing of the Republican leaders of the district, and who is regarded as the strongest contender for the Republican nomination.

State Senator A. Burlingame Johnson of Pasadena thus summarizes the matter:

"I especially want to appeal to Pasadena Republicans. We have a local candidate, Mr. Landreth. He is popular at home and if he had a fighting chance and the contest were between him and the other three Republican candidates I would be the last person to say a word that might lose him a single vote. However, the contest is not between the four Republicans. It is between Randall, the Democrat, who under our pernicious primary law appears on our Republican ballot under false party classification and who is backed by thousands of supporters who have changed their registration to Republican in order to steal our party nomination, and the most likely of our four candidates.

"I do not hesitate to give it as my best judgment that, of our four Republican candidates, W. E. Evans has the best and only chance to win."

Carl Alex Johnson, San Diego, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of California, opened his campaign yesterday at Los Angeles. Headquarters have been established at the Hotel Stowell with R. M. Wiley in charge.

Mr. Johnson is a well-known attorney of Southern California, where he has resided for thirty-five years. He is chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee of San Diego; a lifelong Democrat and a party man. He entered the open field in the gubernatorial race as a "dry" candidate when Dave Ewing, Fresno, recommended by the Santa Cruz and Fresno conferences, declined to run.

Judge Gavin W. Craig of the Superior Court of Los Angeles county has come out in a strong recommendation of Dep. Dist.-Atty. John J. Hill, who is seeking a place on the Superior Court Bench at the coming August primaries.

Venice is pledging a strong vote for Senator Samuel M. Shortridge in his campaign for re-election to the United States Senate, and the Shortridge-for-Senator Club of that district is daily adding to its roster hundreds of representative citizens.

Dr. Joseph Saylin heads the Venice-Shortridge-for-Senator Club as president, with other officers and directors as follows:

Mrs. C. H. Peckham, first vice-president; Mrs. Florence A. Galentine, second vice-president; Mrs. A. T. Mahan, third vice-president; Herbert Hertel, treasurer; Anthony Kaitis, secretary; Frank Prior, William Flynn, C. Gordon Parkhurst, King C. Keene, Arthur Traxler, Dave Braunberger and George Acret, directors.

Indorsement of Buron Fitts, Chief Deputy District Attorney of Los Angeles county, for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor by the Young Men's Republican League of Los Angeles county was announced yesterday by George A. Glover, the league's secretary.

Members of the Stanford Club of Los Angeles, whatever their differences regarding other candidates, are a unit in their support of Judge Charles S. Burnell for re-election to the Superior Court bench, and are actively assisting in his campaign, it was stated at his headquarters, 508 California Building. Judge Burnell as a member of the first class to register at Stanford when that institution opened its doors, and was graduated with the pioneer class of 1895, returning later for a post-graduate year in the law school.

Judge Burnell is also receiving strong support from his fellow-members in the Kiwanis Club of Los Angeles.

Elaborate plans and preparations are being arranged for the welcome to be extended to Judge Jesse W. Curtis, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of California and candidate to succeed himself at the primaries the 31st inst., by thousands of his Los Angeles friends when he arrives here Thursday.

Delegations from many of the most prominent Southern California organizations are being mobilized and indications point to one of the most memorable receptions ever accorded a candidate for office. In addition to the delegations numerous well-known Los Angeles men and women of affairs will also be on hand.

Although the complete plans have not been announced because they are, as yet, still in embryo, H. E. Mutchler secretary of the Curtis Campaign Committee, said, today, that representatives from civic, fraternal, social organizations and many other similar bodies would probably be at the Southern Pacific station Thursday, to greet Judge Curtis on his arrival in his native Southland.

One of the features planned by the committee in charge is a united band comprised of a boy scout unit, a Masonic unit and, it is hoped, several others. Negotiations have been made by a weekly news reel picture company to "shoot" the justice's arrival. Moviedom will probably be represented, according to requests received, by a group of stars.

The indorsement of Congressman John D. Fredericks and Mrs. Fredericks of the campaign of Dep. Dist.-Atty. H. S. G. McCarthney, formerly State Senator, for judge of the Superior Court, was announced at McCartney's headquarters yesterday. The prosecutor is running for the unexpired term of Superior Judge J. Perry Wood, resigned.

Congressman Fredericks who, before being elected to the House of Representatives at Washington, was District Attorney here, warmly recommended McCartney's ability and integrity to the public.

"Mr. McCartney," he said, "was deputy with me when I was District Attorney here. I know the man, and I know his personal character and achievements as perhaps few others do. He is absolutely the sort of man who, for the greatest good for the greatest number, should be on the bench.

"His record of twenty years as legislator and prosecutor has given him the legal knowledge necessary for any judicial office which the people can give him. He is endowed with the natural temperament which is best enabled to adjudicate matters of great importance to the welfare of the county. And his personal honor and honesty are unimpeachable."

Joe Crail's candidacy for the Tenth District Republican Congressional nomination has been indorsed by the Tenth Congressional League of Republican Clubs, it was announced yesterday by John W. Kemp, chairman of the Crail campaign committee.

Officers of the league include W. R. Dickinson, president; Harry H. Culver, first vice-president; Dora A. Stearns, second vice-president; Charles H. Treat, third vice-president; Parley N. Johnson, treasurer, and Arthur W. Eckman, secretary.

The South Los Angeles Boosters' Club, including the southern part of Los Angeles, Watts, Sunnyside, Bellflower, Southgate, Green Meadows and Linwood, is organized on behalf of the candidacy of Frank F. Merriam for Lieutenant-Governor. Thomas H. Cox is at the head of the movement. Others helping the organization are Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Finkle, Sunnyside; H. F. Bade of the Graham district, Earl Crandel and E. H. Rose of Watts, F. H. Lake, Bellflower; C. Mason Brown and W. T. LeFabor of Watts, T. R. Hox, Southgate, H. E. Whittaker, Linwood, F. T. Pierce of Green Meadows.

Mr. Cox announced a mass meeting for Mr. Merriam to be held at Watts on Friday evening, August 13. Mr. Cox says:

"There is strong sentiment in favor of Mr. Merriam for Lieutenant-Governor. The people believe he should be elected on his record of reliability, sanity, economy, his policy of keeping free from political business and his advocacy of law enforcement, the Boulder Dam project, ex-soldiers' benefits, and public welfare measures. As Speaker Mr. Merriam became thoroughly acquainted with all affairs of state and he is equipped to handle State business in the most efficient manner."

ROAD CONFERENCE CALLED

Sierra Madre Meeting to Discuss Proposed Mountain Highway From Los Angeles to Monrovia

Plans for a new mountain highway from Los Angeles to Monrovia, passing through Glendale, Chevy Chase, Flintridge, Pasadena, Sierra Madre and Arcadia, will be discussed Tuesday at 8 p.m. at a meeting at the Sierra Madre Chamber of Commerce, with Robert C. Wygant, deputy county counsel, as the principal speaker. The road, proposed to be built under the Mattoon Act, will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $12,000,000 and is to be financed by local bond issues.

The meeting is to arouse public interest in the road, which is being forwarded by a committee consisting of P. J. Hayselden, chairman and representative of the civic organizations of the cities interested; W. C. Earle, City Engineer of Pasadena; John H. Johannsen, City Engineer of Glendale, H. S. Gierlich, City Engineer of Monrovia, O. A. Gierlich, City Engineer of Sierra Madre, and O. D. Reese, Deputy County Supervisor.

The routing of the proposed road is from Riverside Drive to the south entrance of Chevy Chase Estates, by a new road; thence along Linda Vista Drive over the summit of the watershed and through Flintridge, thence across the Arroyo Seco on a new concrete viaduct to Linda street, Pasadena, thence along Washington street, which is to be opened and widened, to Santa Anita avenue and the west bank of the Eton Wash; thence across another new viaduct to the Pacific Electric right of way; thence along this to Central avenue, Sierra Madre; thence, by a new road, to Santa Anita avenue in Arcadia; thence along the foot of the hills to the northern limits of Monrovia.

Deputy County Counsel Wygant, who is an engineer as well as a lawyer, is in general charge of special district proceedings, which includes the proceedings under the Mattoon Act, of which there are 132 pending at present, entailing a total expenditure of $150,000,000. Forty-nine of the projects are now before the Board of Supervisors for action.

NEW ROAD TO SEA PLANNED

Mass Meeting Called on Extension of Highland Avenue Through Baldwin Hills

With a view to taking action on a proposal to extend Highland avenue through the Baldwin Hills to the sea, plans are being made by the Highland-avenue Improvement Association for a mass meeting this month of representatives of twenty-one communities from Hollywood to Redondo, according to announcement yesterday by Mrs. Clarice MacQuarrie, official of the association. The association is working in conjunction with the Greater Highland Boulevard Association in advocating the improvement, it was pointed out.

Necessity for the extension of the thoroughfare is said to be urgent at this time because of the completion of improvements through Cahuenga Pass and because of the Los Angeles City Council's recent action providing for the widening of Highland avenue to 100 feet from the pass to Santa Monica Boulevard. The thoroughfare already has been widened from Santa Monica Boulevard south.

Completion of improvements through Cahuenga Pass already has shown its effect on traffic in Highland avenue, Mrs. MacQuarrie explained, and some relief will be afforded with the widening of Highland from the pass to Santa Monica Boulevard. However, the association official added, an outlet for this traffic to Los Angeles Harbor, which means a direct route from the rapidly developing San Fernando Valley to the sea, must be provided at the earliest possible time.

"Our plan is to have this through artery completed, or at least well under way, before the mammoth building projects already started in the proximity of Hollywood Boulevard and Highland avenue are a reality," Mrs. MacQuarrie continued. "These building projects consist of theaters, hotels, office structures and stores and with their completion the situation will be further aggravated. Added to this is the fact that numerous light manufacturing concerns have located in the vicinity of Highland and Santa Monica Boulevard within the last year and they already are crying for a more direct route to the sea and to the San Fernando Valley."

Hugh Pomeroy of the Regional Planning Commission, who is said to be strongly back of the extension proposal, probably will be the principal speaker at the mass meeting. The Greater Highland Boulevard Association has headquarters at Inglewood and it is said that it already has made provision for the extension as it pertains to that city and other communities in that vicinity.

MAHOGANY TABLE RARE EXHIBITION

Local Studio Showing Relic Declared Famed as World's Largest

Measuring sixty-seven inches in diameter and in places three and one-half inches in thickness, a table of Santa Domingo mahogany said to be the largest single piece of mahogany in the world has been placed on exhibition at the Bedford Studio, 6736 Sunset Boulevard, where it will be shown to the public for several weeks.

The huge table was made from a great mahogany tree discovered by a peon working on a coffee plantation in Central America forty years ago. Because of its tremendous value, and the circular shape in which the slab was cut from the base of the tree it received from the natives the name of the "Wheel of Fortune"—which name has since stuck for years to the finished mahogany table.

The "wheel" was hacked out in the rough as nearly round as possible, and the diameter and thickness slightly vary. The top side of the slab, however, was planed smooth and is wonderfully finished, even though today the edge bears still the marks of the machetes that hacked out the original green slab.

The base or pedestal, made from complementary pieces of mahogany from the same tree, consists of eight pillars, fourteen inches long and four and one-half inches thick at the base, tapering to four inches at the top. The pillars rest upon a huge base block which has at each of its four corners a mahogany hand-carved lion's paw spanning seven inches.

The entire piece of art woodwork weighs 330 pounds.

Sheriff to Open Substations in Current Week

The four new substations of the Sheriff's office authorized by the Board of Supervisors will be manned and in operation by the end of the week, according to an announcement made yesterday by Sheriff Traeger.

By tomorrow night telephones will be installed and the four new district headquarters placed in direct communication with the Sheriff's office in the Hall of Justice and the two stations already in operation, marking an important milestone in Sheriff Traeger's plan to completely district the county police protection, instituted when he took office.

The telephone numbers of the new stations will be made public when the stations are manned and residents of the districts are expected to call for service or assistance on the branches in their territory thereafter.

Capt. Walter M. Hotz, chief criminal deputy, in charge of the substations, yesterday made public the list of stations, their location and the deputies in charge of each, with a personnel of eight men on duty, as follows:

Station No. 1, 1557 East Florence avenue, O A. Gregg; Station No. 2, 761 McBride avenue, Belvedere Gardens, A. Koenigheim; Station No. 3, 105 North Sunset, Temple, R. M. Conly; Station No. 4, 107 North First street, Norwalk, B. R. Horton; Station No. 5, 11817 South Vermont avenue, J. W. Neighbors; Station No. 6, Newhall, Jed Stewart.

SAVANT FELICITATED

Dr. Bovard of U.S.C. Today Celebrates Seventieth Anniversary

BY ROCKWELL D. HUNT

DR. BOVARD

Dr. George Finley Bovard, president-emeritus of the University of Southern California, rounded out his three-score years and ten yesterday.

It must be with a genuine sense of satisfaction that this good man and honored fellow-citizen, enjoying the solid respect and affectionate regard of such a multitude of friends as is vouchsafed to but few, to view the abounding fruitage of his productive life while still contributing richly to the causes he holds most dear. The city of Los Angeles and the commonwealth of California owe much to him—he is one of those who deserves well of his community. On this seventieth anniversary of his birth throngs of fellow-citizens greeted him and sped him happily on his way to his next great goal—that of four score.

George Finley Bovard is a Hoosier by birth, his first home being at Alpha, Ind. The family name is easily traceable to France, whence numbers of persecuted Huguenots had fled, following the Protestant Reformation, to take refuge in Northern Ireland. George's grandfather (whose name was also George) came in 1817 to the United States and settled in a pioneer home in Ohio. James Bovard, his father, was a school-teacher, later becoming a farmer. He was a consistent Republican and a staunch Methodist; during the Civil War he ardently upheld the Union principles, and enjoyed the distinction of being with Sherman on his memorable march to the sea.

The education of George Finley Bovard was begun in the public schools of Indiana and completed in the University of Southern California—with which the Bovard name has been most intimately associated since its foundation nearly half a century ago. The first president of the university was Rev. Dr. Marian M. Bovard, the oldest member of the family, who is still gratefully remembered by many of our older citizens. Freeman D. Bovard, another brother, was for some time a leading professor. George F. was a member of the first graduating class, receiving his A.B. degree in 1884. Three years later his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of master of arts. At subsequent dates he was honored with the degree of doctor of divinity, by Willamette University, and doctor of laws, by Syracuse University.

The Bovards have been a family of teachers—and George Finley was no exception. After several years of teaching in the public schools, he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church, his first regular pastorate being at San Bernardino. His rise in the ranks of Methodist preachers was rapid; and in 1887 he was given the high station of presiding elder. From 1890 to 1897 he was superintendent of the mission of Arizona Territory, health considerations having suggested the desirability of the drier climate to be found there.

In the meantime Dr. Bovard had been elected a trustee of the University of Southern California, and it was not long till he was made president of the board. During the trying years of the university's history, when at times its very existence seemed to be at stake, he became acting president, in which capacity he proved to be a tower of strength, directing the policies of the institution until 1903, when he was formally elected president of the university. Thenceforth for two decades his name was well-nigh synonymous with that of the university itself.

In 1921, on account of health conditions and on the urgent advice of his physicians, he reluctantly relinquished his active duties—which had become very arduous—and accepted the title of president-emeritus. Thus it is clear that he has been intimately associated with the work of the university in the capacity of leadership, almost continuously throughout the course of its entire history. He has witnessed its phenomenal growth—due in generous measure to his own nourishing care and devoted labors—from a weak, struggling institution almost devoid of financial standing, to its present place of leadership among institutions of higher learning of the great Southwest. It is hardly too much to say—as indeed Dr. Von KleinSmid, the present president, has in substance repeatedly stated—that in a peculiar sense the university stands today as a monument to his utter devotion and unceasing efforts. President-Emeritus Bovard, as he rounds out his three-score years and ten, may be fully assured that he holds a high and enviable place not only in his own community, but likewise among the foremost educational leaders of the State and the Pacific Coast.

His alertness and useful activity since laying aside the active duties of administration are well attested to today. He is a member of the University Club of Los Angeles, of the Brentwood Country Club and of the Celtic Club (of which he was president in 1909.) For several years he served as president of the Historical Society of Southern California, and he is at present chairman of the executive committee of the board of governors of the great Los Angeles Museum at Exposition Park. As one man upon whom the divers political factions could cordially agree, he has been serving as chairman of the special committee on decennial reapportionment of California in accordance with the mandate of the State Constitution.

Dr. Bovard has thus rendered, and continues to render, faithful and conspicuous service in several fields of high endeavor—as a Christian minister, as a church administrator and in the broad realm of civic activity. But, take it all in all, he is best known and appreciated as the builder of the University of Southern California into a great city institution, whose name and influence have gone forth into all lands. The name, George Finley Bovard, stands in relation to the University of Southern California as does that of David Starr Jordan to Leland Stanford University and that of Benjamin Ida Wheeler to the University of California. Each of these great institutions is at present going forward, under new and conspicuous leadership, to achievements that seemed quite impossible but a short decade ago, each adds new luster to the name of the Golden State. But the commonwealth will not soon forget those who have laid the foundations—broad and deep—for the lofty superstructure whose shadow will eventually reach to the Atlantic seaboard and span the great Pacific.

Los Angeles is proud to claim President-Emeritus Bovard as her own; she greets him with grateful salutations, and wishes for him a serenely happy journey as he embarks for the next port. May the next decade be the best!

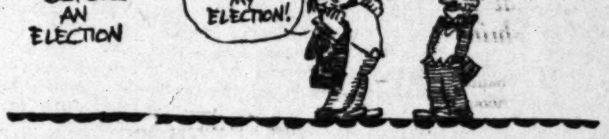
HOW VOX POPULI SOMETIMES FOOLS TRUSTING POL[illegible]CIANS

BY RALPH S. BOYESEN

Not many months ago a candidate for public office awoke from a pleasant dream and found that his mayoralty aspirations had been based upon a fundamental misconception. He had an ample number of names on his nominating petition, had nearly 100,000 pledges of confidence given at public meetings, and in addition he believed that at lease 50,000 voters had promised to "do their stuff" for him. But only a trifling number of the enthusiasts seemed able to find it convenient to stamp an X after his name on election day.

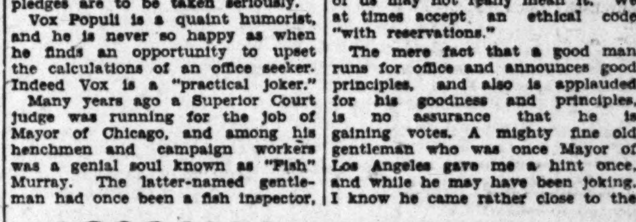
In his wrath, the unhappy office seeker gave utterance to a bit of wisdom. He is said to have announced: "There are at least 50,000 liars in Los Angeles."



The statement was good, as far as it went; but he underestimated it. There are at lease a 100,000 liars right in our midst, if we consider that signing a petition means anything or that pre-election pledges are to be taken seriously.

Vox Populi is a quaint humorist, and he is never so happy as when he finds an opportunity to upset the calculations of an office seeker. Indeed Vox is a "practical joker."

Many years ago a Superior Court judge was running for the job of Mayor of Chicago, and among his henchmen and campaign workers was a genial soul known as "Fish" Murray. The latter-named gentleman had once been a fish inspector, and certain it is that he at least knew a lot about pickled fish, dried herring and other delicacies given away with the foaming bumpers of brew that retailed at 5 cents per glass.



—AND AFTER!
WOT FRIENDS!

Mr. Murray undertook to obtain an impromptu census and to get a line on just how many persons would vote for his candidate. He was escorted by a semisecretary and cheer leader, and called at nearly every saloon in the city. Taking out a fat roll of bills he would walk up to the bar and yell: "Every man here who is going to vote for Judge ——— for Mayor, come up and have a drink!"

After that type of census was taken, it seemed certain that the rival candidate would not have a corporal's guard voting for him. Women did not vote in those days, and so there seemed nothing to worry about. But the other man won! "Fish" Murray had wasted a considerable amount of his money; but he probably did not consider all of his time wasted, as he at least had the pleasure of drinking to the health of his candidate and the prospective supporters.

The man who was elected won chiefly because he met with an accident that prevented his making any speeches whatsoever. As an orator he was horrible, and he was also very uncouth in appearance. Fortunately for him, his campaign manager did not plaster the billboards with his picture, and later he was in a railroad accident and received an awful jolt right on his Adam's apple. Being unable to oscillate that lump in his throat, he was silent. His silence passed for conservatism and wisdom, and the voters appreciated the lack of blah in his campaign. And he did turn out to be a fairly good Mayor.

Many a Los Angeles candidate could have won high public office if only some friend had hit him in the throat with a croquet mallet.

"Old Vox" sometimes mistakes silence for depth of thought. Anyway, a large number of citizens are grateful for the lack of noise.

In figuring on just what is going to happen at an election, we must always bear in mind the fact that nearly every citizen will applaud noble sentiments or glorious platitudes. Much in the same way that most of us claim to be Christians, we also claim to be altruistic and noble in our reasons for supporting any cause or candidate. But some of us may not really mean it. We at times accept an ethical code "with reservations."

The mere fact that a good man runs for office and announces good principles, and also is applauded for his goodness and principles, is no assurance that he is gaining votes. A mighty fine old gentleman who was once Mayor of Los Angeles gave me a hint once, and while he may have been joking, I know he came rather close to the facts in the circumstances herewith set forth:

We had been taking straw votes, and having a canvass made in many districts. The Mayor's campaign manager gave me what he considered a very important message, and I rushed in to deliver it. "Mayor, I have great news! Our reports show that every good citizen in Los Angeles is for you!"

I was startled when the good Mayor yanked at his hair, uttered a deep groan, and said: "Boy, we are ruined. We need a MAJORITY, not a minority!"

And now, I wonder what jokes Vox Populi is planning for this forthcoming election. I wouldn't bet a cent that we would have high tides this winter, if a politician came around with data and statistics to prove this contention to me.

East Side Republicans in Resolutions Indorse Race of ex-Police Chief

Plans for increased activity in the closing weeks of the preprimary campaign were announced yesterday from the headquarters of former Police Chief Home, candidate for Sheriff. Redoubled efforts have been assured by Capt. Home's supporters in every section of the county.

As a result of extensive organization work in the last few weeks, it was announced that Home-for-Sheriff clubs have been formed in the leading cities and towns of he county. These groups represent prominent citizens in the various communities.

Announcement was made yesterday of the indorsement of the Great East-Side Republican Club. In a letter signed by E. P. Reed, secretary of the body, it was stated that the following resolution had been adopted:

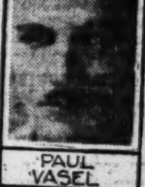
"Whereas: The committee on investigation of candidates has favorably reported on George K. Home for election to the office of Sheriff of Los Angeles county and on Jesse Guy Crain for member of the General Assembly from the Sixty-sixth Assembly District,

"Be it resolved: That this organization, the Great East-Side Republican Club, does hereby indorse said candidates for election to the aforesaid offices, and

"Be is further resolved: That we do most heartily urge every Republican on the East Side to [illegible]e every honest means and lawful endeavor to secure election to office of these candidates at the primary, and thereby assist in the reduction of the November election, and at the same time guaranteeing the future efficient management of the aforesaid offices."

Soldier of Fate Must Make Good in Films or Quit

One year to make good! That is the task imposed on Paul C. Vasel, soldier of fortune, by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation.



PAUL VASEL

Vasel has just entered on his period of probation and is making his first try at motion-picture work at Universal City. One year from now, he was told, he either must have made good or search for work elsewhere.

Vasel's colorful career is embellished with service in the military forces of many nations. He was wounded by a bomb in Silesia, has been decorated, done secret service work, served on the Inter-Allied Commission and recently won the 1926 prize for the amateur radio fan hearing the most distant European stations.

During the early part of the war, Vasel served with the German and then the Russian armies. Later, after the close of the war, he joined the British forces and served in Poland and on the British Gold Coast in Africa.

Vasel shipped to America and became a salesman. Shortly before he sailed for Europe Carl Laemmle heard of the young man's colorful career and adjudged it the perfect background for motion-picture work.

As a result Vasel is being given a year's try-out at Universal City. He has been successful in every enterprise so far.

HEAR IT POP

Possibly that funny sound heard last week was the popping of the corn belt.

MORE BIG FIGURES

Wonder if anybody has ever figured out what the per capita automobile license in this country is.

KNOCKERS

We can't believe the short-skirt fad has come to stay when so many knockers are against it—including quite a lot of knees.

LIVING "ON TIME"

They say we are living much longer now than in previous centuries. But maybe it only seems longer because so many of us are buying on installments.

GOING STRONG

President Coolidge has just rounded out three years of service in his high office and they have been safe and sane years for America, with much of the advantage accruing to the innocent taxpayer.

ROLLING HER OWN

A New York girl was arrested for rolling her stockings on the street. If this isn't another blow at personal liberty, what is it? Seems that a girl can show her legs, but she must not call attention to them.

THE MALT MARKET

The government admits that the sale of malt in this country has increased nearly 50 per cent in the last four years, but how come? Are some of the boys using it to shave with? Or are the home brewers still plying their infamous art?

EFFICIENCY

Perhaps one reason why so many more people are buying motor cars than are buying homes nowadays is that they figure they can use their cars all day and part of the night, while they can only use their homes the other part of the night.

HAVING A HOME

Los Angeles is the fourth city in the Union in the number of houses. There are over 250,000 of them and not as many of them are for sale as there used to be. The citizen who has a home in Los Angeles and has it paid for is bulwarked against the harshest pangs of adversity.

DIFFERENCE IN DICTATORS

King Albert is the virtual dictator of Belgium, but he was pinched the other day for speeding on his motorcycle. It is hard to imagine what would happen to a cop who sought to stay the pace of Mussolini in Italy. Albert submitted with smiling grace. It is certain that Mussolini would not smile. There is a difference in dictators.

RISING TAXES

Taxes on real estate for the entire country were increased an average of 5.31 per cent last year. This is mainly because of local demands. Municipal expenditures have been mounting and assessments have had to be boosted everywhere. Were it not for a few hardworking executives like President Coolidge and Gov. Richardson the conditions would be much worse.

THE COAL PASSERS

An eastern judge has ruled that it is not cruelty if the wife is compelled to tend to the family furnace and keep it filled with coal. If the husband can provide the fuel it is no tragedy if the wife be expected to carry it in. It is evident that a great deal of domestic peace is saved by living in California where this form of bickering cannot well rise.

ROUNDABOUT WAY

Another eminent physician in Vienna is reported as performing some remarkable cures. When he has a patient suffering from or afflicted by paralysis he exposes him to the bite of flocks of blood-thirsty mosquitoes. As a result a high case of malaria will be developed in the blood. He says that malaria cures the paralysis. The tainted blood flows freely and then the alert doctor gets busy and cures the malaria. He is reported as a wonder on malaria, but not so good on paralysis, and so he sets one to working on the other. There may be something to it, but the guy with his system loaded with malaria is not singing with joy.

STILL GOING STRONG

The institution of marriage as it has been known for some centuries doesn't seem to fit in the modern picture. This is a conclusion that has been traced to recent pronouncements of H. G. Wells. The author and scientist says that it may be all right for the world's peasantry, but now that men and women of brains and talent are having separate careers the idea of being tied up for life through the medium of a wedding ring must grate on many sensitive souls. It does seem so for a fact. At any rate, the divorce courts have plenty of business. At the same time, a great many young women who are figuring on careers are not at all averse to having a wedding as one of the ingredients. It has become quite a fad to poke fun at marriage and present it as the resort of simple minds, but it will take ages and ages of bedevilment to blot it out of existence.

ILLOGICAL CANDIDACIES

Nicholas Murray Butler's views on prohibition do not agree with those of a majority of his fellow-countrymen, but there will be few dissenters from a seven-word dictum he uttered a few days ago when he landed from Europe. It contains, in fact, a whole political philosophy.

Asked if he were not a "logical candidate" for Governor of New York, Butler replied, "Candidates are not the result of logic."

More has seldom been said in so few syllables; and illustrations of his point are so many they are hardly needed. Logic would have dictated recently the retention of Senator Pepper by Pennsylvania, of Cummins by Iowa, but the voters were not feeling logical. A logical voting public would escape the wiles of the panaceists always, instead of merely part of the time; the panaceists win often enough, in fact, to lead to the suspicion that when they are defeated chance plays a large part in the result.

This does not apply, of course, to panaceists who have been tried; their failure is usually sufficiently manifest to insure their swift retirement from political view.

There is no logic, for instance, in the candidacy of C. C. Young for chief executive of this State. Though a panaceist, he is not in the untried class; his record is plain for all to see and it contains nothing but a political lifetime of subserviency to Boss McCabe and Hiram Johnson; of membership in a machine which had all but wrecked California with its extravagance when the State was rescued by Gov. Richardson and placed on a firm financial footing by his economy program. One of Young's panaceas at present is the Socialistic $500,000,000 initiative, misnamed to indicate that it has something to do with water and electric power, while in truth the water is intended to irrigate the McCabe machine and the power to be of the political variety. Logic would have dictated that this "issue," twice beaten by the voters, the second time by an increased majority, should have been thrown into the scrap pile where it belongs.

Nor is there logic in the campaigns of those who oppose Senator Shortridge. The leading candidate seeking his toga shows what he thinks of the public welfare by paying no attention whatever to the post he now holds, that of member of the Los Angeles Harbor Board, and by admitting that he does not know what the harbor board is doing about important matters, nor why. He offers no reason why Shortridge, tried, hardworking and influential member of the Senate, with a long record of achievement for the benefit of the State, should be displaced by a man whose standing in Washington would be that of a member [illegible] the discredited Johnson organization.

T[illegible] dictates of logic require that both Ric[illegible]on and Shortridge should be reno[illegible]d and re-elected without opposition [illegible]ad of having to fight for the privilege[illegible] continuing to give the public good se[illegible]

C[illegible]TING CANCER

[illegible]m Berlin comes a report of medical res[illegible] into the causes of cancer that gives cause for hope that the ravages of this dread disease may finally be successfully checked. According to Prof. Warburg of the Kaiser Institute, cancer is not a germ disease; it is the result or the effect of the strangulation of human cells, thereby changing their normal functions and causing them to grow abnormally.

Strangulation results from cutting off the normal supply of oxygen. Most of the cells affected perish, but some continue to live; and the defective cells, instead of burning the sugar of the blood into carbon and water, turn it into lactic acid, thereby causing the abnormal growth.

The experts of the Kaiser Institute assert that they have established, through repeated experiments that there is no difference between artificially strangled cells and the cancer cells.

"Knowledge is power." Once the nature of a disease is definitely ascertained the way is prepared for prevention and cure. Cancer is one of the few maladies that has, to the present, yielded nothing to scientific research. Years of time and millions of money have been expended seeking to discover the cancer germ; and the fact that such investigation has failed utterly adds to the presumption that the germ is really nonexistent.

But it is one thing to establish that cancer is the result of poison spread by poisoned cells and a vastly different thing to discover how to prevent this strangulation. Medical experts have reached the conviction that cancer is not a communicable disease, which in itself is a blessing. Once the victims were isolated, but that is no longer advisable. Members of the sufferer's family can care for the victim without risk of contracting the disease.

It is possible that a method of treatment may be discovered whereby the formation of the lactic acid can be prevented and operations will no longer be necessary. The magic result attained by modern medical scientists in combating other maladies encourages one to hope that they will be able to bring cancer, too, under control.

The present generation has seen the practical elimination of yellow fever, a malady that once counted its victims by the tens of thousands during every summer season. If it should also discover how to combat cancer it will have achieved two triumphs which will endear it to posterity, despite the folly of the World War and the cruelties and insanities of Communism.

No other generation has accomplished so much in preserving the health of peoples and lengthening the span of life; and this is an achievement of more practical value to civilization than merely amassing wealth or winning battles.

ON CLIMATE

There is more climate in California than anywhere else in the world. Back in New England they have werther. Mark Twain said, "I reverently believe that the Maker who makes us all makes everything in New England but the weather."

He says, "There is a sumptuous variety about New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration—and regret." They have fifty-seven varieties within a few hours.

Weather produces rheumatism, backache, spasms and an urgent desire to hurry to California. In some respects weather is what has produced California—by counter-irritation.

With climate drawing and weather driving, how could California help being the great State she is! The only time our climate "acts up" is when the Shriners or the editors come. This may be classified, however, as unself-conscious influence.

Outside of these infrequent episodes our climate has continuance. It is like the flavor that has made Catalina. You start out in the good old summer time with nothing but hope and a flivver. There is no danger of encountering anything but climate.

Picnics are secure in appointments and program. Football games may rest assured of climate that will make it warm for the easterners on New Year's. This gives them a good sweat and an alibi.

Climate made California. Later oil and Mary Pickford were discovered; but climate has the credit for starting it.

Climate has a peculiar effect upon back-easterners. It seems to inflame chambers of commerce to pass resolutions for folks to stay home and patronize home-grown weather.

Technically speaking, our climate rises in the morning in a negligee of scarlet drapes, traipses around all day in sport clothes and sinks to rest in a nightdress of incredible Arizona colors, all edged with a fringe of fluff of liquid poetry along the coast.

The California brand appears to have an opiate that makes folks forget the time of year. January seems like June and June is as likely as not to be a replica of January. You have to watch your step to keep up with the calendar.

If anyone would have climate to burn he may retire to the Imperial and satisfy all longings. If he would have winter in all its savagery he may climb to Big Bear and freeze his nose and his toes as he did in Michigan.

If he would have the slightest variation he may move a mile and secure his kind. There are as many grades and shades as there are canyons and mesas.

The only drawback to climate is Einstein's theory of relativity. There is hardly enough of the unpleasant and adverse to make one appreciative.

MUST HAVE A CAR

Keen desire to possess a motor car led a Tulare youth to ruin and death. In order to secure money with which to purchase the car he is said to have forged his father's name to a check, by this means obtaining possession of a trust fund left to him by his grandmother, his father being the trustee. When his misdoing was discovered he committed suicide.

Isolated though this case may be, it is indicative of the prevalent mania of impecunious young persons to own and drive automobiles. This strong desire is seen in the many cut-down flivvers, trundling along the road, minus fenders or windshields and often being little less than an engine, a frame, four wheels and an improvised seat. It would seem that among the youth of the day it is anything for a motor ride.

Cars are stolen by reckless youth every week in this city merely for joy rides, the thieves afterward leaving them in byways, where they are found by the police and returned to their owners. This shows what great risks young fellows will take for the transient satisfaction of a brisk run out to the beach or into the country—risks which more sober and discerning people would consider far from commensurate with the pleasure thus enjoyed.

Motoring is a wholesome pastime under ordinary circumstances and conditions, but when it becomes such a craze as to involve one in what may easily prove serious and even tragic consequences it would be far better if, instead of taking such desperate risks just to enjoy the use of an automobile, one trudged along afoot. To the youth such a ride affords but a poor start on life's roadway.

CANNED GOODS

An authority in the New York Medical Society says that the process of canning really increases the nutritive value of most foods that are thus put up. You can get more vitamines in a can than in the raw. Bring on your openers!

It Won't Hurt Us Half as Much as It Will Hurt Him

TOOTH TROUBLES

It will be recalled that Gen. Pershing returned from a diplomatic mission in South America to have his teeth fixed. He won a big war; but the Tacna-Arica squabble was too much for him.

Now it seems that Cornelius Vanderbilt IV has gone to France for a rest and to have his teeth examined. So says Time, a weekly magazine of Cleveland, O.

The two gentlemen with dental trouble appear to have gotten together in Paris, for follows this statement: "Gen. Pershing, arriving in France to inspect war monuments, cemeteries and battlefields, had motored up from Cherbourg to Paris with his young friend of prewar days." Possibly toothache made them pals.

Almost everything is blamed on the teeth in these days. If a man have ingrowing toenails he is hurried to the dentist to have his teeth pulled to make him forget his toes.

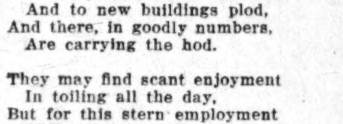
If there be marital trouble anywhere an X-ray of the jaw is taken to bring about an amicable settlement. If a tongue or two instead of teeth could be extracted it might help. However this advice is gratuitous, not expert.

When a statesman cannot straighten up a diplomatic situation between two belligerents he gets a new plate in his mouth to bridge over the matter and save his face.

A dentist nowadays must be able to keep a string of newspapers afloat or show cause why. It takes teeth to jazz up the subscription list and convince the public that advertising pays. Everything has to have teeth.

The United States took a long chance in sending Benjamin Franklin to France to get help for the Revolution without first looking into his mouth. Unwittingly his teeth must have been in first-class condition.

Theodore Roosevelt had a good set of teeth. He also fixed up several matters between nations. Once newspaper men thought it was the nose for news that made things go. Now we find it is the teeth!



THE MENACE TO LEARNING

By James J. Montague.

Young lads upon vacation
Who papa's dollars spurn,
And seek a situation
Their bread a while to earn,
Rise early from their slumbers
And to new buildings plod,
And there, in goodly numbers,
Are carrying the hod.

They may find scant enjoyment
In toiling all the day,
But for this stern employment
They get ten bucks a day;
A wage which all their knowledge
When some ensuing spring
The graduate from college
Will probably not bring.

If, while they're on vacation,
Such riches they attain,
They may deem education
As futile and in vain,
And, campuses eschewing,
Professors may defy,
And stick to what they're doing
And gain great wealth thereby.

If such ambitions claim them,
If learning is forgot,
One cannot justly blame them
For money helps a lot.
A woeful retrogression
They'd find it was to seek
A start in some profession
At five or six a week.

A GLORIOUS ERA

BY BAILEY MILLARD

Sometimes I become so resentful of the petty flings at the Victorian period from people who fancy themselves cultured and advanced that I cannot suppress an impatient retort, at the risk of being deemed hopelessly doddering and out of date.

It has become common among these latter-day Pharisees, many of whom would like to have you think they are Bohemian and a bit devilish, to make scornful reference to something or other as "mid-Victorian," as if that were the last word to be said in dispraise of it. These are the people who are continually alluding to "the intelligentsia" and fancy they belong to it, who talk about "female pluchritude" instead of beauty and sprinkle their speech with references to the psychology of this, that or the other.

To me the term "mid-Victorian" does not stand for old-fogyism, mediocrity or crudity, though this sophomoric set would have you think that it does and that its own wisdom far exceeds that of the people who lived, wrote, painted or sculped in that lavendered era.

It is true that there were near-authors, near-poets and near-artists in the period so contemptuously characterized, but to say of one of their productions, "Oh, that's mid-Victorian!" as if nothing crude or shallow were presented by the writers or artists of these days, seems to me a stupid observation.

In the sense in which it generally is used "mid-Victorian" is not confined to Anglican application. It covers American as well as European ideas, affairs and productions during the middle period of the reign of Queen Victoria, which was of sixty-four years' duration, and the central score of which was from 1859 to 1879. In my opinion, this was a glorious era and one not to be scoffed at. During that time Tennyson, Swinburne, Browning, Whitman, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier, Carlyle, Emerson and Thoreau were producing some of their best poems and essays. To be sure, there were not in those days, as now, so many writers of raggedy, rhymeless, rhythmless verse presented as poetry, though most of it is nothing but prose, and poor prose, at that, but there were far more true and memorable bards.

Tennyson wrote his beautiful "Idylls of the King" and his noble poem of "Lucretius" during that period, also "Crossing the Bar," though this throbbing lyric was not published until he had reached his decline. This and Browning's "Ring and Book" and "Rabbi Ben Ezra" were all mid-Victorian, and so was Carlyle's "Frederick the Great" and Emerson's "Conduct of Life" and "Society and Solitude."

Most of the inspired utterances of Lincoln, Gladston and Disraeli also were mid-Victorian. And in soldierly deeds there were those of Grant, Lee and Garibaldi.

Hugo, De Maupassant, Tolstoi, Eliot and Hardy wrote most of their famous fiction in those times, as did Mark Twain, the world's greatest humorist, while Channing, Spurgeon, Beecher and Wendell Phillips delivered their inspired sermons and orations.

In science there was the work of Agassiz, the famous naturalist, and that of Darwin, Spencer and Huxley, as well as of Field, the cable-layer, and the beginnings of Edison's great discoveries. In California Stanford, Huntington and Crocker built their railroad across the Sierras. Hoe was perfecting his cylinder press, Morse his telegraph, and Dana, Child, Bennett and Greeley were launching their editorial thunderbolts. All, if you please, in the mid-Victorian era.

In operatic music what has the present generation produced to equal the work of Wagner or Verdi or Gounod? It was mid-Victorian. And so was that of Brahms, Liszt, Grieg and Rubinstein. In opera bouffe who in later years has surpassed Gilbert and Sullivan or Offenbach or Lecoq? What waltzes have been written to compare with those of Strauss? All mid-Victorian.

What soprano singers has this age to compare with Patti, Albani or Lind, what basso to equal Formes? True, among tenors, Caruso, who was not mid-Victorian, was superb, but so also was Campanini, a far better actor, whose greatest triumphs were in that earlier period, and then there were Nicolini, De Reszke and Reeves, all mid-Victorian.

As for actors, whom has this age seen in any way comparable to Booth? And do not all the old-timers pity a generation that could not witness the tremendous playacting of Irving, DeBelleville, Barrett, Forrest, McCullough, Jefferson and Keane? What a glorious galaxy—all of the period in question!

Among the artists were Burne-Jones, Millais, Bierstadt, Inness, Vedder, Whistler, Bonheur, Dore, Meissonier, Bouguereau and Millet. Great names!

Let these lesser luminaries of this lesser age of art, literature and drama be held up for admiration as high as the callow critics of the time may please to elevate them. Let juvenile judges, typing their scornful screeds for the reviews, prate of the mediocrity of the middle era of Victoria's reign all they may. Considering the number of the really great men and women of those days and the high quality of their work, what more glorious age in the world's history has there been than the much-maligned mid-Victorian period?

The trouble is that in this whirligig age, so full of headlong egoists and superficial judges, little study is given by the average person to art, literature or music. Half of those who so glibly repeat the phrase "mid-Victorian" do not realize what it represents. For art these feeble-minded ones accept an impressionistic daub, for music dissonant jazz and for literature the verse of Vachel Lindsay and such inane or smutty novels as "Babbitt" and "The Green Hat."

How Whisky Smugglers Buy and Land Cargoes

Well-Organized Groups Engaged in Desperate Game of Rum-Running

BY ALBERT NATHAN

Bootleggers Can Boast

This series or articles, the most complete and remarkable expose of the huge Southern California rum-running business ever published, comprises facts, names and details well known to every experienced prohibition enforcement officer in this area. In fact, many of the details set forth hereinafter were secured at first hand from the rum-runners themselves. To the natural and immediate question: "If these facts are known and these men themselves admit and even boast of their criminal activities, why are they not in jail?" the answer is to be found in the extraordinary difficulties in the way of securing convictions under our present legal requirements. To convict, say, the Cornero brothers of violation of the Volstead Act, it is not sufficient to produce witnesses who have heard them tell of their exploits and of the thousands they have made by booze-running. They must actually be caught red-handed and the direct relation between themselves and an illegal shipment of liquor established. Of course they are never so caught and probably never will be. It is their hired men who are—not too often—captured and jailed or fined. The troubles of the authorities in this regard will be gone into in detail in a subsequent article, which will describe some of the desperate resorts to which they were finally forced in their war on the booze-runners.—[Ed. Times.

VERY little romance and a great deal of hard business appears in the record of how the 150,000 cases of Scotch whisky smuggled yearly into Southern California arrives over our beaches.

Outstanding among the rum-runners are the "Big Four," so known each of the four men operates on such a large scale that they can afford to their own ships, trucking equipment, and hire "mobs" large enough and tough to protect their wares.

Cornero, Melvin Schouweiler, Black Tony Paragini, sometimes known as Tony Foster, and Nard make up the "Big Four." Each of these men has a small fortune and all have thousands of cases of high Scotch whisky in Southern California. They say so themselves.

Perhaps the largest single whisky importer in the southern part of the State is Tony Cornero, handsome young Italian, just into his thirties, able lieutenant in his brother Frank Cornero. Also a of others who assist him smuggling his whisky, protecting it and finding a market.

Tony Cornero owns all of his shipment according to his own. Exclusive of a schooner which can carry than 7000 cases per trip, owns a fleet of trucks, "spot" for storage, and number of fast shore boats. equipment is listed by other runners at $105,000, exclusive of the ship.

In common with most of the large importers Cornero buys his whisky in Vancouver, B.C., from the Consolidated Exporters of Canada. He ships on own steamer which has borne many names, the latest of which

With from six to seven thousand cases of whisky on board, paid for in cash by Cornero in Canada, or to the Consolidated in this city, the vessel clears northern port for some port in or Central America. Off of Southern California coast the ship is unloaded and smuggled the beach.

After Tony Cornero in the local comes Melvin Schouweiler and "Black Tony" Paragini, alias. These two operate often together and were together responsible for the appearance off the southern coast of the S.S. Chris Muller, loaded with 60,000 cases of Scotch. This ship was reported in February, 1925, in about three months Paragini and Schouweiler, assisted by, landed every case of the Together these two men and their "mob" are credited with having landed and sold almost as much whisky in the local market as Cornero. Their methods of operation, however, are different and their equipment not as extensive.

Schouweiler is known among other rum runners as a "promoter." That is, he promotes in smuggled Scotch by forming a local syndicate among friends and other small operators and then buys the whisky in Canada, buys or charters a boat and then runs the whisky into the market. Profits are split according to the amount invested by the various members of the syndicate.

Schouweiler does not always buy in Canada. In the case of the huge shipment arriving on the Chris Muller the whisky was purchased in England, shipped to China and reshipped to the United States.

Along with some of his friends and business associates Schouweiler organized some time ago an exporting company known as the Western Freighters. The company was organized in Canada and operates without assistance or connection with the Consolidated. For a time the S.S. Prince Albert, one of the best-known rum steamers, was owned by this company.

"Black Tony" Paragini, often found connected with Schouweiler, sometimes operates alone and again is found connected at times with importers of whisky from San Francisco. Black Tony's deals are extensive and he can be found as often in the north as in this city.

Bill Nard, the fourth member of the "Big Four," hails from San Francisco and points north and for the past few weeks has been busy with the Malahat, a five-masted schooner owned by the Consolidated. Nard owned the last load brought to this coast in the Malahat and unloaded here for local consumption

After the "Big Four" comes a long list of lesser lights, sometimes riding the crest of the wave of prosperity and sometimes nearly broke. Among them are numbered Walter South, owner of his own speed boats and sometimes in the market for a whole shipload of whisky; Paul Payne, also known as Paul Rubio; Tom Murphy, alias Clubfoot Murphy, Joe Parrienti, Jake Woight, Joe Ferris and a few others.

No matter who owns a particular load of whisky purchased in Vancouver from the Consolidated, Western Freighters or an independent broker the same general method is used to clear the shipment from the Northern port and to smuggle it into Southern California.

First and foremost with the whisky ring every thing and every deal must be paid for in cash in American money. If the shipment is owned by the Consolidated or some other company and sold over the rail of the vessel the money payment is made on shore to the ship's agent. If the load is owned by a local dealer the payment is made in cash in Canada or to the agent here before shipment.

The method used to obtain proper ship's papers is simple and only takes plenty of cash and a little time. When a shipment is loaded in Vancouver with the shipment consigned to some dealer in a Mexican or Central American port the ship's papers are mailed to an agent representing the Consolidated in the port to which the vessel is clearing. Officials in the pay of the whisky smugglers clear the papers delivered to them by mail just as if the vessel were in port, and then mail them back.

With his papers all in order before he sails the captain of the vessel then appears off the coast of California and unloads to the smugglers. With an empty ship he then returns to his home port and has a fine set of regular papers to hand the Canadian officials showing that he entered and cleared from the port to which his Canadian papers show he sailed. So much for the papers.

With the liquor vessel once off the Southern California coast and ready to unload, owners of the whisky are notified by wireless in code. Then land "mobs" are gathered, speed boats are made ready, trucks are gathered and on some dark night the speed boats meet the mother vessel anywhere from thirty to sixty miles off shore. In five and six hundred-case lots the whisky is run in the smaller boats to a point just outside the breakers, transferred to small boats and pushed up on the beach. Men armed with everything from revolvers to machine guns guard all approaches and the whisky is piled into the trucks which one by one melt away into the darkness. The whisky does not come in the old-fashioned wooden boxes but is sewed in burlap, twelve bottles to a package.

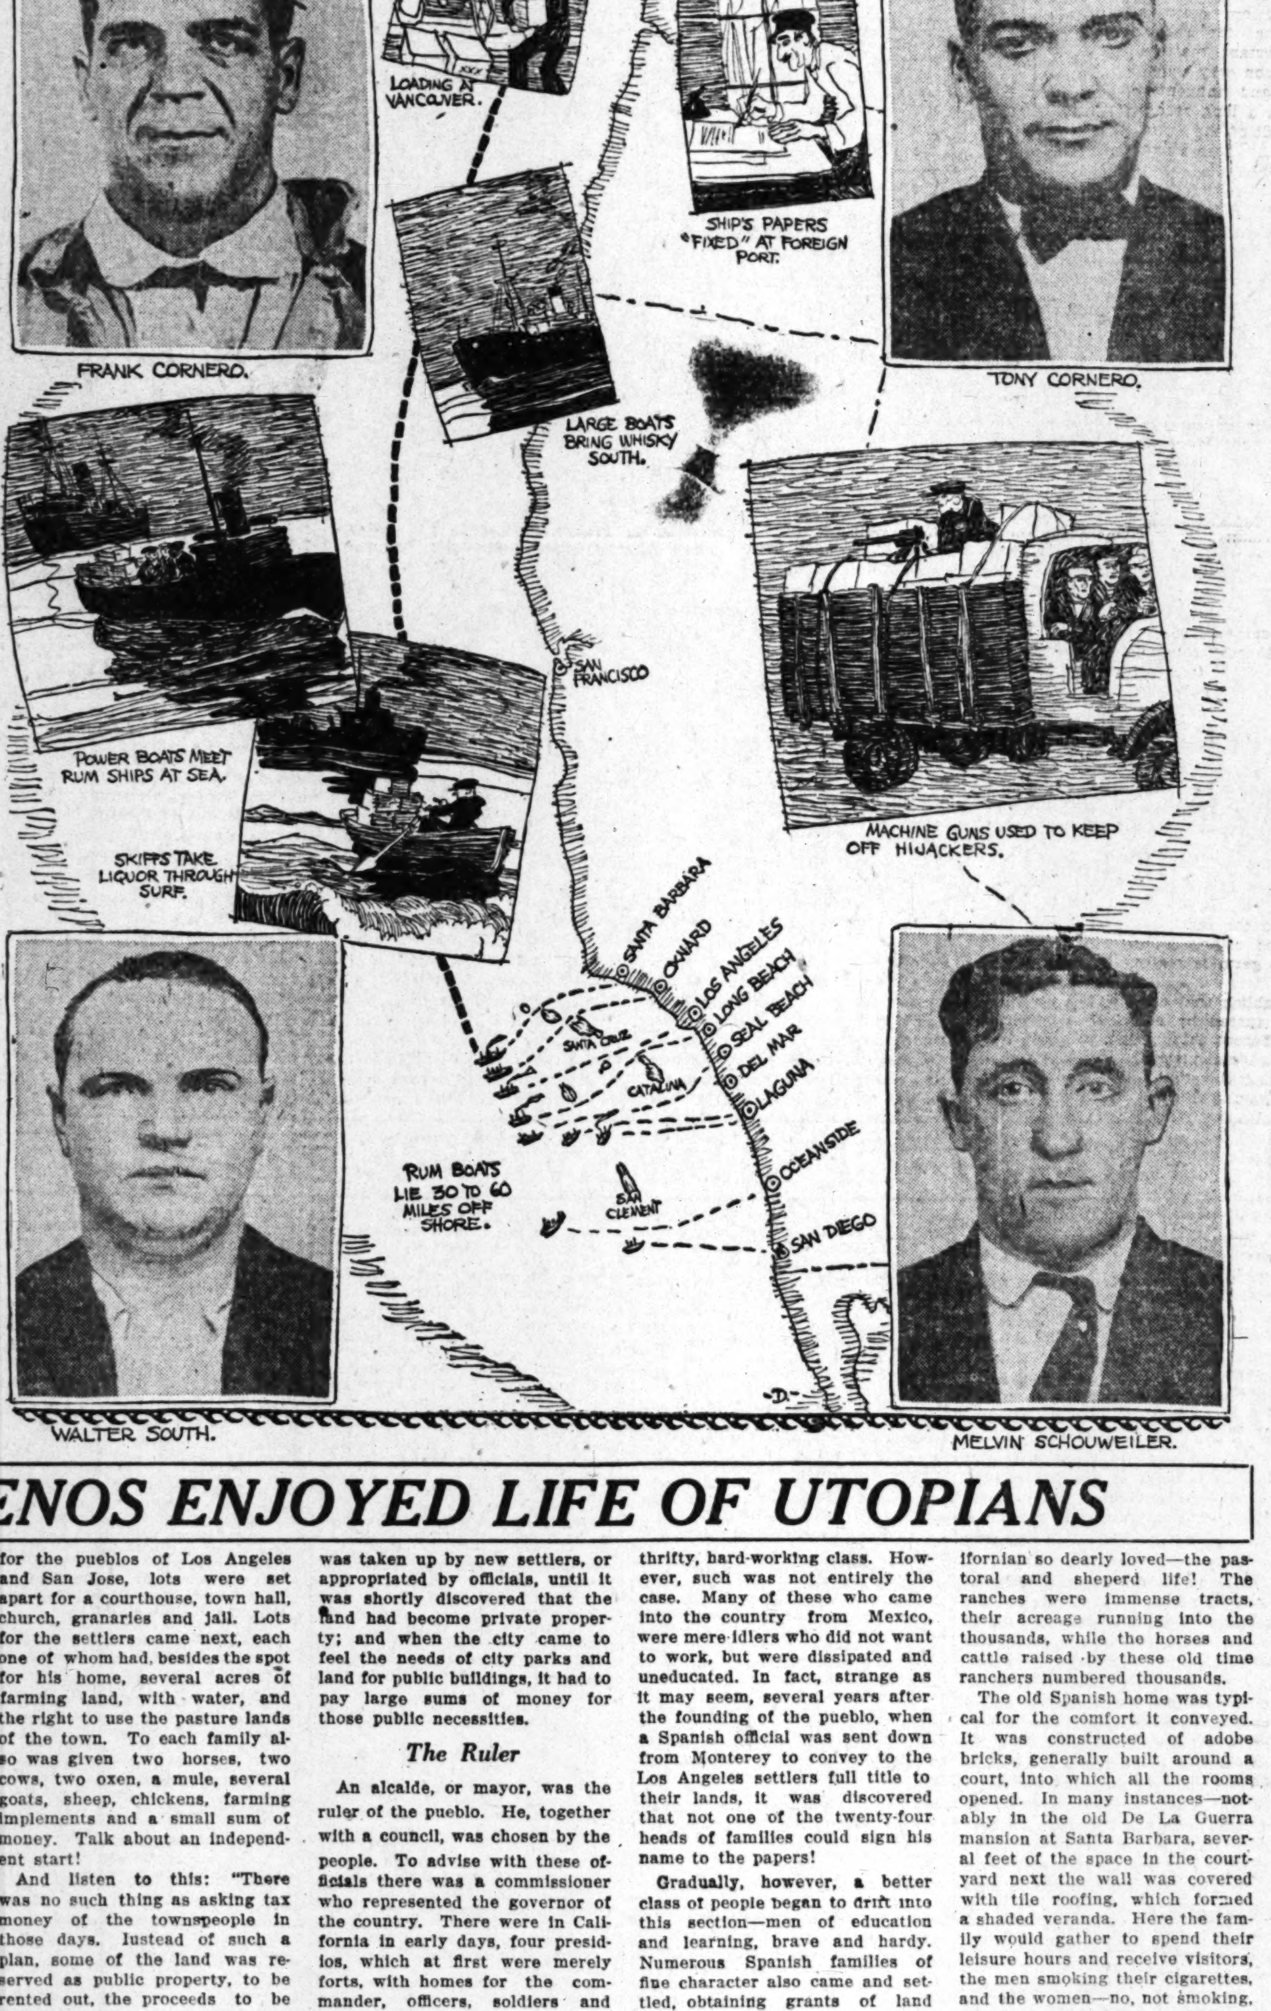
In every case a great deal of "greasing" or bribery is resorted to by the smugglers when a load is about to be landed. Minor local officials must be taken care of, owners of landing "spots" must be fixed, persons living near storage "spots" must be paid, often peace officers are engaged to ride the loads to town at $100 each and everybody with whom the rum runners have any contact at all must be taken care of. The affair is expensive. Hence the price of whisky on the open market.

Good, pure Scotch whisky may be purchased in Canada at $15 a case. About fifty cents to one dollar is added as the price of the clearance papers. Boat crews must be paid where the ship is owned by the importer and charters must be settled when the boat is the property of the exporter. In all, under the best of conditions, it costs about $20 to land a case of $15 whisky in a "spot" within the city limits of Los Angeles. This price does not include breakage, loss by being forced to throw a load overboard to escape capture, hijackers and the graft in whisky demanded by dishonest officials. The importers at present are getting from $45 to $50 a case for their whisky.

At present along the Pacific Coast south of San Francisco the following ships are known to be operating: The Malahat, a five-masted schooner; the Principo, a steamer; the Prince Albert, a small steamer, and about four smaller schooners.

Most of the whisky is smuggled through at Oxnard, Seal Beach, Del Mar, Oceanside, Laguna, Santa Barbara and points near Long Beach. Very little liquor is brought into the south through the official ports, although one or two large shipments have been sailed right into San Pedro and landed over the docks.

[This is the second of a series of inside stories about rum-runners who import whisky into Southern California and the gangsters and hijackers with which they contend. The next article dealing with the hijackers and how they war with the smugglers will appear next Sunday. It will give some of the facts behind the murders which have been incidental to this feud, a recent example of which cost two lives last week.—Ed.]



EARLY ANGELENOS ENJOYED LIFE OF UTOPIANS

E. A. Brininstool

WAY back in the early days of Southern California, long before the present mad jazz of clanging trolleys, tooting, autos, bustling throngs the cut-throat game of "money, who's got the money?" people who then inhabited this section were simple in their and wants, lived much out, and were a healthy, happy and certainly a contented people.

An Ideal Life

were the days of real living in a land of balmy air, soft, skies and gentle seas, inhabitants were a happy-go-lucky lot, indifferent to money, their neighbors as themselves and carried their religion into their daily lives, with its joys and sorrows. was the ideal existence!

Governor Felipe de Neve was a man, interested in people and in making their not one of hardships, but of pleasures. He it was who laid out the Pueblo of Los Angeles.

While the present plaza is, at this time, far from being the center, either of the business or social life of Los Angeles, when Governor de Neve laid out the pueblo, the spot chosen for the plaza was selected with a view that it should not be too far from good grazing lands suitable for the settlers' stock. There is no question but that in those days, horses grazed up and down the present site of Broadway; the family cow cropped the herbage along the present confines of Spring street, while the pet saddle stock raced back and forth in mad glee where Hill street sky-scrapers now rear their heads. There were no $12,000-per-front-foot business lots, nor did real estate agents, with auto busses, beseech one in imploring tones to "be our guests for the day" on a trip down the San Fernando Valley or elsewhere.

When the plazas were laid out for the pueblos of Los Angeles and San Jose, lots were set apart for a courthouse, town hall, church, granaries and jail. Lots for the settlers came next, each one of whom had, besides the spot for his home, several acres of farming land, with water, and the right to use the pasture lands of the town. To each family also was given two horses, two cows, two oxen, a mule, several goats, sheep, chickens, farming implements and a small sum of money. Talk about an independent start!

And listen to this: "There was no such thing as asking tax money of the townspeople in those days. Instead of such a plan, some of the land was reserved as public property, to be rented out, the proceeds to be used for the expenses of the government." At that time, Los Angeles had large tracts of this land near what was then the center of town, which belonged to the city government. However, as the place thrived and grew, this land was taken up by new settlers, or appropriated by officials, until it was shortly discovered that the land had become private property; and when the city came to feel the needs of city parks and land for public buildings, it had to pay large sums of money for those public necessities.

The Ruler

An alcalde, or mayor, was the ruler of the pueblo. He, together with a council, was chosen by the people. To advise with these officials there was a commissioner who represented the governor of the country. There were in California in early days, four presidios, which at first were merely forts, with homes for the commander, officers, soldiers and their families. All were ruled by a commanding officer or "commandante."

One might naturally infer that with all the gifts of free land, stock and cash, the class of settlers who would be attracted to thrifty, hard-working class. However, such was not entirely the case. Many of these who came into the country from Mexico, were mere idlers who did not want to work, but were dissipated and uneducated. In fact, strange as it may seem, several years after the founding of the pueblo, when a Spanish official was sent down from Monterey to convey to the Los Angeles settlers full title to their lands, it was discovered that not one of the twenty-four heads of families could sign his name to the papers!

Gradually, however, a better class of people began to drift into this section—men of education and learning, brave and hardy. Numerous Spanish families of fine character also came and settled, obtaining grants of land from the government and buying cattle from the herds out at San Gabriel Mission, after which they started in to stock-raising on an extensive scale.

And then began the real life of happiness which the old-time Californian so dearly loved—the pastoral and sheperd life! The ranches were immense tracts, their acreage running into the thousands, while the horses and cattle raised by these old time ranchers numbered thousands.

The old Spanish home was typical for the comfort it conveyed. It was constructed of adobe bricks, generally built around a court, into which all the rooms opened. In many instances—notably in the old De La Guerra mansion at Santa Barbara, several feet of the space in the courtyard next the wall was covered with tile roofing, which formed a shaded veranda. Here the family would gather to spend their leisure hours and receive visitors, the men smoking their cigarettes, and the women—no, not smoking, but chatting the latest pueblo gossip, while the children played and sang happily.

Those were indeed the happy times! In the balmy summer evenings, sweet strains of Spanish music from violin, guitar or mandolin filled the air, while old Spanish love songs, in dreamy, rhythmic cadence, drifted out through the latticed windows, and the hard-packed earthen floor resounded to the ta[illegible] of the daintily slippered f[illegible] the women and the jingle [illegible]er spurs worn by the caba[illegible], as the young merry-ma[illegible] whirled about in the mazes [illegible]he graceful Spanish waltz. Ah, yes, those were days of delightful happiness, when cares were few, burdens light and life one round of gayety and pleasure!

An Early Riser

The old-time Californian was an early riser. The first peep of the rising sun found him up and doing. Nor were the youngsters allowed to lie abed as in this age of laziness and languor. No excuse, aside from illness, would be countenanced for remaining abed after sunrise.

Once out of bed, the first thing was morning devotion—the Alba—e beautiful prayer of thanksgiving for care through the night, and a plea for assistance and protection throughout the day just at hand.

The morning meal was simple, consisting chiefly of the tortilla, with coffee. One might infer that the making of tortillas for a large family of hungry Spanish youngsters, might be on a par with the buckwheat days of back East. The making of the tortilla was a real art. The meal was made into a small cake of dough about the size of one's fist. It was then spatted out flat and thin by a dextrous tossing from one hand to the other until they were little thicker than a sheet of cardboard. They were then tossed on a hot griddle or stove-lid by a peculiar twist of the wrist. Only a second or two was necessary to bake them.

After the meal, the "padrone" or head of the house, would mount his horse, generally most richly decorated with a silver-mounted saddle and bridle, jingling silver spurs, and with lariat suspended on the right-hand tie-strap, start out with his foreman (or segundo) to ride over the estate, looking after his cattle and noting if his vaqueros were doing their work properly.

The Inspection

One Spanish family residing in the southern part of California had sixteen sons, all over six feet in height, who used to accompany their father on his daily inspection of the ranch. In those days large families were common—and generally they were happy and contented—despite the fact that autos were undreamed of, picture shows scores of years in the future, and there was no desire to "get out and make a night of it." The old-time California father and mother always knew where their youngsters were at nightfall.

As the boys of the family developed, they took to the saddle as naturally as a duck to water. From infancy this constituted a part of the daily training. Every youngster had his own saddle-horse—in fact, they were so cheap that there was no excuse for the poorest not having at least one riding animal, just as the poorest families of this day and age must own at least one "tin Lizzie."

The great event of the year was the annual roundup or "rodeo." Then the cattle were gathered on the ranges, driven to a central point for the purpose of cutting out and branding the calves and counting the stock or otherwise disposing of certain of them.

The Round-Up

The ranch owner with all his vaqueros was always in attendance at these rodeos, as the cattle from each ranch must be cut out and the young stock marked with the owner's brand. In early days there was no such thing as attempting to change a brand or "rustle" stock belonging to others. All such trickery and knavery was instigated by the white settler who came later.

The wildest excitement prevailed at these rodeos, and there was much good-natured rivalry between riders and ropers. The dexterity of some of these old Californians with the riata was little short of marvelous. Another feat which was considered the height of vaquero perfection, was to seize an unruly steer by the tail, on the dead run, wrap the tail about the saddle horn, at the same time spurring the horse forward or to one side violently. This would, if the trick were rightly performed, throw the steer heavily on its back. Today this old trick of the early-day Californian is well-nigh a lost art in cowboy life.

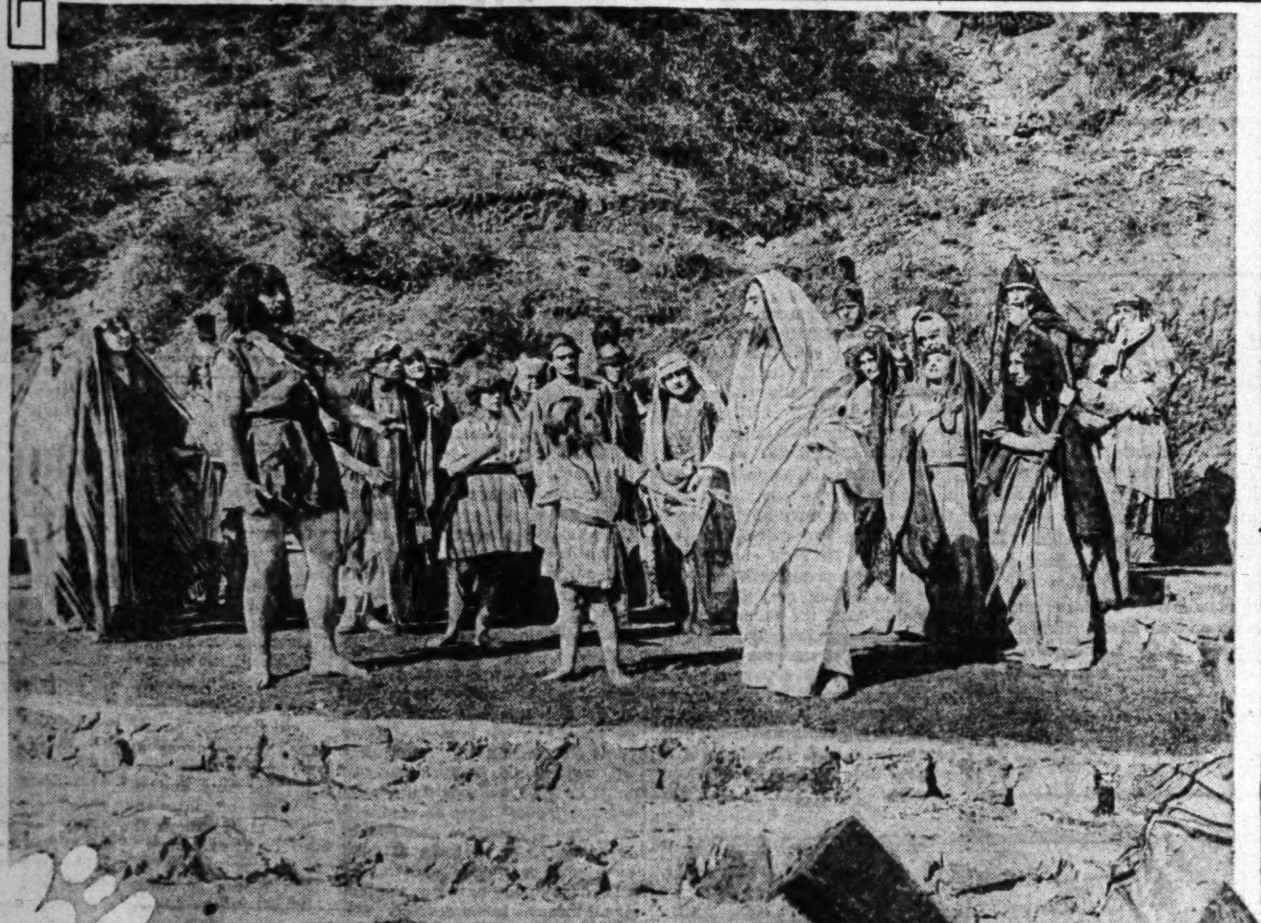
Quaint and strikingly picturesque was the old time Californian. He was the most graceful horseman in the world. Living practically in the saddle from daylight until dawn, it was only natural that he should develop into such. His saddle, bridle and bit were of the very finest, richly trimmed and inlaid with gold or silver; his spurs were handmade of the finest steel and inlaid with silver; his hat was wide of brim and also richly decorated with gold and silver cord, and was of the most costly manufacture.

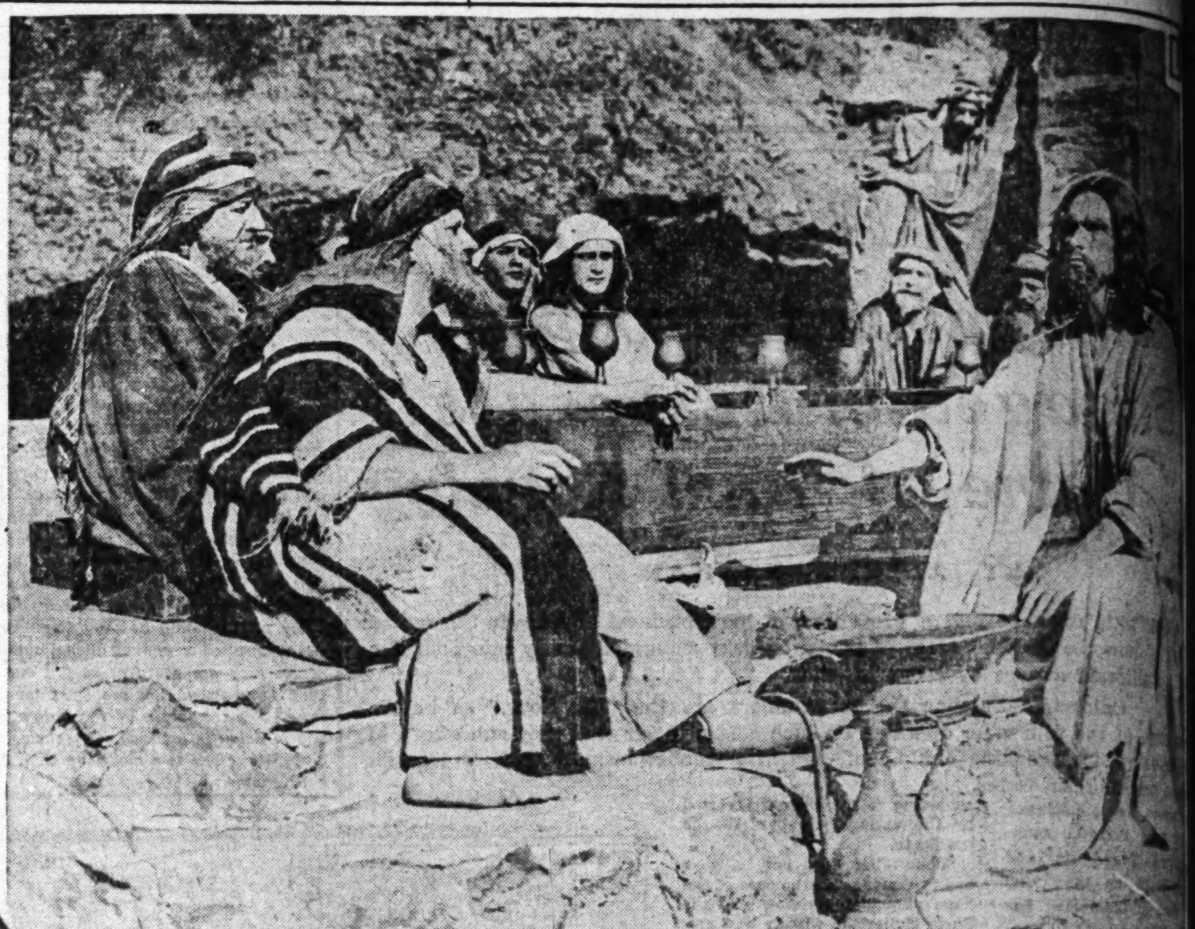
Picturesque

His clothing consisted of a short jacket of cloth or velvet, with plenty of buttons, and with lace trimmings of silver and gold in most elaborate designs. His trousers also were of velvet, or dark, heavy cloth, tight-fitting above the knee and about the waist, worn from the knee down to display beautiful lace designs in white. About the waist was wrapped a wide sash of brilliant hue, with tassled ends. Some of these outfits would run into thousands of dollars.

Such was the early Californian. "Manana" was on the lips of young and old—no thought of the morrow. There was nothing to worry about. Every man knew his neighbor, and if he needed help at any time, he could get it for the asking, without money and without price. It was the days when the Golden Rule was practiced and adhered to—wonderfully happy days of peace harmony and contentment, music and singing, laughter and love—days gone never to return, and which are now but golden memories in the recollection of a very few aged Californians, whose dimmed eyesight would fain catch again a glimpse of a beloved familiar figure on horseback, as he rides alone into the dark.

Hollywood's Pilgrimage Play is Without a Riva





Sacred Drama With Unique and Beautiful Setting is Great Civic A[illegible]set

By Maude Cheat[illegible]

CALIFORNIA has ever been the p[illegible]r.

Her history is crowded wi[illegible]lorful pages recording her vision, her dat[illegible]ss courage—and her glorious achievements.

The Pilgrimage Play is one of he[illegible]ost significant triumphs.

While many dramatists have dreamed of staging the great Bible story of the Christ, the difficulties of producing so great a theme with reverence and unbiased religious spirit have proved overwhelming. There has been one notable exception, that of the Passion Play of Oberammergau, which depicts the final week of the Savior's life.

There have also, been allegorical plays founded on various religious episodes; there have been pageants and tableaux based on different incidents that abound in the Scriptures; but the actual dramatic production of the entire life of the Christ, from the prophecy of His birth to His ascension, belongs to the Pilgrimage Play and—Hollywood.

The earthly career of Jesus is tremendous drama, palpitating with human emotions and human hope. To revive the world's knowledge of His acts and words—this is the real purpose of the Pilgrimage Play. Surely no loftier ideal could be followed.

The Pilgrimage Play is the result of an inspiration of the late Christine Wetherill Stevenson, into whose brain stole the desire to visualize the Drama of Christ.

Through several years of tireless energy she worked out the details of her great purpose and when she felt the time was ready she came to Hollywood, feeling that here among the hills that so closely resemble those of Palestine, she had found the proper setting for her dream.

Seventh Season

The Pilgrimage Play is now in its seventh annual season, being presented nightly, Sundays excepted, each summer for a number of weeks. Already it has been heralded as America's Passion Play and gathers its audiences from every corner of the globe for its fame has traveled far.

A little canyon in the hills, one block north of the junction of Cahuenga and Highland avenues in Hollywood, has been transformed into a picturesque open-air theater, dedicated to the Pilgrimage Play.

The audience commands the stage from a natural slope, the walls on three sides rising almost perpendicularly for nearly 100 feet Two hills form a proscenium arch sixty feet in width and the contour of the hills furnishes space for a series of stages on which, the drama is unfolded, reverently and with sublime tempo.

Winding pathways have been made on the hillside, and the trees and bushes form the entrance and exits of the players. One of the most impressive natural assets of this setting, always remembered by the audience, is the twinkling of the stars over the range of hills. This is dramatically impressed upon the mind in the scene of the Three Wise Men.

There is something peculiarly appropriate in an out-of-door presentation of the life of Christ, for almost all of His sermons and parables were delivered along the roadside, beside the sounding seas and on sunny slopes. This is one reason that this mighty drama grips the imagination and becomes so real that the centuries turn back and the audience lives in the period of the Savior's earthly existence, feeling the very impulses and emotions that swayed the men and women who walked with Him.

A huge cross, thirty-six feet in height, standing like a sentinel on a hill above the Pilgrimage Theater, sends out its steady light as a reminder that here, in the beauty and hush of the summer evening, the story of the gentle Nazarene is being unfolded.

The Pilgrimage Play is the literal transcription of the Savior's life as found in the Four Gospels and its interpretation is wholly nonsectarian. It is presented in twelve episodes, with a prologue of prophecy and an epilogue of promise. It is a sublime drama indeed, an achievement of arresting beauty and power. The power is all-pervasive because it is built on a great spiritual truth. These teachings can never grow old for they are founded on things eternal. The beauty is compelling as it shifts from scene to scene, charming the eyes, lifting the spirit and stirring the emotions.

Many events are visualized on this hill-side stage. There is the angel Gabriel's prophecy of the coming of the Christ—the miracles—the Last Supper. There are things, too, that are unutterably sad for here it is that Jesus prays in the loneliness of the Garden of Gethsemane that he might be spared the cup; and is betrayed by Judas—with a kiss; and bows beneath the terrible weight of the cross!

Beauty Emphasized

However, it is the poetry and beauty rather than the tragedy of Christ's life on earth that are emphasized and after witnessing this wonderful story as one leaves the little theater, over which breathes a gentle stillness, there linger the final words of the Savior's comforting promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." This becomes mingled with the memory of the shining stars, the sage-scented darkness and the glowing pictures of Jesus and the other characters, framed in light against the mountain, and the immense significance of His sublime life is borne in upon the consciousness.

To conform to the high ideals that imbue this production and to uphold its historical verity, every detail is accurate according to the best traditions.

Many of the garments worn in the play were brought direct from the Holy Land expressly for this purpose and it has been said that they constitute the finest collection of Oriental costumes ever imported into the United States. As these become too fragile for daily use in the drama, they are carefully copied and the originals treasured for a permanent exhibit. Among the interesting effects are a genuine camel's hair coat, typical of that worn by John the Baptist, and sheepskin jackets and undergarments, all worn together. These give insight into the biblical statement;" If thy brother ask thee for thy coat give it unto him, and thy cloak also."

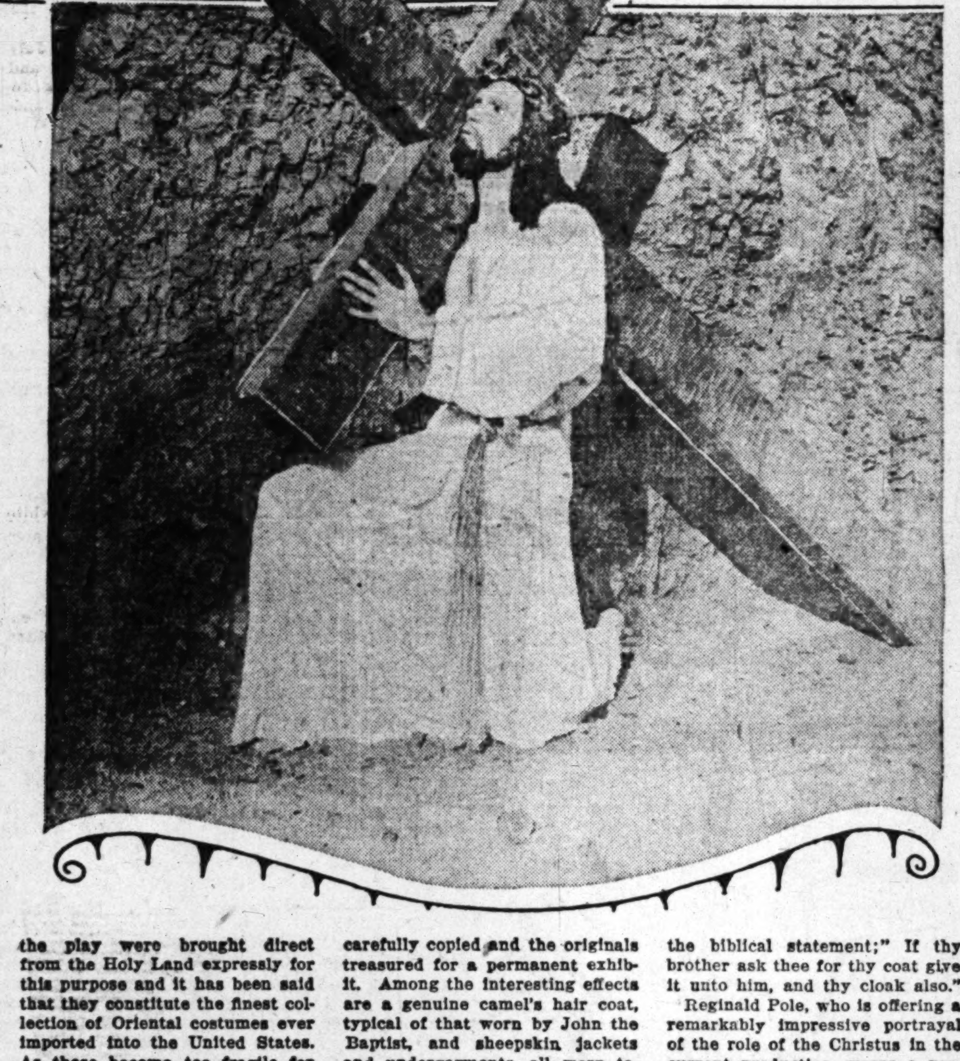
Reginald Pole, who is offering a remarkably impressive portrayal of the role of the Christus in the current production, wears a genuine camel's hair abaye, or cloak, which is one of the original garments from Palestine.

As the Pilgrimage Play is given only at night the lighting effects form a prominent part in its presentation. A splendidly equipped electrical department has developed some striking innovations and a battery of lights of tremendous brilliancy are so arranged that they not only light the various stages and scenes but illumine different points on the hillside that enter into the unfolding of this mighty sacred drama. For instance, during the final scene, that of the ascension, thirty flood lights play upon the hills, enveloping them in a soft but penetrating radiance, making this one of the most inspiring scenes in the play.

The Pilgrimage Play is Hollywood's civic offering and is incorporated on a nonsectarian, nonprofit and noncommercial basis and includes many prominent persons from the religious, educational, artistic and civic circles of Los Angeles on its governing board. It is a perman tion.

The development of th like all successful ach is the result of co-ord fort on the part of every nected with it. All hav freely of their best tal this year's Pilgrimage Pla claimed the most beautif artistic and most signi its history.

It is, indeed, the most and beautiful experien California summer.



LIFE OF CHRIST RE-ENACTED

Dramatic incidents and episodes in the life of Christ are portrayed with exceptional fidelity to the Bible Pilgrimage Play, one of the unique attractions which Los Angeles offers its citizens and visitors. The view at the left shows the Christ delivering one of his immortal parables to a throng of citizens. At the right he is of bathing the feet of his disciples.

Below is a scene on the road to Calvary picturing the Holy Man bowing beneath the weight of the cross is to be crucified. At the right below is another scene in the play showing how the theater lends itself to in settings.

COAST OF ADVENTURE BECKONS AT SAN PEDRO

BY NEETA MARQUIS

Travel abroad can be easily achieved without leaving the city limits of Los Angeles if you know how to manage. Every seaport is a nucleus of world interest, with San Pedro no exception. So if you are jaded with the conventional and the obvious, go down to the harbor some day and with a friend who knows the ropes make a tour of the water front. It's a good thing to do when you want to forget that you live in a world of clashing self-interests—culture clubs, art exhibitions, symphony orchestra rumpuses. It's a good antidote for that highbrow feeling.

Look in on the Japanese-Chinese-Filipino boarding-house, where the mechanical piano crashes into life at 5 a.m. every day of the year. Observe closely the building in which, you are told, a philanthropic enterprise occupies the first floor and a bootleggers' exchange the second. Linger a while at the cubbyhole where curios from the five seas are on display—a scrap of flag from the Battle of Manila Bay, Egyptian images from a tomb near the Pyramids, snickersnees that appear to have hacked their way, if not through glory to a throne, at least through jungles to a night's lodging.

Divided from this by a lurid yellow curtain appears the studio in which the tattoo artist toys with pigment in relation to human integument. Stroll along the block the length of which no one walks after dark unescorted unless he is looking for trouble.

Then saunter out on the dock where the flat cars are being loaded from the lumber freighter below. You will see men from many climes and lands, together with a few women—smartly dressed flappers for the most part, who may—and again may not—be the wives of some of the numerous marines scattered around in the blue and white of Uncle Sam. You will note certain official persons with businesslike "billies" at hip marked by a conspicuous "S. P.," which may stand for "Southern Pacific" or "San Pedro," but do not, meaning instead, "Shore Patrol." Get the blue, milky sheen of the harbor waters with the trim gray brass-mounted navy launches plying back and forth across them from the men-o'-war at anchor in the outer bay. Across by the opposite dock stands a stalwart government oil tanker, her iron hull gorgeous with patches of rust in high contrast with the blue water.

Go on down a dark gangway to the pier below, where a certain "very ancient fish-like smell" tells you this is where the fishing boats come in. If there is a catch at hand you will see swarthy men of Latin and North European races, tanned to a ruddy bronze or burned to a dull crimson, sitting on boxes playing poker, while huge ungainly pelicans watch you with solemn faces as if to see if, perchance, you may not prove a new, queer sort of fish yourself.

Beside the pier a small freight boat is taking on a load of cracked ice. You can watch the slabs of blue-white crystal sliding in from the flat cars on the other side, to be crushed by machinery in the warehouse. Then it comes pouring through a metal pipe like a smokestack to empty into the hold of the ship. Looking down, you see that frozen whiteness being shoved and scattered to a level by a bronze-faced Japanese with gloves on.

Then by means of another dark gangway—not the airy one marked "Exclusively for officers and their friends"—you go still farther down, to the cement-floored floating dock where the launches and the ferry boats put in. Here you are at the edge of the forest of piles rising from the deep green water, murky with refuse, which supports the great upper docks. How is it that this water of somber—even tragic—implication, in the near view can appear so poetically, opalescently blue and smiling only a few rods away? While waiting for the busy little waterbug of a ferry boat which is to paddle you across the bay, you will marvel to note the traffic of the harbor, which suggests the corner of Fourth and Broadway on a busy day.

Transported to the Terminal Island side, you find yourself walking through a stretch of sand grown thick with small yellow primroses until you reach the paved street and dockway at the other edge. The long old breakwater of tumbled brown chunks of rock makes a ragged line on out to Deadman's Island, beyond which, toward Long Beach, ride the warships as immovable as islands themselves on the placid blue. Closer in appear the brave outlines of the three-masted schooner used for the picturing of "Old Ironsides," hard by her a "four-sticker" even more romantic and suggestive—the kind one sees full-rigged only once in a blue moon these steam and electric days.

If it is afternoon when you have started on your trip, you halt at about this time at a longshoremen's eating-house and sit up at a counter for a platter of ham and eggs, for this is the last call for anything resembling dinner until you return to the other side of the bay. It may seem a little early for your meal, but in half an hour the stevedores will be pouring in in such numbers that you wouldn't get a "look-in." You resume your tour in the direction of the fishermen's dock, solid cement for the length of about two city blocks, stretching toward Long Beach. Here in the quiet of the inner harbor, how still stand the close-docked fishing craft which are waiting for the tuna season to begin! Above the still blue water their masts rise like a forest of denuded trees, while on the dock at your feet heaps of brown nets dotted with wooden floats lie like drifted autumn leaves. Japanese-owned ships, these, for you are now in the Little Japan of Southern California.

Passing through the dry docks here at the end, where ships in process of making lift shadowy keels against the dim interior, you reach another stretch of sand grown with primroses. Here the vast brown nets are being spread to dry by the fisherfolk, while artists sit sketching in the amber light of sunset the white sandy shore at the edge of an indigo bay. The far high towers of Long Beach look as romantic in this rose and golden evening as those of Camelot.

You are now in the Japanese fishing village of East San Pedro, where the houses are all as squat and brown as the sturdy fishermen who occupy them, while stretches of gray asphalt alternate with stretches of gray sand in between. A colorless spot, this fishing village—except at evening, when the children and their fathers play in the streets. Everywhere then you may see swarthy middle-aged laboring men holding by the hands their little girl-children as beautiful as exotic flowers, while they sing and dance together the children's kindergarten games:

"Do you know the Muffin Man,
The Muffin Man, the Muffin Man?
Do you know the Muffin Man,
Who lives in Drury Lane, O?"

You can't help wondering what in the world "Drury Lane" means to these people of alien traditions and ideals. But they do understand the spirit of play and companionship.

Beyond the village come the great cement freight docks, where you find one of the immense Luckenbach boats alongside being unloaded. Six booms project from as many hatches, and freight will be swinging off from all at once as soon as the shift from day to night forces is complete. Here you could watch the various activities for hours without losing interest, for all night long the huge freighter will be worked. A day over schedule in emptying her would mean a loss of thousands of dollars. Small tractors go running around through the dock-traffic like many-legged worms of superior efficiency. Locomotives slide up on shining tracks to haul away the loaded flat cars. There by the water's edge stands a great molasses tank the size and shape of an oil tank, where the cane syrup brought by ship from Hawaii is deposited, and there on the railroad tracks stand the molasses cars to take it to the refineries, each car equipped with heating pipes beneath, for "cold molasses" is no insignificant matter.

The products of the entire world come in to these docks from week to week. Fragments of the Tropics and the Antipodes pass through the hands of the busy stevedores in the hatches and longshoremen on the wharfs. You take one last look at the scene—activity, motion, system here on the dock, below, the shining blue water giving back the light of fading day.

When you reach the landing-place where the Waterbug puts in, the sunset has been blotted out behind the Palos Verdes hills, together with its lambent reflection on the smooth harbor surface. Night has blackened the shore and given a menace to the heaving salt tide. But across on the mainland the street illumination of the port appears fascinating in a garish way—cheerful, indeed, to one hugging himself in the chill night wind on the ferry boat. Up the dark gangway, and you see your car just pulling out of the station. Too late No, an effective masculine hail holds it till you scramble aboard.

Homeward, after an extensive tour.

Yes, the harbor is a colorful spot. Almost anybody ought to be able to write stories in "Peedro." Many people do. Don Waters lives and writes there, turning out the adventure tales the editors keep clamoring for as fast as he can produce them. Between times he goes over to the dry docks and works for days at a time on some ship, just to study her lines and help make up his mind about the kind he wants when ready for that journey around the world with his wife and baby.

"Only waiting for the kid to get big enough to swim in case she should fall overboard," he says. "Then no more land life for me."

One of the big studios is after Waters now as a consulting director on sea stories, but he is not much tempted. "When I can make" (I won't tell how many thousands a year he said) "with two hours a day at my typewriter, and be my own man, why tie up to a studio?" he asks. The only answer is that he might get that tight little ship of his a few minutes sooner.

Ernest Paynter, too, lives and writes here—he who has been in service with Gen. Butler of the marines, whom he has seen "march up the of Vera Cruz never ducking for bullets or anything with Admiral Sims in the War. After years of knocking the seas both in the Navy the merchant service he of the Navy from the which, not yet published, son of Hollywood says is the naval war story that has written. Ning Po, Old Chinese Pirate Ship Has Bloody and Romantic Past

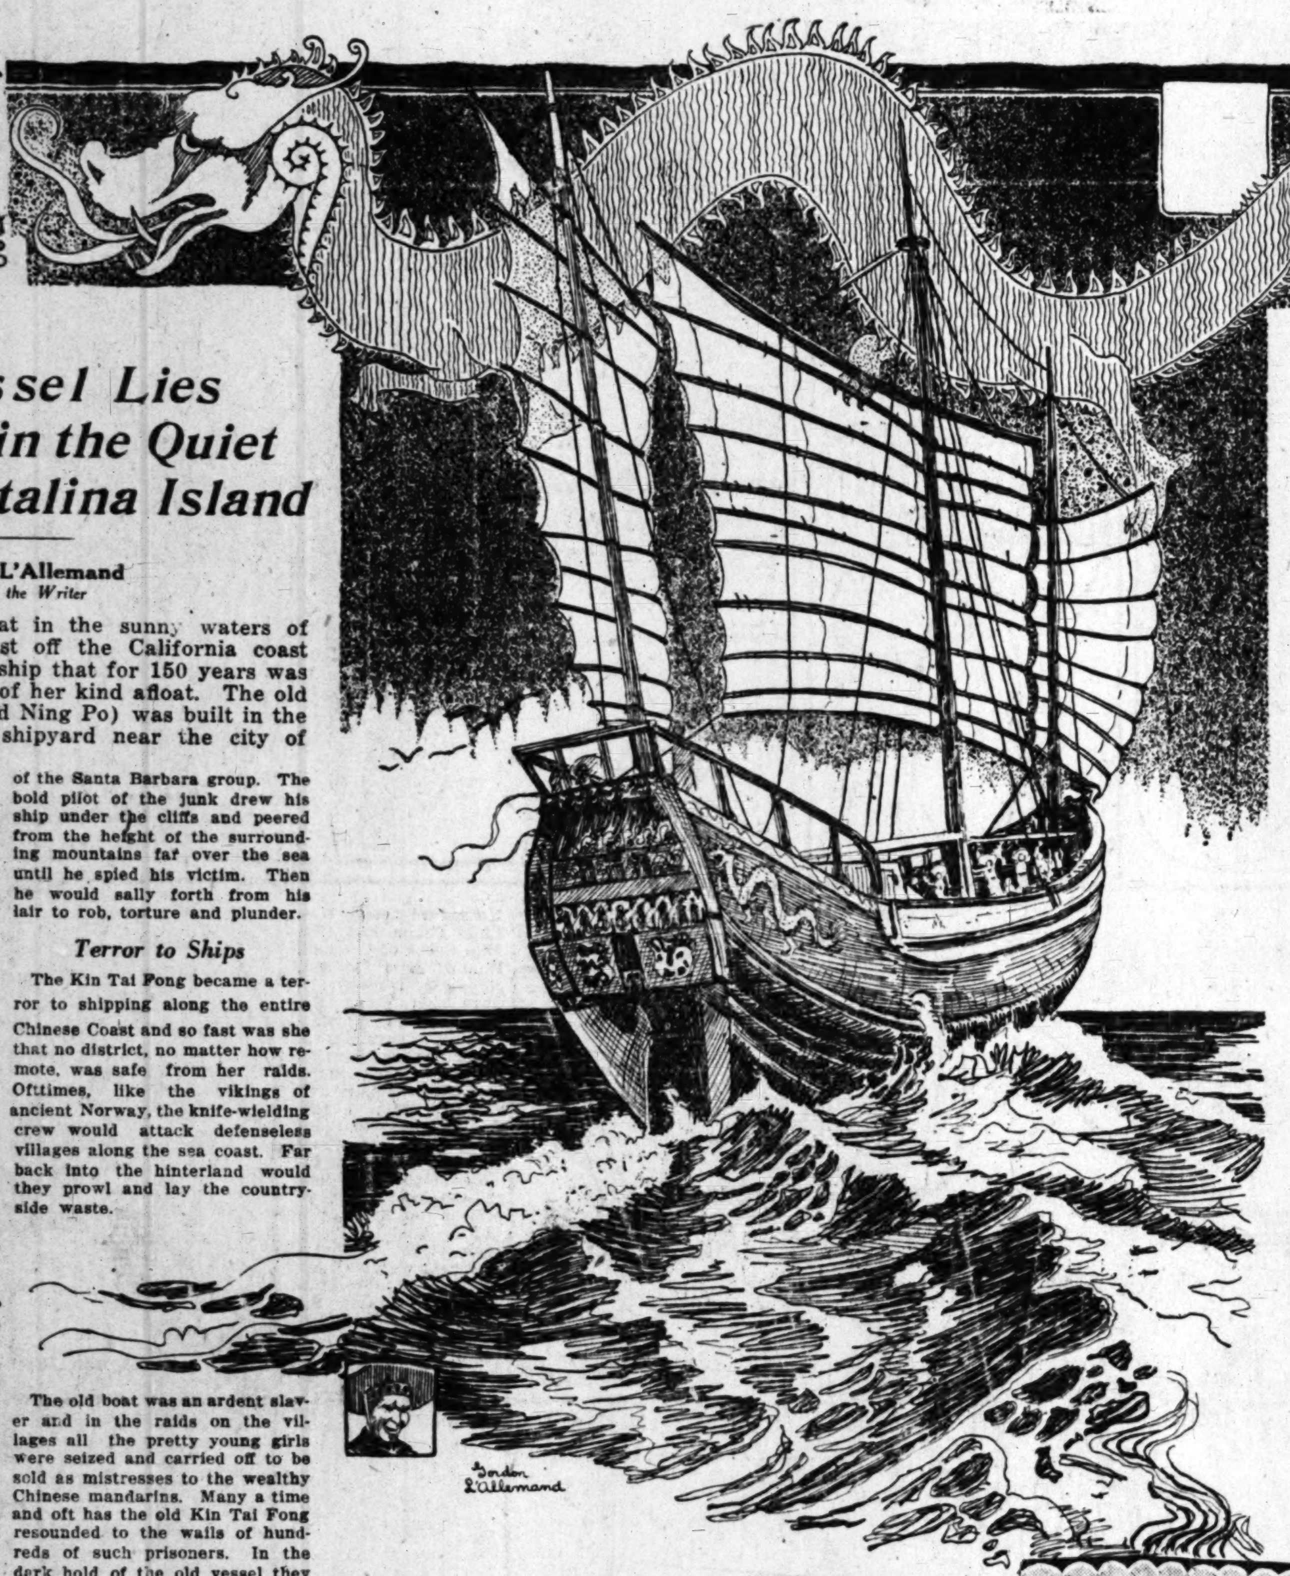
CHINESE CAPTAIN OF NING PO IN 1863



Derelict Vessel Lies Innocuous in the Quiet Bay of Catalina Island

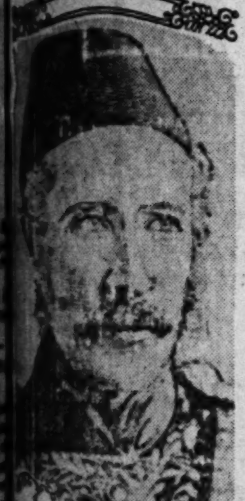
By Gordon L'Allemand

Drawings by the Writer

FEW people know that in the sunny waters of Catalina Island just off the California coast rests an old pirate ship that for 150 years was the fastest and most feared of her kind afloat. The old Kin Tai Fong (later renamed Ning Po) was built in the year 1753 in the Chinese shipyard near the city of Ning Po.

Of ironwood and camphor wood was she constructed and there is not a nail in the entire ship. To this day she stands as a marvelous achievement to the genius of builders nearly two centuries ago. Ranging fore and aft inside her hull are nine air-tight compartments that aided in keeping the vessel afloat during the terrific storms that were sure to be encountered in the China seas. Great dragons, guardian spirits of the ship's destinies, were painted in brilliant colors on either side of the prow and stern. Two immense eyes glared from just behind the foremost dragons.

The junk was built to carry out the Chinese idea of a sea monster. The sails were the fins and her wide open bow the gasping mouth of the monster. Truly a fearful and awesome thing she was.



CHARLES "CHINESE" GORDON

Christened a merchantman she soon became known as the fastest boat in all the China seas. For a time the Kin Tai Fong engaged in the peaceful pursuits of a merchant ship and many years plied the coasts of the Orient. Being the fastest vessel in those waters was a great temptation to her crew and her transition into pirate and smuggler was the inevitable end. Every ocean has known this daring robber, and often during the early years of the nineteenth century she ventured as far as the coast of California and made her rendezvous in what is now known as Catalina Island of the Santa Barbara group. The bold pilot of the junk drew his ship under the cliffs and peered from the height of the surrounding mountains far over the sea until he spied his victim. Then he would sally forth from his lair to rob, torture and plunder.

Terror to Ships

The Kin Tai Fong became a terror to shipping along the entire Chinese Coast and so fast was she that no district, no matter how remote, was safe from her raids. Ofttimes, like the vikings of ancient Norway, the knife-wielding crew would attack defenseless villages along the sea coast. Far back into the hinterland would they prowl and lay the countryside waste.

The old boat was an ardent slaver and in the raids on the villages all the pretty young girls were seized and carried off to be sold as mistresses to the wealthy Chinese mandarins. Many a time and oft has the old Kin Tai Fong resounded to the wails of hundreds of such prisoners. In the dark hold of the old vessel they were herded, like so many cattle.

Very versatile was she, too. The Kin Tai Fong turned to whatever seemed to offer the best possible chance of plunder, when one of the frequent Chinese rebellions occurred the old villain would become a warship on one side or the other. Thus she vacillated back and forth until the early part of the ninteenth century and the beginning of the Tai Ping Rebellion—a series of events that was to affect the future of the Kin Tai Fong.

Opium is Casus Belli

Li Hung, a Chinese general, declared himself emperior, under the name of Teen Wang, of a new dynasty called the Tia Ping with his capital at Nanking. The unritten law of the Tia Ping dynasty was that there was to be no opium traffic. This of course stepped on the toes of the British East India Company, which had a monopoly of the opium trade in the Orient at that time. French forces joined with the British in quelling the new rebellion.

It has always been a habit of a rebellion or any sort of trouble to terrify, slay and starve their countrymen who were not their allies. Thus with the Tia Pings.

Li Hung and his victorious rebel army swept through the country like wildfire, destroying everything before him. In this way he made enemies of all those who survived and when the turn of the tide came, which was inevitable with the advent of the British and French armies, he was fighting British, French and the imperial government to boot.

In the meantime the Kin Tai Fong continued ravaging the seas as was her wont. Being pirates themselves the crew of the Kin Tai Fong leaned toward the cause of the Tia Pings and ransacked every opium ship that left the Chinese coast and because of her exploits, coupled with the troubles that the Tia Pings were causing the opium trade, the English goverment sent Lord Napier to China to adjust conditions.

Made Prison Ship

Lord Napier was not long in the Orient before he ordered the seizure of the Kin Tai Fong as a pirate. For several years the old ship remained in comparatively peaceful service along the coast but Lord Napier died and she reverted to her former career of crime. However, the junk was not to get away with that sort of thing long for the established goverment seized her and she was used as a prison ship at the mouth of the Tetsieh River.

Smugglers and pirates were confined within her numerous torture chambers, and outdoing even the pirates themselves the government constructed many new and weird methods of torture.

A great tank in which many prisoners were forced to stand erect was slowly filled with water and then emptied and this was kept up incessantly until the poor victims died of exposure. On the necks of many were placed huge boards, two prisoners to a board, and this they carried about with them, the board being wet from time to time so that in shrinking it strangled them to death. Then it was that the bloodiest chapter in her sordid career was written, for the captain, tired of the comparatively slow way of killing his prisoners, equipped his crew with great swords and beheaded 168 prisoners that day.

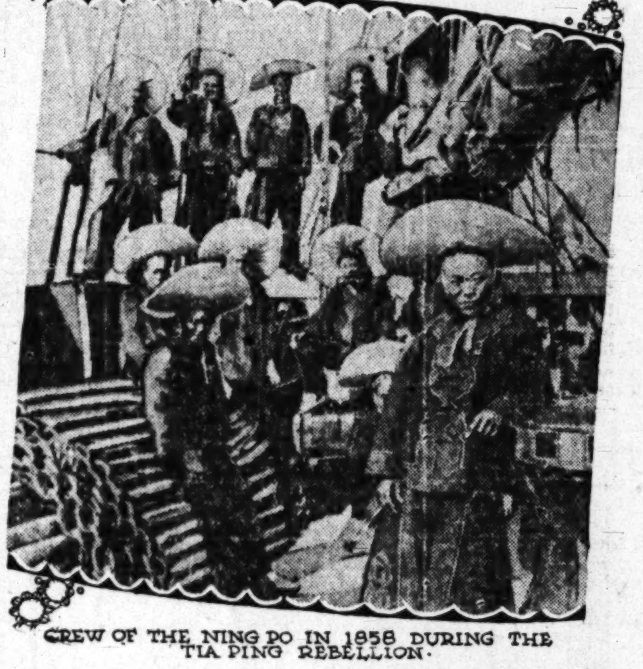
The Tia Ping revolution was at its height and the rebel Tia Ping seized the Kin Tai Fong (a comparatively easy task as the pirates already leaned toward their cause) and used her as a transport because of her great size and speed. The British cruisers treated the Tia Ping junks as pirates, particularly the Kin Tai Fong, and the combined British and French forces took part in forty-three battles on land and sea in which over 400,000 rebels were slain. During these later battles Gen. Ward, who preceded "Chinese" Gordon, led many of the attacks; but the final overthrow of the rebels was due to Gen. Charles "Chinese" Gordon. He organized, in collaboration with the imperial goverment, the imperial troops, called by the Chinese The Ever-victorious Army, and took the field against the rebels.

City after city fell and in July 1864, Nanking, the capital and stronghold of the Tia Ping rebellion, surrendered and thus ended the hopes of the dynsty.

Christened Ning Po

With the defeat of the Tia Pings came the fall of their navy and "Chinese" Gordon took especial pleasure in taking over the Kin Tai Fong and, not liking the name, he called her the Ning Po (Peaceful Water) in honor of the city of that name. However, Gen. Gordon was to go away to South Africa on a misson for his goverment and the Ning Po was again left to her fate.

From that time on until about 1910 the Ning Po was alternately a smuggler, pirate and merchantman. In her later years she took to having more and more white men in her crews and her general habits mended some toward the beginning of the twentieth century. The last military service that the Ning Po ever engaged in was the rebellion against the Manchus about 1912, when her ancient guns were unlimbered against the "Republicans."



CREW OF THE NING PO IN 1858 DURING THE TIA PING REBELLION.

The Ning Po sailed from Shanghai June 6, 1912, and when several hundred miles out from port was wrecked in a typhoon in which two of her white crew were lost. She put back to Shanghai and ventured back to Shanghai and ventured out to sea again and was wrecked in another typhoon September 24. Her Chinese crew mutinied during the storm and left her a floating hulk without sails or rudder. The mate, a white man, with two faithful members of the crew, rowed to Shimidzu and a cruiser was sent out to retrieve the Ning Po. The deserting and mutinous crew was later brought back to port in irons.

Several months afterward the white mate signed on an all-white crew and sailed for the United States of America, December 12, 1912. Her voyage across the North Pacific was fraught with much danger, as the ship was getting old even then. The voyage took fifty-seven days and the plucky mariners landed in San Pedro, February 19, 1913, after a trip of 7000 miles.

The skipper then took his charge to San Diego in 1915 to exhibit during the San Diego International Exposition, and while there she was the source of much interest to thousands of visitors.

The Ning Po was finally procured by William Wrigley, the chewing gum king, and taken to Catalina Island where she is to this day.

Here in the very waters of the isthmus where nearly two centuries ago she floated with her brood of pirates and their cruel skipper; the direlict lies.

If we visit the old ship on a moonlit night and see her riding out there in the isthmus we may even crouch in wonder as we view her spectral form—a horse without a rider—a ship without a crew. No more will bold pirates roam her decks and pull the white sails high up the tall masts and never again will the old Ning Po thrust her prow into the billowing waves, for now, Time, the ultimate victor, is beginning to tell and the once sturdy ironwood of her sides is beginning to decay, her brilliant dragons are faded and her masts are bare. We look into her hold and see a gray shadow flit off into the dark. A cold shiver creeps through one's body as if even now we expect to hear a soft sigh float up from the depths of the old Ning Po.

Pershing Square Presents Queer Study of Humanity

By Chester T. Mackie

PERSHING SQUARE might well be called the cosmopolitan center of Los Angeles. Here are found people of all walks of life, of almost every nationality, the rich and the poor. Daily thousands of people, the majority of which are men, sit on the long file of benches bordering the walks, reading papers, gossiping with some friendly s[illegible] or sitting back and watching [illegible]eels of life go around.

One can not s[illegible] comfortably in Pershing Square [illegible] be a snob. People there are un[illegible]y cordial, seeking recreation in [illegible]hazard conversation with perso[illegible]hey know nothing about and never expect to see again. Those who frequent the park often realize soon its value as a great school for the study of human behavior.

Here you may meet the chattering man, the sort of man who has a mania for talking hugely without thinking. He will sit down beside you and within two minutes be telling you all the details of the dream he had the night previous. Then abruptly he describes the dinner he just ate and believes the cause of his stomach distress is due to a mixture of milk and oranges. And soon he will tell you that the men and women of today are far from what they used to be. By this time listening to the man is more work than play, and you mumble some excuse and seek another spot in the square.

It may be just your luck to sit down among a group of middle-aged gentlemen, worldly failures, who are far from pleased with the outcome of their lives, but are sure it was no fault of theirs. Just fate. Their tongues are swift to abuse and they rail everything that comes to mind or sight. A large limousine drives up at the Biltmore Hotel, opposite the park, and a well-dressed man enters the lobby. The cynics condemn the man for his riches. They begin a hot ring discussion on the old-time theory of equal wealth for all.

OFFENSIVE TYPES

You stroll up to the fountain, glance at the falling water, and become interested in a group of exceedingly tame pigeons. A young gushing man slips up beside you and comments on the friendliness of the pigeons. Suddenly he removes a fallen hair from the shoulder of your coat, and then he asks you where you purchased the outfit. He pays you undesired attention, and he attempts to flatter you with the statement that everyone is looking at you. You know, however, for certain that he is the first person to notice your existence near the fountain. He offers you some candy and then asks you if you aren't tired of standing. You hastily reply that you must be going, and wander off, wondering if his kind yet hateful eyes are following you.

You find a seat in a crowded section of the square. Suddenly you discover an offensive looking man next to you. His face is unshaven and covered with dirt and perspiration. His hands are dry and hairy, and his nails filthy. He blenches occasionally, and when he notices that the second occurrence attracts your attention, he mumbles a " 'scuse me," sprinkling your hand.

At another location you meet the type of man who sees no good in anything. He studies you for awhile and then moves closer. "What do you think of so and so?" he asks. Of course, he has a different opinion and you are wrong, and he starts out to prove why, proceeding like a genealogist. He goes into much detail and refuses to be doubted or interrupted. He has proof for everything. Two men opposite depart and the man slanders them cruelly. He tells you that he is only frank and independent and that he believes in democratic spirit.

A small group gathers about a young man in his early thirties. The man states that at the age of 23 he possessed the small sum of $100,000 all made on some little patent device of his, now out of use. A bank failure and the war left him penniless, he states. He was a corporal when he hit the trenches, and many were the times he tld the men higher up just what the best move would be to make. He is from a little town in Iowa, he discloses, and can become the mayor there if he chooses. He draws out two envelopes, supposed to contain the proof. But he likes Southern California too well, and he remains here, for art's or health's sake.

On one of the less-occupied benches a middle-aged man and a companion sit quietly, watching the others. His words are few and soft. He talks only to comment on the things he admires in others, qualities which seem to suggest to him his own wants. The humble expression of his face shows that he has set a very low values on his own worth, and he sees goodness in everything. He is dressed in an unattractive and rather shabby suit, but there seems to be no one in the park who is more contented or more patient than he.

MELANCHOLY MEN

Pershing Square abounds with melancholy men, men who have missed their chance in life or posses some ideal which they find impossible to reach. They sit quietly along the walk, their faces full of sadness and minds filled with straggling thoughts. They find the slightest pleasure in their day dreaming, keeping their imagination always working. They think of the future, but do nothing to help it. And they refuse to be interrupted from their mysterious deep pondering.

On the northwest corner of the square are found the women, some escorted and many not. A different atmosphere prevails here, and fewer of life's tragedies are on exhibition.

A more formal and refined class seek seats here, and there is less chance for conversation.

An old couple sit peacefully along the walk, looking up into the trees and sky, and admiring the green grass. They discuss the next day's plans, and careful observation reveals that they are tourists from the East, making their first trip to Southern California.

A young lady, wearing a costume that almost speaks French, saunters up the walk in a gait that cries, Behold the Queen! There is haughtiness in her eyes and she censures almost everything that comes in her vision, shrugging her shoulders occasionally.

Another lady comes into the park and sits down. She wears a girlish bob and her face has more than its share of cosmetics. If you are a frequent visitor at this spot you will recall seeing her before. She wears a silly smile; and if you return her greeting, she will break out into a broad grin, displaying a set of rather old teeth.

On the shady side of the walk a middle-aged woman restlessly watches the crowd. Suddenly she leaps to her feet and grabs the arm of a young woman who has just entered the park with a young man, presumably her husband. "When did you come out here?" she demands loudly. The young woman answers in soft inaudible tones, and the young man moves about indifferently. The woman insists that they sit down for a minute. "What news from Minooka?" she insists. "How about the Dawson trial? Any new weddings? What! You haven't heard about Lucy McKintrick? Oh, I can tell you all about it." She babbles on. "But can you believe it?" After awhile the young couple get up to leave, but the woman holds them back until she has given them her address and extracted a promise that they will look her up soon.

There is not an abundance of youth in the park. There may be a young girl and her lover sitting absorbed in one another; but this is rare. Youth finds Pershing Square a dull place to spend spare time.

It becomes evening and the crowd is smaller. Up by the fountain a group of men are talking. One is very excited and waves his hands emotionally. He is discoursing on war. War, he tells his listeners, is a scourge of the wrath of God which humbles the spirits of the repentent, tries the patience of the faithful, and hardens the hearts of the ungodly.

On the outer edge of the park sits a man on the curb. His is a world of darkness. In his right hand he holds an old hat in which are some pencils! Once in a while a coin is dropped into it. He is at first reticent to talk, but finally he gives a flash of his life. He likes the evening hour best; the quietness of the street fascinates him, and all the goodness of the world seems to stand out before him. He admits that he imagines he sees the people who pass by, understanding their character by the mere force of their step or some verbal effusion. He gets snatches of conversation, interesting bits of life, the details of which he is curious to know. Each day he hears hundreds of voices, few of which speak to him. His life is an unearthly existence.

It is dark and the park is practically deserted. Under a lamp, near the fountain, stands a group of men, still talking.

Convicts Prolific With Stories for Films

BY A. L. WOOLDRIDGE

"With the exception of Hollywood, more stories for moving pictures come from convicts in San Quentin prison in California than from any place in America."

Montagne, editor-in-chief of Universal Studios, was speaking. Before him lay a pile of manuscripts, some exquisitely typed, some bound in leather, some neatly tied together by ribbon. And some laboriously written in longhand with a lead pencil, the result of hours of poring and pondering over clumsy plots. Universal is about the only big company which accepts manuscripts from unknown writers and the response to its advertisements is prolific, to say the least.

"What kind of stories do prisoners write?" I asked, immediately interested. "Can a fellow doing time put humor into tales?"

"Humor!" he cried. "Yes, in a way. Not very long ago there came in to us a story which we held for days. It concerned a prisoner who told the warden he'd be out in six months. It carefully and systematically carried its situations through—the prisoner making all arrangements to leave, taking messages from other convicts to their families, bidding tentative farewell to the guards and winding up his affairs so he could depart 'on a moment's notice.' [illegible] com-municated to the warden and the thing began getting on his nerves. He fretted. He ordered a special watch on the prisoner. He had frequent inspections made of his cell. The prisoner did not get away, but the psychology written into the story was amazing.

"When the author sent the manuscript in, he penned a laconic note, which said;

" 'I wrote a short story on a bank draft once. That's how I got in here.'

"It was a subtle way of telling us he was a forger."

From out of the manuscripts the editor-in-chief dug a few which had been written behind the prison walls. Virtually all were too morose and fatalistic for screen consumption. And yet, a number had plots in which the writers had let fancy run free.

"Here is one of the strange things in prison stories," Mr. Montagne continued. "In virtually all, the writers revert at some time or another to their occupations before they 'went bad.' Look at this one! (He read from a manuscript chosen from among the lot:)

"The officer's steady eye seemed to take in the entire room at a glance. He saw the grand dame in evening gown, her be-jeweled fingers brushing back a lock of graying hair. He saw the daughter of a financial king slyly pouring gin for her friends from a pocket flask. And he saw the liquor-steeped college youth with more money than brains; disgustingly drunk. The officer 'got it all' and the waiter noted his expression as he placed before him the glass of water, the silver, the butter patties and the napkin."

Montagne laid down the story.

"The prisoner who wrote that," he said, "in all probability was a waiter. His little details, his insight into cafe night life, his reference to the service he placed before the patron, indicate the former occupation in which he had been engaged. Somewhere in every prisoner's story is a 'kick back' to his trade. The tailor explains the intricate construction of the form-fitting coat, the printer of his use of his stick, the brick-layer of his trowel and the iron-molder of the terrific heat which emanates from the glowing furnaces. Not very long ago we received a story of a gangster who, as a result of politics, was railroaded to prison. It explained in detail how certain hirelings 'framed him,' how testimony was manufactured which put him behind the bars and how he eventually served his time, was released and got his man—and the girl.

"It was all so vividly told, so carefully done and so terribly realistic we just naturally wondered if, when he is released, he will endeavor to carry out the plot of his story. He has brooded over it and written it out into a tale which he believes will thrill the world.

"To him it is the most important thing in life. Nothing, he thinks, could be more dramatic.

"From most every prison tale we can decipher the writer's crime. He ponders over what has happened, conjures up fantasies and sees in his personal condition the making of a gripping yarn. When the day's work is over and he goes to his cell for the long hours of the night, the possibility of dramatizing his misfortunes or his errors recurs to him and presently he sits down to write for the films. Nine times out of ten what he puts on paper is the story of his life—as he envisions it. And it is not unnatural, either. How many persons have you heard say—'O, the story of my life would make one of the greatest screen tales ever written!' And they believe it just as much as the prisoner believes his.

"A story came to us from San Quentin about a doughboy who went to war, served in the trenches, went over the top, fought his fight and won the distinguished service medal. But on his return he discovered that his brother had wooed and won his sweetheart, leaving him an outcast in the world. The story was somewhat hackneyed—had been done in many ways before, but this boy had written his soul into it. It would have made a splendid picture if it had been new in plot. I do not know whether it was a part of his real life story or not but one would think it was from the feeling there was in it.

"Prisoners get the pathos in every motion picture they see and it is surprising the number of letters they write after they have seen an underworld story or a prison story in the films. With meticulous care they write what situations would be impossible in a penitentiary and what treatment of a convict as portrayed in the picture, would not be tolerated. They seem anxious that the outside world be correctly informed what their existence is behind the cold, gray walls. And yet, when they write stories they very often dwell on the question of mistreatment and unfairness. And 'escape' seems to be written in some part of nearly every tale. It appears to be uppermost in their minds.

"Prisoners keep amazingly up-to-date on the 'Who's Who' in pictures. They appear to know everything about a player's affiliations, his rating, ability and what pictures he or she has made. They know the directors, too. Recently there came a letter addressed to William Seiter. 'Dear Bill,' it began. 'You don't know me, but I'm a friend of a friend of yours here. His number is—. He has sent you several stories and here's mine.'

"He did not add that 'Bill' had not approved of the manuscripts which came from 'his friend' in prison and possibly did not know that 'Bill' had never seen them at all. Manuscripts come to this department first.

"The prisoners seldom set a price on their literary efforts. One fellow wrote that he had offered us his first manuscript for $5000. 'But,' he added, 'you can't get this one for that. It will cost you $25,000.' His price seemed a little high. We did not buy.

"Another one wrote:

" 'If you don't find this material suitable to your needs, will you please buy the matted-leather belt I am enclosing. It will cost you $1.' A third sent a finger ring laboriously woven from horse-hair, when he forwarded his literary effusion. Evidently, he had worked days, weeks, possibly months over his story. He wasn't so sure about its value when completed, but he did know there was artistry in the woven finger ring for which he asked a half dollar. So, if he couldn't get a whole lot of money for writing, he would be satisfied with four bits for making the ring. It's hard to earn money, you know, when one's locked in a penitentiary.

"We take a peculiar interest in the work of these fellows serving time. Their psychology of life is a study. There is one man who sends in a story occasionally revolving about the theme that the man who goes about legitimate business with the same tact, energy and carefulness with which he plotted crime, can earn a lot more money in the long run. Apparently he is a man of considerable education intent on serving his sentence, getting out and going straight. He has learned his lesson. He writes us careful criticisms pointing out errors and sometimes just brief, courteous notes of approval."

"MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING"

By W. E. Hill

Copyright 1926
by The Chicago Tribune Syndicate.

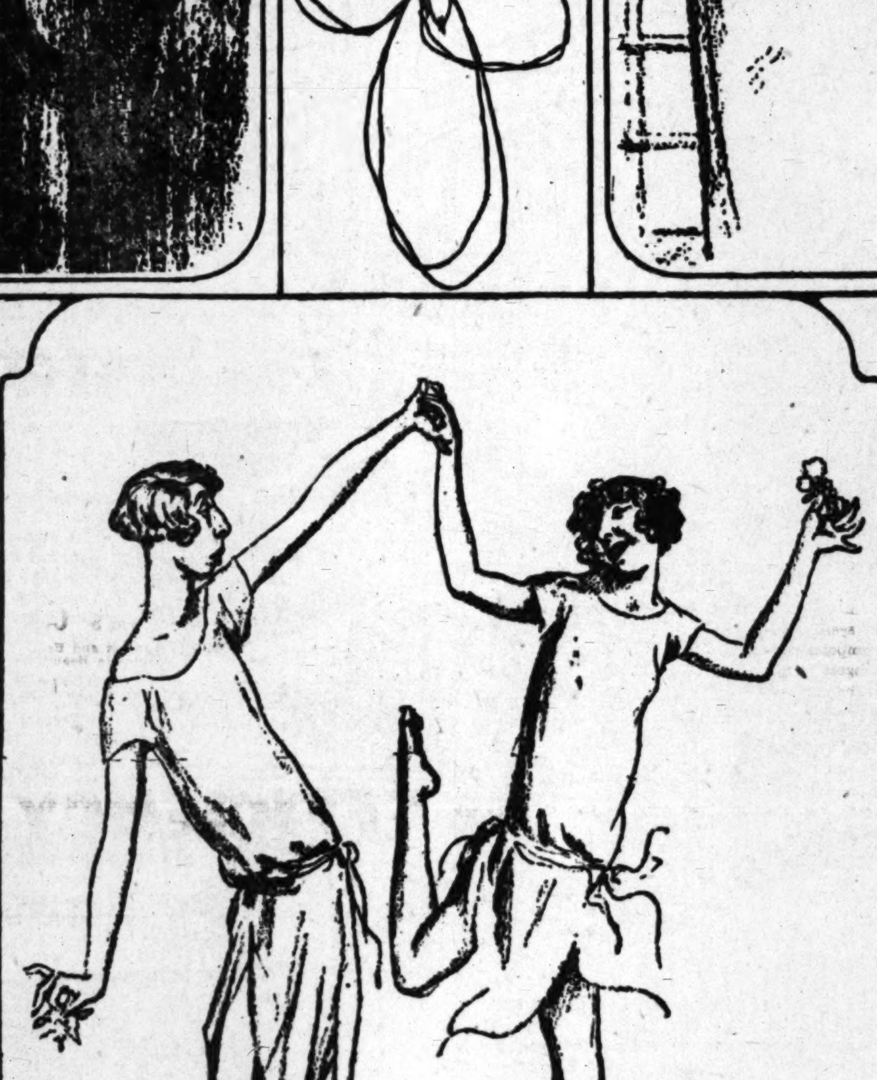
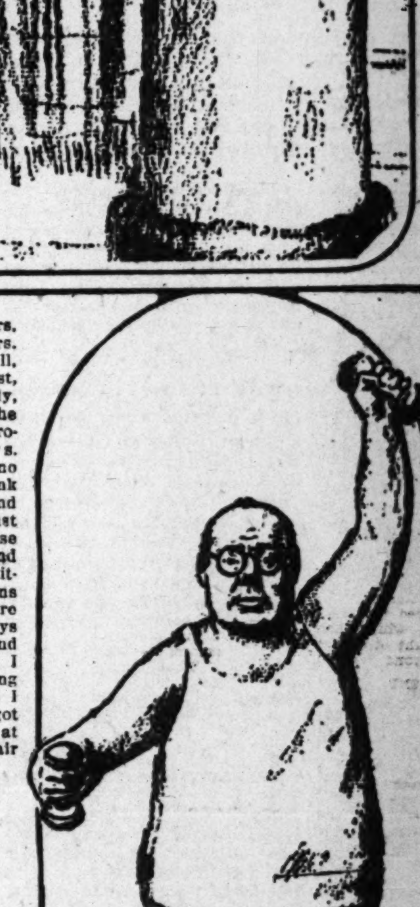
All over the United States there are people who will tell you that money isn't everything. (Of course, it's a good thing to have it in case things go wrong—any one can see that!) Take Mrs. Howell Howell-Smythe, for example, whose investments are so gilt edged they can take care of themselves. Her aim in life is to live for an aim. Almost any aim will do — the Ritzier the better. Her hobby it is to develop budding genius in the younger intellectuals, seeing that they meet the "right people" and mapping out their careers, and all that sort of thing. Artists, pianists and poets, any one is liable to be taken up by Mrs. Howell Howell-Smythe, provided he has a certain amount of sex appeal.

Even the movie stars have come to see that money isn't everything. Rich realtors and butter and egg husbands have had their day in the best film circles. Meet Desiree De Loose, the celluloid queen, who has divorced her late millionaire helpmeet, and has sent out a hurry call via Mr. Bloom, her social secretary, for nothing less than a deposed king or a jobless emperor, any of which can now be had for a song. "Gloria and May needn't think they can get away with all the publicity," says Miss De Loose sweetly, but firmly.

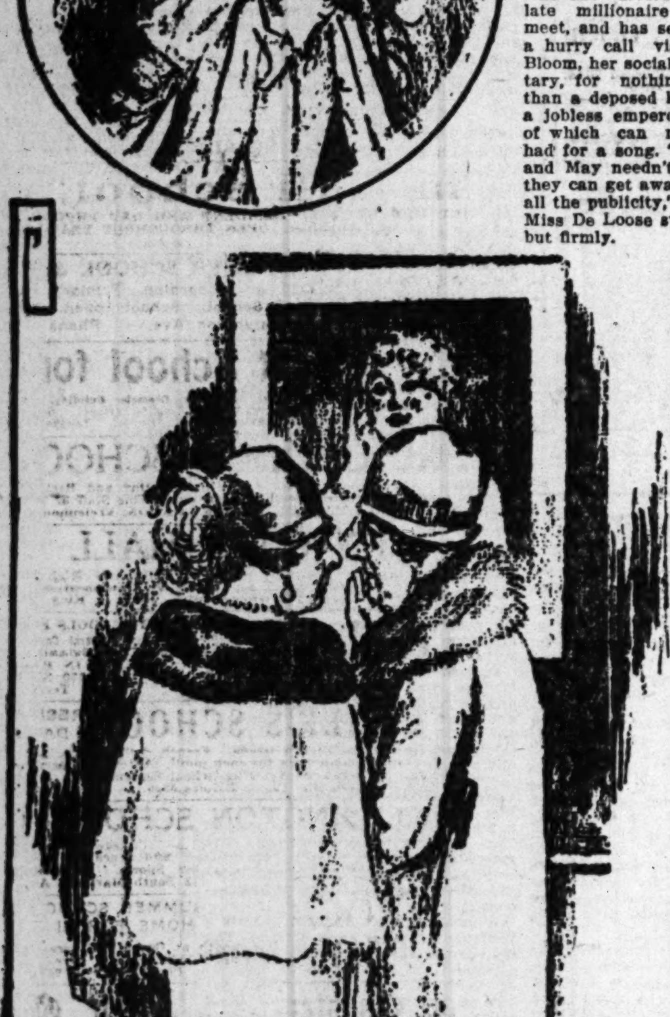


Just two busy little daughters of the busy rich, who, with minds centered on the really worth-while things of life, are studying rhythmic expression. Gladys (on the left) was full of inhibitions before she began rhythmically expressing herself. It has done wonders for her, her family says.

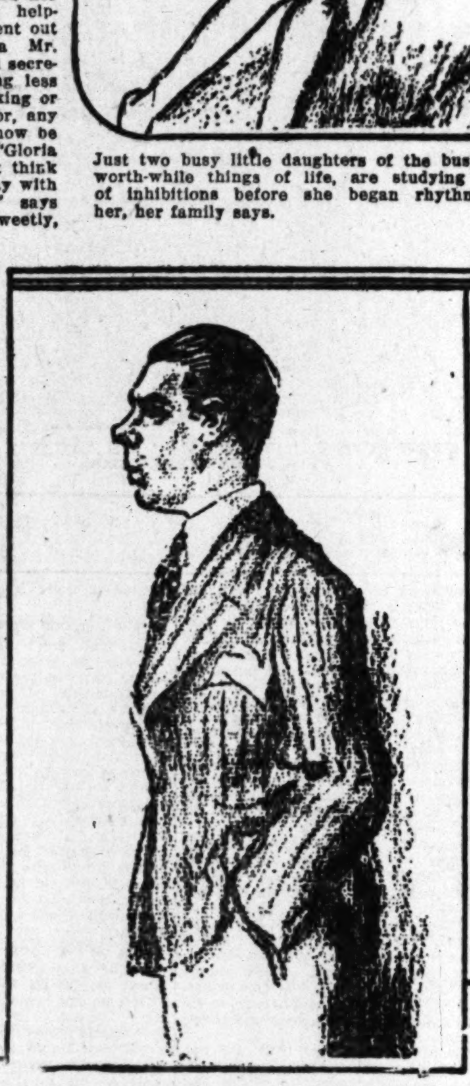
Homeward bound. Mrs. Philo Squint and Mrs. Milo Spear of Catchall, Illinois, and Robust, Nebraska, respectively, have been doing the continent. "Europeans," says Mrs. Spear, "say we have no culture. They think we're all dollars and cents. Well, I just wish a few of those foreigners could attend one of our Monday literary club afternoons in Catchall!" "They're jealous of us," says Mrs. Squint. "And their shops! Why, I didn't see a single thing in Italy or France I couldn't have got cheaper and better at Field's or The Fair store!"



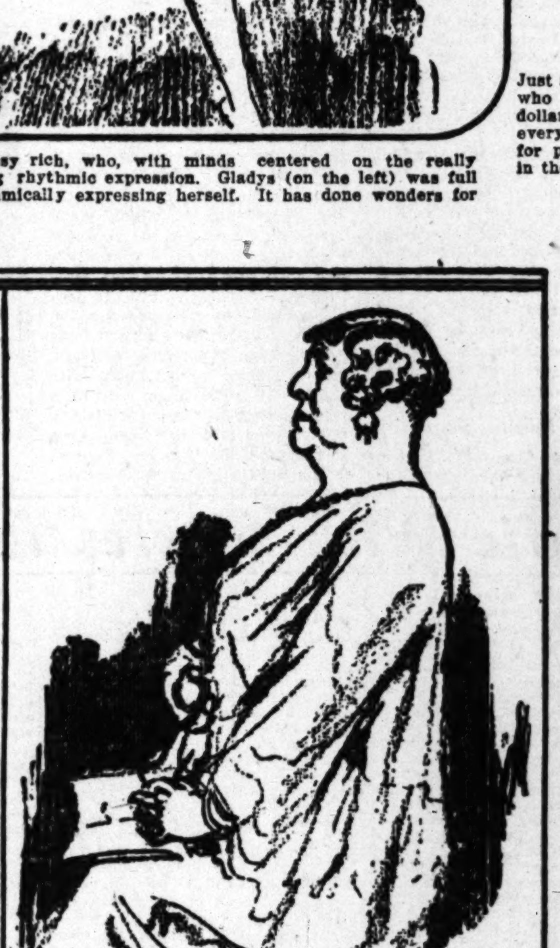
Just a big business boy who has found that dollars and cents aren't everything, going in for physical perfection in the gym class.



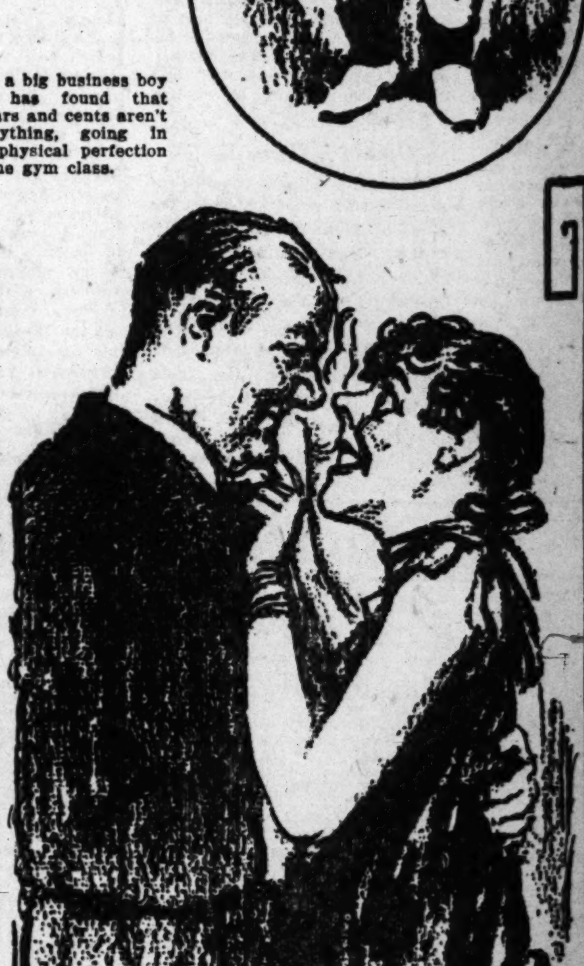
The world of art. Mrs. Maul and Mrs. Mee are doing the exhibitions. Art is so uplifting in this age of rank materialism. "Are these pictures," stage whispers Mrs. Maul, "supposed to be very fine?" "My dear Lena," replies Mrs. Mee, "he gets ten thousand for one portrait!"



"Money doesn't mean a thing to me. I despise it," says Noel, whose mind is on higher planes. "Could you lend me twenty-five till my check from home comes?" In fact, Noel despises money to such an extent that he seldom, if ever, pays up.



The devotee to the Eastern Soul Culture. More and more people are coming into the realization these days (provided, of course, that they don't have to worry about their railroad securities) that money isn't all. Perfect droves of them are getting religion and the churches are getting terribly worried about it. Some churches have even introduced Charleston contests and movies. Of course, anybody can take up with orthodox religion, but only the elect can make the grade of Chinese Etherealism, or Malay Vibratory Vision, or Korean Super-suspicion.



It's love that makes the world go 'round, not dollars, as the modern girl knows full well. And she knows just where to love, so that very often Prince Charming turns out to be daddy and hubby all in one, with a nice comfortable Rolls Royce and plenty of coupons in the safe deposit to keep up the heart interest.

COUNTY SAVING ITS CHILDHOOD

Children Being Salvaged at Health Schools

Systematic Reconditioning Campaign Aim

Work Business Proposition, Declares Expert

BY ALMA OVERHOLT

The saving of 10 per cent loss in business through the application of modern business methods often spells success for an enterprise which would otherwise fail—the 10 per cent being the margin of profit.

The salvaging of 10 per cent of the childhood of Los Angeles county and rebuilding it up to par is the campaign launched by the County Board of Health under direction of Dr. Pomeroy through the operation of the summer health school.

There are ten health schools being conducted in the county this month with an enrollment of 400 children between the ages of 5 to 12 years. These are located at Pomona, [illegible], Whittier, Tujunga, Compton, Santa Monica, Sierra Madre, Pasadena and Catalina.

REGULAR STUDIES ABSENT

A staff of nurses, dietitian, and a physician are in charge of each school and the children selected to attend are those who are recommended by their teachers as below normal in weight, in need of correction of posture defects, nervous habits or physical handicaps.

There are no studies other than the subconscious inculcation of regular health habits. Sleep, eat and play are the entire curriculum. A glass of pure water is given each child before roll call. Posture exercises, play, a glass of milk and oatmeal crackers, a nap, then again outdoor play and a hot noon-day lunch, with a "clean plate," after each meal insisted upon, another nap, outdoor play, a glass of orange juice, a health story read and school is dismissed—that in brief is the day's program.

The child instead of being dragged about, as is often the case in being shifted from one vacation resort to another, is rested and systematically "reconditioned." The mother is saved the wear and tear of the vacation period when it is difficult to keep the child healthfully occupied. When school sessions reopen in fall, the child who has attended health school is strong enough to meet the work before him in the classroom, even if he has been subnormal the year before. He has learned to live correctly—to breathe so his entire lungs are filled—to stand correctly —to eat and sleep properly—in short, to give Nature a chance and his subnormal condition in most cases actually comes back to normal. Two months have been devoted to "overhauling" little engines which had slowed up a bit and might otherwise have become broken beyond repair.

WORK EFFICIENT

"The summer health school is the most efficient humanitarian institution for the salvage of life," said Dr. Pomeroy in an interview on the work being accomplished by these schools in Los Angeles county.

"It is a straight business proposition. Every dollar spent on the growing child means getting a dollar back. The salvage in hospital work is only about 10 per cent. Out of every dollar spent on a sick man, only 10 cents can be gained. The salvage on a child is 100 per cent.

"There are 250,000 children of school age in Los Angeles county. [illegible] per cent of these are in need of health school work. There are [illegible] school districts in the county. If we can get all districts to take up the health educational work during the two months when the school buildings are idle, the home economics departments are unused in them during this period, we can soon get all the children in the county in need of health education.

ENTIRE COST SLIGHT

"Actually only 10,000 children come in the health school classification, according to age. Children over 12 years are taken care of through the Forest and other camps. The cost to the county for each child in the health school is $1 per day, for [illegible] days a year. That means, divided into 157 school districts—a little more than $500,000 annually to bring the childhood of Los Angeles county to a 100 per cent standard of health—to salvage 10 per cent of the county's child wastage—the biggest investment in dollars and cents from a cold business point of view—the greatest investment in the saving of the most precious thing—child life—the sparing of mothers worry, anguish and tears."

REDISTRICT ACT PRAISED BY JURIST

Former Judge Says North California Can be Fair in Voting for Measure

Viewing the campaign for legislative reapportionment as an opportunity for Northern California to give Southern California a square deal, [illegible] Weller, former judge and a member of the legal committee of the All Parties Reapportionment Committee, last night issued an indorsement of the amendment of the Constitution for legislative redistricting which is to appear on the November election ballot.

Appealing for the co-operation of the northern section of the State and urging voters in this section to stand solidly behind the reapportionment movement, Mr. Weller said:

"There is a great opportunity for Northern California to play fair with her neighbors in Southern California and a great opportunity for citizens of Southern California to protect themselves."

Another indorsement received by the All Parties Reapportionment Committee, which is sponsoring the reapportionment amendment to give Southern California the representation in the Senate and Assembly to which it is entitled by population, was from W. Fleet Palmer, who said: "The people of California want to do justice. Everyone wants to do right by obeying the Constitution. Therefore everyone should support the constitutional reapportionment."

ANCIENT MUSICIANS DISPENSED JAZZ

Old Print Shows Them Dextrous With Instruments

Francis Patrick Shanley, owner of the Continental Hotel, has returned from a tour of Europe all excited over what he says is a new discovery.

Mr. Shanley declares he has proof that jazz music is as old as the whiskers of Methuselah. It is not a new American form of expressing joy, he avers, but was played by Irish harpists of the tenth century, by the troubadours and minstrels of the Middle Ages when they traveled through France and England, and even by serenaders in the days of the Byzantine Empire.

"I went through the British Museum," says Mr. Shanley, "and there I found many quaint musical relics. One of these was a drawing of a minstrel in the seventeenth century. He was dolled up worse than the jazziest jazz artist that thrills the multitudes today. On top of his head is a circular xylophone, with a couple of horns. Fastened to his back is a harp with a jazz rooster's head on it. Attached to his chest is a jazzy sort of piano, while in his left hand is a Henry Ford fiddle and in his right the grand-daddy of the modern violoncello. Tied to his lower limbs are musical triangles, while on his left is a horn that was built for syncopated music.

"Furthermore, in going through Chappell's 'Popular Music of the Olden Time' I found that many old English airs had a twist of syncopation in them. Maybe that's why the Prince of Wales likes jazz. One of the old English songs was called 'Summer is icumen in.' I ask in all seriousness, isn't that a jazzy title? Bring it up to date and you've got 'Summer is a-Comin' In.'

"This song was sung in the year 1250. Popular airs were all the go and were jazzed up a-plenty. They even had jazz in Germany in those days. It was called—heaven help us! —volkslieder. And then, going to the sacred precincts of old Ireland, we find one of the early kings playing on the harp a tune called, 'Dance Me Around Again, Bridget.' What's that but jazz? They were crazier in those days than we are now.

Shanley submitted his findings to Eddie Peabody, "wizard of harmony" at the Metropolitan Theater, and Eddie said:

"That's right. For hundreds of years my folks have been musicians. One of my ancestors was a minstrel in the Middle Ages, and I've heard that he turned handsprings and somersaults while he played."

HERE TO PRACTICE LAW

Gerald V. Weikert, for six years a member of the legal staff of the Federal Trade Commission, and during the last two years in charge of the commission's activities on the Pacific Coast, with offices at San Francisco, has resigned, and will engage in the private practice of law in Los Angeles.

OLD SEA CHANTIES REVIVED

Filming of Pictures Dealing With Historical Ships Resurrects Ancient Ocean Songs

Colorful ocean songs, many of which have fallen into obscurity with the disappearance of the American clipper from the high seas, are again being brought into the limelight—this time through the source of the silent drama.

With the recent production of a score of historical motion pictures dealing with sailing ships, a demand has arisen for the old sea chanties for use in the subtitles of pictures and the composition of the musical scores to accompany the photoplays.

For the filming of "Old Ironsides," a motion picture glorifying the famous frigate Constitution and the early American merchant marine, the Paramount studio in Hollywood has sent researchers to practically every water front and home for old seamen along the Pacific Coast in an effort to unearth the words and music of famous halyards and short-drag chanties, sung by the old tars as they pulled upon the ropes.

The short-drag chanties, used by seamen when only a few strong hauls were needed, are probably the simplest and earliest of old folk songs. They are said to be but a step removed from the "Yo-heave-ho" song.

One of the earliest of the short-drag chanties discovered was "Haul Away Joe," the words of which were obtained from an English sailor taking part in the picture. Part of the song is as follows—:

Oh, once I had an Irish girl, but she was fat and lazy,
And then I had a yeller girl, she nigh druv me crazy.
But now I've got a English girl, and she is just a daisy.
Once I was in Ireland, digging turf and 'taties,
But now I'm on a lime-juice ship, hauling on the braces.
King Louis was the king of France afore the revolution,
But Louis got his head cut off, which spoiled his constitution.
Once I married an Irish girl, and her name was Flannigan.
She stole my money, she stole my clothes, she stole my plates and pannikin.
St. Patrick was a gentleman, he comes of dacent people,
He built a church in Dublin town and on it put a steeple.

That pocket watches will be run by impulses from a central radio station is the prediction of an eastern engineer.

A cribbage board, five inches long to be carried in the pocket has been perfected.

BRITON TO CONDUCT AT BOWL

Noted Composer-Director; Eugene Goossens, Wields Baton Next Week

As one of the two final guest conductors to be presented in the Hollywood Bowl for the 1926 season, Eugene Goossens, British composer-conductor, one of the youngest directors ever to appear in the outdoor theater, will wield the baton next week.

Goossens, now only 33 years of age, is director of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, and last year served as guest conductor for the New York and Boston symphonies.

Ten years ago he was a violinist in Sir Henry Wood's orchestra in London. His rise has been phenomenal and he has been hailed as one of the most interesting figures in contemporary music today.

He composes as well as directs, and one of his own selections will be on his final program Saturday evening.

Germaine Schnitzer, pianist of international fame, is the soloist of the week, appearing Thursday evening, August 12.

Following Goossens as conductor at the Bowl is Alfred Hertz, San Francisco director, and "Father of the Bowl," the last of the group of celebrated orchestra leaders at the outdoor theater this year. Hertz takes up the baton on the 17th inst.

Special nights next week are as follows: Tuesday, August 10, Pacific Electric Night; Thursday, August 12, Los Angeles County Employees Night; Friday, August 13, Turnverein Night and Saturday, August 14, dedicated to employees of the Board of Public Works.

PORTABLE RADIO ADDS TO JOY OF WEEK-END TRIP

With Programs Coming in at Beach or Mountains One Experiences New Lease on Life

BY MAE PRYCE BROOKS

This is the time of year when the call of the pine forests and the rushing mountain streams is most insistent. When one looks over the attractive little folders with their alluring pictures of strings of trout, cool waterfalls, snow-capped mountain peaks and the beauty of the open road, it seems hard to wait for the week-end to come.

How fortunate we are in Southern California to have not one, but many, enchanting spots within a few miles, comparatively, where a delightful week-end holiday may be spent. To those who love the desert in its wonderful, silent appeal, there is a trip to Red Rock Canyon that is interesting beyond telling. How many who have lived in the Southland for years know that there is a petrified forest down there? It is only very recently that we knew it.

LIGHTS BEAUTIFUL

And to be "sitting on top of the world," up in the pines and look down at night upon Los Angeles and the surrounding towns with their shimmering lights is a sight always to be remembered. If Mother Nature is on her best behavior while you are up there, you may have a glimpse of fascinating Catalina in her setting of glorious blue.

That is another week-end trip—over to Catalina. The invigorating sea air and the quiet of the island sometimes satisfy the out-of-door urge as nothing else can. In our glorious little world of Southern California, we may have our choice of sea, mountains or desert—all accessible for a week-end, or for an entire summer.

No such trips as these are complete unless you have a portable radio with you. To strike camp under the towering trees and at nightfall build a camp fire, set up your radio, just throwing a wire over the limb of a tree (unless you are lucky enough to have a loop aerial) bringing in a program that just suits your mood, is just too good to be true!

The peace and restful calm of the great open spaces give one a new lease on life, and courage to go back to business with renewed strength, and a determination to do one's best—always looking forward to the next week-end with anticipation.

VARIED PROGRAM

If you tuned in last night you heard a program of varied character, with the popular note predominating. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Sears are always welcome to radioland. The old-time fiddler has a niche of his own, and his music carries us back to days in the dim past when there were no high-heeled slippers, and print dresses were in fashion; to barn dances, sleighing parties and all the lovely, simple things of the old days!

Lolita Mahn's violin solos were beautiful in tone and interpretation. Her numbers were the familiar ones, such as "Gypsy Love Song," "Neapolitan Nights," and "Mighty Lak A Rose."

A tenor who came to our microphone for the first time last evening was E. Elsworth Colebaugh. He has a voice particularly adaptable to the lighter ballads which he does very creditably.

Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Silva with their Hawaiian instruments poured forth the real island music in its native beauty. It is a joy to hear it played by such artists as these.

TENOR KEPT BUSY

The contralto voice of Elsie Christman is lovely for broadcast, and her numbers were enthusiastically received. Karl Brandenburg, tenor, gave many request numbers, as well as several new ones. He has a remarkable following out in radioland who never seem to realize that one throat can do only just so much!

The Scripture reading was given by Mr. James C. Gibson, first reader of Seventeenth Church of Christ, Scientist.

The children's hour brought back to us "Aunt Peggy," in her children's stories. This dear person has not been with us for a long time, and we all appreciated her return. The children appearing during the twilight hour were Nona Clapp, "Sunshine Fairy," Baby Blossom LeMort, "Baby Blosson of Radioland," Nancy Nolen, Rosetta Lewin, 9 1-2-year-old reader, Gabriel Bartold, 6-year-old cornetist; Patricia Craig, pupil of Winifred Pollard, and Marjorie Genevieve Lowe, "June Bug" of KHJ. Preceding the children's hour was the half-hour broadcast by the Orpheus Four, from the music room of the Biltmore Hotel.

The Saturday noon program is always enjoyable for it brings to us the Stewart-Warner Trio. Isofarad Pat Lee in popular songs, Frank Thorne, pianist, who plays mighty well, and Madge McConnell, blue singer, completed a very happy hour.

The studio family was so glad to hear from Gladys De Witt whom you will remember as having given that charming series of talks on "The Romance of the Santa Fe Trail." Miss De Witt is at present in the quaint old town of Santa Fe and says she will have much of interest to tell us when she returns.

The latest word from little Sir Richard Headrick is that he and his family are just leaving Denver to Indianapolis, after a very successful meeting in Denver.

Springs Resort to Have Doctor and Dietitian

In accordance with plans to establish a spa at Arrowhead Springs, the Arrowhead Springs Corporation, of which David Blankenhorn of Los Angeles is president, has announced that, beginning October 1, Dr. Frederick S. Modern, graduate of the University of Prague, will become resident physician, and Miss Grace Johnson resident dietitian.

More than $200,000 has been spent on improvements at the resort hotel and property during the year, it was stated.

COMPETITION TO RADIO FORECAST

Telephone and Light Lines to Carry Programs

Wire Transmission Would Eliminate Static

Lack of Program Variety Held Drawback

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Everybody is speculating these days as to just what is going to happen in the now established radio broadcasting industry, which is assured of a permanent future due to its great following and its commercial adaptations. Will it have a competitor or become a monopoly?

One thing appears certain; there is little likelihood of a radio broadcast monopoly; too many independent interests are already established, and just now particularly anyone can enter this new industry which serves the public with entertainment and advertises with a new medium.

To be sure the Radio Corporation now owns three broadcasting stations, and the General Electric and Westinghouse companies operate several more, but as the other 500 odd stations are independent, except that a dozen of them have agreements which enable them to broadcast a program simultaneously, it is difficult to see how a monopoly could be effected.

The Bell System has practically withdrawn from radio broadcasting; it has sold WEAF to the Radio Corporation and closed Washington's WCAP, which was operated by the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, a company related closely to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Why the telephone company did this is still somewhat of a mystery, although it is understood that it will still lease its telephone lines to connect the Radio Corporation and other stations in chains for their mutual co-operation, distributing both pure entertainment and entertainment furnished by advertisers. Commercially this company is still related to broadcasting and a considerable monetary return is assured. One reason why the telephone company might have seen fit to stop broadcasting is found in the Dill and White radio bills, which prohibit combinations of wire, radio and cable interests into what might be considered a communication monopoly.

TELEPHONE BROADCAST

Another reason is because the telephone company is exceedingly interested in the possibility of broadcasting over the wires of its great telephone net with its millions of subscribers throughout the country. Research and experiments pointing toward this ultimate aim have been conducted for the past three or four years in the laboratories of the Bell System. Recently several patents on methods of transmitting programs over telephone wires and means of receiving such programs by subscribers were assigned by the inventors to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Such a circuit set up with the Bell System would probably be more valuable than any number of radio broadcasting stations.

Great possibilities have been seen in wired wireless ever since Gen. Squier demonstrated the practicability in his Signal Corps laboratory about four years ago. The writer was present witnessing several experiments which showed that radio programs could be transmitted over both telephone and electric light lines and received satisfactorily. Wired radio has novel advantages over true radio broadcasts, including the absence of static and other interferences; there is no tuning and less complicated receivers and accessories are required. One thing is lacking—variety. The subscriber has to be satisfied with what the central station transmits, and he will have to pay a fee for such supplementary service to either the telephone or electric light companies.

WIRE TRANSMISSION

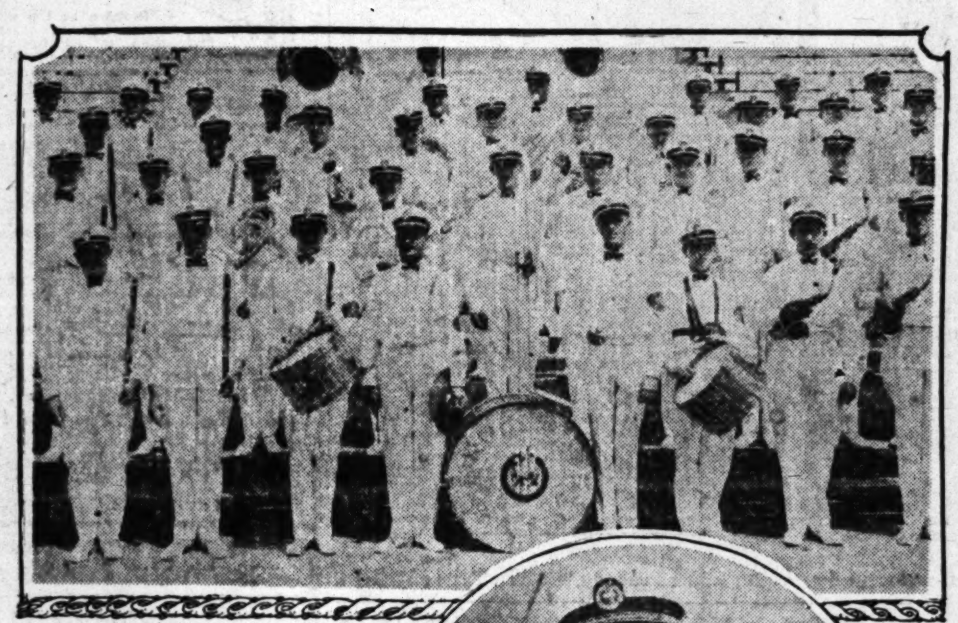
Among the patents recently acquired by the telephone company is a system of program transmission over wires, the invention of John F. Toomey and Henry E. Phelps of New York. The method requires the use of a modern telephone system and a central transmitting station with special receivers and loud speakers for subscribers. Means to switch from direct telephony to program transmission and reception are included. Another patent now owned by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company was issued to John F. Toomey. It provides a method of transmitting either telephone messages or program entertainment over telephone wires, apparently without the use of receivers in the subscribers' homes. Mr. Charles H. Fetter of Milburn, N. J., has also assigned a patent covering a method of broadcast transmission over wires to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The acquisition of these patents, following the long experimentation in this direction, appears to indicate a plan for offering telephone subscribers a supplementary service which would compete with pure radio broadcasting. It may be some time before such a service is offered subscribers, for, with justice to the telephone company, one official advised the writer that he knows of no plan to initiate a service of this character, attributing the assignment of patents as the result of their development and research activities.

Another form of radio broadcast competition may be created by the electric light and power companies, who already have conducted successful experiments in wire broadcasting. Wired Radio, Inc. of New York is possessed of several patents covering means of broadcasting and receiving over wires, chiefly the inventions of Robert D Duncan. A recent census of electric light subscribers who own and operate radio sets was made in Washington by the Potomac Electric Company, indicating that this organization is interested in possibilities.

In any event, it looks as if the radio broadcasters would have some competition in the distribution of entertainment to citizens, and it is safe to believe that such competition would make for improved programs and service to listeners throughout the country.

Robert's Golden State Band



Year Marked by Improvements in Radio Equipment

There has been more real improvement in radio reception for 1926-27 than for any previous season. So states Carl A. Stone of Los Angeles, prominently known in radio on the Pacific Coast. Also no radical departures have been made, but refinement in apparatus, perfection of circuits, proper synchronizing of same. The improvement, he states, consists of:

CARL A. STONE

Better radio receiving sets, better loud speakers or reproducers, better tubes and better broadcasting equipment.

These things, together with the reduction of the three dials to two and one dial, and elimination of B batteries by the use of instruments that attach to the light socket, make radio more to be desired than ever before.

Mr. Stone recently returned from an eastern trip, visiting the plant of the All-American Radio Corporation of Chicago, one of the most prominent radio manufacturers.

They are the manufacturers of the Rauland line of receivers, and many parts and accessories. It is manufacturers of this type who are stabilizing the business, and not demoralizing the market with overproduction, and production of inferior merchandise.

While there have been many failures in radio during the past few years, the All-American Radio Corporation and a few other manufacturers have continued to progress. This was accomplished by giving the public value for their money, and keeping up the value of that which they sold the public by not overproducing and "dumping," as it is called, surplus stock at a fraction of the original cost.

Mr. Stone, who is a director of the radio show to be held in September, states that the public has a treat in store for those who visit the radio show, and see the improvements effected.

NEW TUBE DEVELOPED

An important step forward has been taken for the benefit of radio by E. T. Cunningham, Inc., with the development of a distinctly new type of radio tube known as CX-300A. Type CX-300A is a new alkali vapor detector, specially designed for service only as a detector tube. In sensivity it fully excels the best obtainable from Cunningham radio tube Type CX-300, when CX-300 is critically adjusted. In the CX-300A this extreme sensitiviness is attained without critical adjustment either of filament or plate voltage. No change in wiring or circuit design is necessary when this new tube is installed, but some slight improvement in performance will be noticed if the grid return is changed and connected to the negative filament. When receiving powerful local stations, no appreciable improvement in volume may be noticed when the new tube is substituted for either CX-300 or CX-301A. The same set, however, on distance reception will show marked improvement in signal intensity and in the clarity of reproduction.

Natives of Sumatra are becoming interested in striped and brocaded rayon goods.

STATION CHANGES

The following changes in radio broadcasting stations have been announced by the Department of Commerce:

WGHB, Fort Harrison Hotel, 265.5 meters (change of ownership only; formerly licensed in the name of George H. Bowles Developments.)

WNAC, Shepard Stores, Boston, changed from 280.2 meters to 430.1 meters.

WNAB, Shepard Stores, Boston, changed from 250 meters to 280.2 meters.

WRNY, Experimenter Publishing Company, New York, changed from 258 meters to 374.8 meters.

WBNY, B. A. Ruchome Corporation, New York, changed from 209.7 meters to 322.4 meters (formerly licensed to Miss Shirley Katz.)

WEW, St. Louis University, St. Louis, changed from 247.8 meters to 360 meters.

Local Control of Broadcasting Pleases Hoover

Secretary Hoover recently expressed himself as gratified at the apparent co-operation extended the Department of Commerce by the majority of broadcasting stations, but he has always believed the industry would protect itself. He is equally pleased with the efforts toward local radio control by some municipalities where the majority of broadcasters have mutually agreed to stick to their old broadcast channels and not shift about.

So few new stations have applied formally for licenses that it appears the potential broadcasters are not going to rush into the game until Congress has enacted legislation giving some one the right to regulate stations and the station definite privileges through the ether.

Many musical-string workers are coming from Germany to this country to live.

NEW SHIELDED NEUTRODYNE

Latest Howard Model Bids Fair to Startle Radio Fans With Its Performance

The latest model of the Howard Neutrodyne is a seven tube, completely shielded, loop-operated receiver embodying several noteworthy and last-minute refinements that should prove interesting to the radio public. This model can almost be called "double shielded" as besides the heavy gauge brass inclosing each stage the outside case or cabinet is of heavy aluminum material beautifully grained to look like American butt walnut.

Superb tone quality, unusually long-range with astonishing strength of distant signals, together with a degree of selectivity previous receivers have not been capable of is the outstanding claims made for this receiver. One of the minor features which nevertheless is one of extreme utility is the illuminated dial readings, which may be seen through a window in the center of the panel at all times without aid of exterior lights. By a dual control, tuning is made very easy and simple.

The Howard Radio Distributing Company of 6229 Banner street, Los Angeles are the Coast distributors of Howard six and seven-tube neutrodyne receivers and claim that this seven-tube set is literally astounding local radio fans with the class of its performance even now during the summer months and promises results this winter that will set the whole field talking.

DILL RADIO BILL MEETS WITH FAVOR

Broadcasters and Leaders in Industry Suggest Few Amendments to Act

A survey of the radio industry, including the broadcasters, indicates that the Dill Senate bill meets with general favor, although there are several amendments believed desirable.

According to the replies of the National Broadcast Association's questionnaire, about 70 per cent would prefer to have the radio industry represented on the control commission, or at least to have them eligible for such offices. The Dill bill, as it stands, requires that men who are or have been engaged in any phase of the radio industry within a year's time are ineligible.

They were almost unanimous in the opinion that equal rights should not have to be extended political candidates by a broadcasting station any more than they are by a newspaper, and they object to not having authority to censor matter broadcast either as entertainment or advertising.

About 90 per cent of the replies did not favor the section providing that each State has a fair share of radio channels, in view of the general authority given the commission. Opposition to the strict control of stations hooked up into a chain was also recorded.

Licenses should be issued for longer periods than two years, in the opinion of a large majority of the voters. They are agreed that rebroadcasting should be prohibited unless done with permission of the originating station.

Active Stations on Air in July Show Increase

There were 537 active stations on the air on July 29, as against 528 on July 1, the Department of Commerce official lists show. This means that ten new stations were licensed and one, the Owl Battery Co., WOWL, at New Orleans, dropped out. To be sure, it is reported that several other changes are contemplated, but no official reports are yet in. WCAP, at Washington, for example, will close shortly.

A few other changes in wave lengths, power and ownership are recorded by the radio section of the Commerce Department, but nothing like the general shake-up anticipated in some quarters has taken place since the decision of the acting Attorney-General was announced. Broadcasting goes forward practically as usual. Doubtless a dozen or two new licenses will be issued during the next month and from thirty to forty other stations will designate new normal wave lengths in their renewed licenses. The list of applicants remains the same, 646, as it was nearly a month ago. Little trouble is anticipated unless fifty or more new stations start broadcasting.

New licenses issued during the past week are as follows:

KGBU, Roy R. Thornton, Ketchikan, Alaska, 228.9 meters, 1310 Kcs.

WKBA, The Arrow Battery Company of Chicago, 288.3 meters, 1040 Kcs.

WMBI, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, 288.3 meters, 1040 Kcs.

WJAF, J. A. Fenberg Radio Company, Ferndale, Mich., 400 meters, 149.6 Kcs.

WJBV, Union Cource Laboratories, Woodhave, N. Y., 469.9 meters, 638 Kcs.

KGBS, A. C. Dailey, Seattle, Wash., 209.7 meters, 1430 Kcs.

Four other stations licensed recently bring the total to ten. A temporary license to KRCA, Radio Corporation, San Francisco and Los Angeles, to operate on 305 meters has also been granted.

Miniature radio cabinets are now adapted to serve as cigarette and candy containers. They are so equipped with dials and knobs that when properly "tuned," a smoke or a piece of candy pops out. The latest thing of this type reflecting the effect of radio on other industries is a radio container invented by Iver J. Svarstad of Aberdeen, S. D. Two movable dials, when properly adjusted, cause a piece of candy to be ejected from the unique box.

The new broadcasting station at Zagreb, Jugo-Slavia is now in operation, acocrding to reports to the Department of Commerce. It has one-half kilowatt power and a wave length of 350 meters.

Affairs of the Week

by Juana Neal Levy

Southern California, the land of sunshine and flowers, is adding another charming slogan to its many joys, and in Los Angeles especially is being noted for the land where one can enjoy the symphonies under the stars.

More and more famous are we becoming with out out-of-door philanthropies including the Pilgrimage Play which is held in an out-of-door theater, and from far and near are we constantly hearing of the Hollywood Bowl concerts, especially this year when we are having so many guest conductors with us.

Supper parties "al fresco" in the Bowl are the means of many going out quite early and enjoying the twilight in this open-air amphitheater, reminding many of the fortunate ones of the same sorts of musical treats which are in vogue in Munich and many other foreign cities.

Many years ago, it was my great privilege to attend the summer operas of Parsifal and Lohengren in Beyreuth, and as the opera began at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, one had plenty of time to have one's supper at the theater, and the other evening at the Bowl I was reminded of the supper we had a Beyreuth, and I am sure the Bowl has the preference.

Many letters are coming from Angelenos who are passing the summer abroad, Mrs. Robert London writing from Paris where, with her sister, Miss Lucy E. Smith, she is enjoying a delightful visit, a. the Hotel Pont Royal, in the Rue De Bac.

One of the delightful affairs of recent date in the French capital was the luncheon with which Mr. and Mrs. Eli P. Clark entertained at the Cercle Interallie, sixteen Los Angeles residents being bidden including Mrs. London, Miss Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Owen Eversole, (Mary Clark,) Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, Mrs. Leila Holterhoff Heyn, Mrs. John Percival Jones, Frederick MacMonnies, Mrs. James Harvey Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Booth, Mr. and Mrs. William Preston Harrison, Miss Lucy Clark and the hosts.

The Interallie Club has great charm and in fact is the "Je ne sais quoi" of the French. It started during the war, and all officers of the Allied armies are eligible.

Mrs. John Newton Russell was another Los Angeles hostess at a tea in the French capital several days ago, and Mrs. Paul English entertained with a tea for Los Angeles folk at the American Women's Club.

Raymond C. Gould gave a beautifully appointed dinner at his Paris apartment in honor of Capt. and Mrs. Randolph Huntington Miner and Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, the guests including Mrs. Leila Holterhoff Heyn, Prince Iraki Orbeliani, Miss Cooper, Miss Lind, Mr. Anderson, Evan Mosher and the honor guests. The apartment is a lovely one and following the dinner, a delightful musical program was given by Mrs. Heyn and Prince Orbeliani.

So while our friends are enjoying foreign cities, we also are enjoying hearing from them.

Weddings out of doors were quite the vogue this past month, one of the loveliest being that of Miss Charlene Woodhead, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Burton Woodhead, and E. W. Hendrick, son of Mrs. J. W. Hendrick of Alvarado Terrace, which took place July 31 in the gardens of the Woodhead home, with Rev. Arthur Evans, an old friend of the family, officiating.

The ceremony was read beneath a canopy of delicate white dahlias and larkspur, with improvised altar of the delicate-hued blossoms against a background of ferns, potted plants and palms on the veranda, myriads of tall candles giving light.

Five hundred guests were bidden, and a supper followed the ceremony. The wedding is the culmination of a romance of some years' standing and unites two prominent families of the Southland.

The bride was graduated from Westlake School for Girls and later attended the University of Southern California, oratory school, while Mr. Hendrick still has another year at the same university before finishing his law course.

Following his being graduated from West Point, he was detailed in the service to the Philippines, but resigned some time ago as a lieutenant end is now a captain in the Reserve Corps.

Preceding and during the ceremony, Mrs. H. Reeve Darling (cousin of the bride) sang several selections, and Mrs. Ethel Rhoades Maude gave a group of harp numbers.

After their return from a wedding trip motoring through Southern California, Mr. and Mrs. Hendrick will be at home here, having taken an apartment near the university.

Among the honor guests at the wedding were Mrs. Maybel Walker Willebrandt and Mrs. Carl McMahon (cousin of the bride) from Ohio.

Another garden wedding of recent date was that of Miss Beatrice Irene Butterfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Westgate Butterfield of South Pasadena, who became the bride of Donald Penfield Nichols, the ceremony taking place in the lovely gardens of the home of Mrs. Horace Arthur Fuller in San Rafael avenue, with Judge Frank C. Collier officiating.

The charming nook of the gardens was adorned with flowers and a railing of white satin ribbons and asparagus ferns separated the bridal party from the rest of the guests during the plighting of the marriage vows.

The dainty bride was given in marriage by her father and immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the drawing rooms of the home and a wedding supper served, the bride's table being especially lovely with tall shell-pink candles in Dresden candelabra and the place cards and favors being satin hand-made with silver bells.

After their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Nichols will make their home in Berkeley for a year after which they will return to Southern California.

Mr. Nichols is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Penfield Nichols of Pomona.

One of the most popular brides-elect of the summer is Miss Florence Mullin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Mullin of 669 South Hudson avenue, whose engagement to Pettis Grafton Tanquary, recently announced, came as a surprise to a gathering of friends of the bride-elect at a bridge-luncheon given in honor of Mrs. Eugene Willson Ross of El Centro. Mrs. Ross was formerly Miss Ruth Collison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Collison of West Twenty-first street.

The wedding will be one of the brilliant events of the early winter, although the date has not yet been decided upon.

September 4 has been chosen by Miss Genevieve Ruis, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ruis, 11226 Compton avenue, Long Beach, for her wedding with Max Spendrup, son of Mrs. Ida Spendrup of Altadena.

The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride's parents, with only the immediate relatives in attendance.

Miss Vesta Spendrup will assist as maid of honor, while Walter Snodgrass will serve Mr. Ependrup as best man.

The Ruis family is one of the oldest of the pioneers of California. The grandparents were among the early Dons of Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, dating back earlier than 1800.

Dr. and Mrs. Paul Keat Pace, whose wedding was one of the lovely affairs of the 29th inst. in St. John's Church, are honeymooning in the North, where they are motoring for a

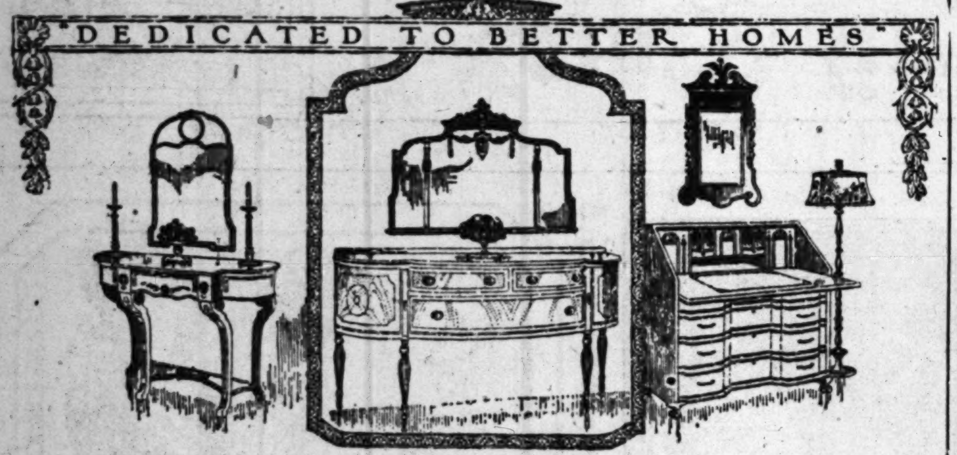
"DEDICATED TO BETTER HOMES"



It Will Pay You To Make Value Comparisons

BUYING home furnishings is an important responsibility. Upon the selection you make depends the beauty and charm of your home and the personal comfort of those who dwell therein.

Only the years to come can determine the measure of your satisfaction. Home furnishings that do not bring lasting pleasure and permanent pride of possession are high priced no matter how little they may have cost.

Price alone is a dangerous guide to follow. Study quality if you would make sure of value. It is the relation of "what you get" to "what you pay" that determines value.

The transaction is too important to take anything for granted. Make extensive value comparisons and make them personally.

You will never find values at the "California" heralded as "bargains" or "price reductions" but you will find values here that compare more than favorably with values elsewhere, so called special sales and bargain events notwithstanding.

And you will find superior selections here—unusual home furnishings of honest quality—plus an intelligent co-operative helpful service that will insure the happy results you seek.

Visitors are always welcome regardless of intent to buy.

In one of the "California" windows this week will be shown an unusually interesting "Duncan Phyfe" Dining Room Suite.

During the Month of August the "California" Will Be Closed All Day Saturdays

Irene Rich Has European Tour Right in Studio

Irene Rich is on a European tour in the filming of pictures at the Warner Brothers studio. London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, and other capitals she has been to them all, to say nothing of an occasional dash to Siberia and other out-of-the-way places.

Her tour started with the making of "Compromise" and took her to a make-believe London. Then "Silken Shackles," with its locale in Paris. In "The Door Mat," she returned to the United States to enact the role of a mother in a Middle Western family. Now she is in Petrograd and Vienna in "My Official Wife," the current production, in which she is co-starring with Conway Tearle.

The story, dealing with love and intrigue in Russia before the revolution, has been adapted from the book of the same name by Richard Savage. Warners are making of it a very pretentious production and making every effort possible to retain the colorful romance of the book. Paul Stein is directing and is admirably suited, being particularly familiar with the locales as he only recently arrived from Europe, this being his first American picture. Stein while in Europe made such screen masterpieces as "La Traviata," starring Pola Negri, and "The Lion of Venice," with Lya De Putti, and is expected to give "My Official Wife" those subtle directorial touches that identify the European production.

With Irene Rich and Conway Tearle in the leading roles of Countess Orloff and Sacha Stenoff, the supporting cast includes Stuart Holmes, John Miljan, Sidney Bracy, Gustav von Seyffertiz, Emil Chatyard and a picked group of Russian Cossacks.

Something over $1,500,000,000 is the value of material produced in the steel industry of this country annually.

WEDDING SOLEMNIZED AT CLUB

Couple Marry at Outdoor Altar

[C. Elmore Grove Studios]

Mrs. Walter John McManus

Formal announcement is made this morning by Dr. and Mrs. Curtis M. Beebe of the marriage of their attractive daughter, Miss Frances Mae Beebe, to Walter John McManus, son of Mrs. Walter J. McManus, the ceremony taking place yesterday afternoon on the lawn of El Caballero Country Club, with 200 friends and relatives witnessing. Father P. Healy of La Crescenta officiated. The bride is a member of the Chi Omega sorority, while Mr. McManus is affiliated with the Kappa Phi fraternity.

In Realm of Society

month and after their return, they will make their home here.

Mrs. Pace was formerly Miss Mazie Burnett Ramsey, attractive daughter of Mrs. May Burnett Ramsey of Scarff street, where the reception and wedding supper followed the ceremony.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Pace were graduated from University of Southern California where the former is affiliated with the Delta Sigma Delta Fraternity while Mrs. Pace is a member of the Delta Gamma Sorority.

One of the attractive members of the younger set whose engagement was recently announced is Miss Catherine Culver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Culver of 1851 Argyle avenue. With her sister, Miss Charlotte Culver, Miss Catherine was guest of honor at the beautifully appointed bridge-luncheon given by their mother, the affair serving to formally announce the engagement of Miss Culver to Myron Packard, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Packard of Santa Barbara. Twenty-five guests were bidden.

Miss Culver was graduated from Hollywood High School while her fiance is a Stanford man and a member of the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

The wedding will be one of the events of the fall.

The marriage of Miss Julia Alice Cosby to Irving Raine Funk was one of the prettily appointed events of last month, the ceremony taking place in the Little Church of the Flowers in Glendale, with Judge Frank Collier officiating.

Four generations were present at the ceremony, the grandmother of the bride being Mrs. Julia A. McIntosh, while her great-grand-daughter, Miss Anna Kathryn Martin, played the wedding music.

The ceremony was read at 8:30 o'clock in the morning and a wedding breakfast followed, after which Mr. and Mrs. Funk left for their honeymoon and will be at home after their return in Fullerton.

Mrs. Funk was graduated from University of California and is a Kappa Delta pledge, while Mr. Funk also graduated from the same university and is a Del Rey Fraternity member.

Of more than usual interest to local society was the announcement made recently of the engagement of Miss Anna May Sibbet, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert A. Sibbet of 4036 Wilshire Boulevard, to Frederick Laux Botsford, son of the late W. F. Botsford and Mrs. Monimia Laux Botsford of 5085 Edgewood Road, the news being told to a coterie of intimate friends of the young bride-elect at a beautifully appointed bridge-luncheon. No date has been set as yet for the wedding.

Miss Sibbet was graduated from Marlborough School in 1918 and later from University of California in Berkeley. For the past two years she has been studying music in New York City.

Mr. Botsford is an alumnus of the law school at University of Southern California and is one of the prominent young attorneys of our city.

Among the beautifully appointed weddings of the summer was that of Miss Miriam Hansen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Hansen, and Leslie Alden Cummins, the ceremony being read by Rev. Marion Smith in Hollywood Congregational Church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was assisted by Miss Elizabeth Lippincott, daughter of the Charles Howard Lippincotts, as maid of honor, while Miss Elizabeth Reynolds of San Diego and Miss Charlotte Leonard of Hollywood were bridesmaids. Robert Kerr was best man and the ushers included Leigh Crosby and Fred Moyer Jordon, all college friends of Mr. Cummins, who was graduated from University of California, Southern Branch, and is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi and Phi Delta Phi (law,) while Mrs. Cummins also was graduated from University of California, Southern Branch, and is an Alpha Tau Zeta Sorority member.

After their return from the wedding trip in a few days Mr. and Mrs. Cummins will make their home here.

Delightful Affair

Gathering together a coterie of old friends, Mrs. Reginald Lloyd Jones (Emmie Conroy,) daughter of Mrs. Jerry F. Conroy of Camrose Drive, Hollywood, entertained with a beautifully appointed luncheon Thursday afternoon at the Miramar Club in Santa Monica. The affair was in honor of Mrs. Peter White, formerly Miss Gertrude King, daughter of Mrs. Frank W. King, who, with her young child, is here from the Philippines visiting her mother and sister, Miss Madeline King.

The luncheon table was fragrant with summer flowers and ferns, and those included were Mrs. White, Mrs. John Cobb Macfarland (Eleanor Banning,) Miss Albertine Pendleton, Mrs. Charles William Kemmler, Jr. (Marguerite Drake) of New York, Mrs. Houghton Metcalf (Lucile Clark,) Mrs. Roy Bayly (Ada Seeley,) Mrs. Forrest Stanton (Elizabeth Peyton,) Mrs. John Henry Smith of Kansas City (Marjorie Menefee,) Mrs. Bri Conroy Gray (sister of the hostess,) Miss Inez Clark, Mrs. George Keating (Adele Gray,) Miss Madeline King, Mrs. John Mel (Margaret Gaffey,) Mrs. Erwin Widey (Margery Utley,) Mrs. Martyn Haenke (Marie Churchill,) Mrs. John Percival Hunt (Mildred Burnett,) Mrs. William Starke Rosecrans (Elizabeth Helm) and Mrs. Louis Tolhurst (Jane Rollins.)

It is the first time in many years that this group of old-time friends who went to school together have gotten together, as many of them have married and live away from here, but have come back this summer to visit with their families and friends.

For Bride-Elect

In honor of Miss Phyllis Kemp, attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Nesbitt Kemp of St. Andrews Place, whose wedding with Wallace Moir will be one of the events of next month, Miss Evelyn Kingston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Kingston, is entertaining Wednesday afternoon with a bridge-luncheon and linen shower at the Los Angeles Country Club. Among the guests will be Miss Kemp, Miss Frances Keach, Miss Helen Thomas, Miss Mildred Moir, Miss Helen Chandler, Miss Marian Gaffney, Miss Adele Brown, Mrs. Edwin Chilion Horrell, Miss Virginia Lee Martin, Miss Charlotte Edwards, Miss Helene Cerf, Miss Grace Louise Whiteford, Miss Ruth Richardson, Miss Geraldine Burks and Miss Bernice Rossmer.

Miss Kingston, who will be the maid of honor at the wedding, has just returned from a motor trip north with her parents, having visited in Del Monte, Carmel and San Francisco.

Bon Voyage

In honor of Mr. and Mrs. Bjorn Foss (Edna Gunner Peterson,) who are leaving shortly for an extended trip to the Land of the Midnight Sun, Mrs. Nora Puterbaugh is entertaining tomorrow evening with a musicale and buffet supper at her charming home in Franklin avenue, Hollywood. She will be assisted by her mother, Mrs. D. C. Webb, and sister, Mrs. E. W. Sreyschlag of Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish, Mme. Emma de Zaruba, Mrs. George Leslie Smith, Miss Hallie Estes, Mrs. Sylvain Noack and Mrs. William D. Syers, while presiding at the coffee urns will be Mrs. James Taber Fitzgerald, Miss Frieda Peycke and Miss Margery Dodge.

One hundred and fifty guests have been bidden, this being but one of the many delightful affairs given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Foss before their departure.

Thursday afternoon Mrs. Leola Goetze and Mrs. Frank McQuoid entertained with a luncheon at the Mary Louise in honor of Mrs. Foss.

The musical program will be most informal and the buffet supper will be served in the lovely patio of the house, where at one end is an immense fireplace and at the other a fountain, the whole being beautifully lighted with colored electric-light globes cleverly concealed in the shrubbery.

Friday evening, a prettily appointed buffet supper was given by Miss Elizabeth Puterbaugh, daughter of Mrs Nora Puterbaugh, in the patio of their home, the guests being classmates of the charming little hostess at Hollywood School for Girls, where she will be a senior next year. The huge fireplace had a huge fire burning and the guests roasted the "weenies" for the supper, covers being arranged for twelve, and dainty place cards marking the plates at the Engagement Announced

Of more than usual interest to local society is the announcement made this morning by Mr. and Mrs. Emory A. Warner of 2237 Harvard Boulevard of the engagement of their attractive young daughter, Miss Mabel Carolyn Warner, to William Alfred Wilgus, Jr., son of Mrs. Effie Shafer Wilgus of this city.

The wedding will unite two pioneer families. The father of the bride-elect has been a resident of Los Angeles forty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Shafer and Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Wilgus, grandparents of the bridegroom-elect, have lived here equally as long.

The news was told to a few of the most intimate friends of the bride-elect at a beautifully appointed bridge-luncheon given Friday afternoon by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Horace E. Warner, at her home, 822 Windsor Boulevard. The color scheme of yellow and orchid was artistically carried out in the appointments and decorations of the luncheon table, corsages of yellow roses and lilies of the valley forming the centerpiece, with streamers of wide satin ribbons to each place, holding the betrothal cards which were tucked in the place napkins.

No date is set as yet for the wedding.

Beebe, became the bride of John Walter McManus, son of Mrs. Walter J. McManus, Rev. Father P. Healy of La Crescenta officiating in the presence of 200 guests. The decorations of garden summer blossoms, ferns and potted plants, with tulle ribbons and tall tapers furnished a lovely improvised altar on the lawn, before which the marriage vows were plighted.

Miss Mandane Todd assisted as maid of honor, while Miss Betty Lawford and Miss Peggy Weaver were bridesmaids. Ellen Harman was flower girl and Mary Frances McLean carried the ring. Cecil Wilson served Mr. McManus as best man and Ted Lewis and Leslyn Cummings were ushers. Wrinkles Removed in 15 Minutes—3 Cents!

Quite a sensation has been created in certain social circles over the wonderful rejuvenating effects of a simple Tarkroot mixture any woman can easily apply. The results are so remarkable that one has told others, who have told many more; now the new method bids fair to supersede all patent wrinkle removers, massage and other things for the purpose.

This is the procedure: A spoonful of Powdered Tarkroot is mixed with a spoonful of lemon juice, and this is spread over the face. An amazing transformation takes place, as the mirror shows. In less than 15 minutes wrinkles, crowsfeet and creases have completely vanished! Facial contour is noticeably improved and the face looks years younger. The most skillful massaging could not produce such a wholesome effect as remains after the mixture has been washed off. Tarkroot is of course perfectly harmless. Inexpensive, too. An original package from the druggist contains sufficient to bring the cost per treatment under three cents.

Mrs. Rudolph B. Jacobson

THE marriage of Miss Fern Nellie Cushing, daughter of Mrs. Emma Cushing of Cashio street, to Dr. Rudolph B. Jacobson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Neils Jacobson of San Francisco, was one of the events of last month, taking place in the Little Church of the Flowers, Glendale, with Dr. Wilsie Martin officiating. A reception and wedding supper at the home of the bride's mother followed the ceremony. Dr. and Mrs. Jacobson will make their home here after the wedding trip.

teenth street, after a delightful week spent visiting at Coronado. She was accompanied on the trip by her family.

Miss Betty Walker has at her home, 455 Lincoln Boulevard, Miss Muriel Upham of Tucson, Ariz., the former home of the Walkers. Miss Upham is a University of Arizona girl, and a member of the Pi Beta Phi Sorority and the two friends are having a happy reunion. On Thursday evening Miss Walker entertained for her house guest with a social evening and cards. The guests were Miss Jeanette Freeman, Miss Mary Johnson, Miss Mina Young, Miss Adelaide Hyde, Miss Margaret Hill, Miss Mildred Frazer, Miss Pearl Baldwin and the honoree.

Mrs. F. A. Helton in Fifth street entertained on Wednesday with a beautifully appointed luncheon at her home for cousins from New York City, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Frizell and Mrs. Sarah Maxwell, who are the house guests of the latter's daughter, Mrs. T. H. Snell of Beverly Hills. A drive with tea at the Encino Country Club provided the diversions of the afternoon. The guests included the honorees and Mrs. Snell.

San Pedro

Shortly following her return from a ten months' tour of Europe, a dinner complimenting Mrs. Mary K. Cook was given recently by her son, Clark K. Cook, who entertained most delightfully at his home, 825 Cabrillo avenue. Summer bloom centered the daintily-appointed dinner table, at which covers were indicated for Mrs. Mary K. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Welsh, Jr., of Altadena; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wright, Miss Lilliann Cooke of Long Beach, Miss Lorraine Wright and Howard Watson of Pasadena, and Clark K. Cook. Leaving San Pedro October 6, Mrs. Cook, accompanied by a friend from Flint, Mich., proceeded to New York and sailed from the eastern port for Europe. After a month in Paris, she visited Nice, Cannes, Mentone, Monte Carlo, Florence, Rome, Milan, Naples, Zurich and Munich. She returned to Paris before sailing for New York, and, en route west, visited friends in various eastern cities and made a short stop at Lake Louise in Canada.

Assisted by her mother, Mrs. G. C. Bell, Miss Marjorie Bell recently presided over a smart bridge-luncheon at her home, 571 West Seventeenth street. Honors were shared by Miss Elizabeth Miller of San Pedro, student at Pomona College, where Miss Bell also attends, and Mrs. Harold Moore, the latter of whom was complimented on the occasion of her birthday anniversary. A pyramid birthday cake, bedecked with yellow candles, was a part of a dainty ornamentive scheme in which yellow prevailed. Corsage bouquets were place favors, marking covers for Mrs. Harold Moore, Miss Elizabeth Miller, Mmes. Max Waggoner and George Jones, and the Misses Muriel Ells, Edna Hildebrand, Lucille Brothers, Blanche Ballinger, Virginia Taylor, Marjorie Waite, Doris Black, Helen Brown, Mona Dunn, Altadena Smith, Berdell Ridgeway and Marjorie Bell.

Long Beach

Gov. Friend W. Richardson and Mrs. Richardson were honor guests at the garden fete given Tuesday afternoon and evening by Ebell Club members in the spacious grounds surrounding the Hugh F. Stock home on East Ocean Boulevard. Gov. Richardson gave an informal address during the afternoon and an elaborate musical, literary and dancing program were interesting features. Colorful beach umbrellas, attractive booths and many card tables were scattered over the lawn and beneath the trees where some 400 guests assembled. Mrs. A. W. Vasey as chairman of the ways and means committee, received with Mrs. Stock. Other assisting hostesses were Mmes. Henry Willis Spratt, John C. Kyle, Bessie Porter, C. E. Powell and Olive Ellis.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Balaam have returned from a motor trip through Northern California, Oregon, Washington, Eastern Canada and British Columbia, having driven over 5000 miles and traveled by water from Vancouver to Victoria, B. C., and around the island for several hours before ferrying over to the mainland again. They report the trip well worth while. They were guests for a short time of Mr. Balaam's mother who is spending the summer in Martinez, and of his brother, Clyde Balaam, and Mrs. Balaam, at Elk, Mendocino county. Points of interest included in their itinerary were Mt. Ranier, Crater Lake, the scenic Columbia Highway and the Oregon Caves.

Mrs. O. W. Carr is spending several weeks at the Carr summer home at Doyle's, while Mr. Carr, with a party of friends, is on a hiking trip into the high Sierras, expecting to scale Mt. Whitney. Mrs. Carr has been hostess to a number of Exeter friends since taking residence at Doyle's Springs.

Tulare

Two well-known Tulare young people were quietly married Saturday morning in Bakersfield, when Miss Edith Mills, daughter of Mrs. J. C. Virden, became the bride of George Libecajt. Mrs. Libecajt has lived in Tulare all her life, attending the elementary and high schools here, and last year was one of the teachers at the Roosevelt school. Mr. Libecajt is employed by the Richfield Oil Company office in Tulare, and the young people are to make their home here.

Mrs. Della Cain, District Deputy and President of Enterprise Rebekah Lodge No. 118, accompanied by her grand officers and a large party of members, were guests of the Dinuba lodge Tuesday evening. Installation

lma Rubens Adds Many to Christmas List

Rubens, playing the featured role in "Siberia," Bartley memorable play, now at Criterion Theater, Seventh street Grand avenue, had 106 children to her Christmas list when Schertzinger filmed the Rus play.

Every time Miss Rubens make a picture with children in the cast, careful note of their names addresses. Thereafter she remembers each one Christmas. In making the school for the Russian epic, Schertzinger used more than 100 Rus youngsters.

Miss Rubens told her secretary to the names of each tiny aspirant film honors.

SCARCITY OF FARCES IS DANGER

Future Original Plays Developed by Skilled "Gag" Men

"Story starvation is the greatest danger confronting our leading screen farceurs today!" commented William A. Seiter sagely as he completed the reading of the fortieth picture vehicle submitted as a possibility for the second of the new Reginald Denny series of laugh-makers for Universal.

"How to top each preceding and successful picture is our most perplexing problem," continued the harassed director.

"In the future the writing of original farces and comedies for the screen will become an absolute necessity to insure the maintenance of the high standard set by our leading funsters. But, in my opinion, the original stories will be developed, rather than written, by the ideas and treatment of a group of skilled story and 'gag' craftsmen!"

LIKES LLOYD METHOD

These are the conclusions drawn by this director, who has achieved considerable distinction during the last two years by virtue of his direction of a series of sparkling farce-comedies in which Reginald Denny has burst over the film horizon as one of the most popular stars of the day. After these deductions, it is not at all surprising to learn that Seiter is a strong admirer of what he terms the Harold Lloyd method of story and picture development. Once the basic idea for story is decided upon, the building of the story structure is usually approached from several angles, developed by the treatments of a group of four or five craftsmen, until the most desirable version is achieved. Then to the filming!

Nine weeks have elapsed since Seiter completed the production of "Take It From Me," the first of the new Reginald Denny series, and two more will pass by before they begin the filming of "The Cheerful Fraud," an adaptation of a novel by K. S. G. Browne, owing to the delay caused by the necessity of finding the right story to follow.

MUSICAL-COMEDY PLOT

"Take It From Me" was a musical comedy with an unusual plot, which, although only slightly developed in the stage version, offered intriguing possibilities for picture-farce developments. It is the story of a very likeable young man inheriting a department store, and his ludicrous adventures in attempting to play a merchant prince. But, the picture production represents many weeks of hard work on the part of the director, the star and several story craftsmen, who built the feature from the foundation of one main idea. It might just as well have been an original screen story.

"The Cheerful Fraud" will mark the eighth production in which Reginald Denny and William Seiter have combined their talents in the work of making farces. They will probably be separated for one picture after this production, as Universal executives would like to give Seiter the honor of directing Laura La Plante's first picture to be produced after their marriage early this fall. In fact, the romance of Laura and the director began when she played a leading role opposite Reginald Denny in a picture he directed, so it is only fitting that this production be in the nature of a wedding present.

Youngsters Do Excellently in Directors Role

Producers who have experimented with new and young "blood" in the directorial ranks are being remuneratively repaid for their keen perspective, if the public's approval of recent pictures is to be accepted as a criterion, it is asserted.

Richard Wallace, Monta Bell, Mal St. Clair and Louis Milestone are some of the youngsters who were intrusted with megaphones during the past year with instructions to make good, and paradoxically have done so.

Singling out Wallace, his rise to his present successful heights has been nothing short of meteoric. Producer E. M. Ascher, who gave Al Santell his big opportunity, did likewise for Wallace. Terminating his contract with the Hal Roach organization, Wallace was signed to direct Corinne Griffith in "Broadway Blues."

Director Gade Knows Feeling of Free Lancer

For the first time in his career as a director, Svend Gade is experiencing the feeling of one in the free-lance field.

When he terminated his contract with Universal several months ago, which enabled him to make his decision to choose his next affiliations, he was immediately signed by E. M. Ascher to direct Corinne Griffith in "Into Her Kingdom." Before half the picture was filmed, he was signed to direct another production, which is to be called "The Lady in Ermine."

However, recent changes in production plans of Miss Griffith necessitated a switch in the type of story to follow her present picture.

Instead of remaining idle and enjoying a vacation, Gade was immediately signed by First National to direct a picture for Sam Rork, which will be known as "The Isle of Life."

One-Act Plays Presented on Garret Stage

A program, composed entirely of original plays by local authors, will be presented at the next fortnightly entertainment at the Garret Club, 132 1-2 South Spring. "In the Morgue," Sada Cowan's one-act sketch with William J. Parker, George B. McNulty and others, will be one of the outstanding features of the bill.

Rupert Hughes' one-act farce "On the Razor's Edge, is now being staged under the direction of Paul Spier with a cast including Pearl Steuben, Catharine Ogden, Charles Gillman and others.

A unique flash act by Ralph Wheelright will open the program.

Karyl Marker will also be seen in a one-act sketch under his direction.

Among the presidents who will serve in club circles for the following year are Mrs. Read of the Ebell Club; Mrs. Turner of the Friday Morning Club; Mrs. Sinclair of the Southern California Woman's Press Club; Mrs. Burnham of the Biltmore American College Salon. Of the Southern District Business Professional Women's Club, Mrs. Winter; of the Hollywood Chapter D.A.R., Mrs. Russel; of the Long Beach Ebell, Mrs. Spratt, and of the Bay Cities Music Association, Mrs. Zuckerman. Miss Payne is president of Alpha Tau Zeta.

BOBBED COMMENT

Topic Perennial; Romance in News

BY MYRA NYE

It would seem that bobbed hair as a subject for newspaper stories has become passe—is indeed a matter of history and not a current subject. Yet it is perennial. Last week a woman in France was divorced by her husband because she bobbed her hair without letting him know in advance. And the judge was very severe in his condemnation.

Sunburned Star

Lilyan Tashman, sometimes known as Mrs. Edmund Lowe, was the only sunburned star at the party given by Grace Kingsley last Friday. No, there was one other. Blanche Sweet may not have been sunburned but she had a wonderful coat of tan. Mrs. Lowe sat next to me at the table and she was enthusiastic over the prospect of starting next Thursday for Europe. She is to remain there only six weeks but in that time expects to purchase wonderful French and Italian things for her new home. She wore bracelets at the party, enough of them to reach nearly to her elbow. She said when she returns from France she expects to wear bracelets way up to her shoulder. She wore as ornaments only carnelian and rose amber together with some Chinese gold settings for jewels and they were stunning with her svelte black chiffon.

Story of Twins

Twins. Adoption. Wealth. All of these words and what they signify always had a great fascination for me. Each one is the basis for a story and it is interesting to find them combined in one story here in Los Angeles. Two beautiful curly haired children, avid and Diane, born the same day of the same parents have been adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Letts. But they were not always David and Diane Letts. Only a month ago they were John and Alice Burke.

No sooner had Judge Archibald given Alice and John their new names than their names were changed and within an hour the pair, 2 years of age, were sleeping peacefully under the roof tree which shelters a palatial mansion.

Dramatic Event

No more dramatic event of the century has occurred than the Catholic defense of their religious cause in Mexico. Whatever one's faith, no one can fail to admire the loyalty of Catholic women to their church. And it has been the women who have stood staunchly in the sun waiting for the baptism of their babes in arms, before the altar to adore the eucharist for the last time under the direction of their priest, outside the church near the long lines of children waiting for confirmation. Then as a body the Catholic women of Mexico addressed a letter of appeal to Senora Natalia Chacon Calles, wife of the President of the Republic, who herself is a loyal Catholic, appointing her to defend their cause before her husband. The letter was sent before the last day of July when the priests by law were required to leave their churches.

"Your husband will do whatever you desire, because man is noble and easy to lead," says the letter and adds: "We appoint you defender of our cause. We have analyzed the consequences of religious intolerance and we are worried. We find that the first wars in history were fought in the name of religion."

And yet there are authors today who say there is nothing of drama, nothing of romance, nothing but stark plain realism with which to deal. As of old the story of Esther appearing before her king in behalf of her people so is there an equally dramatic parallel in the appearance of Natalia before her President in behalf of her people.

"Ma" Ferguson

How can Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson when she becomes a "has been" or a "down-and-outer" as clubwomen and their fellow officers who are out of office, live down her name of "Ma." She may learn to dress like a film queen, walk like a real queen is supposed to walk and have the bearing of a European sovereign, but she can never get away from "Ma." How much more beautiful is the name "Mother." Gov. Ferguson's husband says his wife was defeated by the Ku Klux Klan. I wonder. Perhaps women have not really "taken on" to the job of governorship.

Feminine Voice

Always in the Victorian age a woman's voice was the subject for poets. "That excellent thing in woman—her voice was low and sweet" but low or sweet or both, she will not please today as a radio announcer. The Radio Corporation of America announced recently that replies to 10,000 questionnaires sent to radio fans in all parts of the country have brought a 99.3 per cent rejection of women as radio announcers. The feminine voice, they all said, is not suited to announcing.

Virginia Valli Gets Intriguing Fox Film Role

Virginia Valli enters into one of the most intriguing impersonations of her screen career in "A Royal Romance," the Harry Carr story now being prepared for her at the Fox studios.

Max Marcin, playwright, and Howard Hawks, are collaborating on the scenario and Hawks will direct the filming.

Miss Valli has the role of a Parisian gamine of Montmartre who is assigned the duty of entertaining a prince. The complications result in the discovery that while Virginia acts naughty—she really is nice!

This is Miss Valli's second picture under a contractural arrangement with the Fox company to star in three big productions. Her first picture was "The Family Upstairs" of J. G. Blystone.

FUND WILL AID SCIENTISTS

Women and Men of Country to Be Benefitted by $20,000,000 Endowment Plan

Women as well as men in the scientific world in this country will benefit from the $20,000,000 endowment fund for research in pure science, which is being raised under the direction of the National Research Endowment of the National Academy of Sciences, with Herbert Hoover as chairman of the special board of trustees in charge of the undertaking, according to official reports.

It is estimated that there are many women in this country engaged in important phases of scientific research. They are to be found in all branches of the mathematical, physical and biological sciences, contributing fundamental knowledge of such value to the nation that every effort should be made to facilitate their efforts.

They are handicapped by the conditions under which they are obliged to work and the limited amount of time available to devote to research. A considerable number of them are members of the faculties of our great educational institutions, all of which are taxed to their full student capacity. This overcrowding has resulted in excessive demands of teaching and administration, which has greatly reduced the limited opportunities for research, which these women formerly enjoyed.

Among our women scientists of note who are engaged upon important research in pure science are Florence Rena Sabin, a physiologist of Johns Hopkins University, who was the first woman honored by a life membership in the National Academy of Sciences; Miss Annie Jump Cannon of Harvard College observatory; Dr. Alice Hamilton, the famous authority on industrial medicine of Harvard; Mary B. Stark, professor of embryology and histology at the New York Hospital Medical College, and numerous others engaged in work of equal importance.

Such distinguished women educationalists as President Ada L. Comstock of Radcliffe and Ellen Fitz Pendleton of Wellesley, as well as the presidents of many other colleges for women, are unanimous in their opinion that funds are needed to aid in one way or another those who are engaged upon the very necessary and vital tasks of pure-science research.

Because it has been impossible, during the past years, to supply these necessities, many women scientists have frequently been compelled, in order that they might continue their research activities, to abandon their teaching professions altogether and enter other fields. The result, if it must continue, is likely to prove disastrous to the educational world, for as the scientist gains in knowledge from her research her value as a teacher increases. She will, in fact, as President Comstock recently wrote Mr. Hoover, "be better able to attract and to train the young disciples to whom pure science in the next generation must look for its advancement."

With but few exceptions all university and college presidents in the country have not only given their unqualified approval for the need of the fund Mr. Hoover and his associates in the National Academy of Sciences are endeavoring to raise, but are offering their support in every possible way.

EBELL CLUB BROADENS ITS SCOPE

More Committees Named by President to Carry on Rest Cottage Work

Last Tuesday Mrs. William Read, president of the Ebell Club, entertained at luncheon at her home forty of the women who are to give their time this coming year as members of the committees for the Ebell Rest Cottage. This part of Ebell's philanthropies has grown to such an extent that each year new committees are formed to broaden the scope of the work. This year Mrs. Cecil R. Luton is to head the new social committee, Mrs. Jack Jevne is to continue as chairman of the "follow-up" committee, Mrs. O. B. Hutchins will be chairman of transportation and Mrs. Harry E. Brown of investigation.

Mrs. W. E. Barrett, chairman of membships, announces that a new $100 memorial membership has been created to satisfy a demand for those who wish to give this sum of money to assist in the constructive work of the cottage in memory of a mother, sister or a dear friend. The new officers of Ebell Rest Cottage are Mrs. Samuel Forost, chairman; Mrs. George H. Mosher, assistant; Miss Helen V. Switzer, secretary; Miss Hattie A. Newman, treasurer; Mrs. Leslie R. Hewitt, auditor; Mrs. J. A. McCusker, Mrs. John R. French and Mrs. Willis Sharon, directors.

Mrs. William Read and the executive board of the Ebell Club have devoted the first part of the summer to the preparation for the new club building, and now a few of them are having short vacations before the active work of the fall begins. Mrs. Grantland S. Long has gone to Texas. Mrs. Charles D. Burt is to spend the rest of August in the northern part of the State. Mrs. Lyman B. Stookey is spending some time in the Tehachapi Mountains. Mrs. Harry D Ford is motoring to Monterey with her family, where they will stay until her two older daughters begin their fall work, Miss Harriet Ford at Stanford and Miss Hope Ford as a member of the faculty of Pomona College. Mrs. Ilot Johnson and her son are going to Catalina. Mrs. Read is not to be away from the architect's office very long at a time, but with Mrs. James C. Ernest will spend a short time at La Jolla and later will go to Big Bear. Mrs. James A. Rogers, the third vice-president, is spending the summer with her son in Europe.

MOSQUITO DIET

Diet for mosquitoes this year has been forecast by a Rutgers professor, who advocates a scientific repellant compounded by mixing ordinary insect-powder extract with cold cream, vaseline or face powder. By smearing on a concoction of fourteen parts of oil or extract to ninety-four parts of vaseline or cold cream, the scientist asserts he could secure relief for more than two hours, in a locality where mosquitoes were lighting on the unprotected at a rate of twenty a minute.

FIGHT OPENS FOR HEALTH OF CHILDREN

Osteopathic Association Takes Active Part in Plan for State-wide Round-up

A final effort to send every child in California to school at the opening of the term this fall, in physical health as far as corrective treatment following a thorough examination can accomplish, is the object of the State-wide health round-up being conducted by various child-welfare agencies in which the California branch of the Osteopathic Women's National Association is taking an active part through free clinics being conducted in many of the cities and towns throughout the State.

On the principal that the healthy child has a much better chance than the child handicapped by poor eyesight, hearing or posture defects or diet, the clinics are combining the examination and treatment of the children with lectures on health program for the mothers who bring their little ones to the clinics.

Preventive health education will be the most important phase of the educational work of the organization throughout the coming year, and will be stressed in all open meeting programs.

Margaret Waldo, D.O., is president of the California branch of the national association.

The Ancient Art of Brick Making

There have been some advances made in the preparation of the material and the baking of the raw brick, but fundamentally the brickmaker of today does as did his forerunner of 6000 years ago. Brick and the making of brick have a history almost coeval with that of civilization. In 604 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar built Babylon of brick. Centuries before that remote day the Egyptians were shaping the mud of the Nile into hand-made brick. Recently brick-veneered buildings were unearthed in Central Chaldea that were erected about 4500 B.C. Two hundred years before the dawn of Christianity thousands of Chinese coolies were laboring on the wall around China. Twelve hundred and fifty miles long, it is still one of the outstanding examples of the historical use of brick.

What Women are Doing

By Myra Nye

Until the time of the national convention of the W.C.T.U., which will be an outstanding event not only in women's circles, but of interest to both men and women of the city, the latter part of September, it is the plan of this department to present to its readers the leaders of this large organization of women.

MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS

Mrs. Frances P. Parks, corresponding secretary of the National W.C.T.U., is a native of West Virginia, and she is the embodiment of all that is resognized as the finest type of cultured woman of the South. Highly educated and experienced as a teacher and leader, she brought to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in 1884, the graces of mind and character that mark the progressive reformer as well as a genius for organization, and an executive ability that speedily placed her in official position.

During five years' residence in Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. Parks took an active part in the campaign for a scientific temperance-instruction law. Returning to West Virginia in 1898, Mrs. Parks was immediately elected to the office of State corresponding secretary, and in 1902 she was called to the greater responsibilities of the State presidency, an office that she filled with honor to herself and great benefit to the State. As a member of the national W.C.T.U. executive committee, she proved herself wise in counsel and loyal in principle—altogether worthy of confidence and affection.

Mrs. Park was elected the national corresponding secretary by the Denver national convention in 1908. Mrs. Parks is always ready to extend a hand of welcome to visitors, even on her busiest days, and responds eagerly to the wishes and necessities of those who seek the W.C.T.U. for comfort or assistance.

Ulric Cole

Ulric Cole, 17 years of age, calls Los Angeles her home and loves the Southland, but her talent in music, her compositions and her public appearances take her often afield. She is the daughter of George Cole, 'cellist, and Emilie Cole, soprano.

At the age of 17, she sold her piano compositions to New York publishers and is the only one from Los Angeles to win two separate scholarships for two succeeding years at the new-famous Juilliard Musical Foundation; one in piano under Lhevinne and one in composition under Goldmark.

Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, one of the most revered and noted American women composers, invited the youthful Miss Cole to become a member of the League of American Women Composers. Mrs. Beach proposed her name also for the office of secretary and treasurer of the new organization.

Miss Cole's compositions have found favor with highly discriminating musicians, including Henry Fielding, Butler, and Mrs. Beach herself, all of whom have used her composition "Above the Clouds" on their programs. One of her recently written 'cello numbers, "Lamento," has been used extensively this season by Cornelius Van Vliet, solo 'cellist with the New York Philharmonic.

Mrs. George Engelhorn

Two clubs will feel the loss of Mrs. George Engelhorn when she moves with her family from this city to San Diego this month. She has served the Hollenbeck Ebell for three years as drama chairman. During this time, she has won the love and esteem of every club member. To show a little appreciation of her work, the drama section and officers of the club gave a farewell party for her at the home of Mrs. J. B. Hart last Tuesday afternoon.

Baby Gene Engelhorn, the club baby who has attended with his mother, nearly every club meeting since he was a month old, will also be sadly missed from club circles.

Mrs. Engelhorn has also been drama chairman for South Side Ebell for two years, where she won a host of friends. This club woman is the author of several plays, one of which, the "Path of the Padres," is an instructive number each year in the California program of the Hollen-

HERE'S HOW TO TRAVEL WITH BABY

Clothing and Food Chief Problems Say Writers in Motoring Publication

Traveling with the baby can extend much further than pacing the floor, according to three writers in Motor Camper and Tourist for July, who give a synopsis of how they do it.

One mother keeps the baby in a folding baby carriage while in the car, another uses a rectangular clothes basket, while others adopt a special baby carrier built for touring.

Clothing and food are among the chief problems. "Baby's clothes were carried in a separate bag," writes Mrs. Marie W. Peters. "Two dresses a day were provided, together with several dozen napkins, bibs, and a dozen shirts. A half-dozen petticoats were taken, but not all were used as the weather was warm part of the time

"Very often boiled water was obtained from the hoetl of restaurant kitchen, making it unnecessary to use the alcohol stove. Boiled and cooled water for drinking purposes was carried in a vacuum bottle.

"She slept well, was happy and contented, and was very little trouble."

Sanitary problems are also discussed.

Mrs. Florence Murphy Baker points out that the chief problems arise after a baby has passed twelve months and doesn't want to be left alone. To meet this, she has constructed a home-made knapsack in which the baby can be comfortably carried, comfortably both for infant and parent.

HEAD OF W.C.T.U. FAMED WOMAN

Mrs. Ella A. Boole Proves Interesting Character

Will Preside at Convention to be Held in City

Knowledge of Prohibition Problems Broad

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the National W. C. T. U., who will preside during most of the approaching convention sessions here, is today one of the most interesting women in the United States.

This national convention will draw to Los Angeles women from every State in the Union and many foreign countries. It will be conducted in the First M. E. Church September 26-October 2.

Chiefly because of her knowledge and understanding of the many problems involved in that most-talked-of issue in America, prohibition, and because of her strategic leadership of the influential and wide-spread organization she heads, Mrs. Boole is able to speak authoritatively on the American woman's attitude toward law enforcement, especially regarding prohibition.

HOLDS HIGH POSTS

Mrs. Boole has been president of the New York W. C. T. U. for the past fifteen years and has won the respect and admiration of her opponents. She is known in the New York State Legislature as a sane, safe and sensible leader. She was elected president of the National W. C. T. U. at the last convention in Detroit in 1925.

Born in Van Wert, O., and educated in the public schools there and at the College of Wooster, Mrs. Boole began her public career almost immediately upon her marriage to Rev. William H. Boole, a member of the New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After his death, Mrs. Boole returned to the Presbyterian Church where she was secretary of the Woman's Board of Home Missions for six years.

She has served the W. C. T. U. in practically every capacity. First as president of a local union, later as State corresponding secretary, State Y secretary, national Y secretary, State president, National vice-president and world's treasurer.

For many years she was a member of the Woman's Press Club and she is now a member of the D. A. R. and chairman of the law enforcement committee of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Boole was the first woman to be made a trustee of Wooster College, a signal honor as the trustees are elected by the alumni.

WIDELY KNOWN LEADER

Quick in repartee and genial in argument, Mrs. Boole is widely known for her debates with leaders of the various factions opposed to prohibition. Her many trips abroad and her appearance on public platforms in other countries as well as in every State in the Union have given her a world-wide vision.

She was one of the two speakers on the steps at the national Capitol when the petition for national prohibition was presented. Later, she polled the largest vote ever received by a woman running for a national office when she opposed Senator Wadsworth for the United States Senatorship.

As a member of the general committee for immigrant aid at Ellis Island since the committee was first organized, Mrs. Boole has contributed much to the happiness of embryo Americans.

With her wide range of important affiliations and positions of great responsibility, each filled in a capable, progressive, inspirational manner, Mrs. Boole will lead the largest woman's organization in the world in its important law enforcement program and add new honors to the past glories of the White Ribbon organization.

One Way to Find Out

To return from a shopping trip to find her husband's coat hung over the back of a chair with a note pined on it saying that he was returning home sick and if he fell unconscious to notify his wife to pay up the insurance was startling enough, but to go upstairs and find him stretched out on the bed was too much for a newly married wife.

She picked up a pin and vigorously prodded the reclining husband, who soon proved that at least he hadn't expired by exclaiming, "Darn it. I'm not unconscious yet."—[Indianapolis News.

LABORS THROUGH VACATION

Sarah Bixby Smith Uses Rest Time of Most Women As Means to Further Her Work

BY MARY STACY

While many women of public activities are enjoying a complete rest this summer, Sarah Bixby Smith of Claremont is using her vacation as a means of furthering her work. Mrs. Smith has gone East to visit schools. When she returns she will no doubt have many new ideas to be used in the Scripps College for Women, which is shortly to arise at Claremont and of which Mrs. Smith is a trustee, and for the Claremont public schools of which she is school board president.

Mrs. Smith's father was the late Llewellyn Bixby, pioneer of Long Beach. Young Sarah Bixby wanted an education in a day when rich men's daughters were satisfied with the French and music of finishing schools. She got it—attending Pomona College in 1889 as one of its first students and later graduating from Wellesley. It is natural that she should be a friend of education. And such a woman would never be satisfied with a life of leisure.

Mrs. Smith has had, not a career, but careers. There is her career as a patroness of education, which I have mentioned. Then there is her career as an artist, evinced by a score of oil portraits, which have been widely exhibited. And her career as a writer, both as poet and biographer. "My Sagebrush Garden; A Volume of California Verse," and "Adobe Days: A Book of California Memories," are recent publications. And climaxing the other careers, is that of mother of eight children, wife of a novelist husband, and mistress of a large, beautiful, perfectly kept home.

How does Mrs. Smith do it all? That is the question that took me to the beautiful Smith home at Claremont, with its rolling lawns, its sweeping drives, and gray pillars. Her husband, Paul Jordan Smith, is only too happy to talk about his wife, and her success is obviously a pleasure to him.

"I believe the secret of Mrs. Smith's success in so many lines lies in the fact that she makes her activities balance each other. She will spend the morning in school or club committee meetings, and the afternoon at her painting. When she is tired of the practical work of directing a household as large as this one, she finds relaxation in writing a poem. Alternating between the practical and the creative, she finds that she can accomplish more for she does not get tired."

MRS. LORBEER RETURNS HOME

District Federation Chief Back from East

Gathering at Atlantic City Gets High Praise

Plans Laid for President's Council Sessions

After a two-months' tour of the East Mrs. J. B. Lorbeer, president of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs, has returned home. The high light and main motif of her sojourn away was, of course, the biennial of the General Federation conducted in Atlantic City during the latter part of May and first of June. Of it Mrs. Lorbeer in her vacation president's letter says "It was, indeed, a model in every way. California delegates who were courteously given the seats directly in front of the speakers table were fortunate in being able to study every detail of the convention. We were happy that of the seventy-four delegates from the State of California, fifty-four were Los Angeles delegates.

"We noted that the first prize of $250 in the play contest was awarded to Mrs. E. E. McIntyre of the Friday Morning Club and to Mrs. Maurine Gee of the Beverly Hills Woman's Club and the second prize to Mrs. Herbert Coulter of the South Pasadena Woman's Club."

A pledge of $50 in honor of Mrs. Eleanor Joy Toll was made to the maintenance fund of the Federation by Mrs. Lorbeer and at the California dinner she gave a toast to "Club President's Night" and presented Dr. Mariana Bertola, State president, with a pin in the name of the Los Angeles district.

VISITED WASHINGTON

After the convention Mrs. Lorbeer visited General Federation headquarters in Washington and attended the National Education Association convention in Philadelphia. She served as one of the State commissioners from California of the Sesquicentennial, being guest of the centennial for four days at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, was one of the representative units to attend the Sesqui, the exercises at Valley Forge, in Independence Hall and the Stadium when President Coolidge gave his remarkable address on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the nation's birth.

Already Mrs. Lorbeer has arranged for the president's councils which last year were remarkable for their comprehensive scope and their attendance. The first one of the club season will be conducted in the Friday Morning clubhouse with this large club the hostess, on September 16. Reservations must be made with Mrs. Howard U. Sherwood, 614 North Wilson avenue, Monterey Park, and early if the conditions of popularity prevail as last year. One club of average size had eighty-one different club women who attended president councils last year.

Other councils will be conducted as follows: At Hollywood Woman's Club, October 19; Pomona Ebell, November 10; Council of Jewish Women headquarters, December 10; Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale, January 18; Pasadena Shakespeare Club, February 17, and the Ebell Club, March 18.

The directory will be ready for distribution September 1.

The next program conference will be held at the studio of Edward Langley, 1201 Fuller avenue, Hollywood, at 10 a.m. Wednesday, the 25th inst. Art, literature, drama and music chairmen as well as presidents of clubs are invited and features of their own special interest will be presented. Mrs. Harry Stroh is chairman.

NEW CHAIRMEN

New chairmen of departments replacing those who reluctantly have resigned include: Mrs. A. H. Montgomery, Glendale, American citizenship; Mrs. Grace Y. Hudson, South Pasadena, community service; Mrs. J. W. Robinson, Downey, home economics; Mrs. Florence Dodson Schoneman, Los Angeles, California history and landmarks; Mrs. Edward H. Jacobs, Los Angeles, motion pictures; Mrs. Ione Gale Ihm, Redondo, music; Mrs. Frank S. Card, Crescenta Woman's Club, home gardens; Mrs. Gertrude C. Maynard, Los Angeles Soroptomist, industrial and social relations, and chairman of literature, drama and birds and flowers still to be appointed. Other chairmen remain the same as last year.

Mrs. Lorbeer announces one activity during August, namely the radio programs sponsored by the radio division of the federation every Friday from 2 to 3 p.m. through the courtesy of the University of California. They are as follows: August 13, "Literature Interpreting the Immigrant," Mrs. Clara Winlow, formerly head of the foreign literature department Los Angeles Public Library; August 20, "Factors Involved in Character and Personality," Dr. Elizabeth Dullivan, instructor in psychology, University of California; August 27, "Books in Relation to Children," Miss Jasmine Britton, librarian, city school library and instructor in education at the University of California, Southern Branch.

These programs, Mrs. Lorbeer says, have grown weekly in interest and the idea of radio listening groups is becoming popular. Among the clubs that have held radio parties to listen to federation programs this summer have been: The Saugus Community Club, Pathfinder Club of Compton; Downey Woman's Club, and Neptunian Club of Manhattan. Mrs. Harry Michael has demonstrated great initiative and efficiency as radio chairman.

FILMS APPROVED BY FEDERATION

The motion picture division of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, Los Angeles District, Mrs. E. H. IMPORTANT RESULT OF STUDY OF PLANT LIFE

Three important discoveries which Sir J. D. Bose has recently demonstrated in Calcutta are considered by scientists as of profound significance in developing our knowledge of the evolutionary process of life. Sir J. D. Bose has discovered the actual heart of the tree by means of an electric probe in conjunction with a sensitive galvanometer. As soon as the probe was put in contact with the heart, electric signals were automatically recorded by the galvanometer. The heart of plants is similar to the elongated heart of some of the lower animals, such as the earthworm. In an amazing demonstration, Sir J. D. Bose, by means of intricate instruments magnified 5000 times, showed the exhilarating effects of plants imbibing water containing small doses of ether as a stimulant, and finally he poisoned them with a fatal dose of cyanide, the struggle ending in a rapid and spasmodic fall of the leaves, indicating death throes. —[Exchange.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

PARIS, Aug. 7.—My stay in Paris has convinced me of one thing: Music in this fair city is about as unstable as the French franc. Both are subject to dips. Whatever subsequent rises ensue appear to be only temporary. Nothing really substantial serves for a foundation. Froth is everywhere about. And a disinclination, it would appear, on the part of any music leader or group of leaders to attempt to correct a situation wherein mediocrity reigns. Quantity is the banner by which music endeavors are judged. Opera performances galore, orchestra concerts in profusion, choral and ballet works without stint, and countless recitals of every known kind swing by the auditor-spectator. He can choose whatever appears to his taste—providing it does not consistently incline toward what is interpretatively of the best. For to discover a truly superior achievement—individually or collectively—is a feat, a spasmodic one at that.

Poor Paris! She is like an ostrich, head hidden in the sand. Her music colony is not quite aware of its own shortcomings. Nor do its majority members appear conscious of the steps upward which must be taken before the artistic ground lost during late years can be regained.

Creatively, too, as well . . . since few living French composers are doing what they might do in circumstances more stimulating to their best. The music fabric of France is rent to shreds. Only a few firm spots are to be found; and these will not keep together the whole until a sharp awakening takes place, followed by some concerted movement to reweave the cloth with material of a firm nature.

A PERNICIOUS ATMOSPHERE

The trained observer readily discovers one element responsible for most of the music performances given in Paris. That element is what may be termed "a pernicious atmosphere." It consists of easy-going ways; of being satisfied too often with what is inferior, or at least of proffering and accepting inferiority; and, finally, of succumbing to the persuasiveness of coin of the realm.

Wealth and luxury and ease are too plentifully at hand in gay Paris. And oh, how they beckon! Who wants to work—really to work—while in Paris? The cafes, the parks, the boulevards are much too accessible. One's friends, also, who are forever giving some party which it is difficult to escape.

The "do it tomorrow" spirit cloaks the city, and so the valiant soul strugles against this tide.

Every little while some unprepared "artist" has a debut or makes a fresh appearance. Whereupon, knowing that generally the occasion has been "bought with money," the sincere musician is prompted to exclaim, "What's the use?"

THE WEIGHING PROCESS

So steady is the stream of mediocre concerts and opera presentations that it requires discrimination to separate the music wheat from the chaff. Now and again there comes a Kreisler, Heifetz, Spalding, Thibaud, Casals, Cortot or Horowitz. Or a singer genuinely competent to perform his task. Sometimes, though not too frequently, a conductor. But for the most part Paris runs musically in unfaithful soil. You can buy opportunity even when you lack the ability to turn it to real account.

That, I would emphasize, is what is eating into the vitals of Paris's music. A bank roll is all that seems necessary to get a public hearing and (I regret to learn) certain commendatory newspaper notices.

Is it any wonder that the serious student, one he ascertains the facts, becomes concerned . . . even discouraged. A susceptible public, which applauds what is bad, aids in this situation. And easily persuaded managements at the Opera and Opera Comique offer "newcomer" singers scantily equipped for even secondary roles. Finally there is the array of "visitor" conductors, who hire an orchestra and "shine" in the glory of their own self-esteem. It is all lamentable . . . and has reached a pass where Paris has lost her former prestige. She has become, in addition, the merry-go-round advertising medium for the musician with cash. A few thousand francs, and a bushel of press notices (some of them carefully "doctored") are rushed to the United States, there to delude those who are unable to read between the lines.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "KITEGE"

One of the truly important undertakings of the current Paris music season was the first performance there of Rimsky-Korsakoff's last opera, "Kiege." A pretentious work, but given in this instance without scenery and costumes. Alexander Kahn promoted the affair, which enlisted widespread public interest.

The Opera was filled with a keenly expectant audience, among which were many musicians of note. They were rewarded, for "Kitege" is a noble work. Not a supreme masterpiece; less excellent than Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," for instance, and certain other of his compositions I will not detail just here. What mattered was the general character of the score: a somber piece of music (since the subject of the libretto so demanded,) and somewhat tedious, as one listened, because of a certain monotony.

THE PERFORMANCE

Not too much can be said for the quality of the performance itself. Emil Cooper, one of Russia's foremost conductors, presided. The principal soloists need not all be mentioned. The few outstanding ones were Mmes. K. Derginskaya, Sadoven, de Gonitch, Antonowitch and MM. Zaporojetz, Bolchakoff, Kaydanoff, Wesselovsky, Daubrovsky, Kondratieff, Braminoff, D'Arial, Aristoff and Okrotchenkoff.

I liked, in particular, the lovely dramatic soprano of Mme. Derginskaya, the naturally glorious bass voice of M. Zaporojetz, and the baritone, M. Bolchakoff. None of the rest had any intimate acquaintance of how a singing tone should be delivered. Most of the participants were seemingly affected by the emotionalism of text and music, and tore things to tatters.

Cooper had worked hard preparing an amateur chorus, small yet fairly competent. Also with an orchestra which wasn't much to brag about. His task consequently was trying, and if he did not achieve quite the results sought it was not altogether his fault.

Miss Helen Katherine Broughall

The second book of that very young author of Los Angeles, Miss Helen Katherine Broughall, has just been published by the L. C. Page Company. It is entitled "Barbara Winthrop at Camp."

Miss Broughall recently received her certificate from the University of Lyons, France, which is an equivalent to an M. A. degree in the United States. Accompanied by Mrs. R. F. Tomlison and the latter's young daughter, Miss Frances Tomlison, Miss Broughall has traveled over Europe during the last year. Since the close of the university year they have spent some time in Switzerland and are now in Belgium. Later on, they will visit Holland, Belgium and return to Paris for two months, sailing for Boston, the party will see the big game of Yale Harvard at New Haven November 20.

Miss Helen is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Broughall of 533 South Westmoreland avenue, a graduate of the Bishop School at La Jolla, and later she was graduated from Stanford University last year. She is a popular member of the younger smart set both here and on the campus of Stanford.

The Republican Study Club

This political group of women has conceded time for the hearing of Republican candidates on the programs in Barker Brothers' Auditorium from the 13th inst and the 27th inst. Mrs. M. E. English will have ten minutes for her discussion of current politics at each meeting.

Frank Merriam, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, and Judge William Waste for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court will be the principal speakers on the 13th inst. at the meeting at 2 p.m. There will be special music under the direction of Mrs. Robert Drain.

Miss Sue Brobst, past president of the Southern District California Federation Business and Professional Women's Clubs, is now in New York, and will visit the Sesquicentennial in Philadelphia and also in Washington, D. C.

UNITED BY COLLISION

While driving into Washington on a visit George Williams of Baltimore collided with Clarence Williams of Washington. Both men got out of their machines to determine what damage had been done and a policeman who chanced to be passing at the time proceeded to obtain a report of the collision. When he found both men had the same last name he appeared dumfounded for there was a similarity in the faces and mannerisms of the Williamses.

After the Williamses had compared notes as to ancestry they found that they were brothers. Thirty years ago they were placed in an orphanage near Baltimore and became separated when one was adopted. They had long ago given up hope of ever finding each other again. Now, through some invisible power they have been reunited. Was the auto collision just an ordinary accident as Smith and Jones, or anybody else, might have? —[Pathfinder.

What a Life!

"Don't pour cold water in a hot motor." This hint was broadcast by a Detroit motorist who burst a cylinder head by this expedient while forty miles out in the country. "I thought I was in a hurry, but could easily have waited an hour for the motor to cool, and then saved plenty of time, for I not only lost a day, but also nearly a week's wages in having the cracked head replaced," he said. —[Detroit News.

KING COTTON WILL MAKE VISIT HERE

Jacoby Brothers Plan to Make His Call This Year Memorable Event

BY OLIVE GRAY

More than twenty years ago, King Cotton formed the habit of paying a visit annually to the store of Jacoby Brothers. During the present month, the month of extraordinary value-giving in merchandise, the fruits of the Cotton King's visit will be discovered in this, one of the oldest standard Los Angeles establishments.

For many months, buyers have been ransacking eastern markets in order to make this a memorable event.

"Our buyers reached the eastern centers at the psychological hour for purchasing to advantage," said Leo Jacoby, president of Jacoby Brothers. "Stocks were secured at such savings that we are enabled to pass along to our patrons savings which we believe will long be pleasurably remembered."

Mr. Jacoby explained that while in the beginning the King Cotton sale, famous in the history of the store, was designed to include only cotton weaves, the plan had so enlarged from time to time, that at present every section of the store participates in the offerings.

"You may recall," said Jacoby, "that some seasons ago, we discontinued our department of men's furnishings; but so urgent was the call from patrons of many years standing, that we decided to reopen this section. To furnishings and accessories for men, we have added a similar line for boys; and these departments are contributing with full force to the King Cotton sale."

Especially strong at all times in domestics and bedding, in cotton yardage and in silk draperies, as well as in all lines of feminine attire and accessories, each and every department is supplying for this sale especial bargains and this without diminution of the Jacoby standard of quality.

The King Cotton sale has opened with a rush excelling that of previous events in this line and since Angelenos are unfailing judges of bargains when such are genuine, it is believed that the month will be memorable in the history of Jacoby Brothers' merchandising.

By utilizing waters of the Pykara, the largest river in the Nigris, India, where it drops 400 feet in a series of falls, one of the greatest hydro-electric plants in that part of Asia will be developed.

BY THE WAY

BY EVA G. TAYLOR

It has often been noted that intellectual pursuits as a rule receive far less compensation that common labor. Some have deemed it a sad commentary on our much vaunted civilization. Another angle may give us a clew to the reason.

When we consider the present output of low-grade stuff we are struck with the realization that "common labor" has invaded the literary market. It is very common labor indeed, without the emoluments received by the other common labor fraternity.

It is well that the prices for this sort of stuff are not boosted. It would be a real tragedy to have the market flooded with much more of the inferior product. Common labor in the field of brawn is both useful and necessary. In the mental world it is little less than tragedy and comedy combined.

During the past two decades a gradual change has been coming over the reading public. At first it was not so noticeable except in the lowering of the tone of former high-grade periodicals. We were inclined to blame the publishers for the depreciated quality. We resented the childish and sensational stuff palmed off upon us in lieu of food for thought.

We see the reason for it now. Since the low-brow stuff has invaded not only the world of literature, but of music and film production we thoroughly agree with the statements from various authoritative sources that the average intelligence of the age is that of the early teens.

Hence it is not surprising that we have very little real literature today. The people do not want it. They would not understand it. They call anything which bears the stamp of fine mentality, "high brow." They resent subjects and the treatment of them which demand thought. They wish merely to be amused.

The few who are suffering from semistarvation for noble and uplifting mental food are in the hopeless minority and of course are not to be considered. It is the populace who must be pandered to. They have no deep innate craving for real intellectual food. They prefer pickles or frothy frou-frous.

Just how long this state of things can continue is problematical. If we were sure that another crop of kindergartenish mentalities would not be coming on the scene we might resign ourselves to wait in patience until the present output grows up. But we are not sure that other equally infantile minds will not be forthcoming to keep the "common labor" market in the literary world booming.

PLAYING WITH LIFE

You see we never can be sure of anything nowadays except increasing taxes and one other dreaded experience. The most fatuous optimist can only keep his faith with difficulty in the face of present conditions. When we behold the bewildering array of magazines and periodicals on the news-stands and find very little in any of them to justify our faith in the mental development of the race we are inclined to view the situation with melancholy.

If it were possible to segregate certain classes so that the needs of all could be supplied, conditions would be made somewhat easier. Then those who hold to the ideals of the finer literature and music, to the deep spiritual truths of religion, to the portrayal of the nobler phases of art-drama could have their needs supplied. All the countless others could then be undisturbed in their happy-go-lucky playing with life. Segregation sometimes is a desirable condition.

Just now everything seems artificial. Still, has it not always been so? It is natural to think our age the worst, but history does not bear out the comparison. The really purposeful people who take their life experience as a block of marble to be sculptured by noble thought into a thing of beauty, have always been in the minority.

The worst thing about this playing with life instead of utilizing its wondrous possibilities, is the great loss of time. For sooner or later the latent and misdirected powers must be developed and guided, or chaos results. The ideal for the human race is a well-founded and balanced development. We understand the principle in our school and college work. If we neglect some branches of the curriculum which are considered necessary to true scholarship, the balance must be restored before the final exams. Otherwise our education is incomplete.

It is far worse to be lop-sided in character than in mental training. It is regrettable in either case.

As one's ideals are one's character in embryo, to unfold to them is the task set before the soul. In playing with life we lose sight of the ideals and the responsibilities attached. If to be, not merely to do, is the important thing we lose much by our fantastic trivialities.

Infantile amusements are supposed to be put aside when one grows up. But when the race is mature in years and childish in mentality and tastes it is an abnormality. We have then no standards by which to calculate future probabilities.

Some years ago certain investigators declared that statistics proved that the average mentality of the race was that of a child. We took the statements from various sources with a grain of salt. It hardly seemed possible that after all these ages—after having produced an Emerson, a Longfellow, a Daniel Webster, and a long list of distinguished poets and statesmen—we could deteriorate so rapidly.

SUBNORMAL LITERATURE

While we still doubted that it could be, there came the flood of not only low-brow, but no brow at all, stuff which cannot be classed as literature at all. The brilliant and racy journals of other days faded out into dull mediocrity. Only now and then an unusual intelligence flashed out to illuminate the drab setting. The general output however, seems to measure up to the subnormal grade of mental development. Otherwise the publisher's task would be a losing game.

Some years ago in Chicago, a young journalist tried this discouraging task of rowing up stream instead of drifting with the current of popular taste and opinion. He fancied he could control the situation and reform the trend toward degeneracy in literature. He founded a high-class periodical. It was ultra high-class. Nothing was admitted to its pages that would not stand the test of high scholarship. The mediocre was banned. Names counted not in the least. If the contribution of some well-known writer was not up to the mark it found its way quickly into the waste-basket. Many unknown writers were introduced whose work stood the test.

All went on well until the ledgers were balanced. There was a huge week. Total to date this year, 663 deficit. Rocks loomed ahead for the brilliant journal with the high literary ideals. It was kept alive for a time by the most strenuous efforts on the part of the young editor and publisher. His faith in the literary standards of the American people was unbounded.

The people however, did not measure up. The enterprise failed and the editor was forced to acknowledge defeat.

Had he known what we are now so painfully aware of, that a decreasing intelligence demands a commensurate literature, he might have compromised with his ideals and kept alive a fine specimen of periodical journalism.

He was trying to maintain earlier standards in a decadent age. Rowing against the stream instead of with it. All of which shows that it does not pay to try to force standards. They are set by the mentalities of the period. Sometime the pendulum may swing back again.

TRUCK DRIVER TURNS ACTOR

Director Drags Him From Seat to Make Him Film Heavy

A truck driver and cable-puller for the New York Edison Company a little more than a year ago—

Today an established film artist with a record of five successful roles in feature productions, and a comfortable long-term contract reposing in his wallet—

This is a chapter from the achievement record of John Philip Kolb, six feet and seven inches tall and weighing 235 pounds, who has arrived in Hollywood under contract to First National Pictures.

In March of last year a member of the eastern First National staff espied him driving a truck near the studios. It so happened that the director, a few moments before, had received word that Victor McLaglen would be unable to play the role assigned to him in "The Knockout"—that of a big Canadian lumberjack.

The director rushed out, halted Kolb, called a curbstone conference and engaged him for the role. Kolb lived up to the title of the picture by proving a veritable "knockout" in the small part assigned to him, and came back with another notable characterization in "Men of Steel."

THE BRITON'S TUB

Americans Most Insistent on Having Private Baths

The reputation of Britons for bathing is being challenged in London, where a newspaper controversy has arisen over whether the Englishman is really as devoted to his morning tub as the novelists and playwrights suggest. One participant quotes a continental hotelkeeper as saying that the British guests rank lowest of the large groups in insisting on private baths with their rooms, Americans ranking highest and the Germans and French next. This hotel man says the Briton usually is content to take his turn in the general bathroom, which casts some doubt upon the place the bath holds in the mind of one who has been pictured carrying his portable tub into the jungles of Africa or the desert of Sahara.

Jerome K. Jerome, the novelist started the controversy by stating in an article that there were no bathrooms in London homes before 1886. Elderly folk indignantly deny this and give dates to prove that when they were young English people took baths occasionally at least. One writer declares that in 1872 his family owned a tub that had a lid and strap on it and was used as a trunk when the family traveled. Another writes no bathroom existed in Windsor Castle in the time of Queen Victoria, and that King Edward had several installed upon his accession in 1901.

It is also recalled that when the late Earl of Dunraven returned from America in 1886 he took with him an American tub; and Punch published a cartoon on Lord Dunraven's statement that "in American houses an entire room is given over to the bath." If the tub's place in the Englishman's life is not as important as Americans have been led to believe American plumbing manufacturers should double their present efforts to modernize old English homes. It is an inviting trade opportunity.—[South Bend Tribune.

STUDENTS TO MADRID

There's a Geographical Distinction Between "Americanos" and "Yanquis"

It is interesting to note the large number of South American students who come to Madrid in the same way as the Rhodes scholars go to Oxford. In Spain all those who lived south of the Rio Grande are known as "Americanos," while the inhabitants of the United States are called "Yanquis"—a distinction that is liable to lead to confusion unless it is kept in mind.

The undergraduates in Madrid find their own lodgings, and in that as in many other respects, they resemble more the undergraduates of London than those of Oxford and Cambridge. Medicine is perhaps more studied in Madrid than any other subject, but all branches of learning are well represented.

Indeed, the academic activity in every sphere, combined with the unfailing courtesy of the authorities toward members of foreign universities, makes one regret that the relations between the English and the Spanish seats of learning are not closer.—[Charles Petrie in the Cornhill.

Would Stop Breeding the Unfit

In wet New Jersey the Women's Republican Club in State convention assembled demands a strict enforcement of the present prohibition laws, opposes any modification and favors the principle of sterilizing defective wards of the State and the criminally insane.

"We believe," says this intelligent band of voters, "that the crowded condition in our State institutions could be alleviated by approaching some of the causes at their sources, therefore we heartily indorse the principle of sterilization." In other words they would stop the breeding of the unfit. That sound doctrine the world must soon come to.—[Capper's Weekly.

July 's winter time in Australia and merchants have been busy with winter clearance sales, which were unusually successful this year.

THE NEW

IN STORES AND HOMES

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

By Olive Gray

For Go-Awaying

She who is wise, will for her summer go-awaying select a color scheme, following it throughout the entire wardrobe and accessories. Thus, she may, within small space, comprise everything needed and be assured that all will harmonize If the vacationing is to be by motor, a frock of soft wool or silk watch will not rumple during a long drive, should form the basis of the outfit. This, if of the popular two-piece kind, may receive a touch of elegance fitting it for dinner wear, at the wayside hotel or inn, by exchanging the [illegible] blouse for a filmy one in the toning color. All small accessories—scarves, hosiery, gloves, jewelry, may add their quota of beauty and convenience, when fittingly chosen.

Chaise Longue Luxury

A just-arrived import at that big Broadway store, is a lounge robe, or throw for the chaise lounge inexpressibly adorable. Marabou in a color which brings to mind the cheek of an apricot where the sun shines warm upon it, forms the main part of this robe de luxe. A broad edging of creamy lace, insert with lace of gold, completes the generous square, and the lining is of crepe satin matching the marabou. A big square pillow of the same, completes the set. Looking upon this confection, the mind instantly is led to picture some fair Trojan Helen (City of Hollywood, state of cinema,) reclining at pictureful ease, in her boudoir; so very sophisticated, so studiedly artistic.

But — hear the good news! You or I may have a similar suite; for the art of making is to be taught, in the needle-section of that big store, where hand-makery is expertly executed. So, we may choose our own in marabou—violet, rose, blue gold, whatsoever we will and make both robe de boudoir and its pillow twin. The "makings" are at hand, the teacher there.

Let There Be Light

Let there be light and there was light. It came from the cleverest little lighter for the cigarette—the lady one. In a tiny leather case a metallic "click," a wee bit flame and no matches needed. A set of pockets also, for holding the tobacco pellets and a place for coins, all so compact as to occupy but small space in the crowded vanity.

Parisienne Dolls

"Throw Dolls" they might be called, if those lovely boudoir robes are throw robes, for they belong in their vicinity. Those quaint French dolls, with the pliant bodies and piquant faces—oh—so expressive. Those faces, by the way, are molded from kid, and hand painted. The hair is of silken floss and the colors of it such as to inspire imitation by their owners. Heretofore, we have known, those dolls fully dressed as they came from the French capital; but now—what think you! We may dress them ourselves under expert direction. That big Broadway store which displays in its most prominent windows just now, all sorts of alluring things for the boudoir, has a full line of those fascinating dolls, ready to costume after any fancy. You may pose one upon the floor or chaise longue pillow of your boudoir or living room, or you may so clothe one so it will conceal the nighties upon your bed; or it may shield the telephone; or be a shade for the lamp, large or small. Oh there are infinite possibilities to those dolls. And think what fun to dress them! A brief return to play-days for us; and what grown-up does not like occasionally to return to that carefree era?

New Kitchen Beauty

New enamel ware for kitchen use, is in a lovely shade of skyish blue with bandings of white, lace edged in effect. Who could fail to produce a more savory dinner, when viands are prepared in dishes such as these? Cannot you imagine the kitchen with blue and white checkered curtains at its windows, a blue and white cloth upon the table, and, possibly a pillow or so to match, against chairs of white or vivid blue?

Stamens Galore

When you have searched in vain for just the right stamens to complete your ribbon flowers, you will rejoice to find a treasury full of them in every sort, color, size and shape. That big Broadway store has a boundless store of them.

Pink in Hats

That hats go farther toward framing the face in loveliness than can any feature of dress, is beginning to be realized by women. The comfort of the tight little shape cannot be denied, especially in this motoring age; but the loveliness of the broad-brimmed chapeau is unimpeachable. Those new broad brimmed flops, in rose leaf pink are particularly fraught with charm and when they are of velvet, as so many of them elect to be, they are simply bewitching. Fall and winter will see many such hats, some with extraordinarily high crowns, as well as broadened brims.

A Mirror Room

If you would reflect upon a new way of making beautiful your rooms, just peek within that mirror room where are walled a multitude of those luxurious addenda to the loveliness of the home. Never have I beheld in one place such a shining array of unusual looking glass. Alice might wander on forever, through the imagination rousing depths, ever finding something new, something more entrancing in her wonderland.

Fabric Gloves

Even though you may seem to scorn gloves during summer days of warmth, autumn will find you wishing for hand-covering. Knowing this, August has been chosen by many local stores and shops for fabric glove sales. These gloves, by the way, grow more interesting constantly, suffs, cuffs with varying colors and odd motifs applied.

SUGAR AND SPICE

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Sir Henry Wood presented Adolf Tandler of the Little Symphony Orchestra with a big conductor's baton in a leather case, all fancy cork-tipped and something rather special in the way of wood.

The immediate result was the arrangement for that benefit concert for the Little Symphony in the Bowl on September 2, when twenty-four pianos will resound forth at the command of that "big stick"—nearly as big as Adolf himself.

And it is to be hoped that no matter what fireworks are let off, no matter where the spotlight falls, Adolf will not desert his orchestra in the middle of the performance, which, for all our grace about it, was really tantamount to a captain deserting his ship in a storm. Sir Henry got off very lightly for that.

Tandler had an embarrassing experience when he essayed to drive Lady Wood around the country in his blue auto and show her the scenic sights. Prior to that, the blue car had behaved with the utmost decorum. But when Tandler was climbing Whitley Heights and neared the top, the car, like Sir Henry, balked. It insisted upon proceeding backward. It retired ignominiously down the hill backward, against all Tandler's pleading and exhortation to behave nicely for visitors.

And when they finally decided to retreat to the Bowl, blessed if the car did not pull the same stunt going up the little hill to the Bowl.

Well, anyway, Tandler apologized profusely for his car. No one apologized for Sir Henry.

Tandler wants to make his Little Symphony Benefit an All-California concert. And Laurence Tibbitt is in town. Laurence may be coaxed into the affair yet.

And Laurence was once a Manual Arts boy—whose golden voice was later to grace Metropolitan Opera in New York, even if no one recognized Laurence for an embryo celebrity in those days.

Another successful Manual Arts pupil is back in our midst—Alvani Zolle, prima donna of the "Topsy and Eve" company. She is a petite, vivacious little brunette, and suffered through the apprenticeship days with Laurence Tibbitt in New York. They shared a hired piano for $8 a month, and housed it in Laurence's room. And they always both wanted it to practice on at the same time.

But their mutual sufferings anent the landlady who swiped the cream off their milk bottles, and added extra dimes for telephone calls on their bills, kept them friends in spite of the piano partnership. The hideous discovery that they had both been charged an extra 40 cents for telephone calls in the days when 40 cents was a fortune, called for firm united protest.

Mrs. Bertha Cable has bobbed her hair. She duly went through all the agonies of the contemplated parting with her locks and expected to create painful comment—but not a soul noticed the difference!

Yes, the time has come when even so dignified and impressive a personality in clubland as Mrs. Cable can bob and miss out on blushing to find it fame.

I have computed that there are just about 100 "prominent women" who lend their names to political candidates' indorsement committees, and selections from this number appear in all parties and campaigns.

This candidate-indorsing has almost become a profession, even if the rewards are intangible. It is time some useful statistics were compiled by which their political value and influence can be gauged—percentages of the successes and failures of the candidates they stood for over the past ten years. A number of these ladies are only heard of at election times, so we ought to have some way of appraising their judgment.

And to what extent does a pretty blonde movie actress's indorsement aid a candidate for, say, Sheriff? Is it advantageous for cutey blond actresses to make luncheon speeches and tell what a perfect dear the Sheriff is, and how, when she gets scared, a couple of Sheriff's operatives are immediately dispatched to her home to guard her? And that there was positively no horrid publicity about it . . . and she herself was only telling it now to show what a sweet man a Sheriff can be . . . ?

It will be a jolly discovery if it can be proved that this sort of testimony wins votes. The town is full of cutey starry blonds—enough to go round several times over.

Yes, that cool little private dining-room, opening out onto the Woman's Athletic Club lovely roof garden, was the right place for Mrs. Oscar Trippet to hold that Pilgrimage Play luncheon on Tuesday.

The luncheon was to celebrate a complete restoration of peace harmony and co-operation and included the committee, managers and some of those taking leading roles.

Reginald Pole, back in the role of Christ, made a peculiarly graceful and diplomatic speech, paying reverend tribute to Christine Stevenson's memory, and her tremendous intellectual, as well as spiritual understanding.

Reginald Pole, whom many consider the best exponent of the Christ role that the play has had, is a strict vegetarian, a nonsmoker and prefers buttermilk as a beverage.

I wish that that very beautiful Pilgrimage Play would institute a 25-cent night a week. The charges of $1 and $2 do not seem so high when considered for individuals, but when father wants to take mother and three children and maybe Aunt Martha, the outlay exceeds the capacity of small-family purses. Mr. Pole agreed with me that 50 per cent of the population never pay more than 25 cents for entertainment.

I am often asked to help budget for families of small income and have found that on an income of $150 a month, a family of four cannot possibly afford to spend more than $1 a week for "pleasure." And that only in months when no "emergencies" arise.

Yet these are the type of people who would most enjoy that exquisite play.

Diggers Made Skilled Workmen

Tools driven by electricity share their benefits alike with laborer and employer. The electric drill, for instance, has lifted the digger out of the class of ordinary labor, raised his wages and made him skilled. The work he does is more valuable because he can do so much more of it. He can literally move mountains.

AZTEC DESIGNS BY FRANCISCO CORNEJO

Francisco Cornejo, who is holding an exhibition of his paintings and decorative designs at the Hollywood Book Store during the month of August, has for many years been known along the Pacific Coast and in Mexico for his warm espousal of the principles underlying Aztec art and the folk art of our neighboring republic. It will be remembered that in 1921 he brought an exhibit of ancient Aztec and Toltec art to Los Angeles which aroused keen interest among those who are interested in art sources and history.

A native of Mexico, well educated, intelligent and a versatile artist, Cornejo has long believed that in neglecting the primitive art of the Indians of North America, artists, architects and designers are overlooking an art source indigenous to the New World, a type of art which has grown as much from the soil as from the people who used it.

As a corrective to our habit of borrowing the superficial details of ancient art, and using them to plaster the outsides of edifices with whose principles of construction they are quite inconsistent, Cornejo is spreading a gospel of real value, for, as he points out, all Aztec design is simple, and severe, and does not stoop to details until the large mass or base is rightly designed.

Whether Aztec design is the crying need of the age is not the point. It is right and fitting that anyone who has a gospel should believe it and preach it. As I see it, Aztec design has a very important message for America, something quite aside from its special details such as the symbols of the ancient gods, which at a superficial glance, might appear to be its principal stock in trade.

Aztec design was primarily abstract and geometric, and while the religious themes used provided subject matter intelligible to the people, the manner in which they were composed, carved, colored, satisfied the most important laws of art in that, no matter how florid the decoration, the big masses were all important and were never allowed to be overbalanced by decoration which was wrongly placed or inconsistent in style.

The artist has not limited himself to motives strictly Aztec, but has used themes characteristic in Mexican folk design of later periods. He has panels here showing the makers of pottery working on their pots against a background depicting the fantasy of their design. Here is the Moorish element brought into Mexico by the Spaniards, a feathery contrast to the massive Aztec. One would say that this style is caligraphic while the Aztec is essentially architectural and pyramidal.

OTHER WORKS

Other panels show the Mexican woman carrying her water olla on her head, with the cactus for decoration and Popocatapetl looming in the background, or, as in the one reproduced here, an Indian woman of ancient Mitla, simplified, in accordance with Aztec tradition, against a background design from the wall of the ruined temple.

Here, unmistakably, in the working out of these designs, is where this artist enjoys himself. However, his facility with the brush has enabled him to assemble, in addition to the more original decorative works, a roomful of paintings, some from Mexico, many done at San Juan Capistrano, and others along the California coast.

As a designer for the ballet, "Zochitl," produced by Ted Shawn and Ruth St. Denis, Cornejo has shown what he can do with massive and colorful stage sets. The peacock panel installed in the home of the late George W. Mitchell, a sketch for which is shown in the exhibit, demonstrates his ability to do first-class work for interior decoration, a direction in which he deserves wide encouragement for his knowledge and talents eminently fit him to produce a type of decoration which is at once beautiful, consistent, and carefully executed.

A NEW VIEWPOINT IN RAPED WATER COLORS

At the Print Rooms in Hollywood are to be found a small group of water colors by Ray Boynton, the San Francisco artist, who is now conducting a course in the University of California's summer school here.

They are rapid little works full of surprises. They make no pretense to be of importance. Nothing pompous about them. Apparently they came into being somewhat as follows: Boynton happened to be staying at Santa Monica. Occasionally he chanced to look over the palisades where houses have now ranged themselves along the stretch of sand. But instead of just seeing the houses, one, two, three, he saw their relations, one to another, quite naturally found a pattern in them, and painted that pattern in fresh, living color, with the air above them, and sometimes a Ford or whatever happened to be there, fitting appropriately into the pattern.

The work of an artist of unusual sensibility, they are like so many little colored leaves dropped from the tree of his life; not his great moments perhaps, but unmistakably his. It is in this personal quality their value and charm lie, whether the subject be the little houses, the blue sweep of bay with guardian mountains or the mountain patterns farther back from the ocean.

As true bits of water-color handling they are beyond reproach, done with a full-charged brush and luminous, flowing color, never growing tight, and not stopping to worry about hardening edges or blending edges, a technical care which always brings your too-careful water colorist to a halt at the wrong moment, and kills the essential "flow" of his brush.

ROCKWELL KENT

New arrivals at the Print Rooms of decided interest, are four new wood-block prints and two lithographs by Rockwell Kent. The woodblocks are based on drawings made during his sojourn in Alaska. They have the force and gesture of the drawings as reproduced in his book, plus a clarity and brightness in the white line made by the graver, which adds to their quality.

One of the lithographs sets a mood very powerfully and cleanly. A hut crowns a round and lonely hill amid the stumps of cleared forest trees. Light pours down, blessing the spot. The other lithograph reproduces in a new medium a drawing originally seen in the Alaska book. It is of the figure of a woman standing in a doorway, her head hidden by her arm, one of Kent's most beautiful and significant figures.

In estimating the value of this side of the art of Rockwell Kent which deals with symbolic figures, one cannot avoid feeling the influence of William Blake. But Kent is not William Blake, nor is he his shadow. Kent is a lover and student of Blake, who showed him something he needed to know—how to make human forms personify qualities.

Kent's symbolic figures are quite different from Blake's. They are sterner, harder, less beautiful and subtle perhaps, but much more athletic. They are missionaries for the gospel of complete, manly gesture. Perhaps therein lies their greatest value in an age which is seriously suffering for lack of unashamed manly gestures.

SOME FRESH NOTES IN BILTMORE SHOW

An exhibit of moderate-sized and small canvases at the Biltmore salon discloses several very worth-while works. Constable said that a small canvas showed you what you can do, while a big one showed you what you can't. Perhaps that is why the moderate-sized things here often say something, while the large frames too often contain just paint.

Hanson Puthuff shows an unusually sumptuous mountain picture. It must have taken courage to paint it, or to have left it in its full color. Hung in a subdued light it lends richness to the whole room. Whether it is as good in full light I cannot vouch, but it probably is. It shows rugged mountains catching the last rays of ruddy light above cool green trees in shadow. Very big and simple. Another good Puthuff, a subtle study of California hills in hot noon, is something for the real collector to pick up. It is not pretty or picturesque, but true.

Orrin White also records evening light on rocky mountains in a very satisfactory small canvas. A deep canyon is simply and surely indicated curving into the mountain. The canvas was not so big that the mood dissipated itself before it could be spread out in paint.

Jean Mannheim is particularly happy in this exhibit. He shows a very spontaneous sketch of desert mountains with white, bare-limbed trees in the foreground. The sort of scene that one would walk by in nature, yet it was a very real moment in his life and he managed to preserve it. Another painting by Mannheim hails from Morro. A beautiful arrangement of massed trees, houses, and the great rock rising behind them.

A group of small sketches by Armin Hansen, recording every-day things from Monterey, are very juicy and painterlike.

Two bold character paintings by Barse Miller are in striking contrast to the paler works surrounding them. Miller delights in strong values and is not afraid of full color. One shows a chatterfest of Breton maids most interestingly seen in pattern. The other is of old fishermen against red sails.

Boats with red sails may become a vehicle for self expression of a high order. Edgar Alwin Payne has painted many pleasing pictures around them but quantity production almost precludes the exhileration which goes into the making of real works of art, born right out of the current of one's life.

A wintry Sierra scene from Leland Curtis. A lowering day when the wolf is abroad. One of those clear notes, true and personal, though as yet a little hard, which this young artist is hearing among the peaks.

Arthur M. Hazard shows a fine hill in rich green and gold, very solid and satisfying.

Clyde Forsythe shows two desert paintings in the galleries, and two in the galleria. I have sought long for the explanation of this artist's failure to move me with his desert pictures. They are well drawn, realistic, have good distance and dramatic effects. I feel now that he puts the desert on the stage as an actor who has not thoroughly lived in his part. Only deep religious feeling can understand the desert. Greece gave us the buskins, but only hermits could dwell long in the desert. Thomas Hunt contributes a picture of birches, Aaron Kilpatrick one of his Mexican village scenes and Charles Austin two picturesque and warm glimpses of San Juan Capistrano. Jack Wilkinson Smith shows a marine well up to his standard and a little mountain scene by no means so good.

Painters too often choose a canvas bigger than their mood will stand. I believe the general high level of this exhibit is partly due to the moderate sizes chosen. Few of the bigger canvases are among the best. It might be wise to remember this when one is about to record something very precious and fleeting.

LARGE COUTTS SHOW NOW AT STENDAHL'S

Gordon Coutts has traveled far over a long period of years. He has painted many pictures both large and small, all of them picturesque, some of them of very good quality. He understands many things, character of people and races, qualities of atmosphere, how to compose, and how to manipulate his paint.

Nothing is too difficult for him to attempt, and everywhere he looks he seems to find a picture. While his paintings are seldom profound, they nevertheless testify to a genuine delight in people and nature, and a keen observance of the myriad little incidents which give life much of its flavor.

Born in Glasgow, he resided long in Australia, as instructor in the Government School of Arts at Sydney. Here he painted portraits of many dignitaries. In America, he has painted among other notables, Andrew Carnegie.

A portion of his life has been spent in California where, like most painters, he concentrated his attention on landscape. Lately he spent much time in Morocco, where he painted portraits of sons and daughters of the desert, some of which are seen in the present exhibit.

There is a decidedly uneven distribution in quality throughout the exhibit, some of the canvases being just well-painted assemblages of facts, good illustrations of those facts, but telling us little of an artist's feelings; but in such delightful canvases as the one at Granada, where one looks down through trees and over sunny brown walls at the blue mountains of Old Spain, or looks at a domed Mexican church over red tiled roofs, or spends a particularly fresh and happy moment looking down the red cliffs of Tangier Bay into the deep blue waters of the Mediterranean, then all the joy and knowledge of a blithe and skillful painter create very happy works of art. Particularly living is the "Market Place of Cuernavaca," its colored awnings at once blending into the atmosphere and contrasting with the blue shadow of the silhouetted cathedral. His many figures moving about in these small pictures are drawn and felt with affectionate interest.

Of the portraits, the most sympathetic, I feel, is that of an old peon against green leaves. The drawing of the features, the aged good nature, is done with love.

A group of Northern California landscapes done in the manner of the men of the 'eighties and 'nineties, while seeming definitely old fashioned, a few of them very strongly "Keithized," nevertheless reveal some beautiful and subtle painting. Today we should call them pot-boilers, and some of them are just that, but others, while probably painted for that reason, are so well done, so engaged the interest of the painter, that they are exceedingly beautiful in spite of themselves.

DESERT PAINTINGS AT THE AMBASSADOR

Henry B. Wagoner has studied the desert faithfully. His paintings from Arizona and New Mexico, now on exhibition at the Stendahl galleries, tell you that at a glance. He has, it seems to me, gone through a valuable first course of desert painting, honestly drawing the forms of the volcanic mountains, learning the chemistry of light as it modifies the glaring sand, mile after mile, into the distance. The foliage chosen, the clarity of the little white clouds riding like ships in the vast blue sky, the feeling of luminosity; he has gone at these things, almost copying them, and I believe, really feeling the immensity of the desert. But has he expressed what he felt under that burning sun, a little human speck in that terrifying and inspiring vastness?

I hardly think so. He may do it some day because he has worked hard and not striven for effect but rather for truth as he could see it. I do not believe that labor of this kind need ever be lost. After all, it is useless to try to "represent" the desert; its whiteness, its glare, cannot be caught by faithful matching of nature's values. It would be just as well to use a camera.

Yet look at the finely studied forms in the "Superstition Mountains," the remarkable flatness in a smaller canvas hanging opposite it. He knows his desert and does not hold it cheaply. Now if he will forget what he knows and say to himself "What do I feel here?" he may do some very notable desert painting. What he has achieved is very good of its kind, sincere and respectful, qualities by no means dwelling in every paint box, and valuable wherever found.

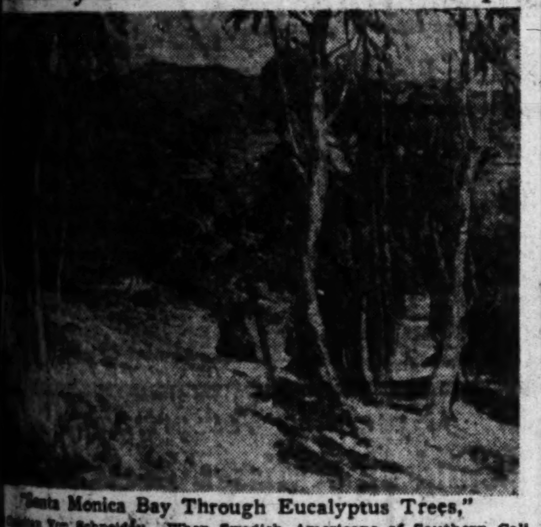
"La Grande Chene aux bords des Lagnes," by Corot

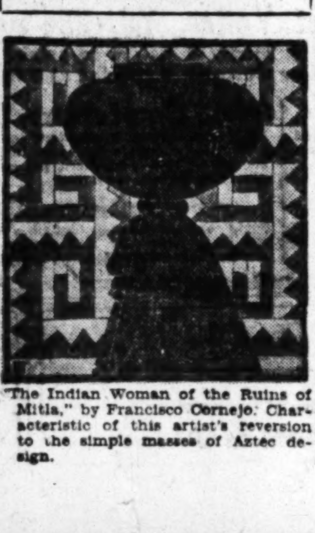
This lovely example of the art of Corot, master of subtle grays and poetic charm, is on display at the Ainslee Galleries, Barker Brothers.

Token of International Friendship



"Santa Monica Bay Through Eucalyptus Trees," Von Schneidau. When Swedish Americans of Southern California sought a gift for Prince Gustav Adolf and Princess Louise, they this painting as a happy way to carry California's blue and gold their native land.

"MITLECA"



"The Indian Woman of the Ruins of Mitla," by Francisco Cornejo. Characteristic of this artist's reversion to the simple masses of Aztec design.

Fox Farm Seen as Locale in 'Rocking Moon'

More than $1,000,000 is represented in the live furs which are seen in "Rocking Moon," which has its Southern California premiere at Bard's new theater, Adams and Crenshaw, today.

By "live furs" are meant the hundreds of live blue foxes, around which the plot of the picture revolves.

The scenes were taken on one of the largest fox farms in Alaska, and according to those who operate the fox farm, each one of the beautiful animals are worth from $800 to $500 for fur. Aside from the foxes there were more than $70,000 worth of ancient Indian masks from the Aluetian and Thlinket Indian tribes.

George Melford, who directed the picture, in which Lilyan Tashman and John Bowers have the leading roles, took his company to Alaska and remained there for more than six weeks, taking scenes in Juneau and Sitka as well as on the fox farm.

OUR STORY:

Three Musketeers of the Sea there are; each as strange a character as the other; each subject to the same impulses and emotions; each as stubborn, cranky, impulsive and loyal as the others—meet them:

CAPT. PHINEAS P. SCRAGGS, rat-faced, snaggle-toothed and furtive, master-owner of the steamer "Maggie" and a freighter of vegetables in San Francisco Bay.

ADELBERT P. GIBNEY, a large imposing, capable but socially indifferent person of a somewhat adventurous experience who is cursed with too much brains and imagination and a thirst. He holds a license as chief mate of steam, any ocean or tonnage and is chief mate of the Maggie.

BARTHOLOMEW McGUFFEY is a good engineer gone wrong. He nurses the ancient junk in the Maggie's engineroom with loving care and is a fit mate for the other two.

After running the "Maggie" aground in the Golden Gate and through a ruse persuading Dan Hicks and Jack Flaherty, towboat captains, to pull them off, Scraggs averts punishment at the hands of Hicks and Flaherty by promising McGuffey and Gibney extensive repairs to the Maggie. When Scraggs fails to come through in a week's time, McGuffey and Gibney, both being in funds, quit. Scraggs get's them drunk that night.

The next morning they awake in a sailors' boarding house broke. They visit the Maggie, seeking their jobs, but Scraggs will have none of them, and for a week they prowl around the waterfront looking for work without success. Finally they go to Halfmoon Bay in search of the Maggie again—a twenty mile walk.

They find Scraggs frying eggs, and despite threats of arrest for piracy, force him to feed them. Then, defying Scraggs and his new crew, they remain on the ship.

Next morning they awake early, consume all the provender in the galley, and later, as the Maggie is homeward bound, discover the bark Chesapeake off Point Montara with distress signals flying. Scraggs plans to salvage her.

McGuffey and Gibney, however, have similar plans, and, hastily disrobing, jump overboard and swim to the Chesapeake.

The tide was still at the flood and the two adventurers made fast progress toward the Chesapeake. Choosing a favorable opportunity as the vessel dipped, they grasped her martingale, climbed up on the bowsprit, and ran along the bowsprit to the to'gallan'-fo'castle. On the deck below a dead man lay in the scuppers, and such a horrible stench pervaded the vessel that McGuffey was taken very ill and was forced to seek the rail.

"Scurvy or somethin'," Mr. Gibney announced quite calmly. "Here's the devil to pay. There should be chloride of lime in the mate's storeroom—I'll scatter some on these poor devils. Too close to port now to chuck 'em overboard. Anyhow, Bart, me an' you ain't doctors, not yet coroners or undertakers, so you'd better skip along an' build a fire under the donkey aft. Matches in the galley, of course."

"I wish she was a schooner," McGuffey complained, edging over to the weather rail. "It'd be easier for us two to sail her then. I'm only a marine engineer, Gib, an' while I been goin' to sea long enough to pick up something about handlin' a vessel, still I'll get dizzy if I go aloft—an' I'm sure to get sick. You'll have to do all the high an' lofty tumblin'—an' how in blue blazes us two're goin' to sail a square-rigger into port is a mystery to me."

"Leave the worryin' to your Uncle Gib, Bart. You can take the wheel an' steer, can't you? She has enough sail practically set now to make her handle good. Look at them courses hangin' in the buntlines an' the yards a-box!

"All we got to do is to square 'em around—but never mind explanations. I'll show you how it's done after we get steam up in the donkey. I'd prefer a wind about two points aft her beam, but never let it be said that I turned up my nose at a good stiff nor'west trade.

"I've sunk pretty low, Mac, but I was a real sailor once an' I can sail this old hooker wherever there's water enough to float her. It's just pie—well, for heaven's sake, Mac, what are you standin' around for? Ain't I ordered you to get up steam up in the donkey? Lively, you lubber. After you've got the fire goin,' we'll place leadin' blocks along the deck, lead all the runnin' gear to the winch head, an' stand by to swing them yards when I give the word."

Mr. Gibney trotted down to the main deck and prowled aft. On the port side of her house he found two more dead men, and a cursory inspection of the bodies told him they had died of scurvy.

He circled the ship, came back to the fo'castle, entered, and found four men alive in their berths, but too far gone to leave them. "I'll have you boys in the Marine Hospital tonight," he informed the poor creatures, and sought the master's cabin. Lying on his bed, fully dressed, he found the skipper of the Chesapeake. The man was gaunt and emaciated.

The freebooter of the green-pea trade touched his wet forelock respectfully. "My name is Gibney, sir, an' I hold an unlimited license as first mate of sail or steam. I was passin' up the coast on a good-for-nothin' little bumboat, an' seen you in distress, so me an' a friend swum over to give you the double- O.You're in a bad way, sir."

"Two hundred and eighty-seven days from Hamburg, Mr. Gibney. Our vegetables gave out and we drank too much rain water and ate too much fresh fish down in the Doldrums. Our potatoes all went rotten before we were out two months.

"Naturally, the ship's officers stuck it out longest, but when we drifted in here this morning, I was the only man aboard able to stand up. I crawled up on the to'-gallan' fo'-castle and let go the starboard anchor. I'd had it cock-billed for three weeks. All I had to do was knock out the stopper."

While Mr. Gibney questioned him and listened avidly to the horrible tale of privation and despair, McGuffey appeared to report a brisk fire under the donkey and to promise steam in forty minutes; also that the Maggie was hove to a cable length distant, with her crew digging under the deckload of vegetables for the small boat. "Help yourself to a belayin' pin, Bart, an' knock 'em on the heads if they try to come aboard," Mr. Gibney ordered nonchalantly.

"Do I understand there is a steamer at hand, Mr. Gibney?" the master of the Chesapeake queried.

"There's an excuse for one, sir. The little vegetable freighter Maggie. She'll never be able to tow you in, because she ain't got power enough, an' if she had power enough she ain't got coal enough. Besides, Scraggs, her owner, is a rotten bad article an' before he'll put a rope aboard you he'll tie you up on a contract for a figger that'd make an angel weep. The way your ship lies an' everything, me an' McGuffey can sail her in for you at half the price."

"I can't risk my ship in the hands of two men," the sick captain answered. "She's too valuable and so is her cargo. If this little steamer will tow me in I'll gladly give her my towline and let the court settle the bill."

"Not by a million," Mr. Gibney protested. "Beg pardon, sir, but you don't know this here Scraggs like I do. I couldn't think of lettin' him set foot on this deck."

"You couldn't think of it? Well, when did you take command of my ship?"

"You're flotsam an' jetsam, sir, an' practically in the breakers. You're sick, an' for all I know, delirious, so for the sake o' protection' you, the sick seaman in the fo'castle an' the owners, I'm takin' command."

The master of the Chesapeake reached under his pillow and produced a pistol. "Out of my cabin or I'll riddle you," he barked feebly.

Mr. Gibney departed without a word of protest and proceeded to make his arrangements, regardless of the master's consent. As he and McGuffey busied themselves, laying the leading blocks along the deck, they glanced toward the Maggie and observed Captain Scraggs hurling crates of vegetables overboard in an effort to get at the small boat quickly. "He'll die when the freight claims come in," Mr. McGuffey chortled. "Poor ol' Scraggsy!"

"How're we goin to git that durned anchor up, Gib?"

"We ain't goin' to get it up. We're goin' to knock out a shackle in the chain an' let her go to glory."

"Anchors is expensive, Gib. Mebbe they'll deduct the price o' that anchor from our salvage."

"By Jupiter, you're talkin', Mac. We'll just save that anchor, come to think of it."

"How?"

"Just let Scraggsy an' The Squarehead come aboard an' put the ship's towin' cable aboard the Maggie. The Maggie'll just about be able to hold her while us four up with the anchor—an' cockbill it agin!"

"They got the skiff overside," McGuffey warned.

"Throw over the Jacob's ladder and help 'em aboard, Mac. Nothin' like bein' neighborly. This here's a delicate situation, what with the old man declinin' our services in favor of a tow by the Maggie, an' it occurs to me if we oppose him our standin' in court will be impaired. I see I got to use my imagination agin."

Another installment of this rollicking tale of the Three Musketeers of the Sea will appear in tomorrow's Times. Watch for it.

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

By Reading Experiences of Other Women

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 206, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. * * * Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If this medicine has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you? At your druggist's.

WAY TO NUPTIAL JOY TOLD

Dan Cupid received a punch in the nose and a slap on the back simultaneously from Charlie Murray, First National comedian, when he advised all men to remain single until they reach the age of forty!

"Marriage is the greatest thing in the world if you don't undertake it too soon," says the comedian.

"If a man waits until forty he will have reached the age of discretion—common sense—call it what you will and be ready to settle down happily in his home."

The comedian pointed to his own happy wedded life as an illustration of how two persons can work in connubial harness for their mutual interest.

For twenty-one years this pair has gamboled through happiness, adversity, one thing and another, keeping in mind always the thought that they have pooled their luck together, and as Charlie says: "We're better satisfied today than we ever were."

It was difficult to take what Charlie Murray said seriously when one glanced at his "galloway sluggers" pasted far down on his cheeks. He was at that time Andre O'Donohue, a French-Irish butler, waiting for instructions from Director Balboni to proceed in "The Masked Woman," of the set.

But, there was a sincere ring in his voice as he expressed his ideas on the subject of matrimony.

"I love my wife as sincerely today as the first time I saw her, twenty-two years ago, when she was an amateur actress from Lincoln, Neb., sent to me by a friend to 'break in' on the stage.

"In these years," continued Murray, "I have not failed to remember all the little things that made her happy in our courtship and honeymoon days. I still bring her flowers and candy and little presents.

"I have never taken my wife's affections for granted and I always give her a big hug and kiss when I come home at night.

"I am thirteen years older than she is and I always feel as if she were just a little girl, one to look out for. I mentally compare other women with Mrs. Murray and they all fade by comparison."

Murray claims that his home life is successful because of the following things:

He never goes anywhere that he cannot take Mrs. Murray.

He always considers her advice and her opinion important.

He enjoys many of the same things she does.

He loves to work so that he can buy her pretty things.

He is affectionate.

She always considers his advice and his opinion important.

She always appreciates what he does for her.

She always sees that his meals are ready for him when he comes home.

She is always affectionate.

But she doesn't always laugh at his jokes!

PILGRIM PLAYER PRAISED

The Pilgrimage Play is the drama of ages. The sublime story of the Saviour, now in its seventh annual season, has already become a tradition of the Hollywood Hills. Here beneath the vast canopy of sky, the sacred drama is reverently unfolded before audiences.

The central figure is, of course, the Christus, whose birth, teaching and miracles, temptation and ascension is a thrilling story.

During the seven seasons several very fine actors have portrayed this role and Reginald Pole, whose interpretation this year is bringing enthusiastic praises from every quarter, has brought a rare understanding and a warmth to the familiar lines.

Pole has been closely identified with the Pilgrimage Play from the beginning. He was chosen by the late Christine Wetherill Stevenson, transcriber and producer, to assist her in the direction during its first season.

The next year, 1921, Mr. Herbert again played this part with Mr. Pole appearing as Judas. In 1922, Herbert Grimwood played the Christus role the first part of the year, Herbert assuming it for the final week. Pole again portrayed the role of Judas.

In 1923, Mr. Pole was detained in New York with a theatrical production, and this is the only year he has not appeared in some capacity with the Pilgrimage Play.

Pole directed the drama during the 1925 season, playing the Christus during its final four weeks as Earnest Lawford, who had enacted the part, was forced to return to New York to fulfill engagements.

The Pilgrimage Play, which will soon complete its seventh season, is presented nightly, Sundays excepted.

"NEW FACES" FEATURE FILM

The movement for "new faces" has evidently a firm supporter in Charles R. Rogers, the producer of "Senor Daredevil," which is now showing at the Criterion Theater, for in this picture he brings to the thousands of First National picture fans a number of faces which, though not new to the screen, have not previously appeared under the First National banner.

Ken Maynard, the star, is one of these, and that delightful little comedienne, Dorothy Devore, who is featured with him, hasn't a First National picture in her long list of fine performances. Of course, the director's face doesn't appear, but Al Rogell's directorial talents have their initial display under the First National trademark in this picture.

Residents of Monarch Road, Northampton, Eng., recently refused to pay tents until the Council dealt with a plague of crickets.

PUBLICITY ON BARNUM BANNED

F.B.O. Destroys Advertising on 'Greatest Show on Earth'

DeForest Phonofilm Starts Suits Against Fox-Case

'Devil's Island,' With Pauline Frederick, Mediocre

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—F.B.O. has destroyed all paper and advertising matter on "Bigger Than Barnum's" which contains the phrase "Greatest Show On Earth" and other references to the circus and to the "Ringling Brothers."

This comes as the result of a notification of alleged infringement by John M. Kelley, general counsel for the Ringling brothers. A like notification has been sent to other producers who are making or are proposing to make circus pictures, including Famous Players, whose scheduled picture, "The Greatest Show On Earth," purports to be the life of P. T. Barnum.

The attorney asserts that while circus pictures may be filmed by anyone, producers cannot include scenes intended to reproduce Barnum's circus or the Barnum and Bailey entertainment, rights to which are owned by the Ringlings.

In the case of F.B.O., no legal action became necessary to bring about the changes made in the advertising matter, the film company willingly making the cancellations when the matter was brought to its attention.

Although it is generally understood that Robert Kane will continue to produce for First National in the East, and that Leon Errol likewise will perform in any studio for First National, the matter of Johnny Hines's further remaining here is subject to change, so that instead of three companies producing here, First National is likely to have but two.

Johnny Hines has steadfastly refused to make his pictures outside New York, but that, I learn, was because he had his home here. The death of his mother, however, has changed the aspect of his affairs and he is looking with favor upon the possibility of making his next comedy at the Burbank studios. Also, he owns considerable real estate in Hollywood, and being a perspicacious young man, he has come to the conclusion that it may be to his advantage to be where he can look it over now and then and perhaps realize a profit. In matters of money, the comedian is no dreamer.

[illegible] Hamilton arrives in Los Angeles today with William Powell, [illegible] Hale and Edward Sutherland. The players were summoned from New York and will, of course, soon be cast in their next rôles, although when they left here they were completely in the dark regarding them.

The Deforest Phonofilm Company has started suit against William Fox and Theodore W. Case. Deforest seeks an injunction to restrain the defendants from infringing certain basic patents, all this having to do with the [illegible]phone, a device in which Fox is reported to be interested. Theodore W. Case, it develops, was associated with Deforest for some time and it is alleged that his familiarity with the phonofilm process is responsible for the protection now sought from the courts.

GILDA TO FILM LIFE STORY

Miss Gray, Who Has Shivered Her Way to Fame, Places Gold Far Above Poorly-Paid "Art"

BY KATHERINE LIPKE

Gilda Gray—native daughter of rhythm—is going to do the story of her life for Famous Players-Lasky. Gilda herself is sure there is enough thrill and human interest in it to make a dramatic picture and apparently Mr. Lasky agrees with her. Her contract for the picture is so highly profitable for Gilda that she is at present in a gilded daze of happiness. Gilda loves money.

She enjoys the thought that "Aloma of the South Seas" was a splendid box-office success in New York and hopes that its present engagement here at the Million Dollar Theater will be just as successful. She doesn't care whether people think it is artistic or not if only they will help it make a lot of money. Gilda gets a percentage of everything, you see.

CONTEMPT FOR ART

She has a slight contempt for art. What is the use of being artistic and starve for your art? She prefers eating. This is her attitude—the frank, childlike blonde who earned $9 a week a few years ago in a Milwaukee cabaret and whose shimmy has since shaken the world's dollars into her lap.

Gilda never took a dancing lesson in her life. Therefore, she feels sorry for the girls who are spending years learning dancing—their fluttering about on their toes seems useless to her when they might be doing something which would make a lot more money.

"If I have been able to make all this money doing something which really isn't dancing or singing," says Gilda, "why should folks work and work for years for recognition? Pavlowa is a great artist in her line, but she doesn't get much out of it."

"ALOMA" A MYSTERY

"Aloma of the South Seas" is still a great mystery to Gilda. She knows that she went to Porto Rico and worked very hard for several weeks; that she wore a black wig and dark grease paint, and that she felt every inch the native girl of the picture, but she didn't see one scene of it until she returned to New York. When

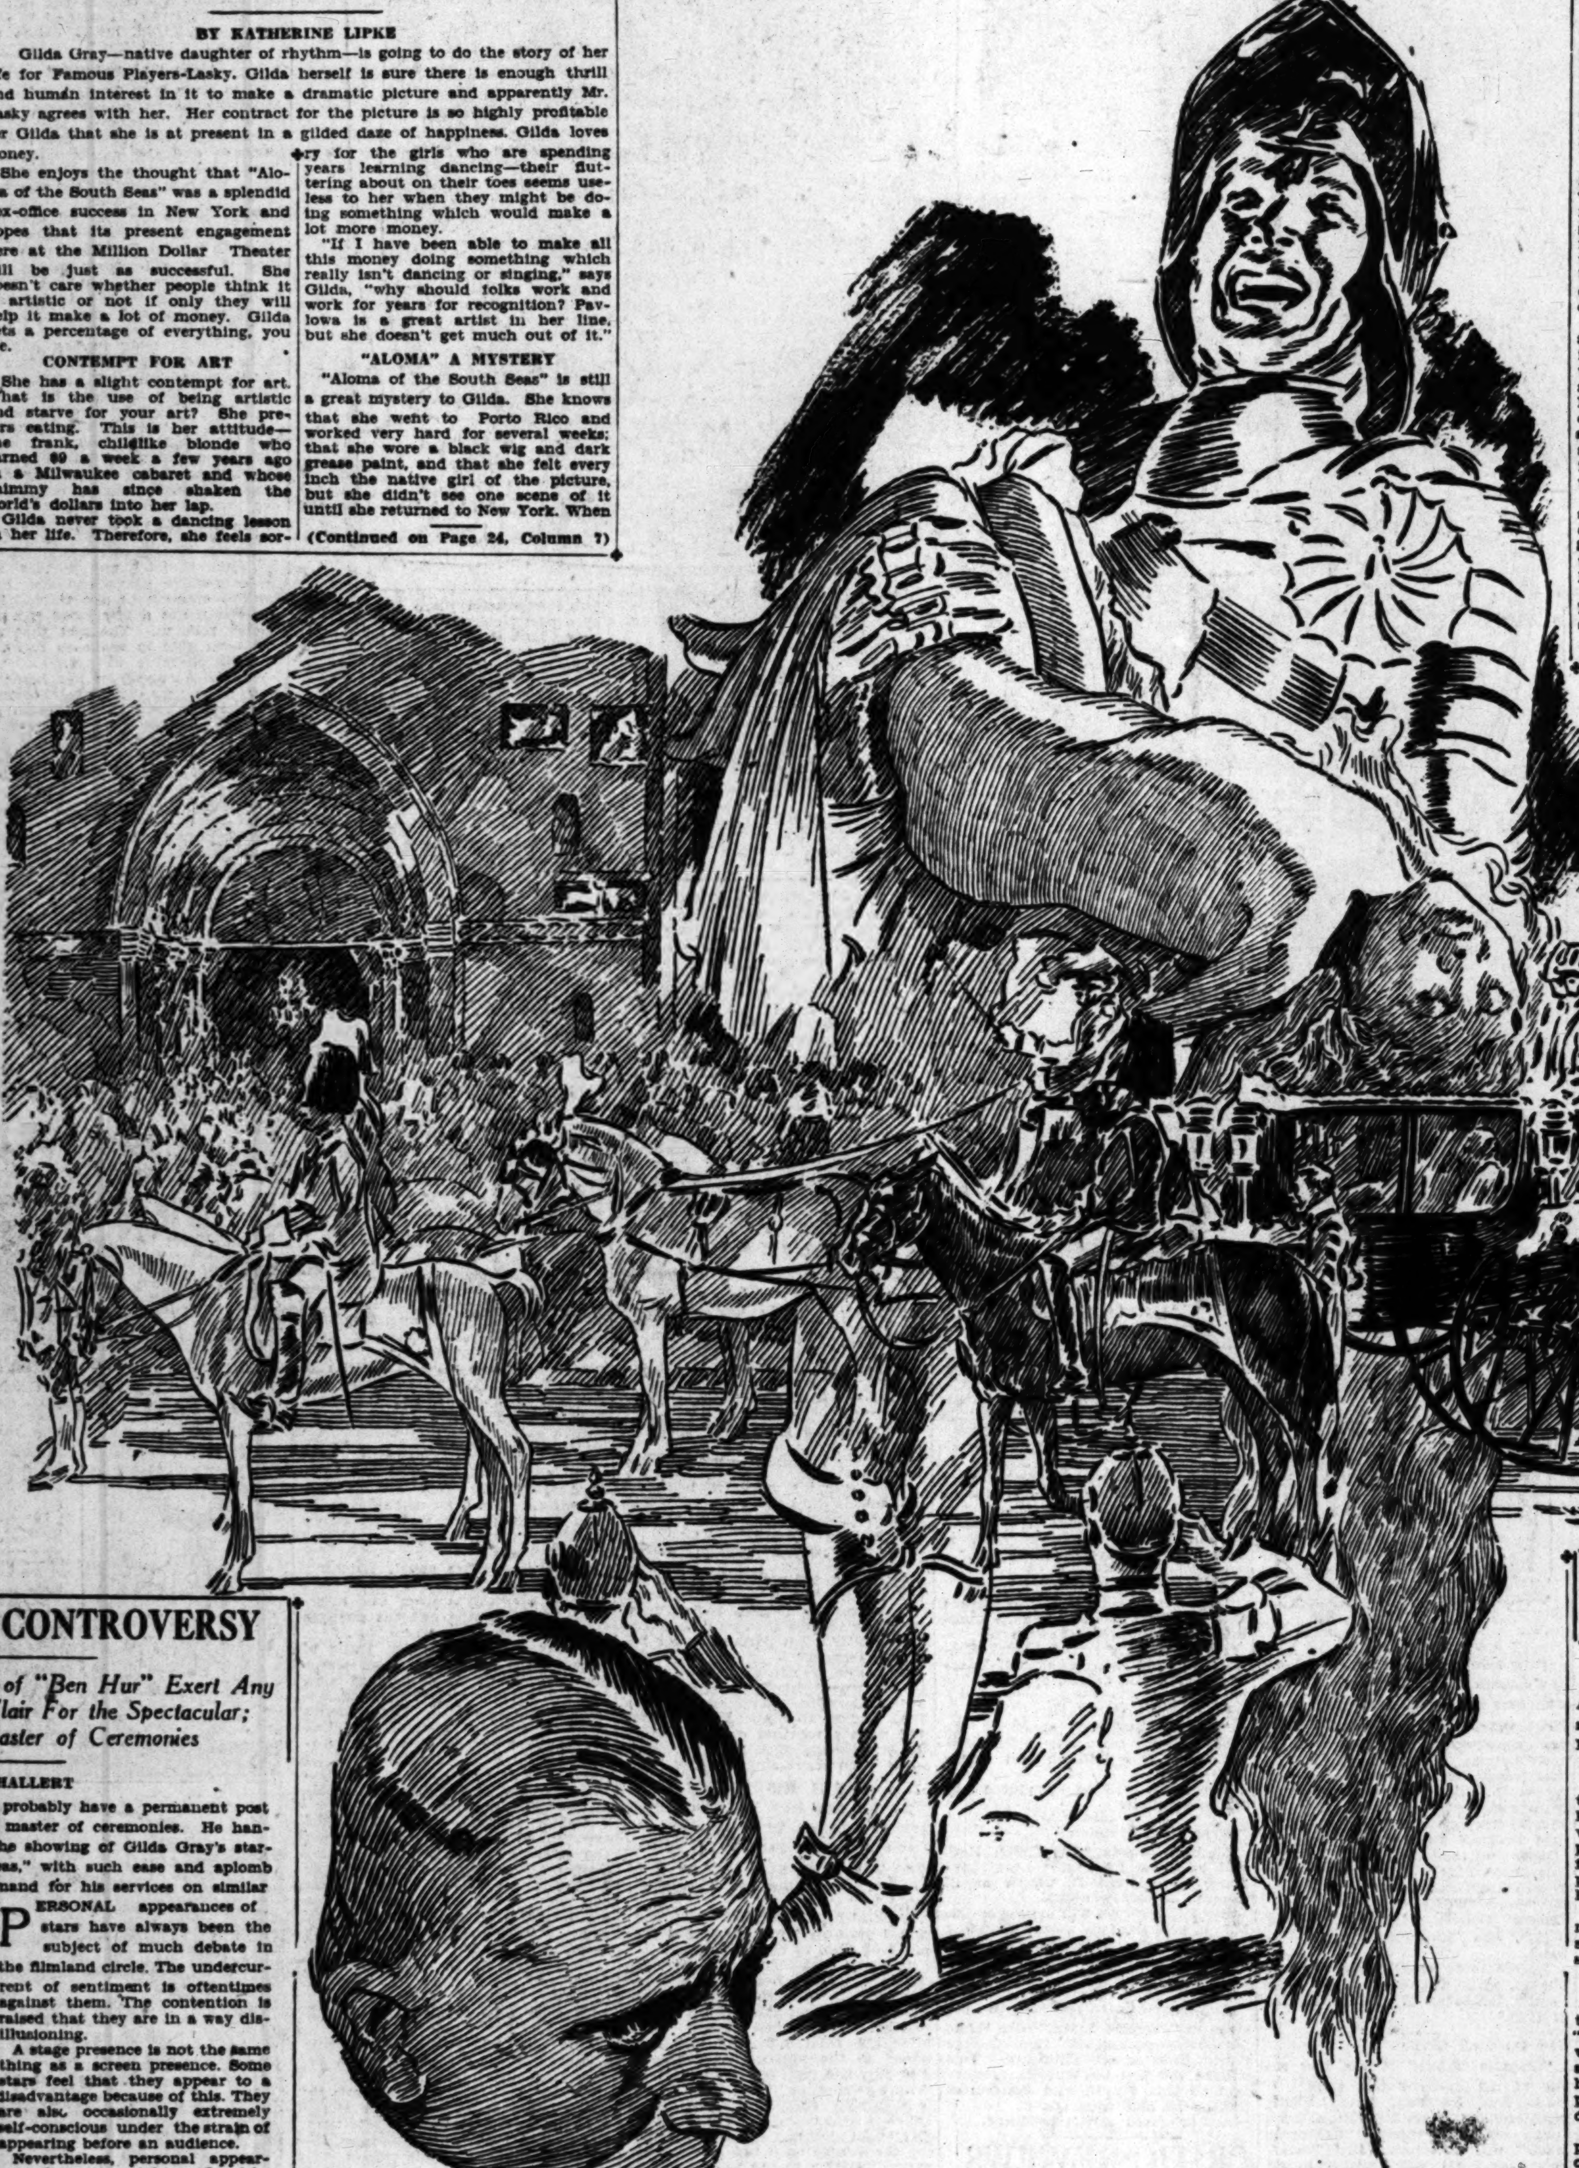
REAL VON STROHEIM IS DISCLOSED

Only Scene-Perfection in "Wedding March" Will Satisfy



Beauty That Is Vienna's

Above is Staff Artist A. L. Ewing's conception of "The Wedding March," which Eric Von Stroheim is directing as well as playing the leading role. It is a dramatic story of Vienna life, and the great war.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY

AS WILL ROGERS says, "It's a wonderful thing to meet people and see about how they all are about the same when you can get their minds off their "life's work."

Eric Von Stroheim is one of those people you never thought of as being like yourself. To the public mind, I'll wager he is a cross between a he-vamp, Von Hindenburg and Bull Montana.

Instead of which, a study of him through our own eyes and the eyes of those closest to him shows that he is, aside from being a genius, just a nice human being,—only maybe nicer and more human than most of us.

Just at present Eric Von Stroheim is working on "The Wedding March," the significance of the title being two-fold, inasmuch as one wedding march in the story is an actual wedding march, while the other is the march of the war drums as the bridegroom marches away to battle in the World War.

Many months have already been devoted to the making of the picture, which will be a sort of an epic of the psychology of war's victims, in one phase. Besides which the physical side of war will be shown in several battles.

We viewed the beautiful sets on which Von Stroheim was working the day we went there. One of these was a cathedral set, an exact replica of a church in Vienna. It is gorgeous quite beyond the dreams of anything we have here in this country.

The picture will be a multiple feature, and will probably not be completed for three or four months longer.

Von Stroheim has just been voted through an election conducted by Film Daily, the greatest director in the world. This expresses the opinion of dramatic critics and editors of this country. Naturally, people will be a bit curious after that to know just what sort of a man the greatest director is aside from his "life's work."

DIFFERENT "VON"

One admits the Von Stroheim of today isn't the Von Stroheim of the bleak and bitter days of fighting for recognition, nor yet the days before that when, following the wonderful life of an Austrian officer, he came to this country, hungry, accepting such jobs as offered, buffeted by fate, humiliated by the powerful. He is what one feels is the real

Julanne Wishes for Vivid Roles in Screen Plays

When Julanne Johnston was chosen for the role of Douglas Fairbanks's princess in "The Thief of Bagdad" her name was blazoned forth as a discovery. Tall, graceful, a charming dancer, she appeared greatly to advantage against the exotic Arabian Nights setting.

However, just as she was becoming well known, Julanne, upon the whim of the moment, accepted a film offer to make pictures in England and Germany. She was away from America a year, and in that time her new-found reputation had been dimmed by time and by other discoveries—newer names being blazoned forth.

Now Julanne Johnston is home again and this week in Los Angeles is seen on the screen in two theaters. "The Vision," Arthur Maude's artistic technicolor picture at the Forum features Julanne as the shadowy lovely heroine, while she also appears in "Al.m aof the South Seas" at the Million Dollar Theater, playing the American girl as a contrast to Gilda Gray's native role.

Neither of these parts give Julanne an opportunity to appear as interesting and attractive as she really is. She feels, and others feel also, that the European trip was a mistake. She lost contact with pictures here.

However, while she was over there, locationing in France, Algiers, Spain, she absorbed much more than a first-

MILTON SILLS BRAINY ACTOR

Author as Well as Star of "Men of Steel"

Pleases Bowl Audiences With Clever Talks

Now Working in Tropic Story "Splendid Outcast"

BY ALMA WHITAKER

So few actors are brainy enough to write their own plays. With the exception of, say, Charlie Chaplin, it has almost never been done in pictures.

But Milton Sills wrote "Men of Steel," now showing at Loew's State Theater, and he also stars in it—and behold it is hailed as one of the important pictures of the year. So much so that it broke all summer records at the Strand in New York. And this at a time when directors are crying out for younger male stars . . . and deploring that the encumbents are mostly passe. . . .

There is nothing passe about Milton Sills in "Men of Steel." He wrote it for Milton with a full knowledge of Milton's capacity. True, it was inspired by a story in the Saturday Evening Post called "United States Flavor," by R. G. Kirk, who is given screen credit for his inspiration, although . . . well, it's a wise father that recognizes his own child. George Archainbaud directed the picture.

MANY ANGLES

This picture not only entailed Milton Sills learning the steel industry in a couple of weeks, but it also entailed extreme diplomacy. President Gary of the United States Steel Corporation had to be placated and his approval won—because they had to use his steel mills at Birmingham, Ala.—and because capital must not be offended. And it was necessary to win the blessing of Mr. Green of the American Federation of Labor, because it is even more serious to offend labor. And it had to be well acted to justify the author and well written to please the actor-star . . . and I am confident that Milton Silk feels modestly happy about the results.

And he was trying to be peculiarly modest when I saw him. Modesty is almost the only thing that comes hard to Milton. Especially in negligee—and no wonder. There was lots of negligee. I don't know what they call this masculine garment in which he received me (just off the set of his new tropical picture . . . on a very tropical day) but it is frankly decollette and revealing. But you can't really blame him, for his greatest success dates from "The Sea Hawk" and the stripped galley slave scene, when we first realized that Milton was rather more than an ex-college professor who could use long unusual words.

And really now, the least interesting of all Milton's pictures was the one in which he was fully clothed throughout in all-encompassing clerical garb with Nazimova.

AGAIN THE TRIANGLE

And so . . . well there is plenty of negligee in "Men of Steel," too, and, since the interview, I can testify it is all his own. So it was perfectly all right to write two beautiful-maiden roles into that play for Doris Kenyon, the lovely poor girl,

THE PROLOGUE CONTROVERSY

Will Simplicity in Presentation of "Ben Hur" Exert Any Influence? Sid Grauman's Flair For the Spectacular; Wallace Beery as a Master of Ceremonies

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

IF he wanted it Wallace Beery could probably have a permanent post in the life of the film colony as a master of ceremonies. He handled the introduction of stars at the showing of Gilda Gray's starring picture, "Aloma of the South Seas," with such ease and aplomb that there will likely be a regular demand for his services on similar occasions.

However, Wallie is just the sort who wouldn't take such a thing over as a permanent assignment. He has long been one of the film's cleverest personal showmen. (Probably out of understanding of this the Paramount Company is even going to give him the chance to portray Barnum!)

And while he would doubtless realize that a single enterprise like the Gilda Gray premiere might be productive of a very good impression, he probably is smart enough to know that holding the honor of being introducer as a regular thing is hazardous.

MOST ceremonies of introductions, anyway, are deadly. At least, many of them in the past have been.

There have been several in which there was much criticism and even boos and catcalls from the audience, because a portion of those attending, generally in the balcony, couldn't see the players as they bowed from the front of the theater boxes. Quite naturally, they had a right to raise a fuss about it, and they did—much to the embarrassment of everybody, and the stars, particularly, who have to be good sports about such contretemps, and suffer from them occasionally.

Wallie took no chances the other evening. When the introducing of the players from the aisles proved unsatisfactory he got up on the stage, and made each and every star come up there also.

The slowness and tediousness of this process requiring as it did, climbing out of the middle of a row of seats in some cases, and a walk down to and up on the stage besides, didn't seem materially to diminish the enthusiasm of the crowd. For Wallie apparently has his public with him.

PERSONAL appearances of stars have always been the subject of much debate in the filmland circle. The undercurrent of sentiment is oftentimes against them. The contention is raised that they are in a way disillusioning.

A stage presence is not the same thing as a screen presence. Some stars feel that they appear to a disadvantage because of this. They are also occasionally extremely self-conscious under the strain of appearing before an audience.

Nevertheless, personal appearances have gone right on flourishing. In fact, they are a regular feature of the majority of premieres. There has been an improvement, too, in the reaction that they evoke.

It has become an integral part of a star's experience to make them, and most of the players carry them out very successfully now where a number of them perhaps didn't a few years ago, when this routine was not so prevalent.

LON CHANEY is one player who has made very few personal appearances. I think that I have seen him in two only. One was at a benefit and another at a neighborhood theater.

He is really very much opposed to them now, since he has gained stardom largely through his feats in make-up. Lon doesn't like to show himself as he is for fear people won't take a serious view of him when he appears to be what he isn't.

Which possibly is taking a rather serious view of the whole matter.

IN the whole, film premieres have been acquiring too much extra added attractions. tions.

"Ben Hur," as I noted at the time of reviewing the picture, is a satisfaction because it avoids

PREFER TWO TEMPERAMENTS

Lilyan Tashman and Edmund Lowe Conduct Joint Journey Toward Success With Perfect Felicity

BY BARBARA MILLER

Two temperaments are better than one. Such is the duly considered verdict of that film-famous pair, Lilyan Tashman and Eddie Lowe, namely, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Lowe of Hollywood and Beverly Hills, Cal.

Speaking from the professional as well as the domestic angle, for they have worked in the same pictures, as is the case this week with "Siberia," which is showing at the Criterion.

Common interests, a common understanding of the hardships and inconveniences of their profession, a common desire for success make for harmony in the Lowe menage.

Declares the chic Lilyan, "I think it would be simply terrible to have a husband whose interests were different from mine.

"When I come home from a hard day's work at the studio I don't care to hear anything discussed, but if there must be conversation I certainly prefer shop.

ALIEN INTERESTS

"Marriage with a man in another profession would bore me to death. Imagine having to hear about the rise of Chinese railway stocks!"

Contributes Mr. Lowe, "Perhaps we get along so well because we don't see each other for days, or even weeks at a time. Right after our wedding Lil went to Alaska with the 'Rocking Moon' company.

"Separation is bound to add to the romance of any marriage.

"And while Lil was busy on 'So This Is Paris' in the daytime and I was doing night work on 'What Price Glory' we actually didn't get a glimpse of each other for five days. That's the truth!"

This is often the case in Hollywood, where the unorthodox picture schedules make homes divided. Day shift, night shift, according to the nature of the "shots." Naturally, the spectacular war stuff in "What Price Glory" demanded night work.

Good troupers, both are interested in the thing called success. Another

MURNAU GOOD SAMARITAN IN 'LAST LAUGH,' GAVE HAPPY END

BY MARQUIS BUSBY

It wasn't a sly dig at the invariable American happy ending at all, the strange closing sequence in "The Last Laugh."

Certainly not.

After witnessing that wonderful, titleless document of the tragedy in humble things, "The Last Laugh," with its satirical close, most of the populace of filmland had the uncomfortable feeling, that someone was poking fun at our "and they lived happily ever after" endings.

Friederich Murnau, the young German director, did not stoop to cheap satire, however, when he gave his somber drama a happy ending.

GOOD SAMARITAN

"I like to play the Good Samaritan to my characters," said Murnau. "In a sense that pathetic, old doorman was a creation of mine. I was responsible for him, and after treating him shabbily throughout the major portion of the picture, I felt that he deserved a little happiness."

Hence the sudden wealth of the pauper, the magnificent ostentation of the limousine, and the flinging of coins to the street urchins.

Quite obviously an unusual young man, this Murnau, with his more than six feet in height, and his Scotlike red hair.

Murnau will make, while in Hollywood, one picture for Fox, an adaptation of Sudermann's "A Trip to Tilsit." For motion-picture purposes, however, it will be retitled "The Song of Two Humans."

SUDERMANN STORY

Although little known in this country, "The Trip to Tilsit," according to Murnau, is outstanding among the novels of Sudermann. He believes it to be an ideal screen story, the tale of a young husband torn between conflicting loves for his wife and the other woman of the triangle. For one thing the story can be told by the camera without, or with but one or two, titles. The dramatic action is direct and convincing.

Incidentally, this picture will have one of the smallest casts ever used on the screen—just three persons—the man, the wife, and the other woman.

George O'Brien, whom Murnau feels convinced is capable of tremendous dramatic possibilities, has secured the coveted part of the young husband.

Why George O'Brien, as American as a Fourth of July celebration, should be chosen as the central figure of this European author's excursion into the sentimental realms of domestic infelicity is a story in itself.

WHY NOT O'BRIEN

"And why not George O'Brien?" asks Murnau. "There is no such thing as a distinctly American type, unless it be the Babbitt-like individual of sixty. Like the European, the American has eyes, ears, mouth and nose. If the American is a good actor, he can look, act and feel like a European character—and O'Brien is a good actor."

Use may be made of the gyroscopic camera, which he used to such good effect in "The Last Laugh," in his American-made picture, and again he may not.

"The gyroscope should be treated no differently than the close-up or the fade-out. It should be resorted to only when, by its use, a particular scene may be strengthened dramatically. Never, under any circumstances should it be used merely as a clever camera trick."

Contrary to the general belief, this is not Murnau's first venture into this country. In 1924 he brought a print of "The Last Laugh" to New York. After its showing there he visited Lubitsch in Los Angeles, unheralded and unknown in the film colony. This was somewhat different from the present visit here and in New York, during which he has been the honor guest at gatherings of many of the greatest figures in the public and social life of our nation. Murnau has been deeply touched by the friendliness of the American people.

His first introduction to the drama was made during his student days at Heidelberg, where he staged plays with his fellow-students as actors. Following university, he joined Max Reinhardt's troupe, where he established the foundation for his later work. It is interesting to know that in those days he had as fellow-troupers Lubitsch and Joseph Schildkraut.

Following the war, Murnau entered motion pictures, first as an actor and later as a director. Other than "The Last Laugh," his best-known work here, he directed "Faust" for UFA. This will be given an American showing this fall. Before leaving Germany he completed Moliere's "Tartuffe," the hypocrite, with Emil Jannings in the leading role.

GILBERT LAW STUDENT

Popular Film Star Well Versed in Lore of Blackstone

Many actors have odd methods of passing time between scenes, but John Gilbert claims the most practical.

Between scenes in "La Boheme," Lillian Gish's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle now playing at the Alhambra Theater, and in which he plays the leading male role, he studied law.

Gilbert is now perfectly versed in legal lore, and some day may take an examination for the bar. He plays Rodolph to Miss Gish's "Mimi."

VON STROHEIM LIKED ON SET

Von Stroheim now, with his artistic flair for bitter realism mellowed and sweatened by good fortune, his ability to properly assess the values of life brought to wholesome normality through a happy every-day life.

Von Stroheim is a real genius, I believe, with a genius's certainty of himself, of having a message to deliver to the world.

Mme. Nazimova was once asked who was a great actor on the screen. She answered, "Von Stroheim."

"Who else?" was asked.

"There aren't any others," she answered.

Von—all his people call him Von—has a childlike simplicity of maner, attribute of most sophisticated Europeans, growing out of the easy poise of generations. So that he seems to you merely a charming young man. As you come to know him, he becomes a piquant combination of fascination and force, boyishness and cultured sophistication; just as Pola Negri, when you meet her, seems merely a very charming young lady—before you see glimpses of the fire and force of her genius and mind.

"There is a real dignity of superior mind behind all this boyish simplicity; yet no doubt it is that same boyish simplicity and the love it inspires in his co-workers, following out the German saying, "Those who love, tease," which makes Von Stroheim invariably the goat for all the studio jokes!

He simply loves those jokes himself! Yet such is the respect and devotion his personality inspires that if Von told anybody on the set to go and stand on his head, that person would probably say, "That's right, that is the way to do—I will go and stand on my head."

On one occasion, when Von Stroheim was having a close-up of himself shot in a scene, some of his boys threw tin cans at his feet—tried in every mischevious way they could think of to "break him up," as the theatrical saying is.

PLAYS JOKES

Art Jell, leader of the orchestra, adores playing jokes on the director. For instance, the other night, following a day during which Von Stroheim had worked for seventeen hours straight without food, the company went into the studio cafe where supper had been prepared. Art put on a waiter's clothes, took Von's order; then, after he had brought the food, came and took it away before Von had had more than a bite.

Art is a saucy fellow. He loves to walk into the set, mimic Von Stroheim, and say, "Thanks very much; that'll be all today!"

But respect for Von Stroheim's genius and character commands absolute obedience.

Von can chew his players or studio crew up and spit out the pieces, and they will come back next minute, and say. "What can we do for you Mr. Von Stroheim? How many of those chairs did you say you wanted?"

One of his players was weeping bitter tears the other day because she couldn't do a scene just the way Von wanted it!

Indeed, Von Stroheim and D. W. Griffith have this in common, that players never evidence the least resentment at his orders, sulk or blame him.

All the boys on the set have the Australia hair-cut in imitation of Von Stroheim. Some achieve it, some are born with it, some have it thrust upon them.

If a man fancies any other kind of headdress woe to him. A couple of the actors or workmen will hold the refractory one down while somebody calls the studio barber, who gives him the proper trim.

Von Stroheim works seventeen hours at a stretch very often. But no matter how tired he gets, he will never say a scene is good until he feels that it is.

There is a by-word at the studio—"There is something lacking."

That is Von's expression often when nobody else can find the least fault with a bit of acting or a scene.

Also he is endlessly courteous.

Harry Carr told me of working with Von Stroheim all day and nearly all night on the story of "The Wedding March," his current picture. Nearly falling asleep, Harry asked the director for a cigarette. Von handed him one, then suddenly opening his sleep-heavy eyes, he exclaimed:

"Oh, I beg your pardon! I forgot to light it for you!"

WORSHIPS SON

He worships his little son, and treats the child with the courtesy due from one gentleman to another. The little boy sent some flowers to his dad, the other day, at the studio. Von called the youngster up on the telephone to thank him!

The thoroughness of Von Stroheim is demonstrated by an incident that happened the other day.

"Von and I were consulting over a scene," said Harry Carr, "in which some soldiers were supposed to abduct some women. Stroheim wasn't satisfied just to let it be shot without thought. He insisted on blocking out the battle that had preceded the abduction—asked me:

"'What was the mood of those men? Were they tired? Were they angry? I've simply got to know all about them before I shoot this scene.'"

And you know—Von Stroheim won't drive a car because he says he couldn't do it without knowing all about the combustion of engines and all the rest of it!

ZaSu Pitts was working in a scene, the other day, when we were visiting the studio, watching Von Stroheim work. She seemed to be doing remarkable work in a highly tense emotional scene. But it didn't suit Von. He made her do it over and over again, tears, screams and all, until I should have thought she would have been a rag. And when it was over, Von exclaimed, "Rotten—that's terrible!"

But did ZaSu weep? She did not. She went right on working quite calmly. A property boy came over to explain to us anxiously—"Please don't get Von wrong. He is only trying to get the best."

When it was over, ZaSu came to us to explain—

"Please don't misunderstand Von. He's only trying to get the best out of me. I used to cry. But he always comes to comfort any of us if he has hurt us. So now I save my tears. In fact, I'm only too glad to work with him."

GILDA TO FILM HER LIFE STORY

she viewed the result it was just another amazing thing which had happened to her—and Gilda's life the last few years has been filled with amazing things.

On one point she was firm during the making of "Aloma of the South Seas." She refused to have a single close-up. "I leave those to the girls who are beautiful—and dumb. I am not beautiful and neither am I dumb enough to display the fact before the public so forcibly. I don't know anything about this technique stuff—this sticking my face in the camera and looking lovely. I wanted to play Aloma and I did, but I didn't try to make her beautiful."

ALSO "IN PERSON"

Gilda Gray is in Los Angeles now, appearing in an atmospheric prologue with "Aloma of the South Seas." She has with her several Samoans and also a group of girls. They stage a native scene in which Gilda sings a song in the doorway of a hut.

Gilda points out the fact that she doesn't come to the center of the stage to sing. She frankly states that if she did people might discover that she was singing badly, while, standing in the background, she blends in with the atmosphere of the scene.

With Gilda Gray in Los Angeles, is her husband, Gil Boag, who is her business manager, as well as being her first sponsor, when, in 1919, she started to sing in one of his cafes. It was he who suggested that she start dancing instead of just doing a shimmy. Gilda studied up on lore of the South Seas and, without lessons, started originating her dances.

UNBELIEVABLE SUCCESS

She has been so amazingly successful that it isn't any wonder she deplores artists who spend their lives for the creation of one thing. She has spent but a few years and the money rolls in. The fact that she has been able to make so much is still unbelievable to her.

She talks eagerly of her home in New York City, the lovely colonial mansion on Long Island ("with red roses painted on the black shutters, for I'm a Polack and Polacks love colors,") the money she spends, the number of servants she keeps, and the new Hispano-Suiza car which her husband has given her for her birthday.

Possessions with her are symbols of her success. They remind her that the little Milwaukee Polish girl is now Gilda Gray of New York and Long Island—Gilda Gray, whose name is almost as well known as that of President Coolidge, and who is paid much more money.

CRITIC REVIEWS NEW TRENDS

this, and the audiences seem to relish the change. It is something that will, I believe, help pictures and the circumstance seems rather ironical that it is a stage producer who should have been responsible for the innovation.

Really, of course, it is not an innovation, but simply a return to the best D. W. Griffith method of presentation—the good old film road-show system.

Erlanger has actually set a pace that may be very good to follow frequently — especially with big pictures.

SID GRAUMAN'S success with prologues would, naturally, seem to prove the contrary. They have been fully half the show, and possibly a little more than that in some cases.

Even Sid's prologues have run to extremes at times—length, on opening nights, particularly. Especially with "The Big Parade" was there two much prologue at the premiere—and perhaps even later on.

It didn't give the picture the flying start that it should have had. Too much prologue tends to take the edge off the main attraction.

I RATHER think that Sid is due to spring some new feat in showmanship in the near future—probably with the opening of his Chinese Theater. The fact that the house itself will be distinguished as an innovation naturally requires innovations in the presentations to go with it.

I wonder whether Sid's inclination will be toward the more spectacular in stage entertainment. I suspect that it will be. That, after all, with a certain well-defined humanness in everything that he does, has been his strong suit. And he has a great grip on showmanship in its broadest sense.

If the game of presentation takes a swing toward greater simplicity, he will probably succeed by way of contrast through continuing his emphasis on elaborateness. I don't look to see him change his method—fundamentally.

But the tricks that he will bring will have about them, I imagine, new elements of novelty.

substantial reason for their domestic felicity.

"Certainly it's worth it, trying to get the things you want. This 'what's-the-use' attitude is terrible. Men who get that drift down to the South Seas and go native," briskly from Lowe.

"And just tell me, what can a fellow get in this world but—things? The intangible doesn't belong here. When we achieve that we have found immortality. But pardon me for being so serious."

Somehow, he doesn't have so much to say about his own future as about his wife. "Lil's career" is a vital matter to him. Perhaps they will appear together again soon in the Fox version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "One Increasing Purpose."

TAKES HIS ADVICE

As for the lady, "I take Eddie's advice, now, on when to sign contracts and what parts to do and all that sort of thing. I used to think he didn't know, but I've changed my mind."

No hint of the well-known "professional jealousy," of the alleged inability of stars to be advised.

It seems that Lilyan once signed a contract against her husband's advice, in fact, she didn't even tell him that she had disregarded his wishes in the matter until several weeks after the fatal signature had been added to the important document. And how she regretted that contract!

Just as soon as "What Price Glory" is definitely completed and Sergt. Quirt is demobolized and may return to civilian clothes, the Lowes are sailing for Europe on a two months' vacation. Rather in the way of a honeymoon, they explain, for both went right on working after their wedding, about a year ago. If all goes well, they leave New York on the 18th inst.

PARIS GOWNS

"Won't we have fun in Paris?" Lilyan exults. "Shopping—how you'll enjoy doing that with me. (Though the remark brings no appreciable ecstasy to her husband's face.) All the men go shopping in Paris.

"And I want to go to Florence and Venice to pick up some antiques for the house."

Lilyan also plans an excursion to the battlefields, though her husband declares, with unmistakable emphasis, that he has seen enough of devastated France as Sergt. Quirt right here in Westwood.

Nevertheless, despite the menacing Parisian modistes, he is quite certain that he "wouldn't go abroad alone. That wouldn't be a bit of fun."

Peversely enough, the man chosen to play the good-naturedly profane Sergeant in the picturization of Maxwell Anderson's and Laurence Stallings's play, recognized theatrical pioneer in the field of verbal realism, is far from a realist himself.

ATTRACTIVE REALISM

Conversely, his wife explains, "It's all right to be realistic on the screen, if the people are good-looking. But no one is interested in ugly people—whether they are true to life or not."

Lilyan Tashman, whose smartness is proverbial, has no business to be domestic. It's not consistent. Yet she proudly displays her bountifully stocked linen closet, her pantry shelves lined with lovely, fragile glassware, he spacious kitchen, with its own refrigerating plant, presided over by a portly colored cook.

And isn't she making a special trip 'way down to Italy just to buy more furniture for this same new home in Beverly Hills?

Too, the Lowe domicile remains peaceful, though its mistress admits that "I told Eddie we wouldn't be minus a perfectly good Filipino cook if I wasn't so attractive! But they do prefer blondes!"

and May Allison, the lovely rich girl, both in love with Jan Bokak (Milton Sills,) the giant Swede who climbs to great spiritual—and social—heights, from sweltering, lowly very rough heman beginnings.

Milton Sills can sweat beautifully from more places than his professional forehead—and makes his slinky eyes look positively rough-diamondy . . .

It really is not a new thing for Milton Sills to write his own play, although former ones have been largely rewritten and revised—as, for instance, in the first in which he starred, "The Honor System," which he worked up from an idea by Henry Warnack, and in transforming important scenes in "The Isle of Lost Ships."

He is also one of the few screen actors who can make a reasonable speech at a "personal appearance"—so much so that they even invite him out to the Hollywood Bowl once in a while to do a little declaiming. He read Alfred Noyes's "Victory Ball" very nicely on Tuesday night, for instance, and once talked so well that he made the Bowl's 20,000 audience laugh joyously—and it is quite an experience to sway a Bowl audience with a speech.

FORTUNATE MILTON

So why wouldn't modesty come hard to Milton? How can he help knowing he has a lot of things to be vain about—on all three of Elinor Glyn's "planes"—spiritual, mental and physical?

So it was rather sweet, touching, pathetic, to find him trying to talk ever so modestly during our interview. With nothing but the negligee to do his boasting for him. . . .

Last year I did a mean thing to Milton Sills—I told about his stomach trouble, so he mentioned that he is "in fine shape now." He is—both inside and out. The evidence is all on view in "Men of Steel," at Loew's State Theater this week. Author Milton Sills did rather well by Actor Milton Sills in this respect—with perfectly good judgment. Apollo Belvedere has less excuse.

And if the stripped galley slave exposure in "The Sea Hawk" proved the opening of the floodgates for flapper fan mail from far and near for the Milton Sills of that day, who had previously been described by a mean male critic as having "no sex appeal," how postoffice business must have looked up since "Men of Steel."

Why, even I, in this interview, don't you know, was conscious of thinking, "Why, I would like him today even if he wasn't trying to talk modest. . . . ."

And in my way I am quite as good a connoisseur as Mack Sennett or Cecil De Mille.

Milton sills's next picture, now in the making, is a legionnaire story, "The Splendid Outcast"—but they often take those all-enveloping legionnaire coats off in the tropics.

VIVID HEROINE JULANNE'S WISH

hand knowledge of Europe. The European directors gave her an opportunity to play fiery Russian roles and other vivid types. She would like to do that sort of thing here.

As yet Julanne hasn't had a chance to play the parts which she would like most to do. However, she is willing to wait. Some day some director will probably bring a new quality out of her, and Julanne will be blazoned forth again as a discovery, although she has been here all the time.

Julanne Johnston is one of Hollywood's own girls, for she was brought up there. She is tremendously likable and attractive. In a day of the fat and the near fat, it is a glorious sight to watch Julanne cross the room—slim feet, lithe, tall body, charming smile. A girl whom everyone likes.

TOO MUCH SO

Secretary Walker of the New York transit commission was lamenting the increase in automobile fatalities.

"A lawyer," he said, "was examining a woman witness the other day.

"'Madam,' he protested, 'two minutes ago you said your husband died a natural death, and now you say he was killed in an automobile accident.'

"'Well,' said the woman, 'isn't that a natural death these days?"—Exchange.

MISS WRAY HAS FAITH IN FATE'S PLAY

Actress Tells How She Was Selected for Part in "The Wedding March"

Fay Wray, the Erich Von Stroheim find for his latest Paramount picture, "The Wedding March," believes in fate. In fact so strongly does she believe that what belongs to one cannot be deflected from one that although there were many obstacles connected with her selection for the most coveted role of the year, she never for a moment doubted that it would eventually be hers.

Miss Wray tells her own story [illegible]:

"It was my very darkest day at Universal City. I was trying to do an impossible part in a western thriller and my heart was not in it. In fact I was crying in my dressing room when an old friend of mine came in and said:

"'Cheer up, Fay! You are going to work in Mr. Von Stroheim's next picture.'

"I thought she must be joking, for it had been my one greatest desire on earth.

"'Of course, you may not do, but I have an audience for you,' my friend continued, 'and I have a feeling that the part is to be yours.'

"I was too excited to sleep, but the next morning when I left my home, I knew I was going to have the part and I felt quite calm about it.

"Although it was rather dark in Mr. Von Stroheim's office and it didn't seem to me he could see me very well, he asked me a few questions, gave me two or three tests to see whether I could cry all right, whether I could 'register' the emotions he wanted for his 'Mitzi' and then he said:

"'Fay Wray, you're hired. Talk business with the financial manager.'

"Of course, I was terribly happy, and it was no trouble for me to cry—and I knew this part was mine—and the longer I work in it, the better I know it."

Greek Director Doesn't Employ Magic 'Camera'

In Athens, when a director starts filming a picture, he says "commence photographer," instead of yelling "camera," the style set by the Hollywood megaphone wielders, says George J. Karamano, the Greek actor, who recently arrived in Hollywood to further his film career.

The director always stands on a platform and very seldom sits in a chair directing scenes. Even in the close-ups, the director stands on his platform, regardless of the length of time taken to film the scenes.

Karamano came to New York from Athens, where he played the male lead in "Virtuous Liars" and other screen dramas.

In Athens he was starred in several Grecian-made films, including "The Battle of the Marathon" and the screen versions of tragedies written by the famous ancient dramatist poet, Euripides.

Young Gag Man Makes Good as Film Director

In 1919 Mack Sennett gave one of his young gag men his big chance.

"Go ahead and direct and see that it's funny," the youngster was told.

The picture was "Rip and Stitch Tailors," a two-reel comedy starring Ford Sterling. The youthful megaphone wielder thus elevated from the ranks of gag men was Malcolm St. Clair, who today at 29 years of age is considered one of the outstanding comedy directors in the industry.

It is one of the queer pranks of time that in Malcolm St. Clair's most pretentious directorial effort to date, Ford Sterling plays the featured title role. This picture, now being shown at the Metropolitan Theater, is Paramount's amusing American comedy, "The Show-Off," which Pierre Collings adapted from the Broadway stage success by George Kelly.

The passing of seven years has materially altered the position of the two. Sterling has put his slapstick methods behind him and has blossomed forth as an expert pantomimist in full-length comedies. St. Clair has forged ahead to his present position of leadership among the industry's youngest directors.

ONIONS PRODUCE TEARS WITH EASE

Crying is easier than laughing on the screen, says Hallam Cooley, comedian now engaged in First National's "A Desperate Woman."

"An onion will produce copious tears," Cooley points out, "but there is no vegetable to bring about a laugh. Laughs must be produced only by means of real effort."

BACK STAGE PARTY WILL CLOSE BILL

Grauman's Prelude Players to Bid Doug and Mary Films Pretty Farewell

The final week of the run of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Black Pirate" and Mary Pickford in "Sparrows," ushered in by tomorrow's performances, will be marked by back stage festivities by Sid Grauman's prelude players for the last presentation the night of the 15th inst., to celebrate the successful run of the production in Grauman's Egyptian Theater.

The informal party of celebration has become a custom, as ever since Grauman built the Hollywood playhouse, those who have taken part in the stage productions accompanying each film have made the run of the last foot of film each time an occasion for festivities.

After the final showing, Grauman's stage spectacles for the duplex presentation will become stage history, as the showman will not permit his prelude novelties to accompany the films elsewhere and they will not be seen again after the final curtain.

With the end of the run, Mary's and Doug's pictures will not be presented anywhere on one program, as Grauman's contract with United Artists specifies that his theatrical innovation in showing the two films on the same bill may not be repeated in any other theater.

Grauman has preparations for the elaborate premiere with which he will introduce "Don Juan," starring John Barrymore, in the Egyptian on the night of the 20th inst., well under way, and he is busy with tryouts for the spectacular prologue with which he will presage the showing of the Warner Brother's production. The Egyptian will be dark from the 15th inst. until the night of the premiere.

Director Starts Upon Final Lap of Film Cycle

Making a great number of pictures does not make a great director. Clarence Brown has made but a few pictures each year, yet he has reached the topmost rung in the grading of directorial talent. In this number he has never made the same type of production twice.

One of Brown's first directorial efforts was "The Whip," a race-track story. "The Acquittal" was a mystery yarn. He produced a melodrama in "The Signal Tower," and a tragedy in "The Goose Woman." His best drama was "Smouldering Fires," in which Pauline Frederick played the stellar role. When he filmed "The Eagle," with Rudolph Valentino, Brown wielded his megaphone over a tale of romance. When he was chosen to make "Kiki" with Norma Talmadge, he turned his thoughts to the light-comedy drama. He is about to begin work on "The Flesh and the Devil," starring John Gilbert and Greta Garbo. This gives the director a complete cycle in the realm of story situations.

Louis Van Den Ecker, Belgian-born French war hero, is technical advisor on Milton Sills's French Foreign Legion starring picture for First National, "Men of the Dawn."

CINEMATIC FARE

Four new films open at Los Angeles picture houses this week. "Men of Steel," with Milton Sills, comes to Loew's State; "The Show-Off," with Ford Sterling, to the Metropolitan; "Rocking Moon," with Lilyan Tashman and John Bowers, to Bard's West Adams, and "Siberia" to the Criterion.

Other attractions includ: "Ben." Hur," Biltmore; "Aloma of the South Seas," Million Dollar; "The Volga Boatman," Carthay Circle; "Up in Mabel's Room," Figueroa; "Sparrows" and "The Black Pirate," Grauman's Egyptian; "So This Is Paris," Forum, "La Boheme," Alhambra, and "The Palm Beach Girl," Rialto.

"Rocking Moon" Opens

"Rocking Moon," starring Lilyan Tashman and John Bowers, a story of the new Alaska with the plot concerning a blue fox ranch, will have its Southern California premiere at Bard's new theater, Adams and Crenshaw, today.

In addition to the picture, Benito's Symphonic Jazz Orchestra and a vaudeville bill will be offered.

"Men of Steel" at Lowe's

"Men of Steel," a First National special which has been in production for the past year, is the new feature at Loew's State, with Milton Sills in the starring role and Doris Kenyon as the featured feminine player.

A large cast of principals are seen in the picture, including May Allison, Victor McLaglen, George Fawcett, Frank Currier and John Kolb.

On the stage Fanchon and Marco present a spectacular ensemble, a "Roman Idea," featuring the Sunkist Beauties, and Rube Wolf in the role of a gladiator of old.

"Siberia" at Criterion

One of the most gripping scenes ever enacted in a photoplay is seen in the duel sequence of "Siberia," Bartley Campbell's play now showing at the Criterion Theater.

Edmund Lowe and Tom Santschi cross steel—and the result has been called one of the most thrilling duels ever filmed. Alma Rubens, Lou Tellegen, Lilyan Tashman, Helena d'Algy, Paul Panzer, Vadim Uraneff and others are included in the cast. Victor Schertzinger directed.

"Show-Off" Stars

"The Show Off," a Paramount Picture featuring Ford Sterling, Lois Wilson, Louise Brooks and Gregory Kelly, is the attraction at the Metropolitan Theater this week.

The picture, a Malcolm St. Clair production, is a hilarious comedy built around a familiar American character—a show-off. It is adapted from George Kelly's play of the same name. Pierre Collins wrote the scenario.

"Ben Hur" at Biltmore

"Ben Hur" tomorrow begins its second week at the Biltmore Theater. A special musical score, arranged by David Mendoza and William Axt, is played at all performances by a large orchestra under the direction of Clarence West.

Fred Niblo directed the screen version of the Gen. Lew Wallace's novel. The chief roles are played by Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy, Claire McDowell, Kathleen Key, Carmel Myers, Nigel De Brulier, Mitchell Lewis, Leo White, Frank Currier, Charles Belcher, Betty Bronson, Dale Fuller and Winter Hall.

Gilda at Million

Gilda Gray, who broke all theatrical records here during her last engagement, is back again in person at the Million Dollar Theater, with a company of twenty-five.

There is still another attraction—Gilda Gray's first motion-picture starring vehicle, "Aloma of the South Seas," which is seen in conjunction with her personal appearance.

Farce Continues

"Up in Mabel's Room," with Marie Prevost, continues as the film attraction at the Figueroa Theater.

Harrison Ford, Phyllis Haver and others appear in this adaptation of the stage success.

"Boatman" at Circle

On Tuesday, Fred Miller's Carthay Circle Theater will enter its thirteenth week with Cecil B. De Mille's "Volga Boatman," as the screen feature.

The picture is enhanced by Carli Elinor's musical score and Jack Laughlin's prologue.

Duplex Bill to Close

Mary Pickford in "Sparrows" and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Black Pirate" continue at Grauman's Egyptian Theater. The double bill closes soon.

Lubitsch Film Stays

Ernst Lubitsch's newest production, "So This is Paris," is to be held over for another week's showing at the Forum.

Monte Blue, Lilyan Tashman, Patsy Ruth Miller and Andre Beranger play the leading roles. Henkel's "Melody Classics" and the beautiful color picture, "The Vision," also are creating favorable comment.

"Boheme" at Alhambra

Lillian Gish in "La Boheme" is the current film attraction at the Alhambra.

The cast of this famous story of the Paris Latin Quarter includes John Gilbert, Renee Adoree, Edward Everett Horton, Roy D'Arcy, Karl Dane, Frank Currier, Gino Corrado and George Hassell.

Bebe at Rialto

Bebe Daniels in "The Palm Beach Girl" is playing at the Rialto. This is a comedy of speed-boat racing, with a luxurious Florida background.

Lawrence Bray is Bebe's leading man.

'So This is Paris' Proves Difficult Story to Screen

When Ernst Lubitsch decided to make a picture version of the French farce, "So This Is Paris," the picture that is proving to be so popular at the Forum Theater, he embarked on one of the most difficult and intricate tasks he had ever undertaken.

"So This Is Paris," which was adapted from the novel, "Reveillon," is regarded by Lubitsch as one of the most perfect plays ever written and despite the difficulty of bringing it to the screen, it will stand out as one of the most important productions of the year.

With this picture, Lubitsch has returned to straight farce, while his last two pictures have been comedy-drama. Monta Blue enacts the leading male role, while Patsy Ruth Miller plays the feminine lead. Other important players in this picture are Lilyan Tashman and Andre Beranger.

"The Vision," a picture made entirely in colors and considered to be the most beautiful ever produced along with the presentation of Henkel's Melody Classics is arousing unusual interest in the current program being presented at the Forum.

Gladys Brockwell and Grace Gordon staged a hair-pulling contest in a scene for Colleen Moore's "Twinkletoes" at the First National studio last week.

High Praise Given Artists in Prologue

In Jack Laughlin's prologue "Volga," to "The Volga Boatman," about to enter its thirteenth week at the Carthay Circle Theater, are to be found artists who have received from the critics of the musical world only the praise that is expended on genuine talent. One of these is Alexander Akimoff, who sings so dramatically the Volga Boatman Song in Russian.

Mr. Akimoff is a laureate of the Petrograd Imperial Conservatory and was one of the privileged few to become a member of the Petrograd Opera. The revolution forced him to this country. His reception in this country has been that accorded to a great artist and he came to Los Angeles recently after a successful concert tour of the United States.

Mr. Akimoff likes California so well that he is going to school to prepare for receiving his citizenship papers and in a few weeks will be a full-fledged adopted American.

Clippers Sail This Month on Location Trip

Late this month the veteran clipper ships "Indiana" and "Bohemia," with Director Rupert Julian and 200 actors and technical attaches aboard, will sail out of Los Angeles Harbor on a six-weeks' location cruise for the filming of "The Yankee Clipper."

Point Conception, the grave of six United States Navy destroyers, has been selected as the principal location because of the rough water.

The "Indiana" and "Bohemia," have been thoroughly reconditioned for the cruise, with new masts and spars, new sails, and bright, new coats of paint.

"The Yankee Clipper," is woven around an historic race between an American clipper ship and a British windjammer of the same type from Fuchow, China, to Boston Harbor. Laid in the '50s, America's heyday on the seas, it is an original by Denison Clift, prepared for the screen by Garrett Fort and Garnett Weston. It will feature William Boyd and Elinor Fair, who scored such impressive performances in "The Volga Boatman."

Mary Astor, First National leading woman, is the only auburn-haired leading woman in motion pictures who is unbobbed.

MUSIC

STRAYING MUSES

COMPOSERS SEEKING NEW TRANSITION FIELDS

By Isabel Morse Jones

Eugene Goosens, who commands the Bowl orchestra the coming week, is a young British composer of remarkable attainments who takes the modern musical movement very seriously. He does not believe that the listeners of today can be trusted to form valuable opinions about modern music and that its worth rests on its lasting or transient quality. If it lasts a few years after many repetitions, then it is good—otherwise not.

In a few minutes' talk soon after his arrival in Hollywood from England, Mr. Goosens sketched the trend of new musical interests in which he is such a large figure. He has just come from a series of forty-two performances of the Diaghilef Russian Ballet in London which he conducted. Here the newest works of Stravinsky, the French Six and other modernists were tried out.

"Ballet more nearly expresses the modernists' musical thought because of its freedom from words, its dramatic possibilities and its chance for orchestral color," the young Englishman explained. "Stravinsky, especially, would never have been able to give to the world his 'Firebird,' 'Rite of Spring,' 'Petroushka'" or other of his finer works if it had not been for the encouragement of the ballet. He was commissioned to write these things and the world has profited by them.

"London is ballet mad. We gave twenty-six different ballets with a large orchestra, making forty-two performances in six weeks. It is not possible that America will long ignore the ballet.

Eugene Goosens comes from a line of orchestral conductors, his father and grandfather before him having followed the profession. A brother plays oboe in the Queen's Hall Orchestra and a sister the harp. He began early as a violinist, playing when 15 and conducting his first orchestra at the age of 21. He is young to have the experience he has had and to be the musician of recognized standing that he is both here and in his native England.

It has been his good fortune to know Stravinsky, the Six, Elgar, and other modern writers intimately and to have been musically active from his childhood.

For four years Mr. Goosens has been in charge of the opera school at Rochester, N. Y., and conducted the Rochester Symphony Orchestra under the Eastman endowment. The past season he has accepted invitations to conduct the Boston Symphony and the New York Symphony.

NEW TO THE WEST

When he takes up his baton to rehearse the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra Monday, he will greet friends who have often played with him in London—notably, Alfred Kastner, Alfred Brain and Henri De Buscher.

The Bowl experience will be new to him in many ways. It is his first trip west and his first conducting out of doors.

"Fancy being able to plan anything without thinking of rain," he exclaimed upon being told of the Bowl. "We had a cloudburst coming through Arizona yesterday and the elements were thrilling. I got an idea or two for a symphony in that wild weather."

Soon after Mr. Goosens registered in Hollywood, Robert Nichols, the British poet, greeted him with hearty "cheerios." Goosens was the organist at Nichols's wedding.

Many will be interested in next week's programs. There is a liberal sprinkling of new works, but only one of his own, a "Sinfonietta" programmed for the last night.

Stravinsky is represented by the "Fire-bird Suite" from his ballet, Grainger's Mock Morris is on the list and it is possible that the Spanish Fantasie by Lord Berners will be given if the parts come over in time.

Lord Berner is a musical-diplomat in more ways than one. He is connected with the British diplomatic service and is an ambassador to England for the music of Stravinsky and Casella with whom he has worked out some of his own musical problems.

The eminent English composer Frederick Delius is much admired by Mr. Goosens. He will play his Dance Rhapsody Thursday night. Delius is afflicted with paralysis and lives very quietly now in a countryside of England. Delius lived for a time during his youth in Florida, where he wrote "Appalachia" which is the old Indian name for America and an opera "Koanga."

Arthur Bliss, who is familiar to Southern California musicians because of his long residence in Santa Barbara where he headed the music activities and occasionally swooped down upon Los Angeles with his cerise neck-tie to startle the Bowl audiences with his ultra color-symphony, is down on the list of works to be performed by Goosens also.

The balance of the list is interesting too, containing works of Dvorak, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony" and the Military symphony by Haydn.

It is Mr. Goosens idea that the modern extremists have their place in musical economy as bridges between the classicism to which we are turning back and the philosophic, mathematical music of the future which we have not yet glimpsed.

GERMAINE SCHNITZER

Germain Schnitzer, who has been playing on the Coast this winter and is well liked in European centers will play the Tschaikowsky concerto in B flat on Thursday night under Mr. Goosens's direction.

The last two weeks of the Bowl concerts will be conducted by Alfred Hertz of the San Francisco Symphony. One of the novelties on his programs will be the presentation of Maud Allan, the dancer, in Tschaikowsky's symphony "Pathetique." Miss Allan's performance of this last winter at the Philharmonic will be remembered. The Bowl should prove a magnificent setting.

RUSSIAN CLUB TO PICNIC AT DEL REY

An all-day picnic will be staged today by the Russian Art Club of Los Angeles, at Palisades Del Rey. The Alexander Oumansky dancers, led by Mr. Oumansky himself, will present "Tziganaky Tabor," an elaborate dance presentation of a gypsy camp. A large galexy of famous stage and screen stars will make personal appearances. M. Vavich and Mr. and Mrs. Makarenko will sing Russian songs.

ROTHWELL MAKES FINE IMPRESSION

Craig King of Philadelphia has wired the Times of the success of Walter Henry Rothwell's first appearance as conductor of the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial Orchestra Wednesday evening, saying "few visiting conductors have made a more favorable impression on this city, giving excellent readings of all works. His outstanding characteristic as a conductor is his splendid musicianship, in which he compares favorably with any conductor who has visited Philadelphia. His readings were musicianly sound in the extreme. In the last movement of the Brahms Symphony No. 1, he created a gigantic climax working up to a tremendous volume of tone in the coda without losing orchestral color."

Dancers Gather in New York for Conclave

ERNEST E RYAN

Ernest E. Ryan, principal of the Ryan School of Dancing, will leave Tuesday for New York City, where he will attend the annual convention of the American National Association Masters of Dancing, held in the Waldorf Astoria Hotel.

Mr. Ryan is State supervisor for the association and as such will represent California. Such teachers as Oscar Duryea, Edna Passapae, Myron G. Ryder and Benjamin B. Lovett will have charge of the ballroom work, while the ballet and stage dancing will be under the direction of Ned Weyburn, Vestoff and Sorova, Steffano Mascagno and Juan De Beaucaire.

NORMA GOULD PLANS FOR STUDIO EXPANSION

In the midst of large normal classes working industriously and classes of children happily progressing in their dance training there are pretentious arrangements being made at the Norma Gould School of the Dance for the expansion to take place in the fall. The left wing of this attractive school building is being remodeled to provide another large studio for the new department. Peggy Gene has been engaged to take charge of this department which will be devoted to toe work and tap dancing exclusively. It is believed that in this school toe dancing will be taught as it has never been taught before. Miss Gene is particularly ambitious to co-operate with Miss Gould to elevate the art of toe dancing.

Louise Kramer will again have charge of the department for social dancing and is anticipating an unusually active season.

MAUD ALLAN OPENS STUDIO

Maud Allan has just returned from Berkeley, where by special invitation from Dean Bruce she gave a class of twenty lessons in the art of the dance at the summer school of the University of California. Miss Allan had been induced to postpone her European trip long enough to present a similar opportunity to study with her in Los Angeles. She is opening a master class of the dance the 23rd inst. at her studio, 1008 West Adams, at Hoover. Miss Allan will appear as the artist with the Philharmonic Orchestra in the Hollywood Bowl the night of the 20th inst. On the 27th inst. she is concert artist in Redlands at their summer concert.

MUSICIAN ADMIRED FOR COURAGE

Violinist Cheerful in Misfortune

Jules Lepske

Jules Lepske, the Philharmonic Orchestra violinist, who suffered the misfortune of a paralytic stroke last year, is much admired for his courage these days. Morning rehearsals and evening concerts see him at the Bowl, where he was formerly an esteemed member of the orchestra. He sits on the sidelines now watching the men from a wheel chair and receiving his many friends during the intermission.

Aided by his clever little wife, who is also a musician, having developed her talents in singing, Lepske is regaining his old happiness and even plays a little on his violin.

Lepske was a valued member of the first violin section of the Philharmonic and one of his good friends during the trying year he has put in, flat on his back, has been Walter Henry Rothwell, the conductor. Mr. Rothwell has never been too busy to keep in close touch with the violinist through many visits and personally seeing to it that everything that could be done for him was being done. W. A. Clark, Jr., has taken an interest in his case also, and the men of the orchestra keep him cheered and hopeful with their visits and messages.

Lepske received his training in Vienna, later playing for several years under Gabrilowitsch with the Detroit Symphony and under Max Zachs in St. Louis. He made a splendid impression in a solo appearance with the Bowl orchestra four years ago and has played solos with the Philharmonic as well as given numerous recitals in Los Angeles at the various women's clubs.

He is growing mentally during this enforced period of rest by much reading and the opportunities which are now open to him to hear the concerts are developing a new side to his musical nature.

LICHTENWALTER PIANO RECITAL THIS WEEK

Ganeve Lichtenwalter, pianist of Kansas City, Mo., will give a recital for the faculty and students of the Institute of Musical Art, Wednesday evening at 8 p.m. Miss Lichtenwalter served three terms as president of the Missouri Music Teachers' Association. She won first prize in piano playing in France while studying under Phillipp of the Paris Conservatory. She has recently become an assistant to E. Robert Schmidt. Her program for Wednesday evening follows:

Sonata in D Major (Caluppi;) Chaconne (Bach-Busoni;) Keltic Sonata (MacDowell;) Clair de Lune (Debussy;) The Submerged Cathedral (Debussy;) Chimes of St. Patrick's (Whithorne;) Pell Street (Whithorne.)

TELEPHONE DIRECTORY OF FILMDOM IN SIGHT

Screenland is to be linked conversationally with the outside world by an exclusive telephone directory, not only of celebrities, but every player of importance. There have been previous directories published, but these generally have been grouped, according to classifications, such as leads, heavies, juveniles and other types of players, while the new edition being prepared will be an alphabetical list of every actor and actress of any importance in the industry. Compilation of the directory is being made by Brooks B. Harding, president of the Screen Library, and will be published in the next issue of the Film Catalog, official organ of the service. The library is preparing for the celebration of its first birthday next Friday. It was founded twelve months ago to sponsor the new method of choosing players for picture productions by film rather than still photographs.

STUDENT OF CHILD LIFE GIVES LECTURES

Los Angeles' music colony is constantly increasing and one of those interested in child training along musical lines is Mrs. Willis Eades Honska, musical educator and originator of constructive music pedagogy, who is to remain in Los Angeles for a month, during which time she will give two free lectures for piano teachers. Both of these lectures will be given at the Martin Music Company's assembly hall, on the second floor at 734 South Hill, one on the 9th inst. at 8 p.m. and the other on the 10th inst. at 10 a.m.

Mrs. Honska is an earnest student of child life. She is also a writer, composer and lecturer, having upon many occasions during her lecture tours spoken before the various music teachers' associations in the United States.

OUMANSKY DANCERS TO BE SEEN IN FILM

Alexander Oumansky has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky studio to stage the ballet dances for the Pola Negri production "Hotel Imperial" which will be directed by the famous Norwegian director, Maurice Stiller. Filming of this picture will start next week and Oumansky is now holding rehearsals for these dances.

Rehearsals are also being held for the American Ballet which Oumansky will produce this fall. Oumansky is holding special summer classes for teachers who wish instruction in advanced ballet and toe dancing.

WHISTLERS HEARD IN RECITAL

A midsummer whistling recital will be given by pupils of Agnes Woodward, director of the California School of Artistic Whistling, at the school headquarters in the Music-Art Studio Building, Monday evening, the 9th inst. Among whistlers who will participate on the program will be Blanche Collins, Margaret Seavey, Helen Hunt, Magdalena Wildasin, Minnie Dunker, Gertrude Hensel, Fern Staben, Katherine Spangler, Mary Diette Gross, Maizie Kinney, Jacqueline Hunter, Dorothy Winters, Winifred Stiles, Vernie Thedan and Nancy Lawshe. Vocal solos with interpolated bird notes will be given by Minnie Dunker; Harp solos with interpolated whistling by Fern Staben, and piano solos by Maizie Kinney and Agnes MacGlashan. Accompanists for the evening will be Ella MacGlashan, Blanche Collins, Helen Ward, Margaret Seavey and Dorothy Lawshe.

KOSLOFF REHEARSES DIFFICULT NUMBERS

Regarded as one of the most difficult ballets ever given in an opera, the bacchanal of "Samson and Delilah" is being rehearsed daily at the Theodore Kosloff Imperial Russian Ballet School by thirty pupils who will dance this ballet in the Los Angeles Grand Opera Company production of the Saint-Saens opera this fall in Shrine Auditorium. Steps delineating oriental ecstasy are taken at a very rapid pace. In preparation for the execution of these steps it is necessary for the pupils to spend many hours perfecting their breathing and breath control.

Vera Fredova, Mr. Kosloff's dancing partner, returned this week to San Francisco to take part in the celebration of the third anniversary of the founding of Kosloff's school there. Pupils of the school in the Bay City will dance in the operas of the San Francisco Civic Opera season.

JAZZ HAS ORIGIN IN ANCIENT CIVILIZATION

Jazz music differing little, from a purely scientific standpoint, from the music of today was being played in China 2000 years before the Christian era and 4000 years before the introduction of African slaves, generally accredited with the organization of the weird music, into America.

This, according to Fred Elizalde, youthful orchestra leader at Cinderella Roof, who bases the assertion on research work done by him while a student in the school of musical research at Cambridge University, England.

OPERA SOPRANO WINS SCHOLARSHIP

Ruthellen Miller

Ruthellen Miller, winner of the much coveted Juillard scholarship, will also be heard in the role of Siebel in "Faust" with the Los Angeles Opera Compan this coming season. Miss Miller is the soprano soloist of the Mission Play, and a pupil of Jessie Weimar's.

MUSIC NOTES

Friends of Leslie Brigham, the young basso who left Los Angeles two years ago after a remarkable success in Los Angeles Grand Opera, will be glad to learn of his recent appearances with Italian opera companies where he is making a decidedly good impression and gaining much experience. He is known as Signore LanFranchi and his latest letter is written from Valenza, Piedmonte, where he plans to await the arrival of Alexander Bevani of Los Angeles with whom he studied operatic roles in this city. He is doing a season of Trovatore and Faust and has gained favorable comment from the opera-mad citizens of the town who are chary of approval for American singers, to say the least.

Mr. Brigham's "Mefistofele" was spoken of as vocally adequate having the proper figure, being well made-up and the most complimentary things were said of his diction. He has also done Aida and Rigoletto and expects to sing in Boheme soon.

Miss Shibley Boyes, young Los Angeles pianist who is now studying in Paris, has had a profitable year with Philip and Levy and is now a member of Cortot's class. She is in London this summer and will go to Munich later where she may stay for a winter of intensive work before returning to the United States to play in concert.

Mrs. J. J. Carter is having a wonderful summer. Word has just been received of her sojourn in Zurich, where she has attended the Music Festival. Carlos Salzedo and Adolf Bolm had their picture taken with the pretty summer concert enthusiast and sent it to Musical Digest.

The annual banquet of the American Guitar Society was held Saturday evening, at Marchetti's. Mr. Walter Francis Vreeland, well-known guitarist of Boston, was the guest of honor. He also took part in the musical program of the evening. The regular weekly rehearsals of the society will begin in October, after a three months' vacation.

Otto Morando has received a telegram from his pupil, Victor Edmunds, concerning his latest success in the summer revue, "Americana," at the Biltmore Theater in New York City. This summer engagement precedes Mr. Edmund's return engagement for leading tenor roles opposite Tamaki Miura, Japanese soprano. The tour will bring the company to Los Angeles on the Behymer course, in January.

CELESTE NORMAL COURSE

Pupils from seventeen different States were enrolled in the course designed primarily for instructors of dancing who wished to "brush up" on technique and to learn of the newest in the dance forms at the Belcher School.

Many of the students were former pupils of Ernest Belcher, now at the head of their own schools, while others were those gaining his personal instruction for the first time.

TAMON DANCER IN NEW NUMBER

Eileen Panter, a Tamon dancer, has just been called from the Arnold Tamon studios to San Diego to fill a return engagement at the Coronado Hotel. This time she is returning with several entirely new numbers, dances which Mr. Tamon has evolved and coached her in.

"HEAVY" DRAMAS VIE WITH MUSIC SHOWS FOR SUMMER PATRONAGE

WHAT'S DOING IN NEW YORK

This Month Dull

American Authors

Frivolous Shows

BY WELLS ROOT

[Copyright, 1926, New York World]

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—August this year is duller than usual. Only a handful of openings are marked on the month's schedules and none of these of wide prospective importance. This condition differs sharply from August of 1925 and 1924. A year ago plays were tumbling in from all directions and steaming first-night audiences could be seen cooling off between the acts any Monday and Tuesday night.

The welcome lethargy on the parts of the producers does not foreshadow a lax season. Managers are simply holding their wares until such time as the temperatures fall to a point agreeable to theater going. The lack of openings in August, however, does guarantee as busy an eight weeks in the theater beginning the first of September as New York has probably known.

Scores and dozens of productions have been tried out this summer or are now in rehearsal for early fall showings. Theater rents in September and October will be steep and the mortality among unworthy offerings high. Statistics for last season indicate that every first-class theater in New York housed on the average of three productions through the year. Roughly calculating, nearly sixty plays are already planned for September and October, one for every night in every week.

AMERICANS LEAD

If there is any special complexion to be noted in the plays thus planned it is predominance of American manuscripts. Even the earnestly artistic groups, who often lament the lack of sound American playwrights, seem this season to have found native plays to their tastes. The Theater Guild numbers four Americans among its prospective authors. The recent amalgamation of the actors, theater and O'Neill, MacGowan and Jones promises six plays for next season, all of them of American authorship.

Eugene O'Neill's "Lazarus Laughed" is perhaps the most promising. The energetic Horace Liveright will do, perhaps, a half dozen plays from local pens including the promising "An American Tragedy," dramatized by Patrick Kearney from Dreiser's novel. The list of "The Stagers" is exclusively American. Of the many plays planned by Sam H. Harris only "Garden of Eden," a German piece for Jeanne Eagels, comes from abroad.

The Charles Frohman company is one of the few sticking to foreigners, showing only Zoe Akins's "Pardon My Glove," and a play by Martin Brown in their extensive prospectus. Making a rough computation based on all the plays planned for the coming season (about 300) it appears that three out of every four have been written by native Snakespeares.

FORMIDABLE LIST

We cannot yet compete in quality with the older continent, a list of authors that includes Shaw, Barrie, Galsworthy, Schnitzler, Vadja, Werfel, Molnar, Lonsdale, Arlen, Guitry, Lo[illegible] and Pirandello is still considerably in advance of O'Neill, Hopwood, [illegible], Connelly, McEvoy, Stallings, [illegible], Barry, Richman, Atkins, [illegible], Kelly, Cohan and Davis.

To this latter list and the ranks of their lesser colleagues will this season be added at least a score of new names. American authors are

RALPH AND RUTH HEAD CAST

Forbes Insists on Playing Napier to His Wife's Iris In "Green Hat" at El Capitan

BY KATHERINE LIPKE

Ralph Forbes is playing Napier in "The Green Hat" because he couldn't bear the thought of any other man in the role opposite his wife, Ruth Chatterton. He feels he is making it "nicer" for her and certainly he is happier himself in the feeling that he—the husband—is playing the lover of Iris March in the Michael Arlen play which opens at the El Capitan Theater tomorrow evening.

The young actor, who has appeared in several New York productions, and recently played one of the three brothers in "Beau Geste," for Paramount, is essentially old-fashioned. He rather glories in the fact. He also seems to glory in being a married man—the husband of Ruth Chatterton. He is instinctively possessive in tone whenever he speaks of her—and he speaks of her often.

VAUDEVILLE ENGAGEMENT

The two recently finished a vaudeville engagement in "The Conflict," a short, humorous drama of married life, which ended with Miss Chatterton's illness in San Francisco and the postponement of the opening date of "The Green Hat" here. However, Ralph Forbes doesn't like vaudeville. He would much rather play in drama or on the screen.

He enjoyed "Beau Geste" and is anxious to make more pictures. "I must get back to my pictures," he states, again taking a slightly possessive tone. If it weren't for "The Green Hat" he declares he would be starting on a picture on the 15th inst.

GOOD PARTS ALL

Ralph Forbes's ideas on "The Green Hat" are interesting. "Mr. Arlen has given every member of the cast a part with good red meat in it. We can all use our molars—and there is nothing an actor enjoys more than having a part which exercises the molars.

"I like Napier and believe in him. He was human and interesting and real. He and Iris were very much alike. Their love was like the love between first cousins—it could never make them happy and it wouldn't allow them to make anyone else happy."

Ralph Forbes is essentially the actor. In his explanations and descriptions he uses mixed gestures, and makes even the smallest remark colorful. Blond, and inexpressibly boyish, he suggests vitality and enthusiasm.

He enjoys playing Napier, partly because it is an interesting character, but most apparently because he is playing the role of lover to his wife—Ruth Chatterton.

JOHN MILJAN HAVING RUN OF PERIOD DRESS

John Miljan, after two years on the screen in "straight" costume, is now having a run of uniforms and period dress. The actor has harked back to the charming costumes of 1830, with ruffles, frills, high collars and other quaint touches, and has added sideburns and a larger mustache, which give him an entirely different appearance. This new phase is for "The Yankee Clipper," a Cecil B. De Mille production, which has taken him away from Hollywood on an interesting voyage at sea. He plays a traveling merchant, who turns up in the Orient, where he fascinates the heroine and makes trouble for the hero.

ATTAINS LIFE'S AMBITION

Lynn Cowan Is "Big Bug" of New Majestic Revue, "Monkey Business," Opening Wednesday

BY ALMA WHITAKER

When "Monkey Business" opens at the Majestic Theater on Wednesday, an ardent young man will have attained his life's ambition.

Because, you see, Lynn Cowan, who, for twelve years, has been vaudevilling with Bailey and Estelle Davis, now emerges as the composer, producer, stage manager and one of the chief actors in his own musical revue. He is on the top of the world. He regards this as his "big chance" and nothing could convince him that it isn't going to be the best musical show ever seen in Los Angeles, bar none.

COWAN THE COMPOSER

Lynn himself wrote all the music, and thought up all the ideas for the acts, and even helped design the saucy costumes for the girls—and his friend Earle Foxe has written the libretto. Olsen and Johnson, Orpheum Circuit stars, will be the featured players and there must be at least three dozen entirely attractive damsels representing about every type of beauty.

The rehearsal was in full swing when I looked in and everybody was shaking everybody else's hands and complimenting each other and saying what a bully show it was going to be, and everything in the garden was lovely.

The young man who picks and trains that army of superlative maidens (and, by the way, they are all Los Angeles girls) is Joe Griffin—so they're going to call 'em Griffin's Gorgeous Girls. Griffin has had his experience too—in New York with some George M. Cohan shows—so he would be a pretty good connoisseur. And he certainly can thunder "Girls!" in the most authoritative voice and command an instant response from the dazzling creatures—who are suitably attired in scant bathing costumes for rehearsal purposes, and assume comfortable poses of dolce far niente in the orchestra stalls between jumps.

HIGH-HAT AFFAIR

The show opens with considerable high-hatting. I saw the hats—of the crushable opera variety (masculine) which are to be worn with feminized masculine dress suits; with the nether garments suitably abbreviated for artistic purposes.

Then there is a jewel number, an Egyptian number, a new sort of a fashion show number, assisted by Felix the cat, and any amount of rollicking mischief intervening.

Lynn Cowan has also had a great deal to do with the sets, which are to be something extra special—none of your cheap and easy make-it-do stuff. Nay, nay. Lynn says Los Angeles audiences are educated up to sumptuous sets in their motion pictures and "When Cecil comes will Lynn be far behind" as it were? So you will understand that there is to be no economy complex to impair the charm of Angel Corper's financial subsidy.

WESTERN COMPETITION

Lynn will be a very disappointed young man if his revue does not become a permanent institution in this city and fix the Majestic as the great

GLASS PLAY DUE THIS WEEK

Arthur Freed, composer-producer, opens the Orange Grove Thursday, with the comedy "Partners Again" from the Potash and Perlmutter stories by Montague Glass. This has the latest and funniest adventures of these famous characters. This will be the triumphant return to the stage of Alexander Carr in the role of Perlmutter, with Eddie Lambert playing the role of Potash, created by the late Barney Barnard.

Charlotta Miles, late of the New York musical comedy "I'll Say She Is," will play the feminine lead. Miss Miles is known the country over as "Lotta Miles, the Tire Girl."

Freed has surrounded these stars with a splendid supporting company and states that this production will be as fine in every way as the original New York show.

The western premiere of this play will be a gala performance at the Orange Grove with famous motion-picture stars attending, and other celebrities in the audience. Mail orders are being received now. The box office will open tomorrow.

The supporting cast for "Partners Again" includes Max Pollock, Irving Victor, Agnes Akers, Allen Connors, Harry Shutan, George C. Guhl, Anne Brody, Lula Wasley, Burdell Jacobs, Victor Rodman, Oscar Guy Briggs, Mawrice Cytron, Edward B. Cassidy and Harry Von Meter.

BEGAN CAREER AS LEAD

Carlotta Miles, "Tire Girl," in Major Feminine Role of "Partners Again" at Orange Grove

BY BARBARA MILLER

Carlotta Miles has had a wonderful career. She says so herself, this leading lady of "Partners Again," opening at the Orange Grove Theater on Thursday.

For the luscious Carlotta has never played anything but leads. No "bits" darken her career, not even in the movies. She is the girl whose beguiling smile has peaked out at thousands of motorists, from Maine to California, from the tire advertisements signed "Lotta Miles."

LADY FROM BUFFALO

Some five years ago, back in Buffalo, her friends were always telling her that she really should go on the stage. She sang quite well even then.

Along came a producer and offered her a part in "Fifty-Fifty, Ltd." The lead.

Others opportunities followed—appearances with Will Rogers in "The Midnight Frolic," the prima donna role in "I'll Say She It," that ran a year in New York and a year on the road.

Now, way out here in California, whence she journeyed to visit her sister, she was asked to do "Partners Again," with Alexander Carr. She had never played in a straight show before but she accepted.

AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS

In "Partners Again," produced in New York several years ago, the indefatiguable pair have graduated into the automobile business, leaving the clothing house days far behind.

Carlotta is the decorative stenographer.

Though she will miss the customary songs, she feels that she hasn't a musical comedy voice anyway. The same friends who were so potent a factor in her early career have been suggesting grand opera.

"I know I could make a success in grand opera if I once made up my mind to go in for it. But it's such hard work, you haven't a minute for anything else.

"It means years of study abroad. You have to speak three or four languages fluently and know several operas. Just like you would know some plays."

MINUS DRUDGERY

So Carlotta is perfectly contended to remain Miss Miles of musical comedy, since she has escaped the drudgery of small, uninteresting parts, or of chorus work.

Right now she is casting a speculative eye toward the films, though, to her disgust, Hollywood doesn't know a thing about New York.

She played in Pathe serials several years ago, "nice parts, too, not just bits," but apparently this experience has no weight with the movie magnates of the West.

Carlotta Miles is American, though originally she rejoiced in the name of Florence Reutti. Italian ancestors, you see.

Astutely, the young lady soon concluded that only an opera singer could possibly succeed with such an unpronounceable name as that, so it was duly changed to Lotta Miles, in def-

BUSY SEASON FOR PLAYGOERS

Producers Not Waiting for Fall to Show Wares

"Green Hat," "Madame X" Head Serious List

Three Comedies Coming As Heat-Dispellers

BY BERBERT MOULTON

Some of us have been fortunate enough to have lured a few unsuspecting trout into the creel and acquired several layers of expensive tan, but it appears that where the theaters are concerned, they just don't know the meaning of the word "vacation."

With one opening after another coming along to divert minds from the torridness of things in general, the season assumes the aspect of early fall, when events theatrical usually begin the spurt that carries them over to the following spring.

Summer fare at the theaters ordinarily consists of the lighter and frothier kinds of divertissement, with the ladies in the chorus cavorting about with as little (and sometimes less) as the censorial gentlemen will permit. Drama in its heavier forms hesitates at putting in an appearance during this season of the year, for the reason, perhaps, that one can't very well concentrate on the intricacies of the playwright's mind when one is wondering if the thermometer is out for a new altitude record.

But this year it's different.

HEAVY DRAMA

No less than three plays which fall into the weighty class are scheduled to put in an appearance during the next few weeks. And during the same period only three of the lighter offerings—comedies and musical shows—which are usually in an overwhelming majority during the summer, will be presented.

"The Green Hat," opening tomorrow night at the El Capitan in Hollywood and "Madame X," at the Playhouse on the 17th inst., are examples of the type of theatrical fare that some of the producers have seen fit to offer in competition with the summer vacations.

Add to these the production of Eugene O'Neill's latest drama, "The Great God Brown," which will be given its first Pacific Coast presentation at the Pasadena Community Playhouse beginning Thursday, and a group of typical little-theater plays at the Garret Club during the next two weeks.

COMEDIES RIVAL

How the comedies will fare in the face of this opposition remains to be seen. There are some promising ones on the list, with Louis O. Macloon's production of "Tip-Toes" perhaps leading.

"Tip-Toes" opened in Santa Barbara about a month ago and then moved up to San Francisco, where it has been playing ever since. Those who have seen it declare it to be among the best of the Macloon offerings.

"Monkey Business," the new revue opening at the Majestic Wednesday night, promises to be another of those mentally restful concoctions that the summertime brings forth. It is the initial effort of Lynn Cowan, former vaudevillist.

The third of the lighter attractions is "Partners Again," the Montague Glass opus, which will be presented at the Orange Grove Thursday night,

CRACKS JOKES, NOT SMILES

"Laugh and the world laughs with you—" But not Fannie Brice.

Fannie has accomplished the feat of being able to stand before 3000 laughing people and never crack a smile. "A comedienne can't laugh with the world because she steps out of the comic character she has built up and if she does it than the audience won't laugh with her. It used to be terribly hard to stand on the stage and see and hear 3000 people laughing long and loud and not be able to crack even the faintest smile, but now the famous wooden Indian and I are in the same boat, only he didn't get anywhere by not laughing and I'm managing to get along fairly well," says Miss Brice.

There is no doubt that the famous comedienne is having to exercise her will power at the Orpheum, for every afternoon and evening the packed theater responds with much laughter to her artistry.

revue house of the West, don't you know. I think he is confidently looking toward the day when, say Ziegfeld will play second fiddle to one Lynn Cowan in the business. It won't be Lynn's fault if it doesn't happen that way.

This young man hies originally from Iowa Falls, and his fond parents had hopes of his becoming a respected civil engineer. He passed all the necessary exams to that end at the Iowa University—and then promptly graduated into vaudeville and hilarious musical acts. He has been doing incredible things with music ever since—beginning twelve years ago at the Old Ship Cafe at Venice

He and his partners went twice 'round the world and I only partially escaped absorbing the contents of a complete library of press cutting books, each neatly labeled and devoted to a different country's affectionate approval of Bailey and Cowan. Having toured through Australia, Africa, Canada and England and half the States in the Union, I gave up the struggle and decided to take his word for the rest. My word, but my profession has been good to his, don't you know!

But that doesn't prevent Lynn having a California complex—since he bought a home in Hollywood and found dear Mr. Corper!

And in his way, he feels he is doing as much for Los Angeles as, say, the Hollywood Bowl. Music, beauty, art . . . your revue, my revue, our revue . . . But he isn't competing, you understand. His music, beauty, art are quite different. Oh, quite. He feels there is room for both forms . . . each equally inspiring in their way. The Cowan Symphony No. 1 doesn't last fifty-five minutes, and his nocturnes and rhapsodies differ to such an extent from the foreign masters that no speeches are necessary to explain their finer nuances . . . and if any one lets off a few fireworks Lynn has promised not to get temperamental about it.

gaining familiarity and increasing vastly in numbers. They are attacking the theater in characteristic American mass formation. Out of the mass must inevitably appear writers of sound and penetrating talent. The American theater has grown to accept the American author. He is getting his plays produced. Sooner or later his product will be ready for export. The old world is suspicious. It is also the surest host of a true artist.

MUSICAL COMEDIES

Enormous quantities of musical comedy are in preparation for frivolous evenings. It is a cheering thought that Ed Wynn, Fred Stone and Clark and McCullough will be back in town after what seemed to be unreasonably protracted absences. Mr. Wynn will have a new revue, glorifying principally Mr. Wynn, to open the Erlanger, a new and expensive playhouse in West Forty-fourth street. Mr. Stone and daughter, Dorothy Stone, begin rehearsals presently in "Criss-Cross," a Charles Dillingham production, presumably modeled along the lines of the comedian's shows for the last ten years. Messrs. Clark and McCullough are already in rehearsal for "The Fly By Knights" principally written by the facile Guy Bolton. Then Beatrice Lillie has sundered her English affiliations and will play for Mr. Dillingham an entertainment known as "Bubbles."

The only great musical comic who will be definitely out of town for the year is Eddie Cantor. He will again take "Kid Boots" on tour. Although Leon Errol plans to remain in the provinces with "Louie The 14th" it is not altogether improbable that he will be called in by Mr. Ziegfeld. That producer should certainly have one or both of these rediculous gentlemen back by next spring to perform in one of his revues. Al Jolson will go out in the fall with "Big Boy" but should be added, as he was this year, to some Shubert show in New York late in the season. W. C. Fields is curently doing movies, but these should not avail to keep him off the stage for many months more. Will Rogers is lost, apparently permanently, to the concert stage, heading a troupe of his own which draws enormously in outlying districts. Fanny Brice is with Belasco but that impresario is too astute to keep her musically mute. She will have a few songs in her comedy "Fanny."

In the meager list of shows one should not miss we note the following survivors of a highly heated term: "Lulu Belle," "What Every Woman Knows," Craig's Wife," The Great God Brown," "At Mrs. Beam's."

Eye, ear and rib hospitals are offering especially pleasant evenings with "Sunny," Passions of 1926," Ziegfeld Revue," Scandals," Iolanthe," and "The Vagabond King."

BUSY SEASON FOR PLAYGOERS

with Eddie Lambert and Alexander Carr as Messrs. Potash and Perlmutter. respectively.

WHAT ABOUT VACATIONS?

With all of this going on in such a comparatively short space of time, it is difficult to see just how the habitual theatergoer is going to find time for a vacation. There are first nights galore, not only at the playhouses, but at the picture palaces as well.

The principal fault with all this lies in the fact that no one has ever come forth with a summer tuxedo.

The so-called gentler sex has the best of it, of course, for the backs in their gowns work inversely with the thermometer—the higher the mercury, the lower the gown. But tuxedoes are tuxedoes and so far only one or two hardy individuals have had the courage to appear at the premieres without them.

SHE STARTED AS LEADING LADY

erence to the tire company and their advertising.

Thus she was known in her first theatrical ventures. Unfortunately, the public insisted upon taking that name as a joke. Miss Miles believes it was "too subtle" for general consumption.

So now she is firmly established as Carlotta Miles.

"What did you say your first name was?" I inquired.

"That," with a triumphant shake of her blonde head, that set her long bristly beaded ear-rings twinkling, "just proves the psychology of it. No one ever could remember that name."

CONKLIN HOME AGAIN

Chester Conklin is home again—this time from Alaska, where he enjoyed his first vacation in three years of intensive camera work. With the comedian was Mrs. Conklin. Chester avers that he climbed glaciers, fished off the Alaskan south coast and experienced all sorts of thrills. He brings back with him scores of interesting photographs, both still and motion-picture.

Conklin has started on his long-term Paramount contract as a featured comedian.

[illegible] GLASS. By Larry Barretto. [illegible] Brown & Co., Boston.

[illegible] Barretto is one of the few young authors who shows himself capable of understanding the generation preceding his own and who is at the same time fully able to interpret the present era. He has that rarest of all gifts, tolerance, from which he derives insight and understanding.

He tells in "Walls of Glass" the story of Sophy Deming, who finds herself at the turn of the century the widow of a young doctor, with a small child to care for. Bravely she confronts life and sets out to make her living. Following the advice of the good ladies of Valesboro, she first tries making and selling jams and preserves, but finds the market too restricted. Then, despite opposition from her friends, she opens a restaurant near the only place of amusement the town affords, the race track.

It is Martin Greer, the wealthy racing man who lives aloofly at the "mansion," who encourages her in this, and when the building burns and she finds herself driven desperate, with a sick child on her hands, it is to him she turns. He is old enough to be her father; is, he admits, married to a wife who is insane, and from whom he can easily get a divorce. But he proposes that Sophy go away with him, write back that they are married, and, in time, return as Mrs. Greer. He will, he promises, marry her the moment he is free.

In her desperation, she accepts. The struggle that she had, with her equivocal position, which no one could have proven but everyone suspected, is exceedingly well presented. In time, Greer himself began to treat her with less respect—she was, after all, a mistress and as such should not demand too much.

As the years passed, Greer coarsened. Always a hard drinker at intervals, he became worse, until in a finely dramatic scene, the author shows Sophy subjected to the final humiliation, with her half-tipsy "husband" bringing to her box at the races the one professionally "bad" woman of the town.

But Sophy stuck, for all the time her son was at the best schools, with Princeton and medical school to come. He was, she planned, to do all that his father's untimely death had prevented him from doing.

In rendering the complex motives of this lost lady, her essential purity that was yet degraded by her tragic compromises with life, her courage and her loneliness, Mr. Barretto succeeds in writing a novel that is instinct with life and that holds the attention of the reader to the last page, where we see Sophy nearing 50, free at last, but voluntarily taking on a new burden.

A clean book, a wise one, this, that I can recommend most heartily. Buy it; read it; give a copy to a friend.

FOUR YEARS BENEATH THE CRESCENT. By Rafael de Nogales. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

A book in which that soldier of fortune of noble lineage, Gen. Rafael de Nogales, better known as "Nogales Bey," Inspector-General of Turkish forces in Armenia and Military Governor of Egyptian Sinai during the World War—an American and a Christian in command of Moslem troops. He is a descendant of Don Diego de Mendez, one of the first conquistadores, and of an Indian princess. His paternal grandsire was Don Pedro Luis de Inchauspe, the Spanish nobleman who espoused the cause of South American independence and became one of the liberators of Venezuela.

The trail of the sword began for Nogales Bey in Cuba, when he was a boy. It led him through South American jungles, into Mexico, through the Russo-Japanese War, into Korea and, during the World War, into the Near East. In times of peace he mined gold in Nevada, punched cows on western plains, helped found Fairbanks, Alaska, and did some exploration in Manchuria.

Men of martial spirit will find much that is remarkable in "Four Years Beneath the Crescent." The lover of exquisite word pictures, the devotee of tales of travel, the connoisseur of archeological sidelights—they will find in Nogales Bey a kindred spirit who plies a facile pen.

For the benefit of those who may too superficially read the author's vivid comments on the frightful details of Armenian massacres, it must be noted that he discriminates most carefully in his indication of the type of Turk and Kurd who figured in those atrocities.

"Four Years Beneath the Crescent" first was published abroad, in Spanish, a year ago. Its appearance caused a great stir in military and political circles in the capitals of Europe, both for its revelations concerning the World War strategy of the Turko-German high command in the Holy Land and for its startling close-ups of Armenian massacres. The book went rapidly through several editions, as did a subsequent German translation.

AUTUMN BOOKS

Autumn is just around the bend and already the presses are transforming great white rolls of paper into pages of fall books. Publishers are expecting an unusually good season. Doubleday, Page & Co. announces at least nine titles of major significance. "Debits and Credits" is most noteworthy because it is Mr Kipling's first new book in a number of years to be made up of stories and poems which have never appeared heretofore between boards. Joseph Conrad's "Life and Letters," by G. Jean Aubrey, is also listed. The fiction season starts with Edna Ferber's book of the Mississippi River, "Show Boat," and is followed by Ellen Glasgow's "The Romantic Comedians," a blow to the time-worn legend of southern chivalry. "Elizabeth's" new novel, "Introduction to Sally," will be out in September; "Hildegarde," by Kathleen Norris, in October; also Julian Street's long-promised novel of Chicago, "Tides," and in November Grace S. Richmond's "Cherry Square."

Among books of political and historical significance will appear David F. Houston's "Eight Years With Wilson's Cabinet, 1913-1920." Other authors on the list include Sir Hugh Clifford, Frank Wilstach, Stewart Edward White, Harriet Comstock, Booth Tarkington, David Grayson, Edmund Pearson and H. H. Prince Aage of Denmark.

LITERARY GOSSIP

For vacation reading the "Little Blue Books" put out by the Haldeman-Julius Company of Girard, Kan., merit consideration. These 5-cent booklets have a remarkable range, from fiction to rationalism, and they are so tiny that half a dozen can be tucked into one's vacation luggage without seeming to add an ounce to its weight. Some of the titles, selected at random, are Kipling's "Man Who Would Be King," Mark Twain's "Humorous Fables," Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and the quite up-to-date "Tales of Chicago Streets" from Ben Hecht's sketches.

An important critical work on Anatole France is to be issued this autumn by Lincoln MacVeagh (The Dial Press) under the title "Anatole France; The Degeneration of a Great Artist." The author is Prof. Barry Cerf of Reed College, Portland, Or.

"Human Experience" by Viscount Haldone (Dutton) concerns itself chiefly with the philosophical inquiry into the nature and meaning of human experience, and with the human mind, its nature, and its relation to the objective world and to art, religion and science. The book is written in clear and simple language, and will interest not only advanced students of philosophy, but the general reader who is interested in the subject, but not necessarily trained to it.

In "Heat" by Isa Glenn (Knopf) is told the story of Americans in the Philippines, as seen by the widow of the late Brig.-Gen. S. J. Bayard Schindel, who accompanied him to his post at Manila. It is a realistic and harrowing study of the degeneration of a young American who found the atmosphere of the tropics to strong for him.

If you expect to travel abroad this summer, either by steamer or by book and arm-chair method, you will be interested in a new book by Carl H. P. Thurston, entitled "Why We Look at Pictures" which Dodd, Mead & Co., publish. Mr. Thurston's new book is a clear and readable discussion of the great pictures in the famous art galleries here and abroad, with special emphasis on the question of what constitutes real art and why some pictures are universally hailed as masterpieces while others, equally interesting to the untrained mind, are less highly considered. Eighty-six full-page reproductions of the world's famous paintings are included in the volume.

Doubleday, Page & Co., issue a paper-bound edition of Christopher Morley's sprightly one-act play, "Good Theater," in which he relates how Beaumont and Fletcher, returning for one evening to the world of flesh, drift into the lobby of a popular musical comedy and discover that "good theater" in 1926 is the same old horse play that brought the sure laughs in the days of good Queen Bess. The pretty ticket girl mistakes them for two Yale students in masquerade and the doorkeepers enjoy telling them what makes a success on Broadway. The little play is Morley in his most rollicking vein of foolery.

J. B. Lippincott Company have just published an exciting mystery and detective story entitled "The Club of Masks" by Allen Upward, and a highly entertaining novel by Maxmillian Foster entitled "I Want to be a Lady." According to the publishers the books are admirably suited to summer reading.

How many novel-writing husbands and wives are there besides Charles G. Norris and Kathleen Norris? A. Hamilton Gibbs and Jeannette Phillips Gibbs are the newest additions to the list, Mrs. Gibbs, with "Portia Marries" and Maj. Gibbs, with "Labels,"—scheduled for publication in August and September respectively.

PUTTING ONE OVER ON FATE

BY ELINOR MORDAUNT

This brief autobiographical sketch of the author of "The Venture Book," recently published by the Century Company, New York, gives the public a fairly good idea of what sort of woman she is. That she "carried on" when most people would have faltered and given up is testified to by the great amount of literary work she has succeeded in accomplishing in spite of Fate's apparent determination to exterminate her.—Ed.

I was born of a hunting family in Nottinghamshire, Eng., many years ago—how many perhaps I may exercise my woman's prerogative not to say.

My education consisted of a succession of inefficient governesses, one after another, distinguished not by degrees of ineptitude but only by degrees of pulchritude. If the governesses were pretty my six bold, bright-eyed brothers flirted with them, and they were sent away. If they were plain my father could not bear the sight of them, and they were sent away.

I was always a teller of stories, from my earliest memories. But as a child it was oral narrative rather than writing which I practiced. I fabricated endless and gigantic tales which I related to my open-mouthed playmates. At that age I had not yet learned the tremendous fact that the most forcible, the most dramatic narrative is the simple truth—provided the truth of one's life has provided material for narrative. My old home has even now the reputation of being haunted by a horde of most dismal and unfortunate ghosts, all of them implanted there by my youthful imagination.

When I was little more than 20, I went to the Island of Mauritius, east 500 miles from Madagascar, as companion to a cousin whose husband was stationed on the Island as Colonial Secretary. After a very few months in that wonderful enchanted land I married. Malaria and other plagues—which must beset us most in the loveliest Edens—played very sad havoc with me in the short years that followed, and it was on Mauritius that I buried two of my children.

The doctors ordered me back to England. I was paralysed all down one side. Two years I lay in bed, unable to move. The doctors said I could never live.

The idea of dying in my bed was abhorrent to me. I wanted to experience the feel of a ship again, to be satisfied by the clean salt winds of the sea, before the short life of me was done. Against all common sense, throwing away apparently what the doctors told me was my brief hope of life, I shipped off on board a little sailing vessel for Australia. There my husband, who had made arrangements to leave Mauritius, would meet me. It was the second week in February that I left Glasgow. And small hope had I ever of seeing Australia or my husband again.

Bad weather overwhelmed us. The loose drift ice of the antipodean summer caught my fragile little ship off the Cape of Good Hope. From Glasgow in February I did not sight land again until early in July. Yet those long dangerous months on the ocean had done what not all the doctors could have done. The months had put life into me, which all others except myself had despaired of. By the time we sighted Australia I felt myself comparatively well, though still very lame and tired.

In Melbourne my son was born. In Melbourne my husband died. Alone except for the boy, and far from any help, I set about to make my own living. During the years I had been abed in England I had written my first book, "The Garden of Contentment," and the fine reception accorded this by critics had given me some hope of lasting success in literature. Yet at the loss of my husband I did not have full confidence in my ability to earn a living for myself and the boy by writing only. I took up decorative painting and gardening as a means of bringing in the small, steady income which meant the price of my son's bread and my own.

Those years were very hard. There was no relief from the constant work to earn the bare needs of existence. Many physical breakdowns overset me. Never was there a penny in the bank during all those seven weary years in Australia. Always my boy and I were on the sheer edge of starvation. I was further crippled by breaking my leg—which has been broken again since, the second time on board ship without opportunity to set it for five weeks.

After seven years I came back to England with my boy. I secured an editorial position on a small weekly which immediately went bankrupt. I wrote "The Ship of Solace" then, which was very kindly received by the reviewers and the public. My next book was "The Cost of It," the scene laid in Mauritius, that Edenland which had so many sweet and tragic memories for me. A book of short stories followed, and then an Australian novel, "Lu of the Ranges," after which another Australian book. For six months I worked in a silk factory to gain the atmosphere and experiences which I set down in "Bellamy." "The Park Wall" followed, then "The Rose of Youth," "The Pendulum," "The Processionals," "Laura Creighton," "The Little Soul," "Reputation" and numerous books of my collected ghost stories.

A far cry, indeed, those industrious and prosperous years, from the weary travail in Australia! My ship had come in—fleets and fleets of argosies and golden galleons. Writing, writing all the time, scarcely time to pause and think of anything except the stories.

During all these busy years I traveled very little, except in the vast and boundary-less countries of the imagination. There was one rather brief excursion to the Balkans, a sop to the wanderlust which has always been mine. There was one winter in Italy. After my son had finished school in 1922 I went out to the Canaries, from there into Morocco.

In the autumn of 1923 it struck me that I was getting too fond of comfort. Too much a creature of the fireside. I had forgotten the feel of a rolling ship. The salt winds of the free ocean no longer knew me. Word came to me that cargo boats were running occasionally from Marseilles to the French West Indies, from there through the Panama Canal to Tahiti. The call of the far places came to me again—and I started out.

Four months long I was lost to the world, dodging about among the less known islands of the South Pacific in Dutch cargo boats. Five days and nights I was in an open boat making from a steamer terminus to a particular island I had set my heart on. In one group of islands I had twenty convicts out of prison to carry my kit for me.

No white people there, of course, but the natives were very nice to me. Only once did I have a mutineering crew on my hands. On another island I reigned for five weeks as king of all the white people. Some pretty bad bouts of fever brought me down at times, and I learned a great deal more than I had already known about life and human nature—otherwise nothing very exciting happened to me.

What I now want is to go back to the Pacific, particularly the Torres Straits Islands, and write up the pearling industry from the point of view of a woman wandering upon schooners, sketches and open cutters. There is also a place on the northwest coast of Australia, a pealing station famous for "Sin, Sand and Sore Eyes," where some time I expect to obtain some rather remarkable stories. A friend writes from there: "Do come and let's have dinner together one night. You'll find more desperate and queer characters here than in all the rest of the world put together."

So again I've heard the wind a-calling me, and thither I'll be going!

THOBBING. A Seat at the Circus of the Intellect. By Henshaw Ward. The Bobbs, Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Ind.

We owe the wonderfully expressive and remarkably musical gem of speech which forms the title of this interesting work to the creative intellect of its erudite author. To reserve for one's self the privilege of building matters or things on scant or unstable foundations while violently denouncing such a course of procedure for the other fellow is a very human manifestation, and its illogicality may be pardoned in view of that creative urge which brought it into being.

To trace the genesis of this newly coined word is to note that the author of its life "observed" that by taking the first two letters of the word "think" and the initial letters of the words "opinion" and "belief," he could produce the word "thob," and could then arbitrarily determine that this word should be a verb and stand for a series of mental processes which are described as "th-inking" out an "o-pinion" which pleases the thinker and then "b-lieving" it. This process is to thob, whence "Thobbing." Surely no etymoniac alive can ever evolve a more intellectually creative word.

It is true that a much simpler term for the same process and one already used by Prof. Conklin is "wishful thinking." But to have employed so commonplace a term would have been to hamper the art of creation.

Having evolved and named his bantling, this writer proceeds to investigate all systems of philosophy, psychology and sociology, and finds all to be mere "thobbing." The only thing left is man's' power of observation, and this, it appears to him, can be trusted to the end. If men were born with straight vision this power would serve. But Bernard Shaw long ago told us that he was the only man in England who had no natal squint; and still longer ago Oliver Wendell Holmes, Sr., held that a competent scientist would yet distinguish, months previous to the infant's birth, whether the budding man would be a Catholic, a Calvinist or a Unitarian.

In this cock-eyed welter of humanity one dazzling ray of hope illuminates our future. This shines from the page of one of the two straight-visioned men whom our nation has trust far produced: "Man is not yet a being, but merely a becoming."

ILDERIM, A MEDIEVAL ROMANCE. By Marie, Queen of Roumania. Adelphi Company, Publishers.

"Far away in the North" and, since the proper names are all Celtic, evidently in the highlands of Scotland the scenes of this medieval tale are laid. The realm was ruled by King Nial, a just and kindly monarch, unduly assist by his consort, Queen Dana, a tyrannical and passionate woman. This couple had four children, all quite normal save the youngest daughter, who was so delicate, ethereal and self-effacing that she seemed in momentary danger of complete evaporation. Yet in one respect this shy damsel and her bold and aggressive mother were alike, since both cherished a secret passion for the hero, Sir Ivor MacDuach, whose honor forbade him to make love to the one and whose dark fate separated him from the other.

For Sir Ivor's mother, married early to an elderly man whom she never loved, and early left a widow with her little son Ivor, had been visited during her widowhood by a foreign knight from her native land, and after he returned to his far-off home had secretly borne a second son, named Ilderim, who had been early placed in his father's care in order to protect his mother's reputation. But upon his male parent's death he had returned to his birthplace, a gay and law-defying youth, who refused to submit to the authority of King Nial. In attempting to shield this charming young vagabond and at the same time keep their relationship secret for his beloved mother's sake, Sir Ivor incurred the punishment of banishment from the royal court, and at once bade his mother and sweetheart a long farewell and joined a crusade just leaving for Jerusalem. The pensive Princess died soon after his departure and he was fatally wounded in the Holy Land, but was brought home by his comrades to die in his repentant mother's arms. She thereupon proceeded to the royal court and cleared his reputation by blackening her own, for which he had sacrificed so much. So Sir Ivor was honored by a grand funeral and a stately monument with a Latin inscription preserved his memory.

THE SAGE OF EAST AURORA

Felix Shay, for Years Associated With Elbert Hubbard, Gives Us an Intensely Interesting and Intimate Account of His Friend's Life and Work

BY THOMAS F. FORD

ELBERT HUBBARD OF EAST AURORA. By Felix Shay. William H. Wise & Co., New York.

Elbert Hubbard, whose little magazine the Philistine first appeared in June, 1895, broke into the magazine game as an editor after having his work rejected by practically every magazine editor in the country. He retired from business in the late eighties, having amassed in the scrap business, a modest fortune amounting to $75,000. His idea upon retiring from business was to go to Harvard and get a degree, but one year in the classic groves seems to have been sufficient. He then made a trip abroad and while in England met William Morris and was so fascinated by the work this great craftsman and artist was doing he at once returned to the United States and set up the Roycroft Shop at East Aurora, N. Y.

The Philistine came as a shock to many when it first appeared. Mr. Shay, who writes in a breezy manner, and without drawing too fine distinctions, explains its popularity. "One must have," says he, "an excellent forgettery to forget or forgive the unnatural dress of both men and women, the cast-iron manners, the stilted speech, the groove thinking and the Blue Sundays. Victorian hypocrisy and surface culture were a sham, and its fetish 'good form' an insult to naturalness. Then came the Philistine, so gay, and candid and wholesome that it immediately divided sophisticated America into two distinct classes: those who took the Philistine and those who didn't know how to take it."

The magazine sprang into popularity over night. Its circulation mounted into the thousands, tens of thousands and finally the regular edition going to paid subscribers reached beyond the 100,000 mark.

The Roycrofters, under Hubbard's guidance, gave the "art preservative" a new lease of life in this country. I very well remember the first copy of the Philistine that came to my hand. I was employed at one of the largest printing and publishing houses in Northwestern Ohio at the time and the type, paper, and general make-up of this magazine was so different from anything that I was used to that my first impression was one of wonder that a such a magazine printed as it was on plain butcher's paper could be marketed. But a study of the contents of that number like a shower bath after a long and grilling bicycle ride—the bicycle was the thing in those days—and one came out of it with a feeling that the cobwebs had been swept clean from the mind.

Of course the thing became a cult. The clubs of that day were just beginning to shake off the shackles of Victorian conventionality and there was a breath of liberalism stirring in the land. Hubbard, who was a shrewd psychologist, set his sails to catch this faint breeze and as the breeze stiffened and increased to somewhat the proportions of a gale he steered his craft to the lee shore. Because the Roycroft movement was thought to be a communistic experiment the Socialists once attempted to take the institution under its wing. This, however, did not pan out for Hubbard was not a Socialist in any sense of the word. He was an intense individualist and he resented the patronizing tone assumed by the Socialists toward his work. He was in fact a business man with a decided flair for art and literature. Big business to him was not a thing to be feared, just because it was big, but a thing to be encouraged because of its immense potentialities for good. He early caught the eye of some of the nation's greatest captains of industry. He refused to join with the "Muckrakers" of the period in damning all business and because on occasion he praised such men as E. H. Gary, Andrew Carnegie, Henry M. Flagler and other equally prominent figures of industry, commerce and finance, the Socialists and the liberals generally taunted him with the charge that he had "sold out" to capital.

But this did not bother Hubbard. He serenely went his colorful way up and down the highways of the land and his earnings from his lecture tours alone amounted to a fortune. Whatever may be said of this remarkable man he was beloved by thousands. Some one has said: "Elbert Hubbard is the only man who ever had to build an inn to house his admirers." This is literally true. It was called the Phalanstery, and the meals were a quarter and lodging 50 cents. Of course, it barely paid expenses, but as an advertising medium it was a whale of an idea.

It seems meet that a word should be said about the author of this book who was one of the Fra's closest associates and confidants. The slip cover has this to say: "Felix Shay has confessed, 'When I joined Hubbard's forces I was a high-spirited Barbarian, just a little more than 20; when I became general manager of The Roycrofters, Inc., I was still high-spirited, not nearly so much a Barbarian, and something less than 30. Between times I had come under his civilizing influence.'

"In going over his papers Felix Shay found hundreds of notes and letters from Elbert Hubbard, including one he wrote just a little while before the Lusitania carried him off on his last little journey to the Great Beyond, wherein he states:

"'You know me a little better than any other living man.'

"Since Elbert Hubbard's death, Felix Shay has traveled around the world, seeking adventures in the out-places, and braving the dangers of the lecture platform to tell about them. He still has the 'interesting twist to his tongue' and the wit that struck Hubbard so forcibly at their first meeting. To read his book is to realize why Hubbard loved him and leaned on him."

"Ways of Escape," by Noel Forrest, has been selected by Little, Brown & Co. as their "dark horse entry for the Sweepstakes of Autumn, 1926." Other "dark horse entries" by this firm in recent seasons have been "Soundings," by A. Hamilton Gibbs and "The Hounds of Spring," by Sylvia Thompson, so that "Ways of Escape" will be worth putting money upon. It will be published on August 20.

SEARCH FOR RIGHT WORD

Fred Kelly, the humorist, and the author of the dog's only book of philosophy, "You and Your Dog," was a recent guest of his friend, Booth Tarkington.

"A few nights ago I sat in the attic workroom of Booth Tarkington at his home in Indianapolis, while he told me how discouraged he becomes over his work," says Mr. Kelly.

"'Are you ever conscious right at the time,' I asked, of doing something that's pretty good?'

"'No,' Tarkington chuckled, 'it all seems fairly bad. You know, writing is about the most discouraging job of all. One knows so well what he is trying to express, but the words aren't available.'

"'This afternoon I tried to write a paragraph or two describing a certain scene in Northern Africa. It was as vivid in my mind as if it were still spread out before me. I tried to make it equally vivid to readers. But when I groped for crystals all I could pick up were just a few smeary words—a meaningless mess. Yet all the time I knew the right words were somewhere if I could only find them.'

"'Will you keep at it,' I asked, 'until it does suit you?'

"'Oh, it will never suit me,' he replied, as he slid farther down in his chair with a weary sigh. 'I'll still feel that I could do it better and think how well somebody else could do it.'

"As I came away, I thought: So long as he has that attitude toward his work, no wonder it's good!"

GOGOL'S FIRST STORIES

"Evenings on a Farm Near Dikanka," Gogol's first stories, were published in 1830 in a periodical and collected the year after in a volume bearing the subtitle "Tales Edited by Rudy Panko, Beekeeper." They are light and humorous sketches of life on the author's native Ukrainian plains, with nothing of the "Russian gloom" of literary tradition; they represent the same aspect of the Russian spirit as that more recently expressed, in another medium, by the Chauve-Souris. Constance Garnett, translator of Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Chekhov and Turgeniev, has completed an excellent translation of these stories, which are being published by Alfred A. Knopf as the fourth volume in the collected works of Nikolay Gogol.

Society of Cinemaland

by Isabel Stuyvesant

Charming in all its appointments and delightful in every detail was the birthday surprise party given Friday in honor of Grace Kingsley at the Montmartre. Originating with a close friend of Miss Kingsley, Mrs. Clarence Brown, the latter was assisted by Mrs. John Ford, Mrs. Harry Carey Ruth Collier as co-hostesses. Moore, Dorothy Manners, Myra Nye and Margaret Ettinger.

With forty-five celebrities of Cinemaland seated about a large T-shaped table, Miss Kingsley was led into the smaller dining room of the cafe, overlooking the boulevard. The surprise was complete and was received by the honoree with complete poise and a charming response to the comraderie of the Cinemalite, many of whom were her intimate friends for a decade or more.

Banked its entire length with masses of orchid, sweet peas and maidenhair fern, at intervals there shone the light of tall white candles in pastel shades of lavender, orchid and pink.

When the guests were seated and service had commenced, the word was quietly passed about the board that it was also the birthday anniversary of Louella Parsons, another one of those who dip their pen-points in star dust and illuminate the names of those already lighted by fame in Cinemaland. From that moment she shared honors with Miss Kingsley.

The affair was not only a gathering of friends to do honor to another friend, but some of the most beautiful costumes of the midsummer season were worn for the occasion.

Mrs. Brown's brunette beauty was set off by a black chiffon afternoon frock with which she wore a huge black hat. Her costume was relieved by a large poinsettia at the girdle and her diamond bracelets. Lovely dark-eyed Mrs. Ford was all in white chiffon. Mrs. Carey was charming in an echru gown of all over lace and a picture hat of old rose, very large and piquantly "floppy" a la mode. Vivacious Miss Collier wore a flowered summer gown of chiffon and a graceful picture hat of pink and black. Both the honorees were in sport costumes, Miss Kingsley in yellow and white and Miss Parsons in white and periwinkle blue.

Other guests were: Claire Windsor, Dolores Del Rio, Blanche Sweet, Anita Stewart, Bebe Daniels, Norma Talmadge, Seena Owen, Louise Dresser, Virginia Valli, Mrs. Jack Warner, Mrs. Harry Warner, Winona Winters, Dorothy Dwan, Kathleen Key, Bess Meredith, Helen Ferguson, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lila Lee, Lilyan Tashman, Doris Arbuckle, Kathleen Clifford, Gertrude Olmstead, Tove Blue, Ty Andrews, Mrs. Gayne Whitman, Mrs. Lloyd Whitlock, Jackie Saunders, Ruth Roland, Hazel Dorian, Ella Wickersham, Corinne Griffith, Grace Gordon, Winifred Hart, Mrs. Harry Rapf, Mrs. Tom Mix, Enos Gibson, Gertrude Astor, Theda Bara, Mrs. Bill Keefe, Luella

Gilda Gray Premiere

In a very long dress of lusterless black silk and a shawl of highly resplendent silver cloth, wearing many strings of pearls and diamonds, Gilda Gray made her personal appearance Thursday night at the Million Dollar Theater where her first picture "Aloma of the South Seas" was shown. The premiere was in many respects novel and delightful, a change from the ordinary arrangement for premieres. Perhaps due to the fact that because those who had come early to see the picture remained it was not a typical cinemaland first night and for the introduction of stars, the audience was the most spontaneous and enthusiastic it has been our good fortune to know. For instance when the name of John Gilbert was announced by Wallace Beery, master of ceremonies, a veritable gasp went up from the people as though to see this romantic actor of the screen was too good to be true. Others received ovations in proportion.

The introduction of Miss Gray was, or course, the climax of the evening ,and the star who has just come over the horizon as far as pictures are concerned must have danced happily to bed so completely did she win the people for her acting. Already they knew of her ability to dance.

Among those introduced by Mr. Beery were: George Bancroft, Raymond Hatton, Lawrence Grey, Jacqueline Logan, Julianne Johnson, James Hall, Beatrice Lillie, Percy Marmont.

Where Cupid is Star

Mervyn Le Roy may or may not be marked by Cupid as his victim, but certain it is that he is seen often in the company of the ever "inimitable' Topsy. Yes, who other than Rosetta Duncan. Cupid's bulletin: "Fair and cloudy."

We haven't heard much lately of that old-time fvorite of ours Carlyle Blackwell until last week brought the romantic news of his marriage to Mrs. Leah Barnato, British diamond heiress. This calls to memory the days when Blackwell played romantic leads of an "East Lynnish" type and the romantic history of the Bernato fortune and the Kimberly mines.

Edward Sutherland, Paramount director, is in Hollywood minus his bride, Louise Brooks, whom he married less than a month ago. But this does not mean "off with Cupid" Decidedly not. Their honeymoon was cut short. Two days after the ceremony Sutherland was called back to Hollywood, while Mrs. Sutherland, the lovley Louise, was detained in the East by her own picture engagement. She is expected in Hollywood next week.

Birthday Dinner-Dance

One of the smartest dinners of the midsummer season was the one given in honor of the birthday anniversary of Mrs. William R. Fraser, wife of the general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, Friday a week ago at her beautiful home in Beverly Hills.

Among the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Fraser were: Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lloyd (Mildred Davis,) Mrs. Sidney Kent, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gortner, Mr. and Mrs. George Thompson, Mrs. Barbara Dougherty, Miss Audrey Wightman, Mr and Mrs. Howard Davis, parents of Mrs. Harold Lloyd; Roy Brooks and William Jenner, the latter general manager of the Harry Langdon company.

The long table was centered with a magnificent oblong bouquet of American Beauty roses and orchid sweet peas. The place cards were fans for the women and china cats for the men. A jazz orchestra entertained the guests during dinner and played for the dancing which followed.

Midsummer Luncheons

A number of smart luncheons were given at the Hollywood Montmartre at the week-end fashion show and matinee dansant, Saturday a week ago

Duane Thompson was hostess to a party including Alice Day, Gladys McConnell, Florence Gilbert, Mrs. Edmund Mortimer, Mrs. Margaret Hoffman and Lorraine McLennan. Miss Thompson wore one of the many big floppy hats seen in this midsummer season.

Claire Windsor, looking very lovely in a white and yellow fluffy dress, entertained a party including Louella Parsons and Raymond Hitchcock.

Marjorie Daw and Nancy Welford were the guests of Minna Wallis.

Priscilla Dean, in a stunning black and white costume was hostess to a party including Mrs. C. C. Moseley and Mrs. M. O. Davidson.

Ruth Collier lunched with Mrs. Charles Dorian.

Margaret Reid was hostess to a party including Peggy Nye, Dorothy Manners, Carroll Nye and Pat Du Buis.

Ross Rudami entertained Jocelyn Lee, Betty Boyd and Shannon Day.

Peggy Hamilton entertained a group of four.

At the noonday bachelors' round table were seated: Edward Earle, Robert Frazer, Elliott Dexter, Ray Hallor, Peter Dickey, Harry D'Arast, Harry Crocker, Lawrence Gray, Walter Tennyson, George Karamano, Bob Tribby, Grant Carpenter, Chet Withey and other noted among the male members of cinemaland's colony.

Rudy En Route

Rudolph Valentino—Ah, you don't know him? I thought you did. Anyway he is the sheik and the son of a sheik which will, perhaps, help to place him, but he won't stay placed; for he left cinemaland two weeks ago The last day of July he was in Chicago, coming almost incognito, so desirous was he of seeing that editor before the editor saw him, about that editorial entitled "Pink Powder Puffs." While he looked like a perfect gentleman in his gray suit and gray suede shoes, he quietly insisted that he is a fighter and keeps in perfect condition in the gymnasiums even traveling 3000 miles across the continent. So writers concerning Rudy himself and pink powder puffs in gentlemen's dressing-rooms better watch out.

He condescended to talk on other subjects than pink powder puffs, telling the editor that his next leading lady will be Estelle Taylor, otherwise known as Mrs. Jack Dempsey. He likes to be related to fighters if only by proxy or screen marriage.

Rudy then slipped quietly into New York Saturday a week ago, where he attended the opening of "The Son of the Sheik" at the Roosevelt Theater, then to Atlantic City for a rest and again to attend an opening of the same picture. Not only one good opening for a young man. But many of them. He dined in New York with Jean Acker, his first wife. But positively no significance in that, he says.

New Lodge

The Snitz Edwardses are greatly enjoying their attractive new lodge in the Malibu region each week-end. As their small daughters, Evelyn and Marian, are attending the summer session at the Hollywood School for Girls the week-end parties, perforce, break up on Monday mornings.

Ten-year-old Marian played the role of the "lost princess" to the "fairy prince" of Barbara Denny, little daughter of Reginald Denny, at one of the school entertainments recently.

Jane Novak's daughter, Virginia, who is also a pupil at the Hollywood School for Girls, is spending her vacation at the Tahoe Girls' Camp.

From Greece

In Athens, when a director starts filming a picture, he says: "Commence, photographer" instead of shouting "camera" as is the practice of the Hollywood megaphone wielders, according to George J. Karamano, the well-known Greek actor, who arrived in Hollywood recently.

Karamano came to New York from Athens, where he played the male lead in "Virtuous Liars." In Athens he was starred in several Grecian-made films, including "The Battle of the Marathon" and three screen versions written by the ancient poet-dramatist, Euripides.

Returning

Walter Tennyson, nephew of the famous poet, the late Sir Alfred Tennyson of England, has just returned from a week's cruise to San Diego and Lower California in his newly purchased yacht, the Firefly.

Rosa Rudami will return this week from a vacation trip to San Francisco and the Yosemite.

Here and There with Cinemalite

Yvonne Printemps, Paris favorite and star of the dancing board, is coming to America late this summer and promises to include Hollywood in her itinerary.

Edward Everett Horton will take a vacation of several weeks in Oregon, where he plans to swim and fish and hike in the mountains.

Emmett Flynn left Paris last week for Nice, where he will spend some time with Rex Ingram.

Hilda Deesy is in our midst. If you do not know who Hilda is, you soon will. Such a personality cannot hide under a bushel or a pint or any little thing. She arrived from Budapest last week, a titian-haired Hungarian actress, bringing with her a Pekinese pup named Djudi; forty Paris gowns, twenty-five hats and thirty-two pair of shoes. She is stopping at the Biltmore.

Rosetta and Vivian, the Duncan Sisters, will be with us only one more week at the end of which time they go to San Diego. But they will come back again to Hollywood to make a picture or two and then they will be of the colony more than ever.

John Roche, after enjoying the swimming at Hermosa Beach, where he is a member of the Surf and Sand Club, has returned to his home in Whitley Heights. The commuting even so short a distance as to the beach was almost impossible with his busy days at the Fox studio, where he is one of the cast in "The Return of Peter Grimm," now being filmed.

John Miljan is having an outing and working at the same time. But he is not exactly killing two birds with one stone, for he is at sea on board the Yankee clipper, appearing as the traveling merchant of 100 years ago, when frilly shirts were as popular as frilly trousers now are.

Jerry Miley is another young actor who is enjoying a vacation in a vacation land even as he "works." He is in Big Bear Valley on location.

Surprising Mother

An "original" in which Louise Fazenda is starring this week might be called "Surprising Mother" and Saturday night a week ago, when the comedienne's mother returned from a vacation, the first time she has ever been separated from her daughter—she found the offering so charming that she alternately laughed and cried. Than which, as the young diary-makers put it, there is no greater tribute.

You see, this mother of Louise Fazenda had been away for two months, going via the southern route to Lafayette, Ind., where the fun-maker was born and where various relatives are living. Thence to Springfield and other cities of the Middle West and home by the way of the Canadian Pacific to Banff, stopping at Lake Louise, Victoria and San Francisco. And during those two months daughter Louise had a crew of carpenters busy making a home nest for her mother next door to her own home on West Ninth street.

Building was not enough. She had the entire place refurnished and on this completely transformed scene the mother looked on her homecoming. Thus the title to the motion picture and mother was indeed moved at the generosity of Louise and the demonstration of love. Louise did the color scheme in blue to match her mother's eyes and to set off her white hair. These were not the only surprises for there were others in the jewel box, in the wardrobe and even in the kitchen.

Whippet Race

A group of Cinemalite drove to Santa Barbara over the week-end for the dog show and whippet race that took place last Sunday on the beautiful Bartlett polo field.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Harlan (Marie Prevost) were there with their Cairn terriers; Arthur Rankin with his graceful whippets; Katherine McDonald and others. At the race were together that triumvirate inseparable: Charlie Chaplin, Harry Crocker and Harry D'Arrast. Mrs. Arthur Rankin was also an interested spectator as were Mr. and Mrs. Jack James, Mr. and Mrs. F. Lincoln Dean, Miss Virginia Warmick, Ted Cook, Robert Benchley, Robert N. Lee, Tod and Bob Ford and Dunlap Castle.

Beauty Winner Given Contract With Paramount

Hazel Forbes, winner of several beauty contests in the East, has been signed by Paramount to a long-term contract, according to announcement today by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Miss Forbes first attracted the attention of Paramount officials recently when she was selected a winner among 4500 entrants in an American beauty ball held in New York. She was given several screen tests which proved so successful that Mr. Lasky signed her immediately to a contract.

The new Paramount player is to make her debut in pictures in Herbert Brenon's "The Great Gatsby," in which Warner Baxter, Lois Wilson, Neil Hamilton and Georgia Hale have principal roles. She has never appeared on the stage or in pictures.

Miss Forbes, who was born in Gettysburg, S. D., is five feet, six and one-half inches tall, weighs 124 pounds and has blonde hair and blue-gray eyes.

ARLEN PLAY READY FOR PREMIERE

Opening Presentation of 'The Green Hat' Billed for Tomorrow Night

The opening of Michael Arlen's drama, "The Green Hat," which was scheduled for the El Capitan Theater Thursday evening, and postponed on account of the illness of Ruth Chatterton, cast for the part of Iris, will take place tomorrow evening.

Miss Chatterton has rapidly overcome the effects of a minor operation in San Francisco and has been busy perfecting the various intricacies of character involved in her portrayal of the heroine of the Arlen story. The remainder of the cast which has been in rehearsal under the direction of Emmett Corrigan, Edward D. Smith's general stage manager, embraces some of the most conspicuous dramatic talent in Hollywood. Ralph Forbes, who in private life is the husband of Miss Chatterton, will have the part of Napier. He is a young Englishman who has had a very thorough schooling on the London stage, and has appeared in this country in the East in several noteworthy productions.

A promising member of the cast, who will make her dramatic debut in "The Green Hat," is Catherine Bennett, sister of Enid, who is to be seen in the important role of Venice. Miss Bennett, an Australian by birth, has appeared in several picture productions, but has not previously been seen on the speaking stage. Another recruit from the picture field among the feminine "Green Hat" players is Mira Adoree, sister of Renee, while still another is Joyce Mayo. Charles Stevenson, probably one of the best known of the older school of actors, will have the part of Maj.-Gen. Harpenden, while Gareth Hughes is to be seen as Gerold, the brother, one of the big characters in the play. Hughes has been conspicuous in motion pictures as well as on the speaking stage for years. Alice Keating, William H. Turner, Montague Shaw, and a dozen others have parts in the large cast.

SUB•DEB•ROS

by Peggy Nye

Subdeb

We interviewed Gertrude Astor at the Montmartre. That's quite the proper place for regular grown-up, superior interviewers to snatch their victims and ply them with questions, so of course we felt terribly grown-up and proud of ourselves because we were to do just that.

You see, in honor of the occasion Pat and I wore our dresses-that-are-alike for the first time, and Pat bought a big floppy hat something like mine. Our dresses are black and white gingham trimmed in organdie—and we had such a time making them and actually getting them, to spring on Miss Astor. We hope she was properly impressed!

Now if we'd start to rave about how perfectly dandy Gertrude Astor is, we couldn't be half expressing what nice things we really think of her. She's just as we've often heard "absolutely natural and wonderfully human." What more compliment could there be?

When Pat gets started asking questions I just think she never will finish, and she does ask the quaintest things. F'rinstance, she kept staring at the make-up Miss Astor was, of necessity, wearing. And finally she burst out, "Where do you get such long eye-lashes?"

I just about died. I'de never have asked anyone that question even though I had been wondering the same thing.

But Gertrude (Yes, we're going to call her that, here, because Miss Astor doesn't seem a bit like her) laughed and told Pat she bought them by the yard. That was too much. Pat gave me one of these what-do-you-suppose-is-the-matter-with-her looks, and politely sniffed "What?". It was all explained then. They do away with heavy make-up on the lashes, they photograph better, and all one has to do to put 'em on is to stick 'em, and to take them off—snip 'em. Furthermore, they do really come by the yard, and they are becoming quite the fashion among the movie celebrities. (Mental note—we must try some.)

It was perfectly glorious to find that Gertrude actually likes the roles she plays. We've heard a lot of this weeping about being miscast, and although we're quite in sympathy with a particular one of it—we just loved to know that there's one picture "cat" who adores being "catty" in screen life. The funny part about it is that she won't say even a little kittenish thing about anyone off screen. Pat and I were sniffing about the particular attire of a certain

Cement Nearly Spoils Make-up of Bebe Daniels

Bebe Daniels never wants to see another bag of cement.

Her aversion dates back to her recent experience in the filming of "The Palm Beach Girl," now playing at the Rialto. Director Erle Kenton needed a flat barge for his cameras and engaged one tied to a tramp steamer from which was being unloaded thousands of bags of cement.

Miss Daniels was seated in the stern of a motor boat close to the barge. In the meantime, a derrick was dropping the cement bags onto the barge in bunches of a hundred or more at a time. A brown cloud of dust was blowing landward.

When the director announced that he was ready, she started to put the finishing touches to her make-up. Her mirror showed that she had suddenly acquired a coat of tan. She tried to rub it off with her powder puff. It wouldn't rub. Then she tried cold cream, which only made her cement complexion sticky. Finally, her maid resorted to vigorous rubbing with a towel. This proved effective.

Walter Hiers is taking a short vacation following completion of "Ladies First," Douglas MacLean's next Paramount picture, in which he played the principal comedy role.

DIRECTOR FINDS BOYS EXPERTS AS SCOUTS

David Kirkland, the man who directed many of the successes scored by Fred Thomson, F.B.O. western star, is learning a great deal about Boy Scouts. In preparing to film Thomson's next feature, "The Regular Scout," Kirkland has taken pains to trace the scout novement to its origin years ago and has also conferred with several Eagle Scouts regarding various details of the picture. Kirkland declares that the boys with whom he has come in contact are a source of continual wonder because of their great knowledge of woodcraft and the habits of wild animals.

BEN BARD PREPARING TO DIRECT

Actor Should Look Ahead to Safeguard Future Says Orpheum Star

Half of being a good actor is being a good business man, according to Ben Bard, appearing this week at the Orpheum. The well-known New York actor, who is now planning to remain permanently in pictures, has made acting the business of his life. He took it up because it was more interesting than being a newsboy in Chicago, and since that time twenty-two years ago, he has looked upon it as a practical business venture.

The actor who is a good business man, says Ben Bard, looks ahead months, perhaps years, figures out what he is going to work for and then, if necessary, works for nothing in order to attain that goal. He knows what shows are being produced, and schemes just how he is going to have the coveted part.

The stage comedian feels himself the good business man right now. When his Orpheum engagement is over he will appear in pictures. His ambition is to be a director. At present he is entering negotiations with a film company whereby he spends three months at the studio just looking on and then another three months co-directing with some one else. At the end of that time he spends six months directing. For this year's work he receives nothing but his expenses. This, Ben Bard, calls good business.

He believes that in spite of the fact that he could make a great deal of money on the stage, or acting for the screen, he is being wise in taking this year and setting it aside. He is looking forward to the time when he won't be able to act, and isn't thinking of the money he will be losing now. He wishes to be a director above all else and is willing to take his training without being paid for it.

In the meantime, however, Ben Bard is singing and being funny this week at the Orpheum. He has spent twenty-two years on the stage, and it is only because he feels that it is good business, that he is leaving it.

Blonde Tresses and Playing Win May Popularity

Again the fact has been revealed that gentlemen really do prefer blonds, judging from the applause which greeted May McAvoy's appearance on the screen at the Biltmore, where she portrays the featured feminine role of Esther in "Ben Hur."

May's blond tresses, it is claimed, enhanced her radiant beauty and this, coupled with her excellent performance, explained the reason for her popularity in the free-lance field.

Since her return from Rome with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company her services have been so much in demand that she has finally been compelled to seek surcease from her arduous duties before the camera.

Only last week Los Angeles saw Miss McAvoy in "The Savage," in which she was co-featured with Ben Lyon, and "The Passionate Quest" and in each instance a distinct type of role was portrayed. In "Ben Hur" she again makes a radical departure from her previous delineations, which substantiates the claim of her admirers that she is aptly versatile.

The sweet tenderness of Esther, it is said, is typical of the character Gen. Lew Wallace had in mind when writing his immortal story, and critics throughout the country have been unanimous in their opinion that her work passes beyond the gamut of emotion.

Miss McAvoy, they claim, possesses those rare attributes necessary in the work of a screen star to impel a manifestation on the part of the public. Judging from the consistently good work she has done in the past, it is apparent that her position on top is secure for a long time.

Scenarist Says Clarity Needed in Film Writing

"Scenario writing has nothing to do with writing!"

So says Albert Lewin, who has just completed the adaptation and continuity on Rachael Crothers's story, "The Little Journey," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Lewin, a graduate of Harvard, who was for two years professor of English at the University of Missouri, declares that scenario writing is a separate art, like painting or music.

"We use the word writing for want of a better word," he says. "Clarity, not elegance, is demanded of the scenarist. I do believe that just as much creative energy goes into a continuity as into a book, but it is an entirely different sort of creation.

"The scenarist must think of plot construction and camera angles. It is a more rugged art than writing."

Hobart Henley is the director of "The Little Journey" and Claire Windsor and William Haines have the leading featured roles.

Chaney and Fox Will Head New Hillstreet Bill

Chaney and Fox, Broadway dancers, will head the new show at the Hillstreet today in "Dance Visions of 1926," in which they are supported by a bevy of comely girls. "Haunted," a spooky revue in which all the mystery and spook plays are blended into one, will also be a feature.

Jed Dooley with the beauteous Audree Evans will dispense fun and joy, while the Le Grohs will offer their thrilling gymnastic novelty. Ted and Carey offer a spritely novelty of song, dance and patter.

Johnny Hines is featured on the screen in First National's fastest marathon of mirth ever filmed in six reels, called "The Brown Derby." Alberta Vaughn will be seen in another chapter of "Fighting Hearts," with a news reel and Fables concluding.

B. M. Bower, noted author of western stories, leaves Monday for Chicago, where she will be the guest of honor at the second annual world's championship rodeo to be held at Grant's Park the 14th to the 22nd inst.

COMIC DANDY HIS ROLE IN PICTURE

John T. Murray

John T. Murray, who is busy playing additional scenes as the comic dandy in "Bardelys the Magnificent," soon to open at the Carthay Circle, believes that an important comedy element has gone practically unconsidered by the film makers.

"The value of the picturesque was well known by the ancient and medieval clowns," said John T. recently. "Their comedy characters were nearly always dressed picturesquely, even when they were grotesque, and not infrequently, as in the case of Arlequin's performances, they were made highly attractive. The great contrast achieved through the submission of luxury and pretension to slapstick or farcical indignities is one of the funniest effects possible. A great opportunity awaits the screen comedian who will first dress and background his characters fastidiously."

Murray's role in "Bardelys" has the advantage of the picturesque period in which the play is laid. The comedian enacts a becurled courtier in satins whose jests are variously received by the king.

Mite of Sea Halts Gilda's Ocean Scene

A lowly stingaree, so small that it was hardly discernible to the naked eye, upset the working schedule of a costly production unit, endangered the health of the players, and delayed work long enough to add nearly $20,000 to the already staggering production cost, it was recently revealed.

The stingaree hovered around the beach at Miaguay, in Porto Rico, where Gilda Gray and her company were making "Aloma of the South Seas," the attraction now running at the Million Dollar Theater and where Miss Gray is making a personal appearance in conjunction with her picture.

In one scene of the picture Gilda enters the surf and swims far out. Later she is joined by a number of othr South Sea maidens. After the scene had been shot and the players were preparing for the next, Miss Gray relates that she noticed a blue welt on one of her shapely limbs. Some of the other players did, too. A close examination disclosed that the welts were almost identical and that the culprit responsible was a—stingaree. The stingaree had made the legs of the players his or her happy hunting ground.

While Gilda relates that she herself suffered no particular illness, some of the other players did. In one case blood-poisoning was feared, and stiffness and sore limbs were the order for the day. As a result, the production was delayed three full days and the production cost increased by the thousands.

Camera! Screen! Stars Again on Job at Roach's

One would think as much anyway, with one glimpse at the Hal Roach studios, which maintained their annual custom of a one-month vacation by remaining closed during July this year. Now that "Our Gang," Charley Chase, Tyler Brooke, Vivian Oakland and others of the contract players have returned, not to speak of directors and executives, officially reopening the plant this week, all talk is of vacation exploits and adventures.

"Our Gang," Charles Chase, Mabel Normand and all-star comedies are the principal ventures in sight for the studio for immediate production, with prospects of another picture starring Rex, "The Devil Horse," sometime in the next month, and half a dozen other feature and comedy plans not yet in the production stage.

'Derelict Lady' Role Falls to Miss Brockwell

London's Limehouse district, the international melting pot of humanity so colorfully described in fiction by Thomas Burke, offers the setting for Gladys Brockwell's newest screen characterization.

Miss Brockwell is playing the role of a "Limehouse Lady Derelict" in "Twinkletoes," the John McCormick-First National production starring Colleen Moore, under the direction of Charles Brabin. The film play is based on one of Thomas Burke's most dramatic stories of London's oriental colony.

This is Miss Brockwell's second appearance in a Colleen Moore vehicle under Brabin's direction, having played one of the featured roles in the First National production of Edna Ferber's "So Big." She also played the vampire in the Universal production of William G. Locke's "Stella Maris," starring Mary Philbin, which was filmed under Brabin's direction.

YOUTHS EXHORT FROM PULPITS

Kentucky Children Preach in Old-Time Style

Pastors Encourage Them to Become Ministers

Earnestness Marks Efforts of Youngsters

LEXINGTON (Ky.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Youngsters—mere children—are conducting religious services in at least two churches in Lexington—Porter Memorial and Grace Baptist edifices. The boys and girls are doing their work well, too—they are preaching old-time religion about as well as some of the adult exhorters.

The Grace Baptist Church revival was under way when this dispatch was written. Rev. Paul C. Luttrell is pastor, but is assisted in his revival by Rev. Arthur Pope. Both pastors are advocates of young people expressing themselves from the pulpit, if they have even an idea that some day the juvenile preachers of today might adopt the ministry as a profession.

These children go into the pulpit nervously sometimes, but at others take their stand with as much aplomb as a veteran of the Scriptures. They walk from side to side of the platform; they exhort; they gesture; they denounce sin and all evil; they preach that sin's payment is found in the glare of the fires of Hades; they declare the way to salvation is the way that is narrow and straight and sometimes full of rocks and other difficulties.

MINCE FEW WORDS

They mince few words, these youngsters who seem to have felt the call to the pastorate. Some of them say they hope to preach as regularly ordained ministers some day; others are not so sure. One said: "I am not a preacher now, but I hope to be," and he will be given all the help and encouragement necessary.

However, these youngsters, those who may with the years decide to adopt the ministry or missionary field as a profession, will not be pushed to a decision. They must decide for themselves. The boys will likely be the pulpit pastors, the girls may go into the mission field—so many have gone from Lexington and Central Kentucky to missionary work from Tibet to Africa and other far-flung places on the world's rim.

However, that is to develop. The fact remains that boys and girls, 13, 14 and 15 years of age, are pleading nightly from the pulpit of a popular church that adults forsake ways of sin, if they are in such a path, and come back into the fold. These children are in earnest—their eyes flash and their chins stick out and they hammer the air in their enthusiasm. They watch closely the faces of those hearing them for signs of acceptance of the Deity through their pleadings. None of these youngsters expects people to hit the sawdust trail as a result of their pleas, but they are ready to step forward and give the hand of fellowship if the invitation should be accepted.

URGE CONFESSION

In one of the meetings, children, whose ages ranged from 8 to 15 years, took part in the sermons, prayers, Scripture reading and music. Raymond Little, son of a local business man, was one of the preachers. He urged more appreciation of Christ and happiness through confession of religion. He gazed straight into as many faces as possible of the hundreds who heard him when he made his plea.

Then there was John Nichols, 15, who declared to his audience that he was no preacher but that he hopes to be as the years wear on. He advised the congregation to lay up treasure in heaven, rather than place it all in the bank. He admonished the church elders that their richest treasure could be stored by visiting the sick, helping the needy and even teaching a class at Sunday-school.

Edith Little, 11, and Thyra Goodrich, also 11, lovely little girls, then arose and preached. Their sermons were strong and real. Edith Little declares she believed in putting the fear of God in her hearers, telling the audience that they should join Christ at the invitation that night, for if they did not, they might not be present in the next world. Some seemed to believe that, too.

Thyra urged a revival of faith—"Pray unto God and be saved," she pleaded.

There is no "foolishness" about these little preachers—they mean what they say and they are not just killing time.

LAND POLICY AIDS CITIES

Mexico's Moneyed Element Turns From Rural Investment Due to Agrarian Law

BY JCK STARR HUNT

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7. (Excusive)—Mexico's "land policy," that of authorizing the expropriation of large rural holdings for distribution as communal grants to small farmers for their uplift, championed by the Calles administration, has turned the attention of the conservative Mexican investor from the countryside to city real estate.

In the preagrarian days the moneyed element of Mexico never hesitated when an opportunity offered itself to acquire rural holdings and vast fortunes were invested in plantations, ranches or "haciendas" as the landed estates of Mexico's four hundred are more commonly known City ownership of property was in a great measure divided between many thousands of single individuals. While generally the well-to-do families would own one or two town houses and an equal number of suburban or country residences the great bulk of their fortune was usually put into the "hacienda" or in frequent cases into their various "haciendas."

Application of the agrarian law upon which the entire "renovation" internally and externally of Mexico is founded has served to bring about in recent years a different field of investment for the wealthy Mexican and in the last few years, with as yet no city property limitation control law in force, resulting in greater urban real-estate ventures, supplanting in a great measure the large fortunes formerly invested in the country.

CITY VALUATIONS RISE

The value now of the city property in Mexico is greater than that of farm property, according to statistics recently published by the Mexican government. The value of city property in all the republic according to the latest figures is 1,878,656,290 pesos, while that of farm property is 1,350,279,521 pesos. Of the total value of all property in Mexico, farm property represents 42 per cent and city property 58 per cent.

That the land holdings in Mexico are not now concentrated in as few hands as is generally believed is shown by the fact that out of the 679,553 farm properties held in the republic 595,519 are worth between 1 peso and 1000 pesos. Of this total only 12,550 are worth more than 15,000 pesos, and only sixty properties in the republic are worth more than 1,000,000 pesos, or $500,000 each.

The only five States which have farm properties with a value of more than 100,000,000 pesos are Vera Cruz, Michoacan, Yucatan, Guanajuato, and Jalisco. The value of farm property in Yucatan comes entirely from one crop, sisal, which is grown on very poor, rocky soil, on which no other crop will grow.

Mexico's farm properties throughout the country are now placed at the following: Number of properties, 679,553; number of owners, 463,661; total value in pesos, 1,350,279,521.

CAPITAL DICTRICT LEADS

The distribution of city property, according to States, shows that the greatest value in city property is in the Federal District in which Mexico City is located, followed by Vera Cruz, Nuevo Leon, Yucatan and Puebla. The figures in regard to the value of city property, however, are less accurate than those regarding farm properties, because out of the 2283 municipalities in the republic only 1480 furnish data, estimates being made for the remainder.

The latest official figures available on the total of urban property in Mexico are the following: Municipalities which form the State, 2264; number of properties, 1,199,953; value in pesos, 1,878,656,290.

There were in existence on the farm property at the end of 1923 mortgages on 11,448 properties, to the total amount of 393,763,586 pesos, which carried an interest rate of from 6 to 36 per cent. A number of these mortgages are at 6 per cent, that is, 5616 with an aggregate value of 237,645,332 pesos out of the foregoing total. These are really unpaid balances on payments, as it is common in selling a property and receiving part payment to give a mortgage on the property for the remainder of the payment with interest at 6 per cent. This is also true of city property.

The figures show 21,918 city properties mortgaged to the amount of 245,678,044 pesos, and also that the greatest number bear interest at 6 per cent, that is 6943 with a total value of 118,648,981 pesos. Next to the amount at this figure, the greatest number of city properties are mortgaged at from 11 to 12 per cent.

That increasing loans are being placed on farm mortgages is indicated by the fact that in 1924 there were 318 mortgages canceled, with a total value of 10,614,657 pesos, while 822 new mortgages were placed valued at 26,951,212 pesos. On city property the number of mortgages canceled in 1924 was 3689 with a value of 33,989,181 pesos, and new mortgages placed amounted to 2392, valued at 23,935,940 pesos.

JAZZ FINALE NEARS, SAYS FOE IN FIGHT

Twilight Approaches for Tango Also as Sax Blasts Die Off to Swan Time

CHICAGO, August 7. (Exclusive)—Jazz is on the wane. So are the dances of the tango ilk. Short skirts and bobbed hair are in their final phase.

This is the opinion of A. G. Gulbranson, Chicago piano manufacturer, and a leader in the fight against jazz music.

"Jazz, present-day dances, short skirts, and bobbed hair were the world's first crude and half-formed expressions of the spirit of new liberty born with the war," said Mr. Gulbranson in an address here.

"They typified the revolt against old conventions and inhititions. With its energies and passions unlashed by war, the world threw off its old restraints. New liberty was akin to new license.

"Music that appealed to the intellect gave way to jazz that appealed only to the animal senses. New dances were the sensual kind that went naturally with this new jungle music. Women in a spirit of recklessness cut their dresses to the knees to accentuate their physical allurement. Bobbed hair carried out the revolutionary note.

"But the backward swing of the pendulum was bound to come. Passion and emotion can not long remain dominant in the world. It has take a long time for the world to return to sanity but it already has made the start. Jazz is singing its swan song. Radio concerts, orchestra programs, records of phonographs and registering pianos prove that a saner, sweeter music of depth and beauty is coming back. Barbaric dances have had their day. Women's hair and skirts are lengthening. Woman is eternally feminine and the mad carnival of physical exposure must in a little while give place to modesty that has been woman's birthright immemorially."

Reported Suicide Now Suspected as Murder Case

JAMESTOWN (Ky.) August 7. (Exclusive)—What was first thought suicide of a young wife in this county, may have been murder, in the opinion of some Russell county officers. Ray Gaskins, 25, was charged with the murder of his wife, Jessie, 27 years of age, but later released under $5000 bond to appear at the October term of Circuit Court. Mrs. Gaskin met death at the home of the couple, ten miles from here.

Gaskin declared his wife killed herself after she had wounded him. After an investigation, however, a warrant was sworn out for the young widower. Gaskin's story of the shooting was that he was awakened to find his wife armed with a pistol standing over him. He pleaded with her not to shoot him, he said, and then sprang out of bed. His wife fired, he declared, and wounded him in the arm. Before she could fire again, Gaskin declared, he fled from the house, taking with him their four children, the eldest of whom is six. He rushed to the home of his father, J. M. Gaskin, prominent lumber dealer who lives about a mile away from his son. He said he took his father with him to his residence and there found his wife, he declares, lying on the floor with a bullet in her temple.

It is said by friends of Gaskin that his wife had brooded over the death of two of her relatives, both of whom had been slain recently, and this was given as a possible cause for derangement.

Coroner Ben Aiken returned a verdict of suicide before Gaskin had been arrested.

EGYPT'S FREEDOM BELIEVED DOOMED

GOVERNMENT FAILS TO END OUTRAGES OF MURDER GANG

LONDON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—In officialdom it is freely discussed that Egypt's independence is tottering because the government has failed to crush the "murder gang" which directed the assassination of Sir Lee Stack, the Sirdar of the Egyptian army, and other numerous killings. It is understood here that the gang is planning a new crusade of death against Britain.

The British, too, fear that attempts may be made to gain control of the Suez Canal and usurp British authority over the Sudan. It is said in London that several members of the "murder gang" have been hailed as heroes, not only in Cairo's underworld, but even in many of the better-class homes.

Although the new crusade is to be launched primarily against political friends of England among the Egyptians, it is but a step to revert to the former attacks on British subjects, it is said.

FRENCH OPEN FIGHT ON RED PROPAGANDA

PARIS, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—France has opened a new drive to crush the Communist campaign in Northern Africa which aims at fomenting a rebellion among the Arab tribes. Thousands of Communist pamphlets are being distributed in Algeria and Morocco despite every precaution taken by the French, it is stated here. Recently 1000 circulars, printed in Arab, and 300 copies of Estekal, a banned Communist paper, were seized by the customs of Tunis. They were printed in France and carried to Tunis by a French sailor unable to read Arab.

India has made strict restrictions against the importation of radio equipment.

IT'S "TIGER'S WHISKERS" IN CHINA

Cat's Chin Ornaments Might Have Been the Thing Here Few Months Ago But They Never Could Compare With Large Striped Brother's for Popularity

WUCHOW (China) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—"The cat's whiskers" may have been quite the thing in the United States a few months ago, but in popularity they could never compare with the tiger's whiskers in Wuchow.

Wuchow is a little inland city of 60,000 people up-river from Canton. White men are few—and unpopular—so whenever an uproar is heard it pays to investigate the cause.

Four days ago in Wuchow there was a racket of unusual proportions. It sounded as though the Chinese were preparing to vent their fury upon the "foreign devils." Investigation revealed an enormous and excited crowd on the river shore, jostling around some mysterious cargo just landed from a river junk.

But the center of interest was neither a missionary nor a slave girl of unusual comeliness. Instead, it was a long, cylindrical crate made of stout bamboo and rattan, through the large meshes of which could be seen an immense man-eating tiger which had been crippled and trapped.

The tiger's hind feet were drawn forward and up, and were held by stout thongs over his back. His forepaws were tightly bound and in his mouth was tied a large bamboo gag. He could neither bite nor claw, but, oh, how he could roar! And did!

For his whiskers were being auctioned off—one at a time.

The whiskers of a tiger are popularly supposed to bring extraordinarily good luck. Moreover, cut into small bits, they are said to make a potent medicine, and the Chinese esteem them highly.

The bidding would open with a rush and then gradually slow down as the bid price rose. Finally, the auctioneer would award the next whisker to the highest bidder, who often paid as much as 40 cents, silver. And forty cents, silver, though equal to only 20 cents in American money, is a good day's wages in these parts.

The successful bidder then gingerly approached the crated tiger and made careful examination of lip and chin whiskers. About this time the tiger, resenting so impertinent an inspection, would give a mighty roar and buyer and crowd would take to their heels. But only to return very soon.

Finally 40 cents worth of whisker having been selected, the buyer had and took the privilege of yanking out his purchase. He really did not have to yank, for as soon as thumb and forefinger closed on the chosen whisker the tiger would roar and the purchaser, falling backward with fright, would simply drag the whisker with him as he tumbled over.

"The cat's whiskers" had enormous popularity in the United States for a time, but not so cat's meat. Here, however, tiger steaks and spare ribs are considered not only a toothsome delicacy, but are supposed to give great valor to the man who eats them. So when the crated tiger had been plucked as bare as a giletted chorus girl, he was slain and his flesh was auctioned off pound by pound.

HER RIGHT PACKS PUNCH

Boxing Not Too Strenuous for Them

Betty Recklaw and Joan Meredith

NONE of the favorite sports of men seems to be too vigorous for the modern girl, and film actresses especially are taking to the rugged methods of exercise in their effort to keep fit. Upon the beach at the Edgewater Club a group of well-known actresses frequently indulge in strenuous forms of exercise one of which is boxing. Besides fisticuffs there are swimming, diving, volley ball and running to help them keep in shape.

Being patrons frequently at the boxings shows, these young women enjoy emulating some of the top-notch boxers and have learned the science of jabbing, uppercutting, counter-punching and crossing. Betty Recklaw is becoming an adept with her right hand and makes it "tough" on her opponents to keep away from her "sharp shooting" right hand.

NOTED NAMES IN "HUR" CAST

Gen. Wallace's Story in Film Now Being Presented at Biltmore Theater

The presentation of the cinema version of Gen. Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur," at the Biltmore Theater, will bring to the minds of elder theatergoers the names and personalities of those distinguished actors of the legitimate stage who appeared in the dramatic version of the story. It will be remembered that "Ben Hur" was first produced as a play at the Broadway Theater, New York, on November 29, 1899.

In that original production Edward J. Morgan played the title role, which in the cinema is enacted by Ramon Novarro. William S. Hart, then a notable figure on the dramatic stage, was the Messala, the part now played by Francis X. Bushman. Gretchen Lyons, daughter of the distinguished old actor, Edmund Lyons, was the Esther, which role is now visualized by May McAvoy. Mabel Burt played the role now enacted by Claire McDowell—that of the mother of Hur. Miss Burt was last season a member of E. H. Sothern's company and in the Brieux drama, "Accused," she played the mother of the hero. By chance the Sothern company opened its engagement in Boston last winter on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the first performance there of "Ben Hur."

In the original cast of the dramatic "Ben Hur," Adeline Adler played Tirzah, the character now picturized by Kathleen Key, and Corona Ricardo, that brilliant and romantic figure of the legitimate stage of a quarter century ago, was the Iras, now impersonated by Carmel Myers. Henry Lee was the Simonides, which is now in the hands of Nigel de Brulier. Emmett Corrigan was a picturesque figure as Sheik Ilderim, now played by Mitchell Lewis; Robert Mansfield was the Sanballat, impersonated in the picture by Leo White; Edmund Collier played Arrius, the role that in the picture version is in the hands of that other veteran of the spoken drama, Frank Currier; Frank Mordaunt played Balthasar, now impersonated in the picture by Charles Belcher, and the distinguished actress, Mary Shaw, was the Amrah, which character is pictorially presented by Dale Fuller. Of the original dramatic company a number are still living and playing on the legitimate stage, while others, notably William S. Hart, have become votaries of the art of the camera.

During the twenty-two years of the performance of "Ben Hur" on the legitimate stage there were naturally very many changes in the cast. Succeeding Mr. Morgan in the title role were Emmett Corrigan, William Farnum, Henry Woodruff, Orrin Johnson, Alphonz Ethier, A. H. Van Buren, Richard Buhler and Thomas Holding. Mabel Burt remained in the cast longer than any of the others who appeared in the first performance in 1899 She confesses that she grew very tired of the part after a dozen seasons, but was induced to stay year after year by Mr. Erlanger, who greatly liked her sympathetic interpretation of the mother of Hur.

'TIP TOES' IS TUNEFUL PLAY

Louis O. Macloon, who has done many fine things for the Pacific Coast in a dramatic way, does another in bringing "Tip Toes," one of the newest Broadway successes in musical comedy. It will be seen at the Mason Theater for a limited engagement starting Monday, the 16th inst.

Principals in "Tip Toes" include Eddie Nelson, Ona Munson, Charles Howard and Hal Van Rensler. Sammy Lee was brought from New York to stage the dance numbers, which Lee did for the piece on Broadway, where it is now in the ninth month of its engagement. Lillian Albertson staged the musical comedy.

As "Tip Toes," Miss Munson is said to acquit herself admirably. She is a brisk pirouettiste.

There's just enough of a love story running through the show to instill the flavor of romance. The wholesome atmosphere of it all with two lovers carrying along the story, is fundamentally pleasing, according to advance reports.

George Gershwin, one of the most promising of the young composers of light music, and composer of "Rhapsody in Blue," wrote the score of "Tip Toes." Macloon is said to have spent more than $50,000 on the production.

Five Thousand Early Costumes Needed for Film

The costume department of the Paramount studio is humming with activity these days. Five thousand garments, all of the period of 1820, have been ordered for use in "The Eagle of the Sea," now being filmed by Frank Lloyd.

Listed among the costumes are the following: 400 lavish ballroom garments, fifty musicians' uniforms, two uniforms modeled after those worn by Stonewall Jackson, 1000 pirate outfits, 190 dress suits similar to those worn in 1820, 200 old-fashioned gowns, 750 negro outfits, 300 American sailor uniforms, 100 ordinary seaman uniforms, 200 suits of street clothes worn by civilians of New Orleans during the 1820 period, 500 Spanish sailor and soldier uniforms, and 400 French sailor and soldier uniforms.

CANADIAN DEPORTING CASE AT STANDSTILL

ORDER SENDING MAN BACK TO ENGLAND VOIDED FOR UNIQUE REASON

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Because the Dominion of Canada was without a Minister of Immigration on the date on which the deputy minister signed an order dismissing the appeal of Henry Augustus Smith, alias Goldsmith, alias Martin, against an order of the Immigration Board for deportation, it has been decided that the case was in the same position as it stood before the appeal was made.

Many acts of deputy ministers during the faw days Canada was without a government are being questioned in the courts.

Henry Augustus Smith was a dentist in England, and came here under questionable circumstances in which his wife asked the Canadian authorities to send him back to her and his family, and force him to leave a younger love he brought with him. The Canadian Immigration Board finally made the order for his deportation, and pending the hearing the man lived in the immigration sheds at Victoria.

CANADIANS SEAL FREAK COAL MINE

Mysterious Explosions in Cassidy Property Baffle Engineers

VICTORIA (B. C.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Canada's freak coal mine, where continual explosions have baffled the ablest mining engineers in America, at last has been sealed up permanently to prevent further accidents in its mysterious depths. By an order passed here the British Columbia government forced the closing of a large section of the entire property owned by the rich Granby Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company at Cassidy, north of this city. This will prevent the mining of thousands of tons of coal known to exist in the mine, and, according to the operators, will reduce the life of the entire property, one of the most valuable in Canada, to about three and a half years.

The history of the mine is said to be unique. When strange blow-outs of gas began to occur there with alarming frequency experts from Canada and the United States investigated and sought methods of preventing accidents. All their measures, however, failed. The explosions continued and recently when two miners were killed by tons of falling coal and rock the government decided that in spite of the huge economic loss entailed, the mine must be closed for good.

The condition of the sealed mine is without parallel anywhere in the world, according to the Provincial Mines Department experts here. They have made inquiries in all the important coal fields of America and Europe and failed to find any similar problem. Apparently the coal seams are interlarded with gas under terrific pressure and when the rock lying on top of the coal is removed the imprisoned force bursts its way out, creating havoc in the mine shafts. No precautions are sufficient to insure safe mining.

Poland's supply of gasoline from natural gas last year was more than twenty times that of 1919.

MAHOMET COMES TO PARIS

Opening of Mosque by Faithful from Many Lands Seen by France as Change in World

PARIS, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Americans seeing Paris these last ten days have looked on at a change in the world. It is more than all the talk in Parliament and the papers about the French money going up or falling down. It is the solemn opening of the Mosque of Paris.

The heads of all the Mahometan countries that use the friendship and protection of France have come to inaugurate it. Were we alive to the facts? How many millions of the faithful of this religion, which is the most active in the world after Christ's—How many countries and and their peoples with a great portion of the world's inhabited territory, looking to Mahomet as their prophet—How great a portion of what we think of as the world's progress in our common humanity and civilization—All depending on the dealings of the one European country, France.

The facts have been going on for 100 years. This Mosque of Mahomet in Paris centralizes them for the whole world to see. And the ten days' doings show them.

Last week the great Moorish Caids arrived to make everything ready. Their bronzed, venerable faces looked from white turbans and flowing robes which might have been copied from the pictures in family Bibles.

Next came the Black Guard of the Sultan—100 of them, lancers, and not so very black, for Morocco has various complexions for its different races living apart in its immense territory north and south. The Berbers or Kabyles are numerous and come over to France by the thousand to help in the harvest—and they are blond, besides being the first civilized race of the Mediterranean to colonize Europe. The Arabs came only with the religion of Mahomet.

SULTAN'S BAND

Reporters tried to find out what these jolly Royal Guards called themselves—and the latter answered proudly—"We are the Sultan's Nouba (band.)" Those who asked no farther reported: "The Nubian Guards of the Sultan of Morocco arrive in France." No, the Sultan has enough of North Africa and enough people of his own in it not to hunt for guards clear across the continent.

These guards were busy getting their horses out of the train and wore khaki like a doughboy, excepting for the broad white belt with the Lone Star of Morocco in gilt on its buckle. But for the inauguration they are splotched all over with bright color, with a double mantle—the burnous — one snow white and the other blue, with the blue band around the white turban.

The little Arab horses are a revelation. They are round and smooth and strong—and they are not afraid. They are as human as dogs who are inseparable from their masters and, like dogs, they swish their long black tails to show the least emotion—interest, pleasure, excitement—but never fear.

Finally, the Sultan himself came—the first Mahometan sovereign to visit France since the days of the Grand Monarch Louis the Fourteeenth 250 years ago, and the very first from Morocco. Some of the great Caids and Shereefs have been in France. Americans have not forgotten Secretary of State Hay's summons to Morocco, which had not yet its lot thrown in with France—"Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead"—Perdicaris being an American citizen whom Raisuli kidnaped into the Riff or near by. The Shereef of Wazzan, a descendant of Mahomet and privileged to wear the tall green turban and veil of the Prophet, had married the English governess of Perdicaris and he saw that Raisuli set him free. The Shereef's sons were even educated in France.

NEWEST ACTUALITY

That may be ancient history now—but it is the very newest actuality that the Sultan of Morocco is here in Paris with his dignified court. And he has been followed by the religious authorities of a great part of the Mahometan world.

From Asia, there have come the three Kadis of Damascus and Aleppo and Beirut, where the Mahometans touch France through Syria. With them are the Muftis of Latakia, where Turkish tobacco grows, and Antioch where the disciples were first called Christians. Also, the Mahometan railway president of the Hedgaz, and the administrator of Holy Endowments of Lebanon. And the great Sheikh Tagge El Din el Hussien, Caid of Damascus, which is the jumping-off point for the French just as it was for the Patriarch Abraham.

From North Africa, there has come a delegation of seventy-six Algerian high religious worthies, named by the society of the Faithful. From Tunis, there is the Sheikk Ul Islam who is the Regent's "Minister of the Pen," and six chiefs of the Grand Mosque, with the Caid.

All this means the Mahometan consecration of the vast colonies and protectorates of France in Africa and Asia as a Mohometan empire. Even the United States' Mahometans in the Philippines, will hear of it and take heart.

PROTECTING POWER

This also means that France is coming to be recognized as the second, if not the first, European protecting power of Mahometans in the world. New Turkey is not yet European enough and besides is far too modernist in its reforms for the faithful of other countries.

England has long held the first place because of her millions upon millions of Mahometan subjects in India and other protected millions from Egypt to Zanzibar. But Egypt is wobbling, Mecca wavers, and Irak goes in for petroleum which is not fundamentalist enough for the common faithful.

A resident magistrate of an English colony of West Africa for six years before the war explained to me what he thinks is the key to the situation of Mahometans under the French. His British jurisdiction was sandwiched in between a French colony on one side and a German colony on the other—and the natives ran across the frontiers on the slightest pretence.

"No doubt, the natives have great confidence in our English justice and fair play—but we have no human intercourse as of man to man with them. German rule is so military that the natives will not bear it if they can help it. I must say they are happiest with the French.

"This is because the French treat them like children or younger brothers, that is, like beings of a common mankind. Why, French officers and employees know the faces and the names even of the babies and take interest in all the members of the families—and they talk with them too."

HELPFUL FRIEND

For a hundred years the French have been reaching out from Algiers, working steadily and patiently. It has been the chief care of the French authorities to see that the Mahometans, who are five out of every six of the populations, act according to their own lights and share in all the prosperity, law and order and commerce and civilization, that may be going along. The idea has spread through all Africa—and it is now throughout Asia—that the French are helpful friends and are not meddlesome.

Summing up the situation of Mahometans who are within the immediate influences of greater France, we have:

Algiers, 5,000,000; Tunis, 2,000,000; Morocco, 4,000,000; French West Africa, 6,000,000; French Equatorial Africa, 3,000,000; and Syria in Asia, 2,000,000, with underground runners into Turkey and Arabia, and British India itself, wherever the Muezzin calls from the Mosque—"Allah illa Allah—God is one God and Mahomet is his Prophet." From the ancient religious communities of Damascus there goes out a voice that reaches to the remotest depths of Morocco and India, through the Soudan and among the powerful Senoussis of Italian Tripoli.

Nominally under French authority, we thus have 22,000,000 Mahometans, without counting those who are in Madagascar and among the 20,000,000 inhabitants of French Indo-China. Turkey has not 10,000,000 and, while England has four times as many, her Mahomedans have not the religious prestige either of a Sultan "Son of the Prophet" or of the missionary orders.

The Mosque of Paris shows something of this growth of French influence among the faithful of Mohamet. It is not so much the result of any deliberate plan, for politicians in modern popular governments and Parliaments do not allow of that. It is rather the French liveliness and gregariousness which they carry with them—and they have been pushed by the world's movements to spread through the Mahometan world.

OPENNESS TO ART

Perhaps among the Imponderables which Bismarck thought ruled the world, French openness to art on its human side counts for much. Here in Paris, the Moorish artists have had a chance to show what they can do. The lovely tiling, the decorative designs of the mosque, are from them.

For three years the best artists of Fez—architects and decorators who have inherited the art that built the Alhambra in Spain when their fathers ruled there—have labored to show Europe what the Mahometan religion can do.

The great rectangle of buildings is entered by a Saracen portal, which leads into the ample square court. In the center is the marble pool for the religious ablutions, at one side colored glass windows screen off the Hammam or hot bathrooms which religion also demands, and on the other there is the Moorish Cafe, which goes with religion. Everywhere there are marble and tiled walls and decorative arabesques—for Mahomet was Arabia's voice to the world.

So far, the profance can be admitted to look and listen. The high square tower of the minaret looks down from the corner and across over all Paris. Until the Sultan had given his solemn benediction to the mosque, of which this is but the forecourt, that, too, could be visited. Henceforward, it is sacred to the prayers—five times a day—of Mahometans in Paris.

The roof of this prayer hall with its wide free spaces is of precious cedar wood. From the center hangs the sanctuary lamp with its seven stories of lights. Below, there are 200 little niches in finely carved wood. What are these for?

For the slippers of the faithful who spread their oriental prayer carpets on the intricate designs of the marble floor, putting off their shoes as Moses did at the burning bush. For they, too, seek Allah here amid their wanderings—in Paris, under the shelter of France.

JUSTICE AIDS CUPID

Magistrate Solves Problem and Promotes Happiness

GUTHRIE (Okla.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—When Merle Henderson of Perkins and Goldie Henson of Stillwater, got C. R. Heckman of Coyle, justice of peace, out of the bed at 1 o'clock in the morning with a request that he marry them, he refused to tie the knot after looking at their license which was issued in Payne county, Coyle being in Logan county.

The license was good only in the county in which it was issued, and a justice of the peace can officiate only in the county of his residence.

Romance was young in the heart of the gray-haired justice, however, and he hustled out and roused Rev. B. B. Horton, Methodist minister, and the two accompanied the young couple to the Payne county end of the Cimarron River bridge just north of Coyle where, standing on the bridge under the stars, they were married by the minister.

WOMAN PAYS BILL FOR OWN DELIVERY BY STORK IN

GREENUP (Ky.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Dr. A. S. Brady, veteran physician of this town, is just recovering from the most unusual experience that has fallen to his lot in the many years he has been practicing medicine for all and sundry in this Eastern Kentucky mountain community.

A woman walked into the doctor's office and told Dr. Brady she wanted to pay a bill. Questioning disclosed the account whose liquidation was sought, had been made thirty-four years ago. Then the story developed.

In June, 1892, Dr. Brady was called to the home of a family near town which was in destitute circumstances. The stork arrived that night and with it came a baby girl. The doctor put the amount due—$10 was considered a fair price for such cases in those days in the rural sections—down on his book.

Time passed and the account was not paid. Then the father died and when "house cleaning' time came Dr. Brady decided it would be useless to keep such a lifeless account on his

BULLOCK'S AUGUST CLEARANCE

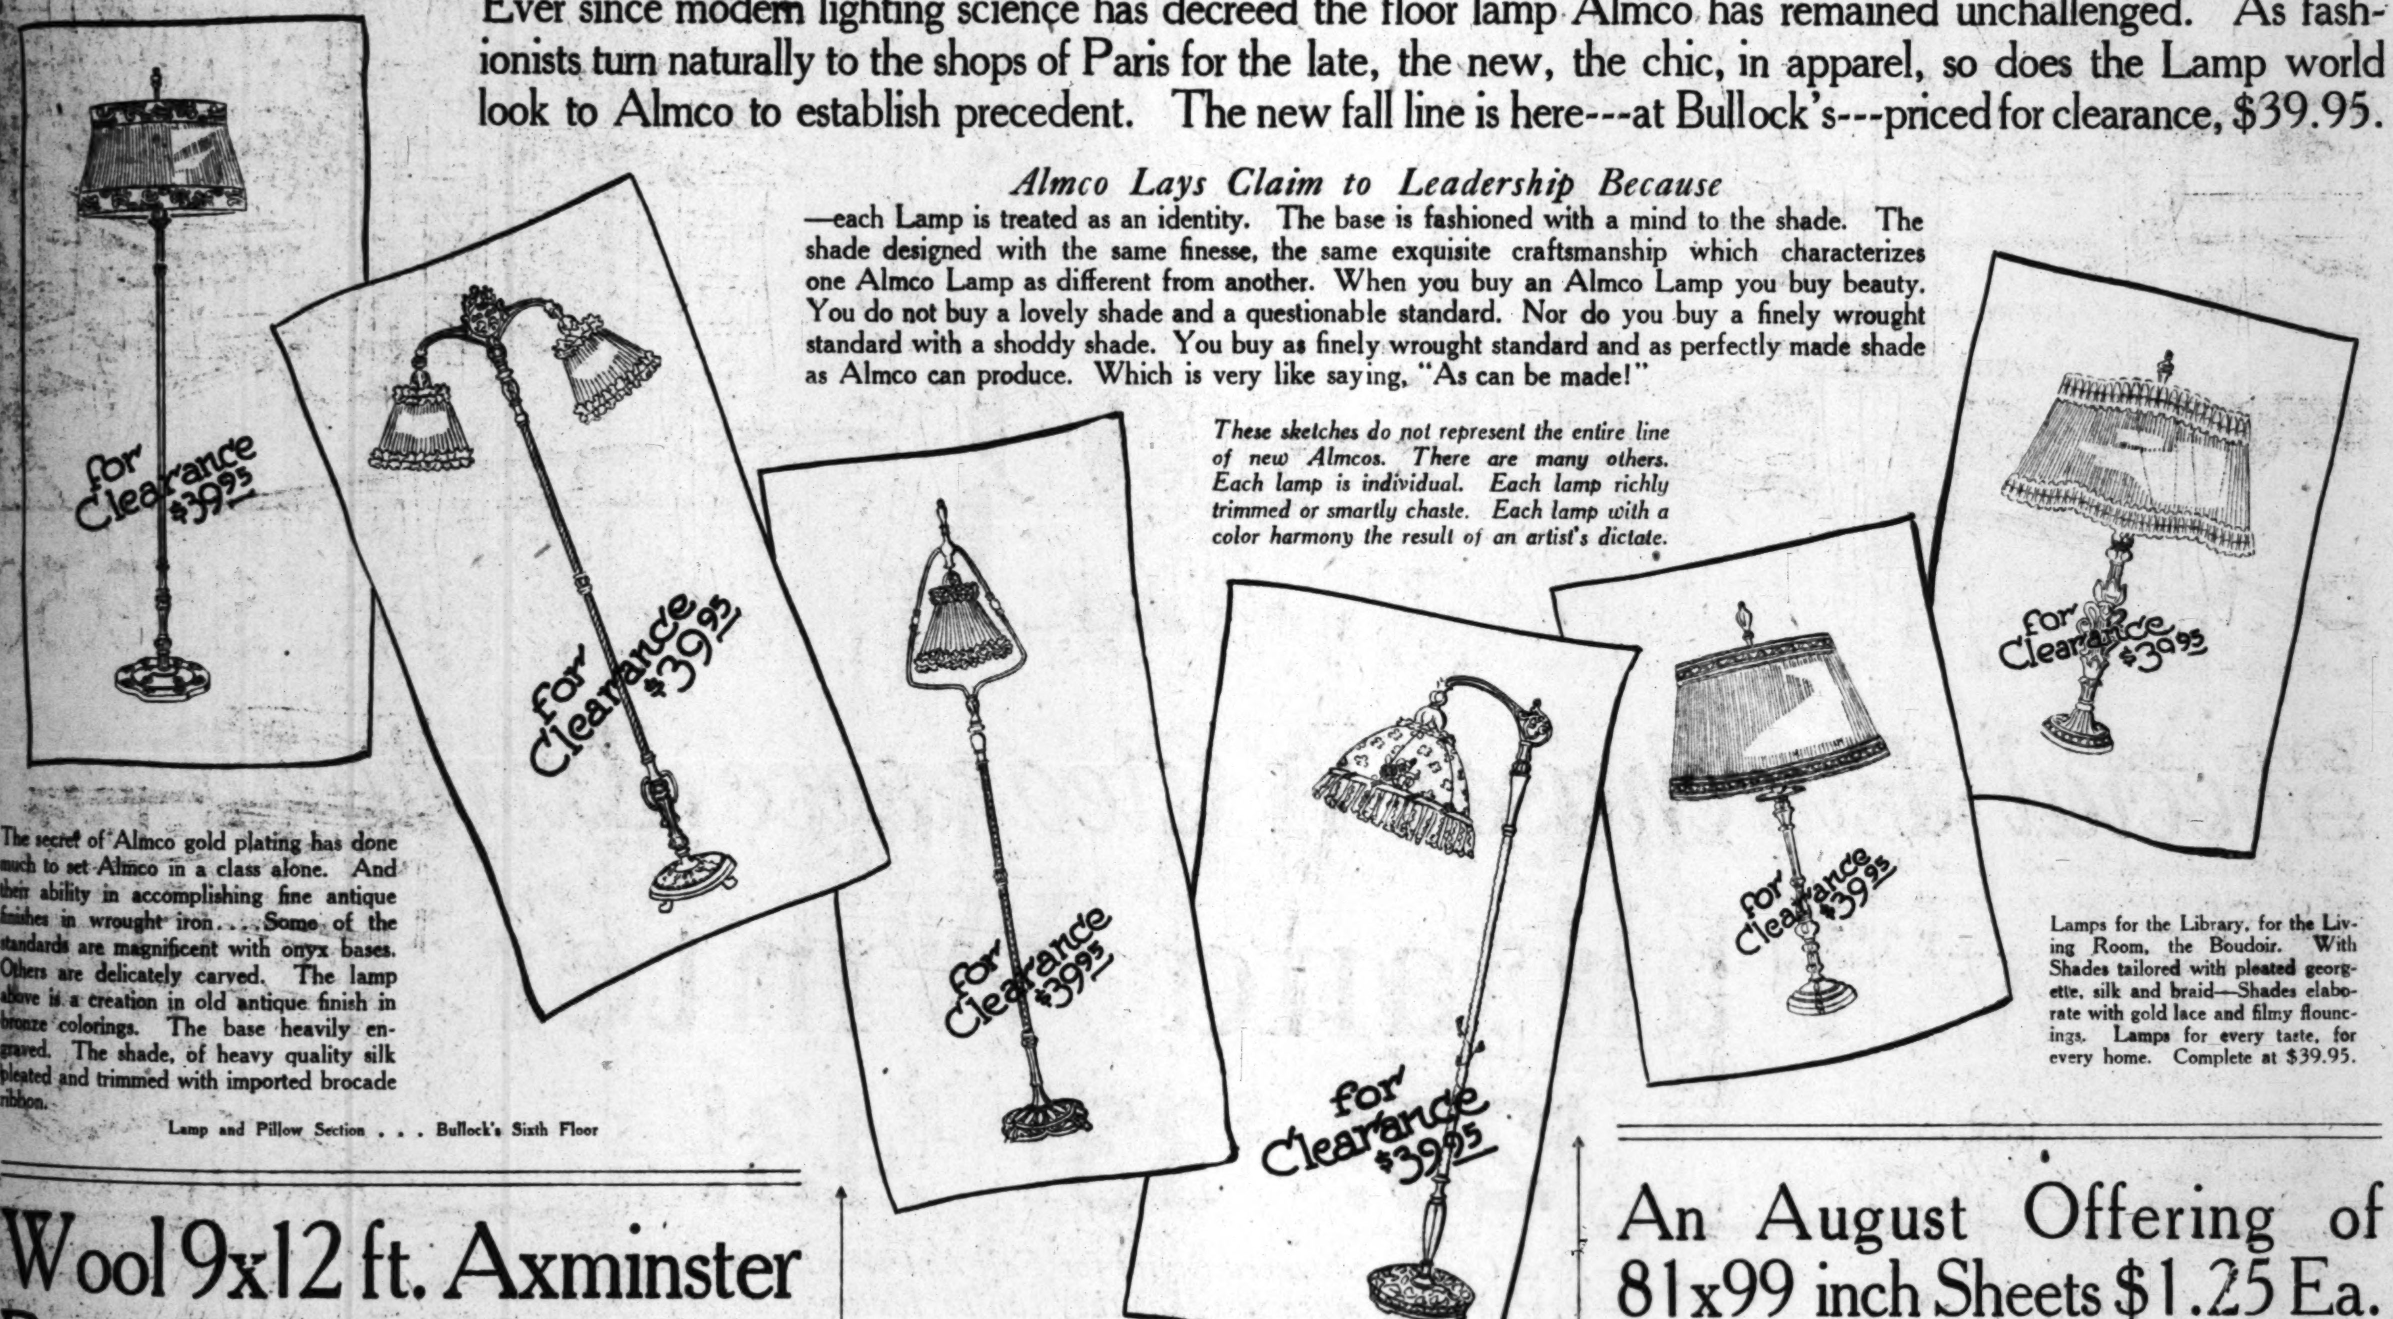
Almco Lamp Quality Remains Unchallenged!

New Fall Line Clearance Priced at $39.95

Ever since modern lighting science has decreed the floor lamp Almco has remained unchallenged. As fashionists turn naturally to the shops of Paris for the late, the new, the chic, in apparel, so does the Lamp world look to Almco to establish precedent. The new fall line is here---at Bullock's---priced for clearance, $39.95.



Almco Lays Claim to Leadership Because

—each Lamp is treated as an identity. The base is fashioned with a mind to the shade. The shade designed with the same finesse, the same exquisite craftsmanship which characterizes one Almco Lamp as different from another. When you buy an Almco Lamp you buy beauty. You do not buy a lovely shade and a questionable standard. Nor do you buy a finely wrought standard with a shoddy shade. You buy as finely wrought standard and as perfectly made shade as Almco can produce. Which is very like saying, "As can be made!"

These sketches do not represent the entire line of new Almcos. There are many others. Each lamp is individual. Each lamp richly trimmed or smartly chaste. Each lamp with a color harmony the result of an artist's dictate.

The secret of Almco gold plating has done much to set Almco in a class alone. And their ability in accomplishing fine antique finishes in wrought iron . . . Some of the standards are magnificent with onyx bases. Others are delicately carved. The lamp above is a creation in old antique finish in bronze colorings. The base heavily engraved. The shade, of heavy quality silk pleated and trimmed with imported brocade ribbon.

Discouraged but not Hopeless

Viewed in retrospect, only the thrill and enthusiasm of the success of the Atlantic cable is recalled, but that feat was accomplished only after many failures and disappointments were experienced. This is indicated in a letter written fifty years ago by Samuel F. B. Morse, which has recently come to light. The letter is the property of C. E. Willis, to whose aunt, Mrs. M. Stuart, it was written from "Pokeepsie," on August 18, 1865. The letter reads:

"You ask my opinion in regard to the Atlantic Telegraph. I have always had full faith in its final accomplishment. It is practicable and, therefore, the demands of the world will eventually accomplish it. Its prospects are now darkened, indeed, and its enterprising projectors are passing through severe trials, but these accompany the most valuable enterprises and they are often compensated by important experience, the lessons of which will be profitable for the future. The project is delayed, but I do not think it a failure."

The Electric Policeman

At least 17 per cent of all traffic accidents on American streets are due to improper lighting, according to T. W. Rolph, an illumination engineer, who recently addressed the Society for Municipal Improvement. And crime is reduced by street lights, he said. The phrase, "A street lamp is as good as a policeman" is no mere flight of oratory, according to Mr. Rolph.

ROAD BUILDING YIELDS THRILLS

Preparations for Redwood Highway Spectacular

Removal of Tree Giants Calls for Woodsmanship

Work Now Progressing Near Oregon Border

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Travelers who have seen the big trees of California would get a new thrill out of watching the building of a State highway through a virgin forest of giant redwoods near Crescent City, not far from the Oregon line. After it is finished, this section of the famous Redwood Highway will give no hint of the difficulties surrounding its construction, but these difficulties now provide sights more spectacular than the motorist touring the completed highway will ever see.

Virgin forest confronts the location party, which blazes a trail for the road builders—a virgin forest of trees ranging up to twenty feet in diameter and more than 300 feet in height. Between these giant trunks sprawls a jungle of vine maple, berry bushes and shoulder-high California Christmas ferns. Running a preliminary line over this kind of terrain is real work; the average hiker would find it hard enough to fight his way through the underbrush for a mile or two without becoming lost.

When the surveyors have charted a course through this wilderness the brush gang gets into action. The brush gang's task is to clear the forty-foot right of way of all vegetation up to trees five inches in diameter. Larger trees are left to the falling crew, and these larger trees are mostly redwoods.

CALLS FOR WOODSMANSHIP

Falling a twelve-foot redwood is, of course, a job for skilled woodsmen. The fallers open their attack on the huge tree by cutting notches in the thick bark into which they thrust the supporting two-by-fours of their scaffolding. Upon this flimsy-seeming scaffold, six feet off the ground, they balance themselves and swing their two-bladed axes with the easy grace of golfers out for a championship. Within a few hours they have carved a great, gaping notch in the tree, called the undercut. Then they attack the other side of the trunk with a falling saw, at a point opposite and slightly above the base of the undercut, until the tree is about ready to topple. Skillful manipulation of wedges in the saw cut then causes the tree to fall just where the head faller wants it.

Scarcely has a big tree crashed to earth with the noise of a collapsing skyscraper when the bucking crew is upon it like a flock of buzzards. The metal fangs of a gasoline drag saw are driven deep into the flanks of the fallen monarch, and, with the frame of the machine thus steadied, the one-cylinder engine is started and the long saw blade begins eating its way through the trunk. This drag saw attack continues until the bucking crew has cut all "down" timber into logs of merchantable lengths—usually fourteen or twenty-eight feet.

COMES POWDER MONKEY

By this time the powder monkey has appeared. He is the man who dynamites the tree stumps left by the fallers, and splits with high explosives the logs too huge to be carried on a railroad flat car.

In the wake of the powder monkey lies now a prodigious no-man's land of scattered stump fragments, great craters from which the stumps have been blown, and dismembered tree trunks as big around as box cars and as long as freight trains. It is the donkey's turn.

The donkey engine, seventy-five tons of stubborn strength, is the slave of the blocking-out crew. It hides in the jungle about a quarter of a mile off the right of way until its strength is needed; then it tugs on its long steel cable with a tug that yanks ten-foot logs into the underbrush as if they were toothpicks.

The blocking-out crew appear to be playing a game. They call their chief the hook tender, and not far from where the hook tender is supervising operations sits an individual called the whistle punk. He toots signals on the whistle of the hidden donkey engine by jerking a taut line something like the airbrake cord on a train. The four men who attach logs and stump fragments to the drag cable by means of a steel loop known as the choke are called riggers.

LOG SLIDES AWAY

What the ball is to the football team the choke is to the riggers. They pounce upon it as though it had been kicked to them, make it fast to a big log and jump aside. "Hoot" shrills the head rigger; the whistle punk tugs his signal cord and "Hoot!" shrieks the donkey engine, beginning to pull. Down over an embankment slides the captive log; into a stump crater big enough to hide a house; out again, bouncing over the uneven ground, and then, crash! it jams against a stump the size of a small barn.

"Hoo!" yells the head rigger. "Hoot!" replies the donkey, and down troop the riggers, hurdling stump fragments with the abandon of half-backs racing to a touchdown. The choke is unshackled and dragged free to the tune of more hoo-hooing and hooting; then reattached to the log with a rolling hitch. Another hoot and the cable tautens. A strong pull on the rolling hitch and the clumsy log, in size resembling a street car, leaps over the restraining stump and bounds away into the jungle.

On the heels of the boisterous blocking-out crew comes the quieter grubbing-out gang. This gang rids the right of way of small trash and leaf mold, which must be grubbed out wherever there is to be a fill-in.

With the departure of this gang the preliminary preparations are complete, and nothing remains to be done but to go ahead and build the road.

WOMAN IN WRAPPER STARTLES BATHERS

VANCOUVER (B. C.) August 7. (Exclusive)—With some aversion to the modern one-piece bathing suits, Mrs. F. Pendelly decided that the kitchen wrapper was much more modest, and accordingly donned a gayly striped house dress for a swim in the bay. The wrapper created a furore and in a few minutes reports were rushing over the wires to police headquarters that a woman, fully dressed was trying to commit suicide. Mrs. Pendelly declared to the police officers, who hurried to the scene, that she could not have created more fuss if she had gone in as September Morn.

PLANE PARACHUTE TO BE TESTED

Air Safety Expected Through Device

Innovation

Director William Wellman exhibiting model of invention designed to float crippled planes.

WHAT the small parachute attached to his back is to the aviator, a giant parachute, stowed in the tail fuselage of an airplane may be in the near future to the plane itself. And just as the pilot's parachute has reduced fatalities and injuries by several hundred per cent, the new plane parachute, by reducing forced landings at terrific speeds, and fatal nose spins to earth, may afford double protection to the pilot and passengers, as well as effecting great conservation of property and equipment.

The invention that is now interesting airmen the country over, is the property of Harry D. Doucett, chief mechanic of the naval air station at North Island, San Diego. Dousett for several years has been in charge of overhauling "cracked-up" navy planes.

The device is soon to be given a trial in Los Angeles under actual flying conditions by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and its first vice-president, Jesse L. Lasky. Mr. Lasky has agreed to furnish the money necessary to rebuild a plane and equip it with this device for a trial flight, in order, if it is satisfactory, to equip all the airplanes to be used in "Wings," Paramount's picture of the A.E.F. air service in the great war, with it. More than 400 planes of antiquated 1917-18 models will be flown in the picture by veteran army pilots at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Tex. Famous Players-Lasky asked no interest in the patent itself, beyond the exclusive right to employ it as a safety device in "Wings," in case it proves successful.

"There is no question," says Doucett, "that a parachute of the size we will use, that is, about fifty feet in diameter, will float down a plane of 1800 pounds. Air engineering officials, navy engineers, and parachute experts all agree on that. The parachutes which pilots use have a diameter of eighteen feet. And every foot you increase the diameter increases the area four times. We are using a Russell parachute."

The trial flight of the plane is to be made by ex-Navy Pilot Carl Oelze, who is now engaged in commercial aviation. Oelze feels that the parachute device is practical, and is having his own plane rebuilt and the parachute installed.

The flight will be made somewhere near Los Angeles in about ten days. Oelze says he will fly to an altitude of about 6000 feet, stall his plane completely in midair, trip the parachute, and rely on it alone to bring the plane safely to earth.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has insisted that Oelze also carry a parachute on his back, in order to afford double protection in case the device does not work.

"I feel that Mr. Lasky and William Wellman, the director of 'Wings,' who is an old Lafayette Escadrille flyer, are doing a very fine thing in backing the trial of this invention," states Lieut. B. P. Donnelly, U.S.N., in charge of all fleet parachute work on the Pacific Coast. "It looks practical throughout, and everyone at the naval air station is vitally interested in the results of the test flight. If successful, it will revolutionize flying."

Too Much 'Dot,' Edna Hopper to Duck 'Duc'

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Edna Wallace Hopper, known as the perennial flapper, who sailed for Paris in June expecting to marry the Duc de Chatre, head of an illustrious French family, has found an alliance too expensive and the wedding is off, she has written to a friend here.

"They want too much setled on the Duc," the actress and former wife of De Wolf Hopper, wrote to Otis E. Glidden. "It's the old story. French families always expect a dot. The otner the family the larger the dot and 'dot' in French means 'dough,' just like the way it is pronounced.

"I decided to duck the Duc. I like him but he comes too high. My heart is not broken but I acknowledge I am disappointed. We remain good friends. I may marry some day but I have no plans now."

Miss Hopper wrote that she will remain in Paris for some time studying the French secrets of remaining youthful.

NINETEEN ON TRAIN HURT IN SMASH-UP

Freight Car on Adjoining Track Bulges and Causes Crash in Pennsylvania

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 7. (AP)—Nineteen passengers were cut by flying glass early today when Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train No. 32, the Pittsburgh to Philadelphia local, eastbound, was scraped by a freight car which bulged from an adjoining track at Jeannette, Pa.

None of the passengers was seriously hurt and all continued their journey after a delay of one and one-half hours. Their wounds were dressed by doctors at Greensburgh and Johnstown.

No. 32, a slow train, was made up of three express cars, a combination baggage and coach, a dead head car, two coaches and two sleepers. The cars on the front end bore the brunt of the scraping. Windows were shattered in several of the coaches, showering the passengers with flying glass.

The accident occurred as No. 32 was passing Jeannette. The sides of a coal car in the freight train bulged, one side extending out over the rails on which the passenger train was traveling.

Doctors boarded the train at Greensburgh and Johnstown and rendered first aid. At Altoona the train was halted while new coaches were obtained to replace those with shattered windows.

INDEPENDENCE (Kan.) Aug. 7. (AP) Santa Fe passenger train No. 214, eastbound, Newton to Independence, went into an open switch at Crane Station, slightly injuring five passengers.

ADVANCE OF FIRE HALTED IN FORESTS

National Reserve Blazes in State Under Control at Last After Bitter Fight

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Fires in the Klamath, California, Shasta, Tahoe and Stanislaus national forests, which have engaged the attention of hundreds of fighters for a week, were reported by the United States Forest Service headquarters here to be controlled today.

A series of incendiary fires in the Klamath, which swept into two great conflagrations, were surrounded today after a hard fight. They were in the Deer Creek ridge and Camp Creek sections.

A fire in the California Forest north of Upper Lake was checked by the fire gangs today after having burned out of control for a week.

MISSOULA (Mont.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Favorable reports from the fire lines in the forests of Western Montana, Northern Idaho and Eastern Washington were received at forestry headquarters here today. While some of the conflagrations still were uncontrolled, for the most part their advance had been checked.

OAKLAND, Aug. 7. (AP)—A fire in the Devil's Hole region, fifteen miles southwest of Livermore, was controlled today after having swept over 1500 acres. Reports that five men had been trapped by the flames proved unfounded. Mrs. Ernest Mendenhall, who assumed her husband's post as forest lookout while he fought the flames, said that the fire did little damage.

HERDING OF STATUES HELD AID TO TOURIST

PARIS, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The French capital is wondering if Leon Riotor is joking or is really serious in his project to have all statues of generals in one square, poets in another, scientists in a third and so on, to make it easier for the hurrying student of history and the visitors who complain that the statues are so widely scattered they would have to remain in Paris for months to visit them all. Parisians see in the Riotor idea a distinct advantage but it looks as if the plan will be condemned by the aesthetic Paris Council.

VACATION DUE IN 1882 JUST GRANTED

LONDON, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Not every one is as lucky as S. J. Holloway, postmaster of Bromley, Kent, and also president of the local Rotary Club. He had just returned from his annual vacation and was wishing for a few more weeks of rest when he was notified that during his absence it was discovered that he did not have a vacation in 1882. So the postal authorities told Holloway to take four more weeks' vacation this summer.

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

FEARED VESSEL MET DISASTER

Motorship City of Nome Not Heard From

Sailed June 22 from Para on South American Coast

San Diego Shipping Man, A. H. Moore, on Board

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 7.—Fear for the motorship City of Nome, owned by A. H. Moore, San Diego shipping man, and en route from Para, on the South American coast to Los Angeles Harbor and Alaska, was expressed here this morning, when it was learned that the vessel sailed June 22, last, and has been heard from only once since that time. Joseph Brennan, harbor master, said he had been informed that Moore and a son were aboard the craft.

According to Brennan, the vessel was heard from at Trinidad July 8, last, and should have reported at Panama Canal July 16. It was feared by local shipping men that the heavy winds off the coast and the high seas recently reported may have spelled disaster for the vessel.

The City of Nome was to have been placed in the Alaskan trade by Moore, it is understood here. It is a vessel of 1286 tons. Moore is well known here, having been skipper of a small fleet of freight handling craft here several years ago, according to officials at the harbor office.

Scout Drowned While Bathing in Old Gravel Pit

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 7.—Louis Halsett, 11-year-old Boy Scout, was drowned last night while bathing in an old gravel pit in Mission Valley, it was learned today. The boy, who is the stepson of Orville Halsett, local salesman, visited the pit with a number of Boy Scouts. Several of the group decided to go in swimming and obtained the permission of Scoutmaster Charles Norton to do so, after he had instructed all those who did not know how to swim to stay away from the water.

The troop then scattered, some going into the water, some rambling through the old mission and others engaging in various games.

Soon after 7 o'clock, one of the swimmers was wading in fairly deep water and stepped on a hand. He called out to see if any one of the boys was missing, and a check showed that young Halsett was gone. Two of the boys then recovered the body. How long Halsett had been in the water is not known, but it is believed it was for at least half an hour.

Efforts at resuscitation were unsuccessful.

RANCHER TAKES FIRST FLIGHT IN NEW PLANE

PORTERVILLE Aug. 7. — Lester Lamkin, former army officer and local agent for the Alexander Eagle Rock Airplane Company of Denver, took his first flight today in a commercial plane shipped here from the factory Thursday and which he will use here for commercial purposes. Mr. Lamkin has an airplane landing field on his ranch south of Porterville which at the present time is the only landing field for planes in the district.

CHILD LOSES LIFE IN AUTO COLLISION

WHITTIER, Aug. 7. (AP)—A collision of two automobiles at an intersection on the Telegraph Road near here today resulted in the death of the 1-year-old daughter of Mrs. Ethel Olson of Moun Linda, the driver of one of the cars. The child was thrown from the automobile and its head was crushed. Michael Aaromvede and Pierre Itcaima, both of Glasgow, Mont., were the occupants of the second car.

SIX INJURED IN CRASH

Three Babies and Trio of Adults Just Escape Death When Their Car is Demolished

PASADENA, Aug. 7.—Three small children, their mother and father and a woman friend of the family were injured this afternoon in an automobile accident at Fair Oaks avenue and Foothill Boulevard which may take the life of the mother. She received her injuries in attempting to save her children.

H. B. Tyacke, the father, was driving his family and Mrs. J. Favill to their home at Wilmington when their sedan was struck and virtually demolished by a truck driven, according to the victims, by Emanuel Kirckhofer, 3332 East Walnut street, an employee of the Pasadena Co-operative Dairy.

Mrs. Tyacke, the most seriously hurt, received a severe cut in her right upper arm which opened an artery and caused her to lose a large quantity of blood. After preliminary treatment at the Emergency Hospital, she was taken to the Pasadena Hospital, where a minor operation on the wound was performed. It was reported that although her condition is serious, she has a good chance to recover.

The other occupants of the car, Tyacke, Mrs. Favill and the three children, Frederick, 3 years of age; Gwendolyn, 2, and Louise, 1, were all treated at the Emergency Hospital for cuts and bruises. Their injuries probably would have been more serious if the windows of the sedan had not been open when it turned over after being struck.

Electric Tram Service Begun in Chicago Limits

CHICAGO, Aug. 7. (AP)—The world's foremost railroad center today welcomed electricity as a hand-maid of steam transportation.

The Illinois Central Railroad put into operation over its thirty-eight miles of suburban lines a schedule calling for 230 electric trains a day, supplanting trains drawn by coal-burning engines. This number will be increased by the 31st inst. to 400 trains a day.

In compliment to the occasion all Chicago, and particularly the South Side, whose residents are served by the improvement, celebrated with pageant, parade and banqueting.

New schedules made possible by electric service reduce running time 15 to 30 per cent on the suburban lines.

HURT AS AUTO GOES OVER EMBANKMENT

TERRA BELLA, Aug. 7.—Hurt in an accident on the Ridge Route between here and Los Angeles late yesterday when his car went over the embankment, Frederick C. Small Combe, well-known resident of Terra Bella, is in a hospital in Bakersfield, suffering from a badly sprained back and wounds about the face which required several stitches. Not until the ambulance arrived from Bakersfield were passing motorists able to remove the injured man from his wrecked machine. The accident, which occurred near Sandbergs, is thought to have been due to the fact that rain obscured the vision of the driver to such an extent that he drove his car too near the embankment.

HERMOSA BEACH, Aug. 7.—Gerald Massey, "lip-stick sheik," is again in the toils of the law in Hermosa Beach, where he is being held in default of a $100 fine for illegal possession of liquor. Massey, who was picked up in Hermosa on July 9, last, on a drunk charge on which he paid a fine of $10, was later taken into custody by the Balboa police on a similar charge, breaking into print as the "lip-stick" sheik," so-called because of the many varieties of cosmetics which he is said to have carried for his personal use.

NILAND AREA FLOODED BY FIERCE RAIN

Tracks Washed Out After Cloudburst in Mountains Causes Torrents

CALIPATRIA, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—A cloudburst in the Chocolate Mountains north of Niland just before dark last night, sent a deluge of flood water pouring into Imperial Valley that washed out fifty yards of Southern Pacific track north of this city and caused considerable damage to crops and roads. Railroad trains into the valley this morning were operated by way of Arizona Junction, near Yuma and into the valley over the inter-California lines in Mexico. The tracks were soon repaired, however.

Flood water rushed down Mammoth and other washes leading into the valley from the mountain range and swept away crops and destroyed roads in a number of places. Damage was estimated at $40,000. A considerable area of cotton was inundated.

Freak storms struck Imperial Valley at several points during the afternoon yesterday, wind doing considerable damage at Imperial. Flood water is reported to have done some damage at the Brawley-Indio State highway and stages arriving over that route today were delayed.

Chapel Hall at Redlands Will be Built Soon

REDLANDS, Aug. 7.—The second largest building on the University of Redlands campus, the chapel hall, which will occupy the north end of the quad and face the administration building, will be built this winter. George P. Courtner, business manager, announced today that funds for this building, which will cost more than $200,000, have been obtained.

This building will complete the buildings around the quad with the exception of one boys' dormitory and a museum will be built within a year, or so it is expected.

The chapel will be the only building on the campus to have a tower. The building will cost close to $175,000 and will have an auditorium that will seat 1500. It will be equipped with a large pipe organ and the design will be to conform with other buildings on the campus.

The furnishings will cost from $40,000 to $50,000. Work will be started in October and the building completed by commencement time next June.

CHECKS FOR FRUIT MAILED

Ancheim Citrus Association Sends Approximately Quarter Million Dollars to Growers

ANAHEIM, Aug. 7.—Checks aggregating in excess of a quarter of a million dollars were placed in the mail today by the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association in payment to growers for fruit marketed during the first pool of shipment which closed June 19, according to W. H. Schureman, manager of the house.

The amount of the payment, which is reported as approximately $252,000, represents a net return to the grower of $2.23 per packed box. There were 113,000 boxes of fruit handled during the period, Mr. Schureman reported.

In addition to the amount paid to growers for the fruit, the association also spent in Anaheim during this period an amount approximating $28,000 representing salaries to employees and other miscellaneous expenses in handling the third pool shipment. Settlement has not yet been completed on the second pool, it is stated.

During the first pool period this year the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association shipped 43,000 boxes of fruit more than during the same period last year and up until the 1st inst. 87,000 more boxes had been shipped than were shipped up to the same date last year, it is said.

Payment of amounts aggregating $45,000 were made this week by the organization during the first pool-shipping period, which closed July 15, last, according to a statement this morning by W. H Johnston, manager of the house.

Growers were paid on a basis of approximately $2.173 per packed box for all grades and sizes, Mr. Johnston reported.

SCHOOL SITE APPROVED

San Bernardino Valley Junior College to Locate on Tract of Land Costing $51,000

SAN BERNARDINO, Aug. 7.—Approximately $51,000 will be paid for the thirty-four-acre site of proposed San Bernardino Valley Junior College, according to an agreement reached today by the college trustees and the Security Investment Company, owners of the tract. The site is halfway between San Bernardino and Colton.

The trustees also announced that September 25 was named as the date of an election at which a $485,000 bond issue to finance the purchase of the site and erect the first units of the institution will be submitted to voters of the district.

The purchase price for the college site is practically set by the appraisers appointed by the trustees. This appraising committee set $1500 per acre free of all street-and-lighting assessments, as the proper price for the land. This price was finally accepted by the investment company, but it was provided that the company was to pay only the assessments now against the property. The school district must pay for the paving of the streets north and south of the property.

Approximately $6000 in assessments lay against the property at the time negotiations for its purchase were begun a short time ago. This amount is to be paid by the Security Investment Company. The agreement was reached after several unsatisfactory parleys between the college board of trustees and the investment company representatives.

Come from Every Section of Southern California

Noted Local and Eastern Speakers Heard

LONG BEACH, Aug. 7.—More than 20,000 former residents of Ohio were in attendance today at the annual midsummer outing and picnic of the Ohio State Society, held at Bixby Park. Scores of men and women, prominent in Southern California civic life, and many of them prominent in years past in the life of the State of Ohio, were among those who gathered here to renew old friendships and talk over old days in the Buckeye State.

From every point in Southern California former Buckeyes poured into Long Beach this morning and by 2 o'clock this afternoon close to 20,000 had arrived at the park, where an elaborate program of speeches, games, music and other forms of entertainment had been provided by the Ohio Society of Long Beach, hosts to their former Buckeye State neighbors.

Dr. Walter F. Dexter, president of Whittier College, was the principal speaker. He was followed by Dr. R. C. H. Lenski, dean of the State college at Columbus, O., who is visiting here. Other speakers included Frank E. Benedict of Pasadena, candidate for County Supervisor; Dr. George P. Taubman, head of the famous Taubman Bible class of Long Beach; Harry B. George of Los Angeles, head of the Federation of Ohio State Societies in Southern California; Isaac Springer, treasurer; Mrs. Nellie Cardas Smith, president of the Ohio State Society of Pasadena; Alfred Redmond, president of the Ohio State Society of Los Angeles, and William G. Blatt, past president of the Federation of Ohio State Societies.

Assistant City Manager George L. Buck delivered an address of welcome to the visiting former Buckeyes on behalf of the city of Long Beach.

Mrs. Naomi Sweeney Brown of Pasadena, described by Senator Hiram Johnson as the California mocking bird, was the star feature on the entertainment program. Community singing, led by L. D. Frey of Long Beach, was another of the features of the outing.

A group of contests with suitable prizes was arranged for the following: The largest family present; the tallest girl present; tallest boy present; oldest woman; oldest man; latest arrival from Ohio; fattest young man under 21, and the oldest couple present. Rivalry for the prizes in each of the divisions was keen this afternoon.

HEADLIGHTS TESTED

Motorists Get Tags as Police Set Up Boulevard Inquiry

MONROVIA, Aug. 7.—Motorists on Foothill Boulevard for four hours last night encountered a new kind of highway blockade, all because Monrovia police got inquisitive about the condition of automobile headlights.

Borrowing a test screen from the Automobile Club, the officers erected it on the boulevard at Foothill and Heliotrop, painted a stop line twenty-five feet away and proceeded to halt every car that came along.

Seventy per cent of the entire group were improperly adjusted, according to Motor Officer Frank Ryan, who directed the test. Fifty-five drivers were given "tickets" to report at the police station with headlight-adjustment certificates. Forty-five of the number were Monrovia drivers, Ryan said.

Outstanding among the illegalities, he said, were cracked lenses, lights too high, spotlights too high, faulty reflectors and twisted lights. The test was carried out by Officers Ryan, Spickerman, Baldridge and Quiggle of Monrovia, with Police Chief Coberly and Motor Officer Pardue of Arcadia.

TOMATO CANNING TO START EARLIER

CHINO, Aug. 7.—That the local Libby cannery will handle 4000 tons of valley-grown tomatoes, which will net $75,000 to growers in this vicinity, was the announcement today of Manager Oscar Rogers. Work on the tomatoes will begin Monday morning, two weeks earlier than usual, and it is also stated that the size and quality this year is much above par. Tomato acreage this year is double that of a year ago and due to the early maturing of the crop, both peaches and tomatoes will be handled simultaneously until the remainder of the peach crop is disposed of, giving employment to 100 men and 250 women working on eight and ten-hour shifts. All of the tomatoes to be handled by the company this year have been contracted for locally, no outside fruit being used, Mr. Rogers added.

CITRUS SHIPMENTS MAY REACH RECORD

RIVERSIDE, Aug. 7.—Prospects of breaking Riverside district citrus shipment records back to 1910-11 appeared good today, as an announcement was made that the total carloads shipped to date is 4353 and the season's figure probably will be 4500. In 1910-11 a total of 5740 cars were shipped from here. The orange and grapefruit shipments to date total 4124, while those of the corresponding date a year ago aggregated but 2184.

VERNON TAX RATE REDUCED

VERNON, Aug. 7. — The city of Vernon has fixed a low rate of 29 cents on each $100 of assessed valuation of property to take care of the general municipal expenditures during the fiscal year, according to P. J Durbin, member of the financial committee fo the Board of City Trustees. This is a reduction of last year's rate. This city has a high assessed valuation for its area and as streets are on the average some distance apart, the comparative cost of maintenance is small.

HEAVY DAMAGES ASKED IN CRASH

Los Angeles Couple Cut and Bruised Want $31,000

Mother of Girl Sued Killed in Collision

Asserted Locked Steering Gear Caused Accident

VENTURA, Aug. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. George Barber of Los Angeles sustained damages amounting to $31,000 when their car was struck by another car driven by Miss Ethel Gordon, Seattle, on the Conejo grade near Camarillo, last Sunday, according to the assertion of two complaints filed in Superior Court here today.

Mrs Harry Gordon, the mother of the woman named defendant in the Barber complaint, was fatally injured in the crash, while both daughters received severe injuries. Both Mr. and Mrs. Barber were treated at the Big Sisters' Hospital here for injuries and were discharged shortly afterwards.

According to the complaint, the damages resulted from reckless driving on the part of Miss Ethel Gordon, who collided with the Barber car.

George Barber, according to the first complaint filed, received lacerations and contusions, injuries to the hands, legs and back. His wife received similar injuries.

Two separate complaints were filed against Miss Gordon and her sister, Mrs. Sarah Yeagley, who was in the Gordon car, when the accident occurred.

George Barber asks a judgment of $15,000 for personal injuries, and $1000 for damages to car. A second complaint filed by George Barber and his wife, demanded a judgment of $15,000 for Mrs Barber's injuries.

According to Miss Ethel Gordon's story after the accident she found the wheels locked on her on a curve and was unable to stop the car before it crashed into that driven by Barber, who was going in the opposite direction.

New Plans Up for Long Beach Track Removal

LONG BEACH, Aug. 7.—With the $900,000 bond issue for removal of Union Pacific Railroad tracks from Ocean avenue voted down at the special election, July 16, last, Long Beach citizens are renewing efforts to bring about the removal of the tracks and to provide the railroad company with a new right of way into Long Beach. A possible right of way through North Long Beach is being discussed by members of a committee appointed for that purpose, it was revealed today.

A conference is to be held by committee members with F. H. Knickerbocker, general manager of the Salt Lake division of the Union Pacific, at Los Angeles on Monday, it was said. The tentative route will be submitted to the railroad official for approval.

The proposed right of way can be obtained through unsubdivided land with only two property owners to deal with, it is said. The proposed route starts from the present route at a point east of Cherry avenue and north of Fifty-second street, following the course of the creek southwesterly past the Virginia Country Club to the flood-control channel and thence directly south to the harbor district.

CLAY PLANT TO PUT IN NEW EQUIPMENT

BAKERSFIELD, Aug. 7.—Spending $20,000 on the installation of a dryer and planning the expenditure of $40,000 on a mill, the Consolidated Clay Company of San Francisco is taking a long stride toward the operation of vast clay deposits twenty-five miles northeast of Mojave on a large scale. The clay beds are the property of Charles Koehn, veteran desert miner and pioneer of the early mining boom in California. It is said that a second mill may be installed by the California Products Company of Los Angeles, and, if this is done, the clay pits will turn out 200 tons of fine ground clay daily.

BOYS ARRESTED IN WATERMELON RAIDS

ARCADIA, Aug. 7.—Enticing watermelons in an unguarded patch may be generally considered fair game for boyhood, but it is a different story when Motor Officer H. R. Fry of Arcadia happens along just in time to witness the get-away. This is vouched for by three El Monte boys who learned it by experience and contributed $10 each to the City Treasury when haled before Judge W. H. Horlock in Police Court this morning.

ROEGGE MUST STAND TRIAL

Application for Habeas Corpus Denied Nu-Air Rubber Head in Asserted Fraud Case

RIVERSIDE, Aug. 7.—His application for a writ of habeas corpus, decided by Judge Freeman today, Fred C. Roegge, head of the Nu-Air Rubber Company of America, will stand trial in Superior Court here on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

In handing down his decision, Judge Freeman upheld the ruling of Justice of the Peace Garner, who, after a six-day preliminary hearing at High Grove, ordered that Roegge be bound over to the Superior Court.

From the evidence at the hearing on Roegge's application, Judge Freeman said, in announcing his decision, it appeared that the defendant submitted to arrest solely to lay a foundation for a writ of habeas corpus. This, he said, is contrary to the meaning of the law and an abuse of the process.

Throughout the hearing on the application the question of whether Roegge requested that he be arrested, or surrendered because of his belief that the Sheriff would ultimately apprehend him, was argued by opposing counsel.

'Fearful Four,' Once Bold Men, Quiet Ones Now

MAYWOOD, Aug. 7.—"The fearful four," composed of a quartet of boys who have been confining their operations to thefts at the Woodlawn schoolhouse, have finally been run down, and are now on probation for a month, to make regular reports to Constable Joseph Poliquin of Bell, as to their conduct, every few days.

For some time the young "desperados" have been making visits to the schoolhouse, where they stole pencils, card punches, thumb tacks, rubber bands and other small supplies. Marshal David E. Garner of this city and Poliquin have been on their trail, which finally led to the 1000 block on Baker avenue, in Bell. Here they found a den hidden in the weeds. The construction of the front was of cardboard, which had been adorned with skull and crossbones, and in bold letters were "Fearful Four, Keep Out." The lads had attached a wire to the front gate which connected with their dugout, and which gave an alarm whenever the gate was opened, enabling any of the lads who might be in the den to escape.

The two officers discovered the loot in the den and later placed the boys under arrest. Their names were not made known, but after they had been given good lecturing they were put on probation and if their conduct hereafter is not proper they will be turned over to Juvenile Hall.

Knife Duel Over Small Sum Ends in Death of Man

BAKERSFIELD, Aug. 7.—Ramon Osuna, 45 years of age, is dead in a local mortuary, stabbed in the heart, and Jose Saillo, 25, is in the County Jail pending investigation of Osuna's stabbing following what the Sheriff's off declares was a duel to death at 1 o'clock this afternoon on the Griffen ranch, twenty-five miles south of Bakersfield, during which the alleged slayer was armed with a pocket knife and Osuna with a butcher knife.

Saillo, who had been employed on the ranch only a few days, and the older man, who had worked there for several years, quarreled, according to the authorities, over $5 which Osuna alleged Saillo owed Mrs. Osuna.

The Sheriff's office was notified of the tragedy about 1:30 o'clock and Jack Shomate, deputy sheriff, hastened to the scene, where he found Osuna dead and Saillo drunk. The latter, it is said, had been discharged from his position on the Griffen rench early today. Coroner Norman C. House expects to hold an inquest tomorrow or Monday.

ROBBERY FOLLOWS DISPLAY OF MONEY

CORCORAN, Aug. 7. — Carelessly displaying a roll of bills in a pool hall in this city cost George Austin $203. Eris Morrison, a negro, and Abdilla Rodriquez, Mexican, are in the County Jail charged with the crime, Austin stating they look like the men who robbed him. Rodriquez was released from San Quentin only two months ago, after serving a two-year sentence for carrying a big knife and cutting up another Mexican.

Schools Audit in Pasadena Set for This Week

PASADENA, Aug. 7.—An audit of the books of the Pasadena school system will be conducted next week by representatives of the Los Angeles county grand jury, which is conducting its formal biennial investigation of the financial conditions of various school districts in the county.

With a balance of more than $1,000,000 at the end of the last fiscal year and an excellent auditing system in effect, the local school district's accounts are expected to prove entirely satisfactory, Board of Education officials say

According to Auditor Miner B. Phillips, the check-up is being made because nine districts in Los Angeles county went bankrupt this year. The last Pasadena audit by the grand jury was in 1923.

HANFORD, Aug. 7.—Girls attending the Y.W.C.A. summer camp at Lake Sequoia were in danger from the big fire which raged around Pinehurst, Fresno county, according to Mrs. W. D. James of this city, one of the officers in charge, who just returned here. Rangers told the girls to be prepared to move to the lakeshore on short notice. Heavy smoke hung for hours over the camp trees in Gen. Grant Park. One of them, the largest in the world, was threatened. Great pines and firs are now charred skeletons and the underbrush for miles is a mass of ashes.

CULVER CITY BIDDING

Effort Being Made to Get Country Club Unit Planned as Adjunct to Breakers

CULVER CITY, Aug. 8.—Efforts are being made by business men here to induce the officials of the Breakers Club to choose a site in this vicinity for the country club unit in the trinity of clubhouses planned by the organization.

Three sites between Los Angeles and the beach are said to be favored by the board of governors, one of which is not far from this city. The plans call for sufficient acreage to provide an eighteen-hole golf course and thirty acres to be interwoven with bridle paths in addition to expensive area for clubhouse grounds and athletic courts.

Unique plans for the $1,000,000 city and athletic club unit, on which construction is to start immediately at a site off Sixth street in Los Angeles, call for two separate entrances on Loomis and St. Paul streets, respectively, either making immediately accessible every suite in the thirteen-story limit-height building.

Ground breaking for the city and athletic club will take place within a short time, and the contract for the structure calls for completion within seven months, according to President Harry L. Lewis, of the Breakers Club. The building will be built under complete direction of Arthur Bard from plans drawn by L. A. Smith.

The handsome eight-story beach club unit, at Marine Terrace and Ocean Front, Santa Monica, is being rushed to completion and will be opened before the end of the year, probably late in November. The esplanade on the beach and several units of the clubhouse proper, already are in use by the members.

Near the City Satisfactory to Inspecto

SAN FERNANDO, Aug. 5.—The San Fernando sewagecated near the Pacoima Wash, south of town, is now fully, according to an inspection conducted by Black & engineers, Los Angeles, and the city officials.

The plant was designed only for the incorporated city of San Fernando, comprising a territory of 2.28 square miles and having an assumed future population of 10,000 actually connected with the sewer. A daily sewerage flow of sixty gallons per capita is provided for, or a total daily flow of 600,000 gallons.

The sewerage system in the city is planned on a much more liberal basis, the main eighteen-inch outfall sewer being designed to care for a large adjacent district of Los Angeles territory, having an estimated combined future population of 67,000. This liberal capacity in the main sewers was made

COUNTRY PROPERTY—

A SENSATIONAL SACRIFICE!
$5500. Terms. WALLIN, Francis & Grove, first house south, Ontario.

A country estate you would be proud to own: a live-stock and dairy property you can operate at a profit; an investment opportunity that is clearly apparent.

2400 acres, including 1500 acres rich bottom land and several hundred acres beautifully wooded, rolling land; an abundance of water for irrigation; miles and miles of new fences; splendid set practically new buildings, including owner's house that is among the very finest in Northern California, practically new tractors and every implement and tool needed to operate; over 300 head high class dairy cattle, about two-thirds of them registered animals; over 200 head hogs. Mostly pure-bred stock.

Owner is a prominent eastern man whose plans have required a sudden change, making it imperative that he sell this property at once. To move it he is prepared to make a sensational sacrifice for quick sale. In fact, in my own opinion, which is supported by that of experts in land valuation, the price on this entire property, real and personal, is substantially below a conservative valuation of the bare land.

Do not delay in investigating this rare opportunity. It will not long be available. Do not submit any exchange proposition.

If you wish to interview me personally, I will be at Hotel Rosslyn, Los Angeles, Monday, August 9, arriving about noon.

CORN ON THE COB

The conservative, sensitive and spiffy roasting-ear addict, fixing his face at a five-row gauge, eases or oozes the roasting ear across the countenance and back, gently but with firmness, after the manner of a slow-motion picture of a "French harp" in harmonious action. Thus is produced the ineffable music of the sph-ears. All the while the corn is being fed from right to left and greasily back again, joy without end, the corn-cobber is supposed to turn his masticating apparatus rhapsodically loose, permitting gustatory nature to use her own best judgment. It is not good form to swiffle nosily. One need not snort nor bug the eyes. Both ears of the corn-cobber should be pinned back, if necessary. The sleeves may be rolled to the elbow, as warm butter is not by any means easy to remove from the garments of the swiffling gourmand. Some of the more persnickety stick their corncobs on "holders" and adjust dainty facial fenders to protect ears, eyes and coiffure, but as for us—just move over, please, and leave that heaped platter of green corn right where it's "at." It's the open season for con-on-the-cob and we're open for the season. As for rules, we favor the catch-as-catch-can system and no favors asked.—[Lafayette Journal and Courier.

SWAT THAT FLY

With us, the common house fly without question is the most frequent transmitter of disease. There are also biting flies that are responsible for the spread of other diseases. Among the diseases carried by the domestic fly are typhoid, cholera, amebic dysentery, ganggosa and oriental sore, or Bagdad boil. In the first four diseases the fly transmits the infection by carrying organisms from the discharges of the sick to the food of the well. These four diseases have been the cause of countless deaths.

Obviously, it is desirable to accomplish the same ends with flies as with mosquitoes, though different methods are necessary. Screens are, of course, a necessity to prevent their access to the sick and the well and to food supplies. All infected discharges from the sick should be sterilized before being disposed of. Fly swatters, fly paper, fly poison and traps all have their places.

There are a number of cousins of the domestic fly that cause harm. Yaws, or frambesia, filariasis, tuaremia, or deer-fly fever, cutaneous tropical myiasis and trypanosomiasis are transmitted by them. Tularemia is accompanied with high fever and is carried by a horsefly.—[Journal of the American Medical Association.

GOT THE PIGEON

Here's one "Cot" Tierney tells about Wilbert Robinson, Brooklyn manager:

"We was all sittin' on the bench one day last year," said "Cot," "and we was some eight runs ahead; and you know Robbie likes to joke and kid when the club is goin' good.

"Some pigeons is flying over the field, and we are aiming with imaginary rifles. Well, Robbie sees one flying low toward third base and he raises up to get a good aim and cracks the top of his head on the top of the dugout.

"Well, we all begin to laugh. His glasses fall down on his nose and his false teeth drop to the ground.

"'What you guys laughin' at?' he says. 'I ain't hurt.'

"He takes off his cap and blood is trickling down his head. Then he says: 'Well, I got the pigeon, anyway.'"—[Exchange.

JUST HER LUCK

There was a big crowd round the gates of Buckingham Palace, and the elderly woman pushed her way determinedly through it to see what was happening.

At last she found herself in front of a policeman guarding one of the smaller gates.

"What is happening?" she asked.

"Chilian Mission," snapped the irritated policeman.

"A shilling admission!" repeated the elderly woman, mournfully. "Oh, I've always longed to see over the palace, and I've only got nine-pence on me this morning. Just my luck!"—[Tit-Bits.

NOTORIETY AND FAME

Mandy was very fond of telling jokes to her neighbor, so one morning she decided to keep Rachel guessing this one.

"Rachel, what is the difference between notoriety and fame?

"Law's Mandy, I can't ever guess that one," said Rachel.

"Well, a thousand dollars worth of roses will barely fill a room with perfume, but with a dollar's worth of fried onions you could scent up the whole town. Now, Rachel, that's the difference."—[Exchange.

FRIEND OF GAINES WILL TAKE STAND

"Confession Witness" to Testify in Murder Case This Week

SEATTLE, Aug. 7. (AP)—When trial of Wallace Cloyes Gaines, accused of murdering his daughter, Sylvia Howard Gaines, adjourned today to Monday, ending two days' testimony, thirty-six State witnesses had testified.

Louis Stern, a friend of Gaines to whom the State asserts the defendant made a confession the night of June 16, last, when Miss Gaines, 22 years of age, Smith College graduate, was choked and beaten to death while on an evening walk, will go upon the stand next week.

Deputy Coroner Koepfli told the jury today that the afternoon of June 17 Gaines in the Gaines home complained because Sylvia didn't cook to her father's satisfaction.

Koepfli said Gaines offered him and other officers a drink of rhubarb wine in the home, and when they declined remarked: "It's no good anyhow. There's no kick in it."

Gaines then asked Koepfli, the witness reported, whether Miss Gaines had been attacked. Gaines told the visitors that he and Sylvia had quarreled about beets for dinner the evening of her death.

Four Quizzed in Hall-Mills Slaying Query

SOMERVILLE (N. J.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Four witnesses were questioned today in the revived Hall-Mills murder investigation.

State Senator Alexander Simpson, in charge of the investigation, spent the day in Jersey City and no announcements of the nature of the answers given by the witnesses were made.

Miss Catherine Eastall of New Brunswick, one of the witnesses, testified in the first investigation that she was walking along a New Brunswick street about the time of the murder of Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills in September, 1922, and was "picked up" in the automobile of Ralph V. M. Gorsline and taken to her home.

Senator Simpson and Capt. J. J. Lamb of State Police said yesterday that a warrant for Gorsline's arrest as "accessory after the fact" has been issued.

Officials Will Hear Captain in Norlina Wreck

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Federal steamboat inspectors today entered into the preliminary stage of the searching investigation which they said they would make into the wrecking of the freighter Norlina, which went hard ashore Thursday morning during a dense fog off the Sonoma county coast, approximately 100 miles north of here.

The inspectors said they were prepared to question closely Capt. John Soderlun, commanding officer of the Norlina, Second Mate Fred Atwood and the thirty-five members of the crew, and that they had noted a discrepancy in the reports submitted by Capt. Soderlun and Second Mate Atwood. Atwood was at the wheel when

Pair Saved by One-Quart Law in Liquor Case

MOUNT RAINIER (Md.) Aug. 7. (AP)—The law of Prince George's county which permits a resident one quart of liquor a month, saved two men here from conviction on a series of charges.

The men, H. A. Kenny and Allen Aldrich, were arrested July 25, last, by Constable C. E. Flory of Bladensburg. Kenny was charged with driving an automobile while under the influence of liquor and interfering with an officer. Aldrich was charged with disorderly conduct and possessing liquor.

At their hearing last night, Justice of the Peace Robert E. Joyce eyed dubiously the evidence in the case—a bottle partly filled with Scotch whisky, and another partly filled with gin. State's Attorney Alan Bowie agreed that the contents of both bottles combined would hardly make the permissible quart, and Judge Joyce dismissed the charges.

Girl Sues for Large Sum on Attack Charge

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) Aug. 7. (AP)—Eight hundred thousand dollars is asked by Evelyn Ogden, 18-year-old Ventnor girl, in damage suits filed yesterday in Supreme Court at Mays Landing against four youths.

The defendants, each of whom she is suing for $200,000, are: James Beury Jr., James Leeds, Jr., Edward Seeley and Vivian Smith, Jr., members of resort families.

They were found guilty of criminal attack by a jury last November but the verdict was set aside and a retrial ordered.

Santa Ana Organization to be Followed by Others This Week

SANTA ANA, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) With several hundred of the leading citizens of Orange county in attendance, the Orange County Shortridge-for-Senator Club was organized this evening. J. S. Smart, wholesale grocer, was named temporary chairman and plans were laid to organize similar clubs next week in [illegible] Orange, Anaheim, Fullerton and Garden Grove.

Men interested in the citrus, walnut and almond industries are backing Senator Shortridge solidly, because of his earnest advocacy of a protective tariff for California agricultural and horticultural products. Senator Shortridge will be in Orange county on the 19th inst., and will speak in Santa Ana, Anaheim, Fullerton and Orange. His supporters here are confident this will be a Shortridge county when the ballots are counted on the 31st inst.

MOUND YIELDS BOY'S BODY

Skeleton 2000 Years Old, Marbles and Carved S Found in Ohio Prehistoric Burial Grounds

CHILLICOTHE (O.) Aug. 7. (AP)—The skeleton of an 11 or 12-year-old boy with a number of marbles, highly prized relics of childhood, was moved from the Pricer Mound of the Seip group, near Bainbridge, miles west of here, yesterday.

This is the second of a group of burials back in the mound where last year the "great pearl burial" was unearthed and where this summer five cremated burials with the usual finds of a set of black tan and white wild cat jaws and marine tortoise shell combs were found.

WOVEN GARMENT

The boy's body had been interred in a log cabin-like structure and was covered with a canopy, the mould of which was found. The body had been clothed in a garment of woven fabric. The grave contained many unusual ceremonials specimens, H. C. Shetrone, curator of the Ohio Museum, said.

"We found a number made from chlorite, a fine, close-grained stone that takes a very high polish, engraved in beautiful designs. They had been placed there reverently by loving hands," he reported.

"We believe that the game of marbles was a time-honored pastime in the days of the mound builders. These little fellows probably are more than 2000 years old," he continued, for the first time his idea of the age of the

WORLD BIDS FOR SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GOODS

LOS ANGELES EXPORTS GO TO ALL PARTS OF GLOBE

Survey of Shipments Reveals Story of Marked Opportunities in Manufacturing Lines

BY WILL O'BYRNE

Real Estate and Industrial Editor

Los Angeles is exporting goods made in Southern California to all parts of the world. It is now the sixth city in exports. It has become known internationally as a manufacturing center, the advertising value of which is difficult to estimate. Its metropolitan area ranks seventh among the nation's manufacturing districts. During the past six months its industrial pay rolls have produced goods on an annual value basis of more than $1,300,000,000, a gain of $25,000,000 compared to the same period in 1925.

Linked with its export business are stories of the marked success of many Southern California firms in business from eighteen months to five years' time. Such striking examples of sound expansion reveal the many opportunities afforded here for manufacturing.

Discussing exportation of goods made in Southern California, Clarence E. Matson, manager of the trade extension department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, said yesterday:

WORLD MARKET

"Johannesburg, South Africa; the Island of Mauritius in the South Indian Ocean, New Zealand, Mesopotamia, Chile, England, Germany, Japan, Buenos Aires, Columbia, Singapore, Buenos Aires, Columbia, Venezuela, Peru, Borneo, represent but a few markets to which Southern California manufactured goods are being exported.

"Nor has it taken years to develop the trade. Some of the firms have been in business about eighteen months, some as long as five years. It shows the tremendous opportunities existing here for manufacturers.

"A Los Angeles firm which manufactures subsoil plows especially suited for irrigation farming began exporting its product to Mauritius two or three years ago. Last month a shipment of Los Angeles-made automobile tires went to the same island, and only last week the chamber had a call from a manufacturer of Ford accessories who said he had an order from Mauritius and wanted to know how to ship there.

SOUTHLAND MAPS

"The gold fields of South Africa call on Los Angeles for supplies. Most of the laboratory testing equipment in the Johannesburg mining regions was manufactured by a Los Angeles firm. Scarcely a ship of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha goes out of Los Angeles around the world, touching at Durban, South Africa, that does not carry a shipment from this particular firm.

"About two months ago a gentleman from New Zealand visited Los Angeles and called on an export agent who has been building up considerable business in New Zealand. The visitor said that just before he left his wife had asked him to take apart a dust mop for her, and his patience had been exhausted in attempting the job.

"He asked if America does not produce an improved sort of dust mop that can be taken apart without so much damage to the human temper. The Los Angeles export agent did not know much about dust mops, but he happened to remember that he had seen a sign indicating a factory making such an article in Pasadena.

"He took the New Zealand man to

FACT AND COMMENT

Emerson, though some declare it was Elbert Hubbard, is credited with saying that if a "man write a better book, preach a better sermon or make a better mousetrap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door."

It is significant that the world is beating such a path to Southern California through the harbor of Los Angeles, because this sunset shore is becoming the seat of invention and the home of better production.

There is a concern here that manufactures a book-sewing and pamphlet-sewing machine. It has been in buiness for about two years and its product is being sold now throughout Europe.

Another firm that makes a wooden roller used for rolling out flax in the linen industry, about eighteen months ago began going after an export business and it is now selling that wooden roller in all parts of the world where linen is manufactured.

What sometimes appears to be an almost insurmountable obstacle turns out to be a blessing in disguise. For instance, this is a country where most farming is carried on by irrigation.

In many cases that requires the pumping of water and in the early stages of its development in Southern California users of pumps found an upkeep cost that foreshadowed failure.

Irrigation water often carries a considerable quantity of foreign matter. Necessity being the mother of invention, engineers designed a pump to cope with the conditions. As a result pumps made here are shipped to all parts of the world where irrigation is used.

Talk about opportunity knocking at one's door. Manufacturing opportunity in Southern California is raising such a hullabaloo that it is now heard around the world.

Orange juice is so common here as to escape notice from most of us until we become thirsty. But about a year ago a local firm got the idea that other people in other parts of the world might also like it when thirsty.

In the short space of one year an export business has been developed for orange juice that is world-wide.

Packing firms in Southern California needed a better grading machine. It was invented and that machine is now being exported to all other countries that grow oranges. So is the machine for making orange juice.

It's a rather long jump from orange juice to glass door knobs, but that is another product being manufactured in Southern California and shipped to all parts of the civilized world.

Los Angeles has not only tapped the markets of the world by its exports, but it offers excellent oppor-

EXPANSION OF CONCERN ANNOUNCED

Electrical Supply Company to Occupy New Quarters in Wholesale District

Emphasizing the importance of Los Angeles as the distribution center of electrical supplies, appliances and equipment for the Pacific Southwest, Frank J. Airey, district manager of the Pacific States Electric Company here, yesterday announced that the company would occupy its new five-story headquarters on the 9th inst. The new quarters, including both offices and warehouse, are located at 385 East Second street at Central avenue, in the heart of the wholesale district.

Growth of the entire Pacific Southwest and the steady increase in demand for the electrical products distributed by the company necessitated larger quarters, Airey explained. Greater office space will permit the handling of present and future demands adequately, while storage space and stockrooms have been enlarged to meet demands of electrical contractors. A larger counter space has been installed also.

"Consistent newspaper advertising has been one of the important factors in the company's rapid development," said Airey. "In 1921 our installation program was started after a survey disclosed the public's lack of appreciation of the real conveniences of a complete wiring system."

SHOP BUILDING

The Los Angeles Railway Company is taking bids for erecting a one-story and part two-story shop building at 792 East Fifteenth street. It will be of brick and concrete construction and is estimated to cost $85,000. It will contain about 42,000 square feet of floor space.

MORE CLUBS PROJECTED

Recreational Institutions Promised Southland Society and Sportsmen

Four more club projects have been announced. Many millions have been spent in fostering pleasure clubs in Southland centers during the last few months. The new Hollywood Olympic Club was projected this week. The Breakers Club announced a proposed Los Angeles athletic and recreational headquarters. Las Olas Beach Club is preparing to build a height-limit unit in the rear of the present clubhouse now under construction between Venice and Playa Del Rey. The Ocean View Club has started construction just north of the Municipal Pier and Auditorium in Santa Monica. Many more such projects are under way at the present time.

The Hollywood Olympic Club is scheduled to rise on the northeast corner of Highland and Franklin avenues. It will cost $1,000,000 exclusive of the ninety-nine-year ground lease which involves $1,100,000, according to Herman Sims, Hollywood broker who negotiated the lease between the club and Fred W. Reams, owner. The site is 170 x 195. The building will rise ten stories with a height-limit tower, according to Walker & Eisen, architects.

ATHLETIC UNIT

The Breakers Club Los Angeles unit is projected for Sixth and Loomis streets as a thirteen-story height-limit structure costing approximately $1,000,000. L. A. Smith designed the club. It will be used as an athletic and recreational branch of the beach club, officials declared. Arthur Bard will be in charge of construction activities.

Features of the club will include a roof garden overlooking the city. There will be an indoor arena accommodating approximately 5000 spectators. Handball courts, billiard rooms, ladies' reception rooms, a ballroom, and a preview theater are planned as part of the structure.

The additional building at Las Olas Beach Club will cost approximately $1,000,000, officials of the club declared. Work on the first unit of the club started yesterday under the direction of Wilson Brothers, Santa Monica contractors. Work on the second and larger structure will start when this first $350,000 unit is completed, according to Joseph M. W. Joostan, treasurer and general manager.

Builders are at work on the Ocean View Beach Club in Santa Monica. The three-story structure will follow a Spanish and Moorish motif, according to Arthur C. Scholz, who designed the project and is to cost $200,000.

H. C. Seymour, president of the board of governors, declared that the Ocean View Holding Company owns the club site. The club will include a spaciou dining-room, showers, plunge, locker rooms, card rooms, and a lounge. A children's playground will be provided, according to present plans.

MONTH'S PERMITS TOTAL $1,721,456

Building permits numbering 626 and representing a building cost of $1,721,456 were issued by the Building Department from the 2nd to the 6th inst., bringing the total for the year to 22,760 permits, valued at $79,009,627.

According to the local chapter of the Associated General Contractors 780 permits valued at $2,224,129 were issued during the corresponding interval last year and from January 1st to August 6th last year the department authorized 27,112 permits aggregating $96,698,482.

NINETY-ACRE DEAL SHOWS VALUE RISE

Niemeyer Vineyard is Sold Through Realty Firm for $175,000

LANKERSHIM, Aug. 7.—The ninety-acre vineyard owned for more than twenty years by A. Niemeyer had been purchased through the Evans-Lee Corporation of Los Angeles for $175,000, for a client whose name is withheld.

Mr. Niemeyer purchased sixty acres of the property in 1904 at $21 per acre, and later acquired an additional adjoining thirty acres at $200 per acre.

The Niemeyer property is located at the junction of Vineland avenue and Oxnard street, and is considered one of the choicest of the remaining larger holdings in the valley. Rumors connect the purchase with moving-picture concerns. It is known that representatives of Fox, Lloyd and other studios have been active throughout this district during recent weeks.

Clegg Named by Coffin as State Confab Leader

C. W. Clegg has been named by President George H. Coffin, Jr., of the Los Angeles Realty Board, as chairman of that organization's State convention committee, it was announced yesterday at the board offices. Mr. Clegg has accepted the appointment and already has begun making arrangements to take care of a large delegation of Los Angeles realty men to the confab on Del Monte in October.

Information has been received from William C. Keim, State chairman, that accommodations at Del Monte and Monterey are rapidly being taken up and Clegg is urging that early reservations be made by Los Angeles realty men who expect to attend. These should be made at the offices of the realty board, according to Clegg.

Tatums Arrive Home From Trip Around World

Officials and members of the Los Angeles Realty Board composed a delegation of welcome to their past president and Mrs. C. C. C. Tatum who arrived home Tuesday following an extended trip abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Tatum sailed from Los Angeles Harbor on the S. S. Resolute last February. They visited many points in Asia and Europe, spending the last few weeks abroad in Paris. Plans to return to Los Angeles in October were altered because of the illness of Mrs. Tatum's mother.

Another realty board official, Treasuer Robert Baker, is touring Europe, accompanied by Mrs. Baker. They will return to Los Angeles late in the fall.

SALESMEN'S DRIVE FOR MEMBERS ON

Division Expects to Secure Five Hundred Before Del Monte Convention Date

The campaign for new members in the salesmen's division of the California Real Estate Association is well under way, according to announcement of F. S. Kadletz, Los Angeles, chairman of the membership committee of this division.

General Chairman G. D. Robertson of Los Angeles hopes that at least 500 new members will be procured prior to the annual convention of the State association at Del Monte, October 13 to 16. To stimulate interest he has offered two prizes: first, a trip to the Del Monte convention to the member turning in the largest number of acceptable applications, and second, a beautiful gold watch, suitably engraved.

Membership teams are being appointed by the chairman in every realty board in order that an intensive drive may be made. Five teams of three members each are already at work in Los Angeles.

Talks On Business Property:

THE BACKBONE OF REAL ESTATE!

VACANT lots sometimes jump rapidly in price. Suburban values quickly respond to unlooked-for development. Soaring building costs have brought sudden increases to numerous types of improved property. But the backbone of city real estate is always central business property. It is the investor's reserve fund, his anchor of safety in all his operations. No other type of realty remains so unshaken by business fluctuations, so impervious to depressions. We specialize on sound investments of this character. Your investments are our business.

Central Property

We have complete data on several attractive properties in the central business district. This is your opportunity to acquire property that, based on the past, will double and triple in value in the next ten years.

MEXICO SHIPS EUROPE COTTON

First Consignment Goes to Liverpool

New York Also in Market for Fiber

About 150,000 Bales to be Exported

TAMPICO (Mex.) Rug. 7.—Mexico's 1926 cotton crop has begun to move through this port, and the high quality of the cotton is attested by the fact that Europe is a heavy buyer. Liverpool took the first shipment of 5100 bales, made the last week in July, and New York the second, of 1800 bales, both shipments being from the Hacienda Lequecito in the Torreon district.

Two other shipments also were made to New York but it was understood the cotton was to be transshipped there for Europe, as faster service sometimes can be secured by way of New York, faster ships being employed. The Torreon Chamber of Commerce has informed forwarding agents here that approximately 150,000 bales of cotton will be shipped through this port from that area, and it is believed the greater part of it will go to Europe, either direct or via New York. The remainder of the Torreon crop will be taken by Mexican mills.

TOW-HEADED MEXICANS

Europe also took the biggest mineral shipment of the last week, the Holland-American liner Leerdan lifting nearly 7000 tons of zinc concentrates, bullion, lead and arsenic. At the same time, the Hamburg-American liner Toledo brought a party of farm colonists from Germany and Lithuania, all bound for European farm colonies in the interior, and four brides-elect from the old country for colonists that had come over previously.

The bridegrooms met them here and they were married under the supervision of immigration officials before they were allowed to proceed. It looks as if there were going to be a considerable crop of tow-headed Mexican citizens in the near future, for some thousands of immigrants from Central Europe are coming every year now to work on Mexican farms. They are thrifty, energetic, industrious fellows, and their assimilation by Mexico is likely to prove a stabilizing and beneficial influence.

GROWING VEGETABLE TRADE

Following announcement last week that a New Orleans line of fruit steamers would establish weekly service from Tampico to New Orleans for vegetables and tropic fruits, the Ward Line announces similar service to New York and is even sending representatives through the country to arouse farmers to the opportunities for vegetable growing. In effect, the Ward Line is trying to "contract" the farmers to certain acreages, as canneries in the United States contract with tomato and fruit growers.

This is an innovation in Eastern Mexico, though commission men have practiced something of the same kind in the winter vegetable belt along the West Coast, and it is arousing Mexican farmers to the possibilities of agriculture for export.

The coming winter doubtless will see many tracts which long have lain idle under cultivation, and community production in commercial quantities will be scattering its benefits widely. What cotton has done for Torreon, winter vegetables for the West Coast and hennequen for Yucatan community production of adaptable fruits and vegetavles will be doing for other places.

NEW CHANCE FOR "PRINCES"

There used to be a story about a New York hotel clerk who appealed to the manager in perplexity. "There's a prince from Europe and a hennequen grower from Yucatan here, and both want the bridal suite," he said. "Give it to the hennequen grower," replied the manager. "They are the plutocrats among princes." For many years the rest of Mexico has envied Yucatan its specialty and let it go at that, but lately experiments have indicated that hennequen can be grown as well in other States as in Yucatan.

The first successful experiments were made near Victoria, Tamps., and now another big hacienda near Pretil, in the same State of Tamaulipas, has begun shipping hennequen to New York, where its quality has been declared excellent. The soil and climate about Victoria and Pretil are very similar to those in Sonora and other Mexican States not too far from the coast.

Hennequen is the fiber from which rope, binders' twine, and so forth are made. It is estimated that four-fifths of all the rope manufactured in the United States is made of Mexican hennequen, and when the De la Huerta revolt a few years ago interrupted the supply for a while every wheat grower in America felt the pinch, binders' twine becoming scarce and expensive. Mexico seems to have a world monopoly on hennequen production, but it now appears that that monopoly is not necessarily confined to Yucatan alone.

LISTING SYSTEM CONSIDERED

Huntington Park Brokers Oppose Increase in National Dues

HUNTINGTON PARK, Aug. 7.—Local brokers have under consideration a plan to put their rental service under the multiple-listing system. They declare that in doing this it will be a service to the merchants of the city in locating new people in this territory. The local board has gone on record as opposing the raise in dues of the National Real Estate Association from $5 to $10 a year.

Saturday is Set as Test Day for Broker License

Many applications for real estate brokers' licenses have been received at the offices of State Real Estate Commissioner J. R. Gabbert during the past month and the monthly examination will be conducted by Deputy Commissioner Richardson in the Los Angeles Realty Board auditorium Saturday morning.

The tests, which are written, will begin promptly at 9 a.m. and only those who are present on time will be permitted to take them, Mr. Richardson said yesterday. This ruling is made necessary because of the fact that instructions are issued by Deputy Richardson to the applicants but once.

Nearly 100 applicants were examined at the July session, a majority of whom were unable to obtain the required grade of 70 per cent.

FAMOUS TO ENTER CONTEST

California's Noted Realty Leaders Scheduled for Del Monte Golf Tournament

The California realtors' championship golf tournament to be held at the twenty-second annual convention of the California Real Estate Association at Del Monte, October 13, 14, 15 and 16, will bring into the play many of the leading realtors of the State.

Col. William May Garland, former national president; W. I. Hollingsworth, Albert E. Kern and Frazier O. Reed, former national officers, all golf veterans, will be on the course. Of the present-day officers of the national association who will participate may be mentioned Fred E. Reed, recently elected first vice-president, and Harry B. Allen, district vice-president.

Harry H. Culver, State president, plans to enter, and among the enthusiasts who will play may be mentioned such well-known names as Fred T. Wood, Harry A. Mortson, Peter Hanson, A. R. Galloway, Ed G. Hughson, Dave Hepburn, W. J. Mortimer, Leon L. Dwight, Austin Bailey, Hal Barnett, George Nelson, J. Henry Wolbold, William H. Daum, H. F. Ramaciotti, Bruce Cornwall, Arthur Laack, B. A. Banks, Hal G. Hotchkiss, Will Wright, Roy Bleifuss, Frank W. Aust, Hal K. Sears, Roy Long, Frank C. Nye, Ray Edger, Ed Walsh, John C. Wallace, Carl Mock, W. B. Stoutmyer, Bill Twining, E. P. Hayward, Ralph L. Stephens, Ward Cox, Stanley Kelly, Ernest Becker, Randall Phillips, Milton D. Eisner, Jack Beaumont and hosts of others.

It is estimated that there will be 150 to 200 members from all over the State in the contests, and it is proposed to make the golf tournament one of the annual features of the convention, it being planned as the big wind-up of the busy week of the convention affairs.

In view of the State-wide importance which a realty man's golf tournament has the State association has been requested by the Glendale and other boards to appoint a golf committee to supervise the contests. The association has arranged to have Darsie L. Darsie, who is director of sports for Hotel Del Monte, to be the official golf dictator. Mr. Darsie is a widely known authority on sports who has had a leading part in many of the sporting events for which the Del Monte course is famous.

Arthur H. Laack of Los Angeles, chairman; Stanley Kelly, Burlingame; Jack Beaumont, Del Monte; Ernest Becker and Randall Phillips, Los Angeles, and Milton D. Eisner, San Francisco, compose the general athletics committee for the Del Monte convention.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The half-year building record within the municipality passed $1,500,000, with no very large structures included, save for a group of five school buildings, to cost $200,000. In addition, hundreds of homes have been erected on suburban tracts.

FACT AND COMMENT

tunities as a distributing center for products imported to this country.

The writer was talking to William G. Wilson, assistant to Clarence H. Matson, manager of the trade extension department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, yesterday.

Wilson pointed out that the Los Angeles Harbor, the largest and nearest port on the Pacific side to the Panama Canal, was a logical distributing center for many products.

Coffee could be imported here in much larger quantities and distributed throughout the Northwest by rail. Reed and seagrass furniture manufactured in China is now landed here through the harbor and distributed by rail to all parts of the nation.

There is no reason why the Los Angeles Harbor should not become as important a port of entry as Liverpool.

Talk and Progress

The United States is the most progressive nation in the world. Its growth and development have been told times without number by students of world conditions. It has also been dubbed the greatest nation of talkers, and rightly so for a recent survey shows that there is in use in the United States 62 per cent of the telephones of the world.

Los Angeles and Southern California hold spotlight positions in the same survey. For instance, Los Angeles has more telephones than the total in Paris, Marseilles, Lyons, Bordeaux and Lille combined, the total population of which is 2,980,000. Los Angeles ranks third in the United in the number of phones installed States with New York City first and Chicago second.

This nation leads with 14.2 telephones per 100 persons. In the majority of cities in the United States telephones are managed and owned by private interests. In countries where telephones are government owned and managed the figures are as follows: Germany, 3.9 per 100 persons; Great Britain and Northern Ireland, 2.8 per 100 persons; France, 1.7 per 100 persons.

The comparisons between privately owned and managed systems and government owned and managed systems is significant.

Personal initiative and progress walk hand in hand, while paternalism and stagnation seek the ease of harmless unconcern.

REALTY SALES SET NEW MARK

National Body Reports June Best in History

Survey Shows Market Active and Also Sound

Study Includes Forty-one Typical Cities

Real estate market activity over the country took a pronounced upward swing during June, according to the index of that activity compiled monthly by the National Association of Real Estate Boards, received yesterday by President George H. Coffin, Jr., of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

The index, based on official reports of number of transfers and conveyances recorded in forty-one typical cities, stood at 175 for the month of June. This is twelve points higher than the index for May, and eleven points higher than the index for June of 1925. It is decidedly the highest index number reached in the month of June during the ten years of 1916-1926, inclusive, covered by the association's study.

"Even making allowance for the general long-time trend upward due to population increase, a healthily active state of the general real-estate market is indicated by the figures," Mr. Coffin said.

YEAR SHOWS GAINS

The total number of real estate transfers and conveyances recorded in the forty-one cities during the first six months of the current year showed a gain of 3.3 per cent over the corresponding period of the preceding year. The total for the group for the first six months of 1925 was 912,735. For the first six months of 1926 it reached 942,755, an increase of 30,020 transfers.

Cities included in the index study are Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cleveland, Detroit, Kansas City, New Orleans, San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane, Atlanta, Ga.; Boise, Idaho; Charleston, W. Va.; Flint, Mich.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Madison, Wis.; Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Nashville, Tenn.; Newark, Jacksonville, Fla.; Oklahoma City, Paterson, N. J.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Reading, Pa.; Richmond, Va.; Salem, Or.; Santa Fe, N. M.; Springfield, Ill.; Springfield, Mo.; Toledo, Waterloo, Iowa; Wichita, Kan.; Worchester, Mass.; Youngstown, O., and Alameda county, Cal.

ANGELENOS TAP WORLD MARKET

the factory and they found both the dust mop and a floor polish to go with it. The New Zealand man was so delighted with the mop that he placed an order for $2300 worth of mops and polish. He had been home in New Zealand less than a week when he cabled another order for $2100 more. Four days later he cabled doubling the order and dividing it among the principal cities of New Zealand. Other orders have come in, with the result that in the last six weeks more than $10,000 worth of mops and polishes have been shipped from the Pasadena factory to New Zealand, and the business is just started.

"Los Angeles oil-well machinery is supplying much of the demand for that commodity all over the world. More than $1,000,000 worth of oil-well machinery was exported to foreign countries from Los Angeles last year. Scarcely a month goes by that thousands of dollars' worth of oil-well equipment is not shipped to the interior of Colombia, Venezuela and Peru. Borneo paid Los Angeles $250,000 for such machinery last year. A Los Angeles firm is just now turning out a first order of $75,000 worth of oil-well equipment for the new oil fields in Mesopotamia.

"Another Los Angeles iron and steel works is shipping 500 tons of mining machinery to the copper mines of Chile.

"It has been less than two years since the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce had up with the Shipping Board the question of dependable sailings to New Zealand, and through the efforts of Meyer Lissner the Shipping Board agreed to have the Pacific-Australia line make regular calls at Los Angeles if guaranteed 500 tons of cargo on each ship. One of the independent oil refining companies gave the guarantee alone, and since than has marketed more than $500,000,000 worth of gasoline in New Zealand.

"This steamship service also opened the way for other shipments. The same export agent who had the recent experience with the dust mops was requested by a Los Angeles manufacturer of plaster board to help find a foreign market for that product. The export agent sent out fifty letters of inquiry to connections in New Zealand. As a result of one of these letters a New Zealand firm of building material dealers, cabled one of its members who was in London to return home by way of Los Angeles and investigate this plaster board.

"Since then the New Zealand firm has bought more than 1,000,000 square feet of this product and another firm has bought in excess of 300,000 square feet. The export agent has paid the steamship line to New Zealand more than $20,000 for freight on plaster board alone. This New Zealand business has given the Los Angeles factory a sufficient output to turn a possible operating loss into a profit.

"The product of Los Angeles oil refineries is running the motor cars of England and Germany, lighting the houses of the interior of China, and furnishing the fuel for the industries of Chile—as well as many other countries.

"The sardines caught off this coast and packed at Los Angeles Harbor are highly prized by the Chinese and Malays of Singapore, the Filipinos of Manila, and the mixed races of Buenos Aires. Each of these three markets last year paid Los Angeles between $300,000 and $500,000 for sardines.

"Through such work as this the export trade of Los Angeles has been increased from less than $1,000,000 in 1915 to more than 100 times that figure this year.

"What will it be in another ten years?"

MEMBER DIES, BOARD EXPRESSES SYMPATHY

The Los Angeles Realty Board, Southwest Branch, mourns the decease of one of its most active members, G. S. Hawley, who died last Sunday. Resolutions of sympathy were extended to the bereaved family at the board meeting Monday evening.

CITY HALL SUIT FRIENDLY

Erection of Building Not to Be Delayed, Architect Says; Favorable Decision Expected

With the announcement last week that the C. J. Kubach Company had appealed to the Supreme Court of California for a writ of mandate after Hugh J. McGuire, president of the Los Angeles Board of Public Works, had refused certain of the company's warrants pertaining to the erection of the new $5,000,000 City Hall, it was pointed out by John C. Austin of the Associated Architects that the action would in no way delay erection of the mammoth structure. The other two members of the Associated Architects who designed the building are John Parkinson and Albert C. Martin.

The action is characterized by Mr. McGuire as a friendly suit to settle in the shortest possible time whether the city may legally erect a structure higher than the height-limit of 150 feet prescribed by ordinance. The City Hall plans call for a twenty-eight-story building, a straw vote taken at the last election indicating that the people of Los Angeles are overwhelmingly in favor of amending the ordinance in this instance.

A favorable decision by the highest tribunal is expected within sixty days, although the proposal for the high structure again will appear on the ballot at the November election.

Mr. Austin, who assisted in drafting the height-limit ordinance, said that the new twenty-eight-story City Hall will not in any way conflict with the motives that prompted the law. The municipal structure has been so designed, also, according to Mr. Austin, that construction work can stop at 150 feet and a complete building will be provided.

WHEN BRICK IS BRICK IS DETERMINED

Authoritative Committee Issues Definition of Well-Known Building Unit

At last it has been definitely established that "A brick is a brick." At the last meeting of the American Society for Testing Materials at Atlantic City, the brick committee, known technically as Committee C-3, voted the following definition:

"Brick.—A structural unit rectangular in shape and made of burned clays unless designated by a prefix indicating another material.

"Note.—As through centuries of use a brick has been an object of clay, the term 'brick,' if used without a qualifying adjective, is understood, in the present state of the art, to mean a unit of burned clay. Bricks are usually solid, about 8 by 3 3-4 by 2 1-4."

For the last two or three years effort has been made to change the long-established meaning of the word brick. In the public mind there has been no confusion, but as a matter of propaganda confusion has been injected into technical discussion of the question, "What is a brick?"

Edison Camp Placing Lines Near Richgrove

RICHGROVE, Aug. 7.—Temporary camp about twenty miles east of Richgrove on Rag Gulch at Willow Springs has been established by the Southern California Edison Company. A double-steel power line is being constructed along the foothills.

This is rush work to connect the power from plant number three on Kern River to Magunden, to supply a deficiency of electricity in the southern San Joaquin valley, officials said. While the new line makes only a temporary connection, the towers are permanent and are to be a part of the double line from Big Creek to Magunden, following closely along the foothills it was declared yesterday.

Work will be continued on this new line during the fall and winter. Twenty-five miles of line will be constructed now to make the necessary connection. Four towers are put together, raised and completed each day, the report indicates. About 300 men are employed on the rush work.

INGLEWOOD STORE NEAR COMPLETION

INGLEWOOD, Aug. 7.—Under the personal supervision of D. H. Forbes, one of the owners, a modern two-story brick building is rapidly nearing completion at 211 South Market street. The structure will cost $25,000. The front is of red pressed brick, with terra cotta trim. Two store-rooms are on the ground floor and six two-room suites of offices above.

HICK DRIVERS WARNED

One Side of the Street Is Enough in Huntington Park

HUNTINGTON PARK, Aug. 7. Automobile traffic in Huntington Park, along Pacific Boulevard, will hereafter have to watch "it's step," for the city trustees have passed an ordinance, making the east side of Pacific Boulevard a thoroughfare for north traffic only, and the west side for traffic moving south. Heretofore motor vehicles have at times. been going in both directions on either side of the Boulevard.

Phoenix Realty Men Visit Dam on Salt River

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Eighty-seven members of the Phoenix Realty Board recently were guests of Manager C. C. Cragin of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association in a visit to the Horse Mesa Dam on Salt River, a structure that will complete plans for an annual income of $2,000,000 from hydroelectric sales.

This sum in seventeen years will repay the government for the Roosevelt reclamation project and the cost of great improvements that have been added by the association, leaving the farmers of the Salt River Valley with an annual dividend on their acres, possibly to be paid in the shape of concreted canals and laterals or in new storage works, Mr. Cragin declared.

SIX BITS LANDS CONTRACT

Tulare Firm Gets Job As Lowest Bidder on Project

TULARE, Aug. 7.—A difference of only seventy-five cents was found between the two lowest bids marking awarding of a contract for the installation of a permanent lawn sprinkling system at Tulare Union High School when bids were opend by the Board of Education. Canby Plumbing Company on a bid of $83 received the contract, while the Tulare Plumbing Company submitted a bid of $83.75 and R. E. Rounsaville one of $92.

PIER WORK RECORD IS UNDER WAY

One Hundred Feet of Piling Already Down for Structure of Club

A new record in pier-construction is being made by the William Ledbetter Company at Ensenada, where this concern is building the new 2550-foot pier for the Club Internationale of Ensenada, according to word from the Lower California city.

"Actual construction work on our pier started July 4, last," said F. G. Hoffine, president of the Club Internationale, "and the piling for the understructure now extends from the foot of First street to the mean low tide level. This means that almost 100 feet of piling has already been driven, showing the rapid strides that the contractors are taking in rushing the work.

"Just as soon as the pier is sufficiently far along to permit the landing of building materials direct from the steamers, we propose to proceed with the construction of the Moorish-type clubhouse, which is to cost approximately $850,000 and will include every feature of modern clubhouse construction."

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

PROPERTY SALES IN BEL AIR CITED

Tract Between Los Angeles and Sea Active

Many New Residences Are Now Under Way

Clubhouse to be Finished by October 1

BY AN OBSERVER

The march of progress between Los Angeles and the sea continues to advance with rapidity. The Beverly Boulevard project, destined to open another thoroughfare to the coast, is partly responsible for an increased demand for homes in high-class residential communities in this section. Sales volume in Bel Air subdivision depicts remarable activity, according to the Frank Meline Company, controller of the tract. The property comprises approximately 4500 acres of home sites.

GOLF COURSE

A new eighteen-hole golf course at Bel Air has been finished. The clubhouse is being built at a cost of $250,000, the subdividers declared. Allen Tomblin, general manager of Bel Air, said that it will be completed by October 1.

Eighteen residences have just been added to the list of Bel Air homes, Mr. Tomblin said. They involve more than $1,000,000 in building. Approximately $4,000,000 worth of home sites have seen sold in the tract since its opening. Bridle trails and a circular riding track are at the disposal of residents and their friends. Alphonzo E. Bell, owner and developer of Bel Air, is a great lover of horses. He declared that the stables have been enlarged to accommodate 150 horses.

"Extreme care is being taken in the landscape gardening," Mr. Bell said, "in order that the landscaping may represent the ultimate in beauty and design. I have engaged Mark Daniels, a landscape artist who at one time was in charge of all the Nnited States national forests, to create a beautiful park for Bel-Air. This park will be located on the floor of Stone Canyon, which extends from the Bel-Air stables back as far as Bel-Air Lake. A number of country estates ranging in size from five to ten acres will surround it."

NEW DEVELOPMENT

A high type of development surrounds this property. It overlooks the new 385-acre site of the new University of California in Los Angeles, with a view that equals any section between Los Angeles and the Pacific Ocean.

Among those who are building new residences on their estates are Arthur S. Bent, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; Hon. John D. Fredericks, Dr. Hill Hastings, Will T. Bishop, Alex Curlett, Benjamin F. McLouth, Paul P. Paris and Milo A. Baker. The residence of Mr. Bishop will represent an outlay in excess of $200,000, while that of Mr. Curlett will be almost as costly, Mr. Bell pointed out.

START NEW IMPROVEMENTS

With more than $500,000 expended on improvements in Ponet Terrace, a hillside subdivision of 127 acres adjoining Griffith Park and on a group of knolls above the intersection of Western avenue and Los Feliz Boulevard, new capital has been interested in the further improvement of the property.

Work of installing ornamental lights along the winding drives is progressing rapidly, according to C. E. Kenyon, sales director. Paving work is practically completed.

Ponet Terrace—pronounced Po-nay—after the historic French family who owned this foothill acreage for many years, is said to be an easy twenty-minute drive from the center of Los Angeles and only five minutes' run from the center of Hollywood.

In completing the paved contour roads, Kenyon said, the tract engineers have kept in mind the advantages of accessibility, and as a result have made three entrances to the property from Griffith Park Road on the east, and five entrances from Canyon Drive, on the west.

Only 350 all-view lots have been laid out over the entire tract, affording each homesite permanent view protection. One-third of these have already been purchased, and twenty-five of the homes already erected are estimated to have cost more than $1,000,000, according to Kenyon.

NEW COTTON GINS

McFARLAND, Aug. 7.—The Anderson Clayton Cotton Gin Company has installed four Continental gin stands in its plant here, renovated the old press and built a suction shed and seed-storage house, preparatory to handling the 1926 crop.

Building Rising on Wilshire Corner Site

Utility and beauty will be combined in a new studio and office building, foundations for which were begun last week at the northeast corner of Wilshire Boulevard and Berendo street. Architectural features seldom found in a commercial structure are embodied in the plans.

The structure will be of steel-framed, reinforced construction throughout, the contract for this portion of the work having been awarded yesterday to the Union Iron Works. Of two stories, the structure will be built about a patio, on which most of the ground floor shops will face. The prevailing style of architecture will be Spanish, modified by a Moorish influence.

Senator L. H. Roseberry and A. H. Post are the owners. Morgan, Walls & Clements were the architects. Total cost of the structure will be about $150,000, it was said.

Radio Artists Buy Homes in Chevy Chase

Chevy Chase holds an ever-growing appeal to artists, musicians and lovers of the beautiful, according to W. J. Barr, director of sales for Bert Farrar, Inc., who announced the sale of a group of home sites overlooking the Chevy Chase Golf and Country Club to the members of Bill Hatch's orchestra.

Each member of this musical organization has now secured a site in Chevy Chase and many other leaders in musical and artistic circles have decided on Chevy Chase as a future home, Mr. Barr declared.

Canadian farmers are buying more than 1000 tractors, made in the United States, a month.

RESERVOIR FOR RESORT COMPLETED

Tank and Water System to be Donated to Property Owners

A large stone and concrete reservoir, fed by numerous mountain springs, has just been completed at Green Valley Lake to supply domestic water for the new lakeside community in the San Bernardino Mountains, according to the DeWitt-Blair Realty Company. With the completion of the new reservoir, a big crew of men this week resumed the work of laying water lines along several miles of road.

The reservoir and water system will be presented as a gift to the property owners at Green Valley, along with the new lake, dam and Top-o'-the-World clubhouse, according to the developers.

"Green Valley has long been known as one of the greenest spots in the San Bernardino Mountains because of the large amount of water that flows from the mountain-side springs," said C. F. DeWitt, one of the developers. "Although we are in the middle of the dry season, the water is still above the spillway of the dam. The lake will be filled to the brim throughout the summer."

STEEL JOB

A contract has been awarded the Baker Iron Works by the Brawley Hotel Corporation to fabricate steel trusses and purlines for a new four-story-and-basement hotel and store building at Brawley, Cal.

BAY REGION HOMESITES IN DEMAND

Business and Professional Men Make Up Majority of Purchasers

More than half of the $900,000 worth of homesites sold at Huntington Palisades during the eighty days the property has been on the market has been bought by business and professional men of Los Angeles, according to P. W. Rairden, salesmanager of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company.

Mr. Rairden attributes the increase in this tendency first to the growing demand on the part of people generally for outdoor life and recreation, as evidenced by the tremendous increase in popularity of beach and golf clubs, and second, to the desire of the average man to make a little money by profiting from the increment steadily accruing to city residential land values, particularly in the territory out toward the ocean.

"SPECIAL OFFER" RAPPED AS BAIT

Realty Commissioner Warns Buyers to Beware

Declares Promises Should Arouse Suspicion

Cites Serious Penalties Imposed by Law

J. R. Gabbert, State Real Estate Commissioner, who has recently made a tour of the State from Los Angeles to San Francisco, Oakland and Sacramento, has issued another warning to people to be very careful of extravagant promises containing "special offers" made to the purchasers of property, whether in the guise of so-called free lots, puzzle prizes or any other that may arouse the suspicion; that the same constitute a "bait" and that "there is a hook concealed therein." In speaking of this situation the commissioner said in part:

"There are serious penalties imposed under the State laws for fraudulent advertising and most selling organizations are very wary about the wording of their advertisements. There is greater difficulty, however, in getting at verbal promises that can be made by unscrupulous salesmen or solicitors. Every person who is approached with promises that sound so good that a family celebration is due in honor of their acceptance should make a careful inspection of the full significance of the offer, particularly if the specious plea is advanced that it must be grabbed up at once or forever lost.

"People are also inclined to 'fall for' anything that has the appearance of giving a prize, a special privilege, a bonus or something more than anybody else receives. For that reason every investor should be particularly wary of such offers coming from strangers or from organizations from whom no obligation has ever been incurred.

"Real-estate brokers and property owners are not in the habit of giving something away for nothing. It is highly important, therefore, that when the suggestion is given to a buyer that he is being given something exceptional and something few, if any, others are granted, that he examine the offer to determine definitely whether or not it is a 'bait' and if it is, whether or not there is a hook concealed therein."

Contract Let for Cabins in Girard Area

Victor Girard, community builder, has just signed a contract with Daniels Brothers, Los Angeles contractors, to build twenty-five more mountain lodges at the town of Girard in the Western San Fernando Valley. Twenty-five under construction are sold.

"Those that live in the community enjoy the combined advantages of both city and suburban life," said Mr. Girard, "and the lodges now under construction provide an ideal place for rest or recreation. Girard is within easy motoring distance of Los Angeles and it is accessible on two of the most important highways of California."

RAPID PRICE GAIN SHOWN

Venice Lots Bought Eleven Years Ago for $10 Per Front Foot Held at $200 Figure

Proof that business property in some sections of Venice has increased in value at the rate of more than 200 per cent a year for the past eleven years was received last week by Oliver & Carver, subdividers of the new Venice business district, who secured evidence from Guy M. Rush that Charlie Chaplin bought twenty lots across the street from the present subdivision for $10 a front foot in 1915.

the Sea Breeze Beach Club, is to be one of the finest in the entire West,

Rush displayed Charlie's check for $2156 which was his first payment on his purchase. Oliver and Carver have sold some $400,000 worth of business property in exactly this same locality in the past two weeks at an average of more than $200 per fron foot, which is considered far below surrounding values, according to Rush.

If Chaplin has held on to the twenty lots he bought in 1915 he has made more than twice his original investment each year since that time, according to these figures. This rate of increase in property values is due to continue, according to members of the subdividing firm as Los Angeles through the City Planning Commission and the playgrounds department is all set on a plan for boulevard and beach improvement that will make "Los Angeles Own Beach" the mecca of many millions of people each year.

POLICE STATION

Here's a Trip Today!

—for any man who drives a $3000 car

Not because it takes a high powered car, and not because the owner of any kind of car isn't welcome.

But because you, who know the luxury of a superior automobile, show by that fact a special appreciation of what this trip reveals, its powerful appeal to every business and professional man who, after the stress of an office day, has learned to value the quiet coolness, the seclusion, the infinite charm of a home in the hills, within 20 minutes from his club or office!

Ponet TERRACE

[Po-nay]

Drive north to the end of Western Avenue. Then continue straight ahead across Los Feliz Boulevard, into Griffith Park. Within about 200 feet, turn to the left up an easy, paved grade till you reach the summit.

You are then in the heart of Ponet Terrace (pronounced Po-nay), a residential subdivision as remote in its peaceful grandeur as though it were fifty miles away, yet located within 20 minutes of the city's business section! And those who already occupy the many fine homes in Ponet Terrace, what a wonderful privilege is theirs!

Below you, the whole city of Los Angeles! By day, a vast checkerboard of business blocks and homes; by night a sea of gleaming lights! On the north, the twisting, purple mountains, and on the east, edge to edge with Ponet Terrace, and destined to grow increasingly beautiful with the years, stretches a 3700-acre playground—Griffith Park.

And then comes home to you how limited this opportunity is, only 350 building sites and one-third of them already purchased. Twenty-five homes have been erected here in Ponet Terrace, valued at over $1,000,000.

Take this drive today—for the thrill of seeing all Los Angeles at your feet! And count, too, on a second visit, for that same inspiring view by night.

HOUSE PLAN FOR FORTY-FOOT LOT

Design Affords Room and Comfort

Garden Included as Part of Idea

Economy is Big Feature in Building

BY HETH WHARTON

By careful planning it is possible to obtain on a forty-foot lot all conveniences of the usual five-room bungalow. This is demonstrated by the little Spanish house shown this week. The State Housing Act requires that the windows used for light and air must be four feet from the side lot lines. This house is placed so that the bedroom side of the house is four feet from the lot line, but both bedrooms have also windows to the front and rear, thus giving cross ventilation to the rooms. The kitchen and living-room also have this desirable feature.

The house is approached by a drive at a side yard which is eleven feet wide. Steps go up from the driveway to a small covered porch or passage which is on equal level with a small patio. The entrance hall, where visitors may remove their coats, is a valuable adjunct that is unusual in a small house.

The living and dining rooms overlook the side yard, which should be made attractive and bright with flowers at least ten months in the year in Los Angeles. The living-room would be improved by the addition of a fire-place. The kitchen and screen porch are conveniently placed. A breakfast nook could easily be added if desired. The bedrooms and bath are in a separate wing with their own hall, a desirable arrangement.

The living, sleeping and service portions of the house are well separated and distinct. All rooms have ample ventilation. There are numerous and large closets. The house is not too crowded on its forty-foot lot. The exterior is attractive, with its red roof and wall coping, white walls and blue-green shutters, door and window sash.

There are 1020 square feet of floor space and the house can be built for from $3000 to $4000.

TIMELY HINTS ON FINANCING HOMES

Authority Outlines Proper Way for Borrowers to Present Building Loan Case

BY EDWARD R. DEWEY

[Mr. Dewey is a member of the firm of Dewey & Kaiser, mortgage brokers. He is an authority on real estate financing.—Ed.]

The information given in last Sunday's article applies to building loans, as well as loans on completed property. This article will supplement it by giving it additional information of value only to those seeking building loans.

First of all make sure that your plans have been drawn by a skillful workman. Secure a draftsman who will prepare good working drawings from your sketches at a moderate cost, for home-made plans are not suitable to show a lender, who will judge the character of the workmanship on the building by the neatness and accuracy with which the plans are drawn.

Do not present the original tracings; have blue prints made, which should be bound together and backed with a proper cover by the blue-printer. If the plans or this paper cover get dirty or used in appearance, have fresh ones made, as otherwise the lender will jump to the conclusion that the loan has been peddled, and this prejudices him against it.

Specifications, too, should be drawn with care. I have raised loans 25 per cent to 30 per cent by rewriting the specifications to display to the best advantage the kind of building that the borrower really intends to build. They should be neatly typewritten on one side only of sheets of paper eight and one-half inches by thirteen inches. In general the longer and more complete the specifications, the better. Mimeographed specifications of different kinds can be bought from most stationers.

In addition to the information contained in last Sunday's article on building loans, the lender is particularly eager to know the area of the building in square feet. To determine this figure, find (in square feet) the actual area encompassed by the outside walls of the building, exclusive of porches; multiply this figure by the number of stories the building is high, unless, of course, the upper floors cover less area than the main floor, in which case they must be calculated separately and added. Have all of this information and the details of your calculations available to the lender.

The information given in this and in last Sunday's article will enable you to present your loan with the greatest possible effectiveness.

Lodge Building in Maywood is Traded in Deal

The ground floor of the lodge building is occupied by business concerns while the second floor is used for meetings and entertainments.

REAL ESTATE and BUILDING LAW

A Department for the Property Owner and Home Builder
Conducted by the Legal Department of the W. Ross Campbell Company

Question: I am buying property through escrow. Deed is signed and delivered. If grantor dies before recordation, is deed still valid and could it pass to me?

Answer: If by delivery you mean delivery in escrow, the death of the grantor revokes agency created by escrow. However, in course of probate proceeding, the administrator could deliver the deed.

Q.: I am adding two floors to my store building. Can I collect rent from tenants during construction? No clause on this in lease. Tenants knew I was going to do this when leases were signed.

A.: You may continue to collect rent provided the business of tenants is not resiously interrupted.

Q.: Part of my lot will be taken for street widening. Have agreed with referee as to damages for land, but I want in addition severance damages. Can I collect and how much?

A.: Severance damages may, under proper state of facts, be collected. The amount depends upon what the damage is to the part of lot remaining.

Q.: If a deed was given for love and affection prior to death of grantor, would property be subject to inheritance tax? Deed was recorded after death of grantor.

A.: From facts stated the inheritance tax attorneys would insist upon a tax, but the test would be whether or not the gift was made in contemplation of death.

Q.: What is meant by "eminent right of domain" and is it practical to incorporate anything regarding it into a ten-year lease?

A.: The right of eminent domain is that right in the sovereign power to take property for its own use, subject to constitutional provisions such as payment of the value of the land. In a ten-year lease it would be advisable to determine the status of the parties in the event any of the property is taken under the right.

Builders' Questions Answered

By Southern California Chapter of Associated General Contractors

QUESTION: I am building a new home and expect to do the painting at odd times. Can you tell me how to determine the amount of paint necessary?

Answer: Reliable paint manufacturers estimate that their best ready mixed paint will cover approximately 600 square feet of surface per gallon. To get the best results three coats should be applied.

Q.: Cracks have appeared in a stucco house I built recently. The finish is a smooth flat surface. How can I remedy this condition?

A.: We would suggest that you apply a light sand dash, colored to suit.

Q.: Can tar and gravel be successfully applied over an ordinary composition roof?

A.: Yes, if the old roofing paper is not in too bad a condition. You should apply one thickness of three-ply felt paper, then tar and gravel. If the paper is in very bad condition remove and apply as for new roof.

Q.: Will you please tell me if it is necessary for me to take out a building permit for the erection of a small house, if I do all the carpenter work myself?

A.: Yes, if the cost of the material and labor exceed $75 and is located outside of the fire districts (Los Angeles) it will be necessary for you to secure a permit before you start work.

Q.: The contractor will complete my home in a very short time. Should I retain a portion of the final payment for a short time as a protection?

A.: Yes, you should retain a certain percentage of the cost of the house for thirty-five days after the notice of completion has been filed in order to protect yourself against liens being filed. If your contract with the contractor did not specify the percentage to be retained and for what length of time after the job was completed you overlooked an important feature.

Q.: I would like to know how to compute the number of rolls of roofing paper necessary to roof my new four-room house?

A.: Roofing paper contains 108 square feet of paper to the roll which is sufficient to cover 100 square feet of roof area; the eight feet is allowed for laps.

Q.: Which is less expensive to build—a two story house or a bungalow, both having the same accommodations?

A.: Assuming that the building under consideration will contain seven or eight rooms, of the usual size—a two-story house will be less expensive. The saving is due to less roof area and less foundation work.

Q.: Can a lien be secured against property when one has furnished materials and done work repairing buildings? What are the steps necessary in order to get a lien in such a case? What expense?

A.: Lien can be secured for materials and labor furnished for repairs. Blank forms can be secured from any stationery store, which may be filed out and filed. The expense is small. However, filing the lien is only the start in the procedure necessary for completing the terms of a lien. We would advise that you engage an attorney.

Q.: I have been told that the expense of constructing a six-room frame dwelling is very little less than one constructed of brick, can you give me any information

A.: If both are finished in the same wood and the same workmanship the brick construction will cost approximately 20 per cent more.

VIADUCT WORK TO START

Work will be sarted this week on the new Seventh-street viaduct across the Los Angeles River and the tracks of the Union Pacific and Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railways, according to Lange & Bergstrom, members of the local chapter of the Associated General Contractors, who have been awarded the contract at $405,494.

The new viaduct will be 1580 feet long and 71 feet wide, constructed of reinforced concrete with an asphaltic concrete roadway 56 feet wide. The present bridge is reinforced concrete 66-feet wide and consisting of three 80-foot arch spans, built in 1910 at a cost of $115,000, will be utilized in the new viaduct.

Proposals to build the new bridge were opened by the Board of Public Works on May 3, but the award was delayed until the five-party contract was drawn-up and signed by participants in the cost. The order from the State Railroad Commission authorizing construction of the bridge provides that the steam railroads shall each pay 25 per cent of the cost, the city and county each 18 per cent and the Los Angeles Railway Company the remaining 14 per cent.

The entire cost of the project, including lowering the railroad tracks, engineering work and other expenses, is estimated at $1,500,000.

TRACT PLANS ANNOUNCED

Santa Ana to Open One of Most Exclusive Subdivisions in Orange County

SANTA ANA, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Development is expected to start soon on what will be one of the most exclusive subdivisions in Orange county. Nat Neff, City Engineer, is completing plans and specifications to improve Victoria street from Nineteenth street to Sana Clara avenue.

The property is owned by a number of wealthy realty owners on Broadway and will open up a large territory west of Broadway. Features of the subdivision are restrictions which call for homes costing not less than $12,500. All houses erected in the subdivision must be two stories in height and must be set back from the sidewalk a distance of at least sixty feet.

The minimum width of lots on the street is seventy-five feet. Frank Purington, Mayor of Santa Ana; Roy Russell, J. E. Coleman, David Meyer, E. A. Noe, J. J. Harrison, B. E. Johnson, L. A. West, Robert Simon, Oliver Halsell, C. J. Ender and John Bruns are some of the property owners interested in the new project. Roy Russell, according to reports, already has drawn plans for a fine new home on the tract.

Victoria street is to be paved with concrete. Some of the finest ornamental street lights in Southern California will grace the street. A special assessment district will be formed to care for the improvement of the streets.

School Leases Room in Vine Street Building

The Hollywood Secretarial School has leased quarters in the new Vine street post office building. Last year students at the school represented fifty-five colleges and universities came from thirty-eight different States and twelve foreign countries, according to school officials.

The enrollment is not confined to college persons, the management said, but is largely made up of people in business who feel the need of secretarial training.

Such subjects as shorthand, typing, commercial law, filing, English, and other essentials to a business career are taught.

The American soda fountain has been introduced into Japan by Miss Kiyoko Ogawa, who made several years' study of it in this country.

A large pressure tank and pump are on the ground and will be installed as soon as power connections are made. President James B. Howard of the Earlimart Mutual Water Company recently purchased pipe for the mains in Bakersfield. Pipe will be placed as fast as the ditches are completed, he declared.

JULY SALES SET RECORD OF CONCERN

Heaviest in History of Realty Firm, Head of Company Declares

For the fourth consecutive month, Janss Investment Company sales this year have exceeded those of any similar month in the history of the organization, Edwin Janss announced yesterday.

Sales by the company, developers of Westwood Hills, during February, April, May, June and July have been the heaviest for these months since the company was organized, twenty-five years ago. The months of January and March were not high-record months, Janss explained, because the engineering department of the concern was not able to come within 30 per cent of preparing enough property to supply the demand. Had it not been for a shortage of available property during these two months, every month for the entire year would have established a new record.

"Every indication now points to a decided change of local realty price standards during the next five years, as far as desirably located west side properties are concerned," he said. "The natural growth of the city should bring about a constant upward trend of prices—but when you stop to consider that the Olympic Games are only about sixty months away, according to present plans, and that they alone should bring conservatively, 500,000 visitors to our city, the effect this can have on values is tremendous. Values during the past five years have advanced very appreciably without such an attraction."

Besides being editor of a woman's journal, Mrs. Lila D. Monroe of Topeka, Kan., is a highly competent lawyer, a successful politician and an energetic exponent of social reform.

HOTEL NEARS COMPLETION

Women's Project on Figueroa to Be Formally Opened To Public in Near Future

Hotel Figueroa, representing an investment of $1,108,000, organized, financed, designed according to their wishes and built under the supervision of women, a project of the Young Women's Christian Association of Los Angeles, will be formally opened on the 14th inst., and to the public on the 16th, 17th and 18th inst., according to an announcement yesterday by Mrs. M. N. Bouldin, managing director.

It is located at 939 South Figueroa street, on which it fronts seventy feet, is thirteen stories in height, modern, its architecture following the Spanish motif, and contains 409 rooms. Its slogan is, "The hotel of unusual service, the climate's only rival."

The furnishings were specially designed by D. M. Kelley of Barker Brothers, utilizing the hotel's own colors of green and amber. Nine top floors are to be occupied exclusively by women and two floors are to be rented to men with families.

Prominently identified with local movements for the welfare of business and professional women, to which class the hotel caters, are the following women that have made liberal donations to the building and furnishings: Mary P. Moll of Beverly Hills, secretary; Mrs. Chester C. Askley, president, and Mrs. Lyman Farwell, tresurer of the Y.M.C.A.; mrs. Dabney Day, all of Los Angeles, and Mrs. George M. Edmands of Pasadena. Gifts were also received from the estate of Mrs. Elisa Otis.

Progress Puts End to Pioneer Phoenix Ditch

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Of large importance to North Phoenix property holdings has been the abandonment of the pioneer town ditch, dug by Jack Swilling and associates in 1868, passing along the northern edge of the original townsite. For years it has been a nuisance, occupying several blocks of Van Buren street, passing through the high school grounds and beside the Federal Building.

The filling is to cost about $130,000, to be paid by the city and the owners of the property benefited. Several swimming pools are to be provided where the canal has passed through a city park. The canal will be eliminated for thirty-five city blocks. Paving Van Buren street will then be finished, officials declared.

LOCAL BROKER MAKES ANOTHER CONNECTION

Announcement was made yesterday that E. R. Knerr, formerly of the W. Ross Campbell Company, has united with Earl V. Abbott in industrial activity. S. C. Anderson and T. S. Steel are also members of the organization, the announcement declared. The Abbott concern operates in the Goodyear Park district.

AT FONTANA
Prosperity Makes Good Neighbors

THEY have organized a Moonlight Club at Fontana. On Saturday night nearest the full moon neighbors meet under the orchard trees, partake of wholesome ranch food, sing, tell stories, and boast about their hens. They are happy because they are prosperous—because their future is secure.

Would You like to join? How about Your future?

There is an opportunity now at Fontana for you to lay the foundation of future independence. This is how you can do it:

Select five or ten acres of young soft-shelled budded walnut orchards, with domestic and irrigation water, electricity, oiled streets, between two main boulevards, with two more seasons of professional care free, backed by Fontana's six million resources. We offer these orchards, not for $2500, nor $2000 nor $1700 an acre, but for $650 per acre. Look around. Compare. Bare land in other poultry colonies of Southern California is sold for twice the price of these orchards.

Five acres mean an initial investment of $812.50, one-quarter the purchase price, the balance payable semi-annually in 10 years—or in very easy monthly payments if you prefer. At this price you can't lose. Purely as an investment these orchards should be worth $2000 per acre ten years hence.

We do not want you to wait that long. We want you to join a Fontana Moonlight Club now if you can, two or three years hence if you are not ready or want to build up more capital. You won't have a walnut income in three years, but we will help start you in the egg business with its weekly pay check under the Fontana Plan that has already put 500 families on the road to independence.

What is the Fontana Plan? Briefly, it is fruit growing combined with poultry—technical guidance for the inexperienced, standardized poultry plants, co-operative buying and selling, plus ten-year building loan if needed, plus constant friendly interest in your welfare. FONTANA CANNOT AFFORD FAILURES.

It's too big a story to tell here. Let us tell you about it through our booklet or through one of our representatives. We promise you won't be bothered or annoyed. Fontana does not need to use such methods. One of our men last week sold five orchards in a day without asking one of his clients to buy. Send in the coupon or call in person or by telephone at our Los Angeles Office, 631 South Spring Street, Telephone TRinity 3064.

We can only present the opportunity: You must take the first step. Fill out and mail the coupon to us today. Start NOW on the road to future independence.

SAN FERNANDO GROWTH SHOWN

Valley City Building Makes Advance

House Shortage Cited by Realty Man

Postal Reecipts in Gain Over 1925

SAN FERNANDO, Aug. 7.—San Frenando building permits totaled $383,432 the first seven months of 1926, according to records at the City Hall. This total, together with the amount of property involved, will amount to nearly $750,000, it is declared.

Recently completed improvements amounted to $260,000. Improvements now under way in San Frenando will reach $360,000, including property involved, buildings and stock, as follows: city sewer system, $150,000; Bank of San Fernando building, $150,000; Health Center Building, $50,000; Lewis Hardware Company, $16,000. In addition to projects already under way there are $180,000 worth planned for the immediate future, reports indicate.

The construction of houses has set a good pace throughout the first seven months of the year. However, the pace has not caught up with the demand for dwellings, as there is not a furnished home for rent north of the Southern Pacific tracks in San Fernando, according to James T. Etter, president of the San Fernando Realty Board. House construction is expected to take on added impetus when the summer months are over, as the return of many citizens from summer vacations, together with an anticipated influx of tourists, will create a more urgent demand for dwellings.

APARTMENT SHORTAGE

The apartment-house shortage is also felt in San Fernando, officials pointed out today. A large apartment, thrown open for public inspection the first of last June, is now completely filled and plans are being made by a local capitalist to build another. In connection with this, a family hotel is being fostered by the progressive community element.

The installation of the city sewer is one of the biggest public improvements that has taken place in San Fernando. Twenty-one miles of city sewers, ranging from eight to twenty-one inches in diameter are now being laid according to estimates furnished by City Engineer E. Brooks Currey. The work has been in progress the past three months and will probably require two months more to complete it. Sewer outlet is made at the disposal tank located on the city sewer farm, southeast of San Fernando.

A city planning commission will be appointed soon by the Council, according to Mayor F. A. Pomeroy, who recently requested the different civic organizations to nominate a member each to serve on the board.

One of the first problems for consideration by the city planning commission will be the improvement of the Southern Pacific grounds, which include a large area in the center of town, and a systematic order of tree planting. Officials of the Southern Pacific are willing to co-operate with San Fernando in having the grounds improved, according to a special committee appointed by the Kiwanis Club, and the idea is to create a park bounded by Maclay avenue, Brand Boulevard, First street and Porter avenue.

Different streets will be planted to trees, according to plans being discussed. There are streets which are now bordered with pepper, acacia, palm and other trees.

WIDER STREETS

Building activity has also brought about an agitation to have wider and better streets in San Fernando. Under the supervision of City Street Superintendent F. N. Hubbard old trees are being cleared out on certain closed portions of Brand Boulevard, with the plan of having that thoroughfare opened throughout. In like manner other streets and boulevards will be cleared and opened.

It will not be long before more school buildings are needed in San Fernando, as the increase in population to over 7000 tax-payers is taxing the school room capacity to the limit, and other facilities will probably be provided in the course of the following year. The last school equipment built in San Fernando is the $112,000 O'Melveney grammar school on Chatsworth Drive in February, 1925, the shop and cafeteria built at the high school by the Los Angeles Board of Education in June, 1925, amounting to $65,000, and the $10,000 school building on Maclay avenue, built during July, 1925.

During the first ten months of 1925 the building permits totaled $559,551 in San Fernando, but indications are that this record will be broken by November 1, 1926.

POSTAL RECEIPTS

Postal receipts for the year ending June 30, show an increase of almost 18 per cent over the corresponding period a year ago, according to Postmaster H. C. Caldwell, the gain being as follows: Postal receipt sales for 1924-25, $23,088.46; for 1925-26, $27,187.62. Number of insured parcels, 1924-25, 5567; for 1925-26, 6564.

The number of pieces of mail running through the canceling machine was almost 1,000,000, or to be exact, 894,863, and indications are that the number of pieces will exceed the million mark during the calendar year, declared Mr. Caldwell.

PIER WORK IS UNDER WAY

Los Angeles Contractor Starts Operations on Amusement Project at Laguna Beach

LAGUNA BEACH, Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—P. W. Kranz, Los Angeles contractor, has started construction of a 700-foot pier at the foot of Aver street at Laguna Beach.

The pier will follow the line of the old dock to the huge rock above the water 550 feet from the shore and will go 150 feet beyond. Tony Derkum of Laguna Beach and Forrest Carter who lives near Puente have formed a partnership to finance and manage the project. Recently Mr. Derkum obtained a permit from the United States engineer for the pier. He has the right to extend the pier to the rocks running in two directions from the big rock. Mr. Derkum hopes eventually to build a breakwater that ill give still water bathing to a certain section of the beach.

Several truck loads of pilings were delivered yesterday and Mr. Kranz began mak- soundings for the shore footings. The work will progress as speedily as possible and it is hoped to complete it before the end of the month. A large fishing barge will be anchored several miles out in the good fishing grounds. Several smaller b ges will be anchored in the kelp beds and transportation will be furnished from the end of the pier in launches.

The only concession planned at the present time is a store for bait and fishing tackle. Laguna Beach has had two pier propositions recently. Harry Wilson, Los Angeles, wants to put a pier out from Divers' Cove. The matter is in the hands of a Chamber of Commerce committee. No admission would be charged to the Wilson pier, according to statements made to the Chamber of Commerce, but the proponent planned to run a line of pleasure boats as well as fishing boats.

Store Razed by Fire Rebuilding on Dinuba Site

DINUBA, Aug. 7.—The frame building at L and Ventura streets which was recently destroyed by fire, will be replaced by a modern business block of cement construction, according to L. W. Patterson, owner of the property.

Debris from the fire is being removed, and as rapidly as possible the new building will be erected to accommodate the grocery store which formerly occupied the location.

Elsinore Seen as Center for Clay Industry

With vast clay deposits near Elsinore, Mr. Richards believes that town is destined to become a clay center of California.

The firm contemplates the opening of at least five additional district offices within the next forty-five days, in anticipation of a heavy fall home-building season. Steel Orders Seen as Omen of Activities

Operating its machines night and day in order to meet the demand for structural steel, the Pacific Iron and Steel Company orders are indicative of an upward trend in building in Los Angeles, according to C. E. Bradburn, president.

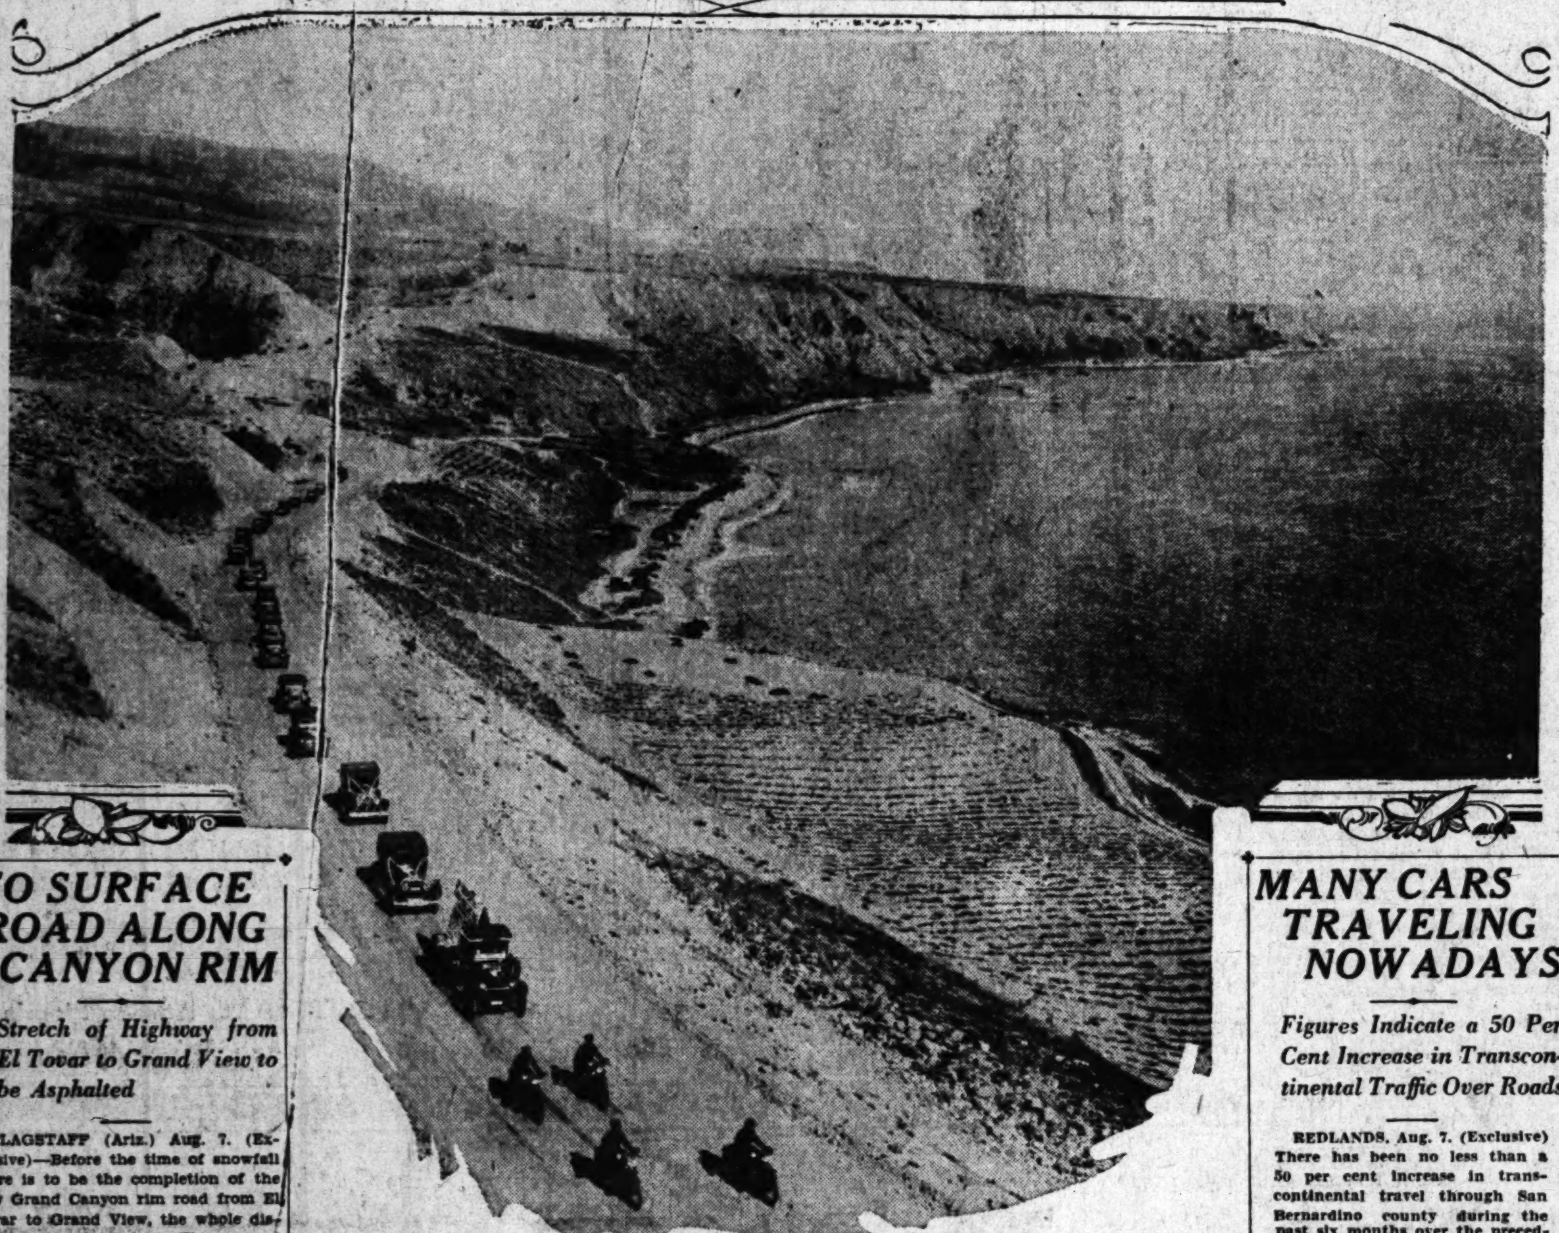
TOURING ON THE VERY BRIM OF THE PACIFIC OCEAN

When the new Palos Verdes highway from San Pedro to Redondo was opened, quite a cavalcade of motorists from both cities made the initial trip over the scenic route, as will be noted above.



TO SURFACE ROAD ALONG CANYON RIM

Stretch of Highway from El Tovar to Grand View to be Asphalted

FLAGSTAFF (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—Before the time of snowfall there is to be the completion of the new Grand Canyon rim road from El Tovar to Grand View, the whole distance to be asphalted. The present road between the two points is through the pines. The new highway winds along the edge of the chasm, with magnificent views at almost any point. From Grand View, it will be carried on eastward to Desert View, where the Fred Harvey system has established a chalet and whence is to be seen a marvelous panorama that embraces most of the Painted Desert, as well as scores of miles of the Grand Canyon and its inner gorge and the tremendous cliffs at the mouth of the Little Colorado, a few miles to the eastward. Desert View now is reached by a descent that reminds the motorist of the Fish Creek hill of the Apache Trail. From a point near the old Hance cabin, east of Grand View, an interesting road now is being used by tourists, who reach the Painted Desert and the Hopi Indian villages by the Cameron crossing of the Little Colorado, whence also Flagstaff may be gained. The first road to the canyon, from Flagstaff to the Hance trail, still occasionally is used.

MAROON IS COLOR FOR LICENSES

Buff Lettering Will Stand Out on Plates to be Passed Out Next Year

Auto license plates for California next year will be of a dark maroon color with buff letters and numerals, according to a report from the Division of Motor Vehicles reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California.

All motor vehicles with the exception of solid-tired trucks will bear these plates, it is stated. The trucks will carry plates reversing this year's colors of white and red so that the background will be red and the figures white.

No change will be made in the size of plates, 14 by 5 inches, but the arrangement of letters and numerals will be drastically changed. To enhance their advertising value on cars touring the East, the name California will be spelled out instead of being abbreviated and the figures will be reduced slightly to permit seven numerals on each plate, thus eliminating the prefixes, A, B, C, etc., used this year to designate numbers above 999,999. This year's plate numbered G-75,000, for example, will be 1,675,000 in 1927.

Uniform Motor Ordinance Has First Reading

VENTURA, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) A traffic ordinance, which incorporates practically all the rules of the uniform traffic ordinance of the Southern California Automobile Club was presented the board trustees at its meeting by City Attorney Orr and was given first reading.

The uniform traffic ordinance, as presented by the Automobile Club, provides for parallel parking, no double left-hand turns, boulevard stops loading zones in front of hotels and other public places, parking time limit of one hour from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. except on Sunday and other features. After the ordinance passed its first reading a copy of it was ordered placed in the city clerk's office where the public may look it over preparatory to making any objections at the next meeting of the board. A resolution against parallel parking passed at the last meeting of the Merchants Credit Association was read to the board.

MORE CARS THAN EVER

Basing population on the estimate made by the Census Bureau, July 1, there is now an automobile for every 5.98 persons in the United States, officials of the Star Motor Car Company of California branch, here, assert. Years ago there was a tremendous cry that the point of saturation would shortly be reached but, with the entire population of the country able to ride in automobiles, there are more cars being sold than ever, Ray Rogers, head of the service department, points out.

A NEW SCENIC BOULEVARD

Palos Verdes Highway a Route of Rare Charm For the Motorist

Completion of the new Palos Verdes Coast Highway was celebrated last week by 5000 people from a dozen cities in the Redondo-San Pedro area. After the route from San Pedro to Redondo had been traversed, dedication exercises were held in the city park. Twelve hundred cars took part in the parade.

The celebration was sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions' Clubs of the following cities: Palos Verdes Estates, Redondo Beach, Hermosa Beach, Torrance, Moneta, Western City, Gardena, Lomita, Harbor City, Long Beach, Wilmington and San Pedro.

Dr. R. G. Whitlock of San Pedro was chairman of the caravan committee and R. C. Grow of San Pedro acted as grand marshal. Other members of the committee were Chester I. Meek, M. J. More of Redondo, Carl Hyde and W. R. Page of Torrance, D. H. Burden and William Crook of Compton, George Preston of Lomita, Albert W. Jackman of Moneta, W. J. Whitington of Gardena, J. W. Weightman of Wilmington, David Larson of Long Beach and James C. Rous, Jr., of Palos Verdes Estates.

The Palos Verdes coast highway was completed on July 4 at a cost of about $750,000. It provides one of the most scenic routes in Southern California, the entire twenty miles from Redondo Beach to San Pedro along the cliffs above the ocean being re-

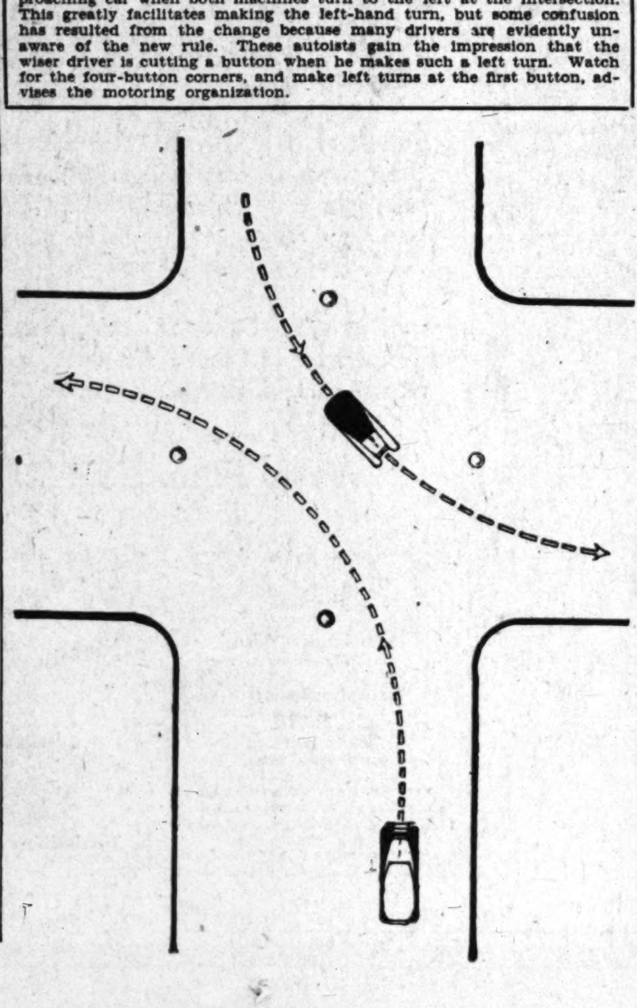
HOW TO PLAY 'BUTTON-BUTTON WHO'S ROUNDING WHICH BUTTON?'

Four traffic buttons now installed at many intersections on Los Angeles streets have a new meaning, motorists are cautioned in advices from the Automobile Club of Southern California. These buttons permit a wider turn and eliminate the necessity of crossing the path of an approaching car when both machines turn to the left at the intersection. This greatly facilitates making the left-hand turn, but some confusion has resulted from the change because many drivers are evidently unaware of the new rule. These autoists gain the impression that the wiser driver is cutting a button when he makes such a left turn. Watch for the four-button corners, and make left turns at the first button, advises the motoring organization.



MANY CARS TRAVELING NOWADAYS

Figures Indicate a 50 Per Cent Increase in Transcontinental Traffic Over Roads

REDLANDS, Aug. 7. (Exclusive) There has been no less than a 50 per cent increase in transcontinental travel through San Bernardino county during the past six months over the preceding year. These figures are based on the check made by quarantine officers who are stationed at the State line on both the National Old Trails and the Ocean-to-Ocean highway.

These figures do not show all the automobiles that enter but most of them. Officers are not on duty at night and some of the roads are not guarded during some of the winter months but the increase is sufficient to show how the travel is increasing.

For the first six months of this year 13,000 cars came in to the State over the National Old Trails. During the first six months of the preceding year there were only 9000 entered the State over this highway.

The majority of the travel, of course, is during the months of August, Spetember and October and the indication is that the total of 30,000 over this road last year will be greatly increased.

In six months of this year a total of about 46,000 cars came into the State over the southern routes and were checked at the quarantine stations. During the same period last year the total reached but 25,000 so it can be seen that the increase is large.

The peak of the travel will be reached in September it is stated by John P. Coy, county horticultural commissioner.

Ford Builds Flivver Plane in His Factory

DETROIT, Aug 7.—Indications are that the "flivver" airplane has at last arrived, but in what quantity it will be produced is a question not yet answered.

At the Ford airport last week a favored few were permitted to inspect a plane, which was built in the Ford airplane shops, of which Otto Koppen was the designer.

The plane was shown by Henry Ford. Its wings measure twenty feet from tip to tip; weight 350 pounds including a twenty-five horse-power engine, and is capable of a speed of 100 miles an hour.

"I see a great field for this type of airplane" said Mr. Ford. "I am not yet ready to announce to the world at large that we are immediately going to produce these in quantity but they can be produced in great number, and cheaply. We are going to work more with the one already built before we consider production."

The "initial copy" of the one-man plane has already been given an air test.

"It is time to know about these things and discuss them," said Mr. Ford. "However, I am not going to flood the country with them until I am a lot surer about its performance than I am now."

MORE LIGHT CARS

Due to the increasing popularity of light cars among motorists who have need for a motor vehicle for utility purposes, motorcycles continue to show a decrease in the country, according to national figures received by the Star Motor Company of California. With a substantial increase in the number of Star cars made in the first six months of this year the registration for motorcycles in the entire country is 99,973, almost 15,000 less than for the same period last year.

LOTS OF PARKING SPACE IF YOU LOOK CLOSELY

Traffic Expert Says We Have More Downtown Parking Than the Average Big City

Los Angeles has more private parking space for automobiles within its downtown district than the average large American city, a report and analysis by Dr. Miller McClintock, consultant of the Traffic Commission, discloses. This is due, the figures show, to the large increase in the number of storage garages. The amount of curb space for parking remains practically stationary. The number of parking lots is decreasing, due to the large number of buildings that are being constructed, yet the great advance in the number of new storage garages have resulted in a net gain of space for more than 6000 cars during the past two years.

Because of its long blocks, the percentage of curb space in Los Angeles is less than half that of most cities, yet the total amount of all kinds of parking space is greater, the figures show. Dr. McClintock pointed out that while there are now forty-seven garages, totaling a floor space of more than 1,000,000 square feet, in the central business district, the city must look to the continued construction of these storage garages as the solution of the downtown parking problem.

Curb space is free, but this space will accommodate but one-fourth of the number of cars using the business district. Parking in garages now costs an average of 46 cents a car and the use of parking lots average 26 cents a car. Most of the parking stations and garages use each space more than once a day.

Los Angeles motorists spend a total of $8047 a day for the storing of automobiles, the figures disclose. This amounts to nearly $3,000,000 a year.

In addition to public lots and garages, there is a growing number of office buildings which are providing parking space in basements. In the new City Hall there will be room for the parking of nearly 500 cars.

Several clubs provide parking space for members and a number of companies have garages or private lots where employees may park their machines during business hours.

In discussing the parking situation, Dr. McClintock said that the parking of automobiles is imperative, as a privately owned machine has no value as a transportation unit unless it can be stopped and left in close proximity to the owner's destination.

"Every responsible automobile owner provides a garage near his home," he said, "but too little thought has been given to the establishment of equally satisfactory terminal facilities at the other end of the run."

Los Angeles' principal storage garage district is north of Fifth street and west of Hill street. This area is unfitted for retail businesses on account of the hills, yet it is close to the center of the downtown area.

WILLYS IN EUROPE

John N. Willys, president of Willys-Overland, Inc., is in Europe attending the introduction of the new Overland Whippet there and going further into newer automobile development abroad, says a notice received by L. J. McCracken, manager of the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company. His stay there is indefinite, it was stated.

DETROIT IS OPTIMISTIC RIGHT NOW

Business is Booming and All Signs Point to Biggest and Best Year in History

DETROIT (Mich.) Aug. 7.—New cars, better cars and with more attractive prices than ever before, are receiving the attention of the buying public. From interest already shown, indications are that fall buying will be very active. With continued normal buying a new yearly record is probable. The first half of the year showed an increase in sales of 12 per cent over the corresponding period for 1925, so with the second half of this year showing no signs of any serious decrease in production and sales a total of more than 4,336,754—which is the high mark of the industry, hung up in 1925—will be this year's output.

There seems to be no limit in sight as to the capacity of the United States to buy and use new motor cars. If there is a "saturation point" it is likely to be in too much production rather than in too much consumption. This country is demanding new cars in increasing quantities, and the demand is being satisfied by increased production and increased facilities. The market is large and competition to satisfy it is liable to result in over-production. This would mean elimination for some of the weaker concerns or at least a tight squeze; an easing off in production in an effort to dispose of stock and, of course, the usual yell from the pessimists that the industry is tottering. Such a condition would be nothing new—but it would not indicate a thing.

During the past five years an increasing volume of business has been finding its way into a decreasing number of large plants, and as the survivors grow larger and stronger the bigger they build. This has resulted in competition being carried to lengths never previously reached in American industry, and under tension which causes executive staffs to crack almost overnight.

A competitor's sudden price cut, the unexpected introduction of a new car, or a revolutionary idea in merchandising is liable to scrap the best-laid plans of the smartest organization.

CLOSED CARS IN MAJORITY

Figures Prove Increase in This Body Type

Laminated Wood Freely Used in Construction

Follows Practice Started by Airplane Men

Higher and higher each year climbs the percentage of closed car production. The recent announcement of the General Motors Corporation that 82 per cent of their output for the coming year would be closed cars set a new mark for that great organization, and is typical of what other manufacturers in the industry are building.

With such a vast increase in closed car production, it is only natural that closed car construction and design have held the keenest attention of automotive engineers. As a result many distinct advances have been made. The great Fisher Body Corporation, for example, which builds all the inclosed bodies for General Motors, has taken a leaf out of the book of the aircraft builders and has adopted the wide use of plywood, or laminated wood in the construction of their closed bodies.

During the World War, plywood was extensively used by airplane builders for fuselage construction where great strength and light weight were imperative. Later propellers were likewise made of the thin sheets of laminated wood. The same reasons that made plywood successful for aircraft were found to make it valuable in automobile bodies. Plywood does not check, crack and warp as does solid wood when exposed to the weather.

Plywood is likewise easier to bend, to shape, and to cut to forms. It is also used as a backing for steel panels, both curved and straight. It is as strong as a like thickness of solid wood and is extensively used by the Fisher engineers in all types of bodies.

Some features of construction, however, that are employed in the modern closed car body, follow closely the practices of the fine stage coach builders of centuries ago. Wooden joints and unions, reinforced by steel, permit of a perfect fit with resiliency that makes for easy riding and likewise gives great strength.

son automobile manufacturers are introducing better cars and aiming to raise the standard of performance, comfort and safety in the belief that this country can and will buy them. This means that prices will remain firm or go higher rather than recede. Many of the cars will be smaller and lighter than ever before, with quality built into them on a par with the more expensive and larger cars.

Engineers predict that the medium priced cars now in use with six-cylinder engines will be brought down to smaller sizes that will be all-purpose cars for both city and country driving. But with the smaller cars will also come even more luxurious large ones. One maker for this year in fact, is featuring a complete range of no less than fifty models, none of which sells for less than $3000.

A new type of car, the Argyle, of Scottish make, came to the Continental Motors plant this week for study by the engineers in connection with Continental's plan for introduction of the single sleeve valve engine in America.

The car is a four-seater, built on a wheel base of 111 inches and weighs 2100 pounds. There are four cylinders of 2.79 inch bore and 4.06 stroke displacing 100 inches. It has a speed of sixty-five miles an hour, and cylinders are so constructed that it is never necessary to renew or regrind them.

Employment in the various automobile plants and accessories factories in Detroit is beginning to climb, after a steady decrease for several weeks, due to inventories, and summer vacations. The increase this week was 3443, which makes the total now employed 232,787. The number employed during the corresponding week of 1925 was approximately 12,000 greater.

The Ford Motor Company has just turned out its 14,000,000th car. Although no daily production figures have been made public by Ford officials for several months indications are that production is rapidly increasing after a noticeable decrease. It was but little more than two years ago that the 10,000,000th car ran off the assembly chain, and also made a transcontinental tour. This indicates that 4,000,000 cars and trucks have been produced within a period of about twenty-eight months.

Commenting this week as to the future of the automobile industry, Henry Ford said cars will be made lighter and more simple, cheaper and better in every way. He also disposed of the rumor to the effect that the Ford Motor Company would soon be out with a new six-cylinder model.

"I hear every now and then that we are going to make a six-cylinder car. I'm sure I don't know anything about it," he declared.

The National Automobile Underwriters' Conference has approved a new draft of a standard automobile policy for country-wide use, which may be issued as a standard indorsement form. Either form may be used as an actual value or no amount policy, and have been adopted by the conference as standard, effective immediately.

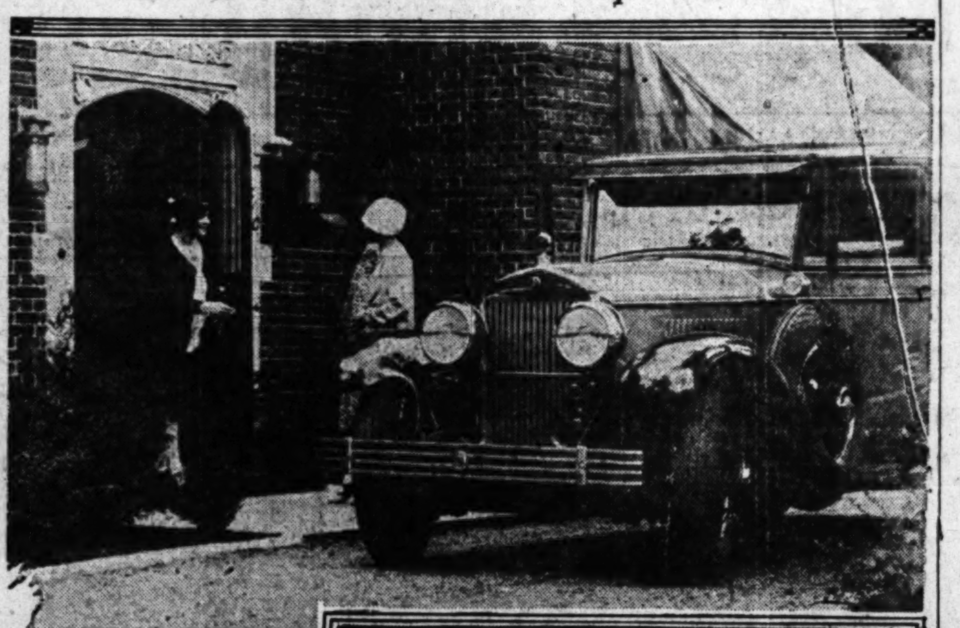
Intensive studies by automobile manufacturers show that approximately 1,900,000 automobiles will this year be junked on account of old age, accidents and other causes.

Further estimates indicate that the number released from service will rapidly increase from year to year and in 1930 2,900,000 will have been declared useless.

This indicates that the present rate of production will not be required to slow down to any noticeable extent due to the arrival at the motor vehicle "saturation point."

Even now manufactureres are planning production in the ratio of the number of car owners to the population.

How Do You Like These Improvements?



The Cadillac models just announced are referred to as the "improved models" and they are striking developments of that famous line. The lower photograph shows the new instrument board, a most elegant affair.

BIG CHOICE OF BODIES IS OFFERED

Fifty Types and Styles of Bodies Offered With Current Line of Cadillacs

Stressing a greatly widened range of choice in body styles and appointments in conjunction with further refinements in both body and chassis, and the addition of five new body styles, the Cadillac Motor Car Company last week marked the anniversary of the introduction of the current model with an announcement of wide interest to fine-car purchasers. The complete Cadillac line now includes no less than fifty body types and styles, 500 color combinations and an extensive choice of upholstery. The first of the cars featuring the newly announced changes were placed on display last Thursday by Don Lee and attracted wide attention.

The twelve months just closed were the most successful in the entire history of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, and sales during that period showed a gain of 87.5 per cent over the previous year. California sales were no exception to the general popularity Cadillac enjoyed, for Don Lee reported delivery of no less than 2552 Cadillacs of the current model since August 1 of last year, representing a retail valuation of approximately $10,000,000.

"In line with the present tendency of owners to seek the greatest amount of individuality in their cars, the Cadillac company during the past twelve months has made studied efforts to meet every requirement in body, style and color combination without excessive cost," said J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee. Brown has just returned from attendance at the annual convention of Cadillac dealers at Detroit, where he received a comprehensive picture of Cadillac plans for the coming season.

"The new features now presented include a radiator shell somewhat increased in size and with the front radius definitely sharpened, and a new medallion-type emblem on its front. The one-piece front fenders are of a new type and there is a new and highly ornamental instrument-board panel of embossed German silver and walnut. The outstanding feature of the Cadillac announcement, however, is the length to which the company has gone in the removal of standardization of appearance and in meeting individual tastes and requirements in coach work and personally selected color combinations.

"In its introduction of the new car one year ago the Cadillac company emphasized the Cadillac characteristics of value and performance coupled with new features of greater power and liveliness in the engine and simplification and better riding qualities in the chassis. There were six standard and seven custom-built bodies with lines that were new and sweeping. The output for the past twelve months, Cadillac officials state, constituted the greatest twelve months' production of fine cars at or above the Cadillac price in the history of the automobile industry."

NO MORE FEES

The 5 per cent consular fee exacted at the Mexican border for the importation of parts used in the building of automobiles and trucks has been abolished, according to word received by the Moreland Motor Truck Company.

BIG INVESTMENT

"In doubling the capacity and size of the Oakland Motor Car Company factory in Pontiac in order to produce 1600 cars daily, more than $5,000,000 was expended," says H. H. Franklin, manager for Reeve Gartzmann, Oakland and Pontiac distributor, "making a total of more than $50,000,000 invested in this unit by General Motors Company."

ALL FINISHED

Construction work which has been in progress just east of Willows on the San Diego-El Centro Road, has been completed, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Dear Mr. McBryde:

You may remember I wrote you last Fall telling you that during the 60,000 miles you had been responsible for the lubricating and tightening of my 1923 Buick "6", I had no expense for wear or breaking of any parts under your care.

The old bus has just completed 76,000 miles, and in looking over its expense account, find that there are still no worn or broken parts due to faulty work on your part.

Am going to trade this car shortly for a new Buick which, under your thorough methods of greasing and tightening, I expect to drive 150,000 miles.

I know this record is small compared to many of your other customers, but I wanted you to know how pleased I am with your dependable service.

Very truly yours,

G. B. Beer

NASH

Still Leads!

After a review of all the new motor car offerings the interested motorist cannot help but be impressed with the fact that "Nash still leads."

Nash still has the best four-wheel brakes in the industry. No other car has such serviceable, reliable, absolutely positive and SAFE brakes as the Nash. Simplicity of design is the keynote of Nash four-wheel brake supremacy, for it does away with dangerous complications and insures positive, equalized action at all times, whether the car is traveling straight ahead or rounding a curve.

Nash still has the best looking body designs, and the best constructed bodies —by Seaman, of course!

Nash still leads in wheel equipment, for ALL Nash models are equipped with the famous Budd-Michelin disc wheels, the neatest appearing and strongest wheel made for motor cars, inherently balanced and running true to within 1-100 of an inch. Budd-Michelin disc wheels will stand a blow that would completely shatter a wooden wheel or an ordinary disc wheel. And ALL Nash models are equipped with Budd-Michelins—not just one model!

—No doubt about it—"Nash Still Leads the World in Motor Car Value!" Witness the fact that Nash sales in Southern California increased 112% during the first seven months of 1926 over a like period of last year.

PINK SLIP IS WORTH HAVING

Superior Court Decision is Very Clear

If You Haven't It You're No Owner

Physician Loses Car Because of Carelessness

VENTURA, Aug. 3. (Exclusive)—Here is a tip for all prospective purchasers of automobiles: It comes direct from the Superior Court bench: "Get the pink slip before or at the time you pay your money."

Judge Merle Rogers used those words in a memorandum opinion handed down today in the case of the Commercial Discount Company of Los Angeles against Dr. D. W. Mott of Santa Paula. The suit arose from the forgery operations and absconding of Taylor and Bobo, Oxnard automobile dealers. Last fall they delivered the pioneer physician and civic leader of Santa Paula a sedan, receiving in exchange $848 cash and a used car. He paid them the $3 registration fee and they agreed to attend to the transfer and procure him the pink slip. Previously, it was shown by the evidence, Taylor and Bobo purported to sell to one Huntley, a fictitious person, the same car. A conditional sales contract covering the transaction was made out and assigned to the Commercial Discount Company. The latter registered the car in its own name and received the pink slip. Judge Rogers in his memorandum says that under the State Motor Vehicle Act, as repeatedly upheld by the Supreme Court, the Discount Company is plainly entitled to judgment, and he confirms its right to the car, together with costs. "No transfer of the title could legally be made without the surrender of the pink slip and the issuance of another to the new purchaser," says the judge. "No one in the possession of an automobile so registered in the name of another as legal owner can transfer any title thereto except upon the provisions of the statute being complied with."

The fact that the "Huntley" contract was a forgery does not alter the situation, the judge adds, inasmuch as the plaintiff complied with all the requirements of the statute and the record was open to the defendant. The plaintiff was in no way a party to the Taylor-Bobo fraud, it is held.

EAST SEES CARAVAN OF NEW AUTOS

Pittsburgh Dealers Drive Mile-Long String of Cars from Factory

Peerless dealers in the Pittsburgh district recently descended upon the Cleveland factory, purchased 109 cars of various models, and drove them home under police escort in order to provide their customers with the new models they desired.

The line was more than a mile long and included practically every model made by the company. The drive-away was arranged by the Steel City Automobile Company, Peerless distributors in Pittsburgh, to assure dealers in that section of enough Peerless cars to meet their immediate demands.

The Peerless Motor Car Company included news of the drive-away in a letter received by J. W. Leavitt & Co., Southern California distributors, and this letter said that because of the unusual size of the line of shining new cars, the caravan attracted an unusual amount of attention in every city through which it passed. An escort in Cleveland was provided by the police department, and at every city through which the parade passed, police were stationed at the city limits to conduct the line through the downtown streets.

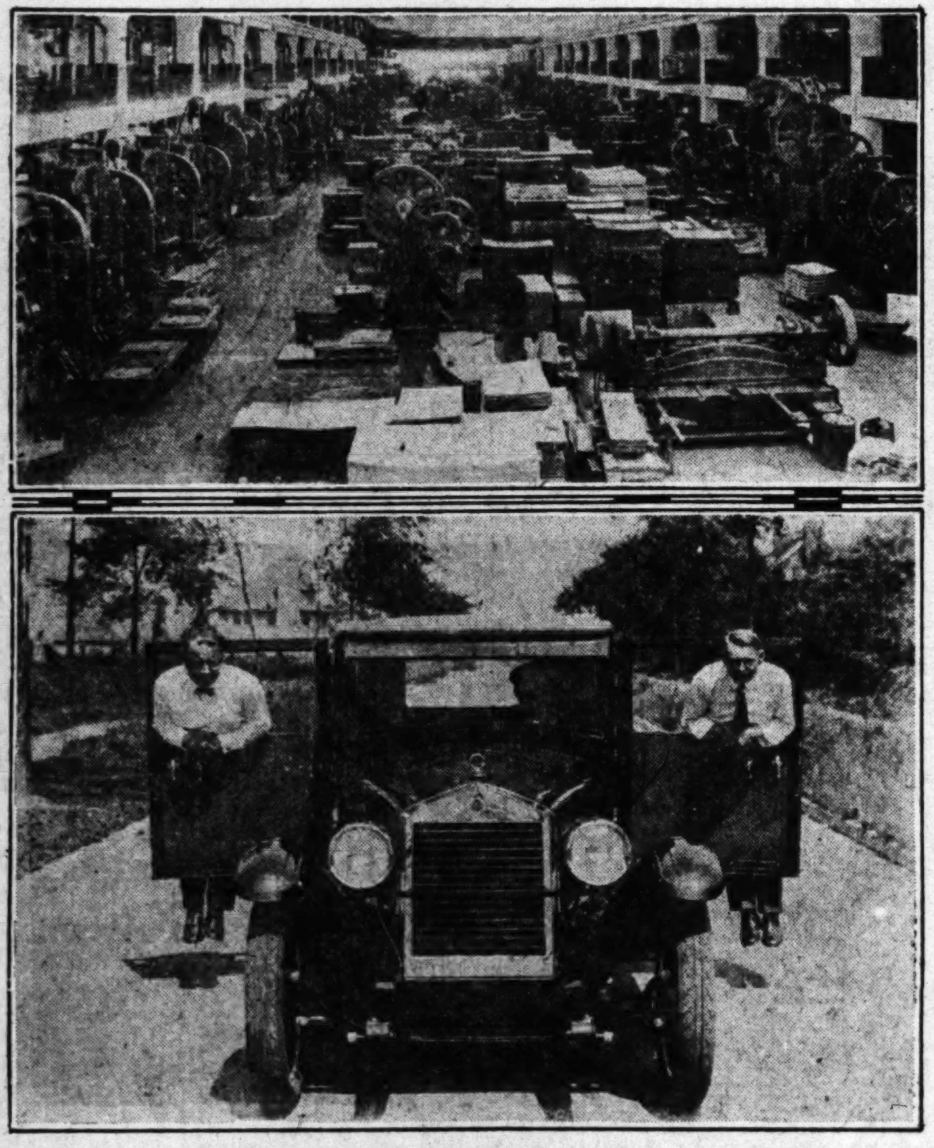
L. V. Starr, manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co., sometimes wishes that Los Angeles was situated close enough to Cleveland so that it would be practical to take a group of drivers to the factory to bring back much-needed models.

COLOR COMBINATION IS VERY ATTRACTIVE

Among the recent purchasers of a Lincoln motor car is Mrs. Sarah Lasky, mother of Jesse Lasky, prominent motion-picture producer. Mrs. Lasky's new Lincoln was purchased from Stephen S. Nerney, Hollywood Lincoln dealer, and is a sport touring model painted in two-tone jet black and gray. According to prominent members of the film colony it is one of the most dignified color combinations yet attributed to the Lincoln Motor Company.

More than 9000 American automobiles were assembled in plants outside the United States and Canada in a recent month.

New Stuff—and How It's Done



That the door of the newly announced all-steel Essex coach will not sag, was demonstrated by this stunt in which two 200-pound men swung on the doors while the car was driven over rough roads. These piano-hinged doors are one of the features of the new-model Essex just introduced here by the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company. The lower photo shows the metal stamping presses in the new $10,000,000 body plant at Detroit, just finished to turn out the new Essex coach bodies. This is declared the largest battery of stamping presses in the world.

NEW BODIES ARE STURDY

Product of a new $10,000,000 plant which the Hudson Motor Car Company erected at Detroit especially for the building of these bodies, the new Essex Coach, marked by an all-steel body of new and radically improved design, has just been put on display here by the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company.

The debut of the new Essex coaches, both in the distributor's main show rooms in Los Angeles, in the metropolitan dealers' places, and at sub-dealers' establishments throughout the Southland, was the occasion for a new rush of buying, many prospects, it is declared, having been "lying in wait" for the anticipated coming of these models.

Although the new bodies are radically different in construction from anything previously known, visitors discovered, they found them retaining the characteristic Essex lines with a few exceptions. The changes noted at first glance are: cars lowered two inches; heavier and more lustrous baked enamel finish; rear quarters slightly curved, eliminating the former square effect; a nickled radiator shell.

Closer inspection showed that the doors are swung on a brand-new type of hinge, known as the piano type; that these doors and windows are much improved as to strength; that rattles and squeaks have been eliminated by new methods of construction, and many little refinements added such as a dash switch for the electric windshield wiper.

"All the refinements and improvements have been made in the body of the new Essex," stated Richard F. Carlson, vice-president and general manager of the Murphy organization, in discussing the new coach. "The powerful and flexible super-six Essex motor, which has proved so satisfactory in the hands of thousands upon thousands of contented Essex owners, has not been changed."

Important in connection with the bringing-out of this much stauncher Essex Coach, it was pointed out by Mr. Carlson, is the fact that the new $10,000,000 body plant at Detroit alone made such a bettered car possible. Declared by Hudson-Essex officials to be the largest single body plant in the world and by far to boast the largest battery of steel-stamping processes and the largest enamel-baking ovens in the world, this new factory boasts two major manufacturing features as follows:

(1.)— In it, body building for the first time in the auto industry has become primarily a steel-stamping process:

(2.)—Also, for the first time, bodies are manufactured on the 100 per cent progressive-assembly system which previously has effected such remarkable savings in motors, chassis and other motor car units.

That the Hudson-Essex factory organization, over a year ago, completed the design of this new body and laid out a program for a building in which to construct it, was the statement issued by the factory in a communication accompanying the car's announcement.

"In this general expansion program," said the statement, "a total of $10,000,000 was invested in the body plant and $6,000,000 additional in other manufacturing departments. The plant was finished on time and a daily schedule of 150 new all-steel bodies put through as against a planned program of 100 bodies daily."

On display at every Hudson-Essex sales place in the West, Manager Carlson announces that immediate delivery can now be made on these new Essex coaches.

BUSSES ARE BUSY

Showing how trucks are becoming more and more a factor in transportation, not only of freight but of persons, the Lincoln Nebraska Traction Company has asked authority of the State Railway Commission to abandon services of two of its poorest-paying lines, a bulletin received by the Moreland Motor Truck Company recites. Motor busses mounted on truck chassis will supplant the street cars in the effort to curtail the constant decrease in the number of street-car riders.

NEW HIGHWAY HAS BEAUTY

plete with beautiful vistas of water, inlets, hills and distant mountains.

The route passes the new government lighthouse at Point Vicente where the government has recently completed its finest light for mariners. The road also passes within a stone's throw of the 240-acre estate of Frank A. Vanderlip, which is now being landscaped and on which will be erected a $250,000 home. The road is twenty-seven feet wide and has an eight-inch base of crushed rock. All turns are super-elevated on the outside and the grades are so easy that any automobile can make the entire trip in high.

The last link of nine miles was built during the spring of this year and all expenses were borne by the Palos Verdes Syndicate, of which Frank A. Vanderlip is president. The coast route may be entered at the Redondo end by any one of a number of roads or at the San Pedro end via Western avenue.

LOWER RATES ON INSURANCE

suring within their organization could make a considerable saving in premium. As the business developed year fater year, it was demonstrated that the Automobile Club not only gives the lowest possible rates to its members, but that the competition compelled the conference companies to hold down their rates. The net result, it is stated, has been to keep rates in all companies the lowest in Southern California, and to save millions of dollars annually to the owners of the nearly 900,000 automobiles in this territory.

Get behind the wheel of the Finest Performing Car in America

We want you to drive the car which experts rate highest in America because of its sheer ability to out-perform. This is a Special Demonstration Week for the Hupmobile Eight.

We want you to put it through a real test—to drive it as you like to drive. Only in this way can you realize why this car is up-rooting the old-fashioned idea that mere price or name must necessarily mean prestige. By this test alone can you know why motor car buyers are now sensing the higher prestige of superfine performance.

Any attempt to describe the smoothness, the acceleration, the driving ease of this wonderful car, is certain to be futile.

You must drive it to realize why experts speak of it as unrivaled in performance by any other car in all the world—with the possible exception of a very costly car of Italian manufacture.

You must drive it to realize why the celebrated motor car manufacturer who came from France to America to inspect our finest factories and our finest cars, thought fit to take back with him for research and emulation only one car—the Hupmobile Eight.

This most amazing demonstration of motor car performance ability is as near as your telephone.

We will gladly send, to your home or your office, a car for you to drive. Or, if you prefer, stop in—any time that is convenient to you.

Remember, please, that we do not care whether or not you are in the market for a new car. We simply want you to know what a revelation in performance this great straight eight actually is.

Make it a particular point to drive the Hupmobile Eight during this Special Demonstration Week.

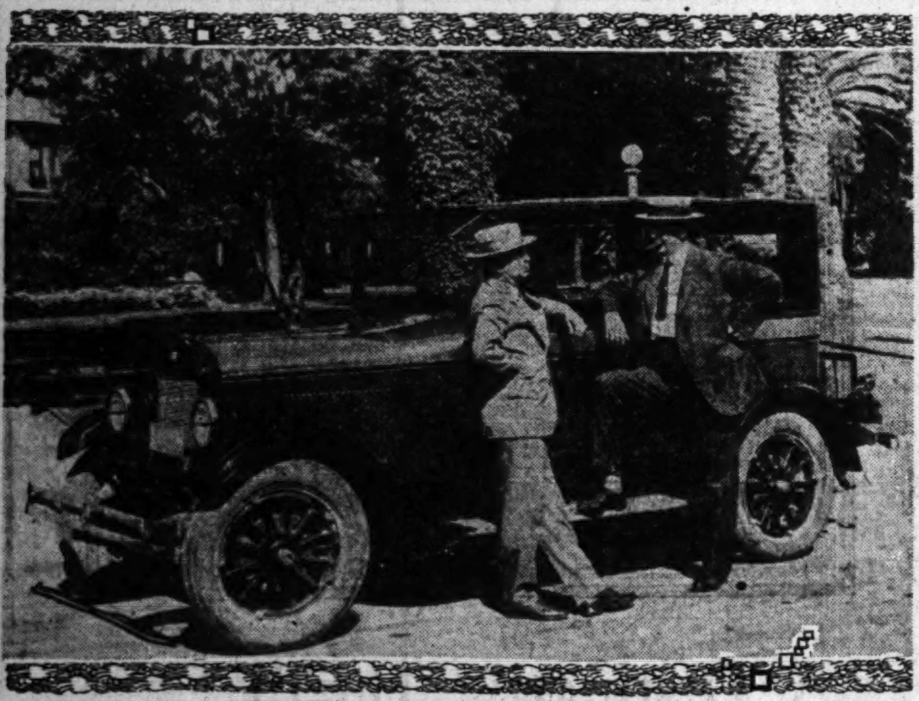
Just Back from a Hard Journey



Arthur V. Neff (left,) assistant general manager of the Pige Company of Southern California, Jewett six distributor, talking with Robert Robertson, real estate dealer, about hard trip made by Mr. Robertson and his family in this Jewett six sedan.

GAVE AN HONEST ANSWER

Robert Robertson, familiarly known as "Bob," who is in the real-estate business, and Arthur V. Neff, assistant general manager of the Paige Company of Southern California, were competitors a few years ago in the automobile business here. They became good friends, though business rivals.

"Arthur, are those Jewett six cars you sell, any good?"

"If they weren't I wouldn't be selling them," answered Neff, rather nettled.

"All right, send me up one," said Robertson.

He got the car a couple of hours later.

Within a few days Mr. Robertson, his wife and two children were en route east in the Jewett. They drove to Memphis, via Indio and Blythe, visited Chicago, Indianapolis, Mammoth Cave, Louisville, towns in Alabama and then drove back to Los Angeles.

While on the road it rained five and one-half inches in one day, making the going almost impossible and many detours necessary. Between Carrizo, N. M., and San Antonio, Tex., they found no road and did not pass one machine while fighting their way through mud and debris.

When they arrived home a few days ago Mr. Robertson called on Mr. Neff and told about his trip. Although he traveled 10,000 miles in four months, traversed all kinds of roads and even run into a snowstorm, he did not experience one bit of mechanical trouble and an examination of the car here failed to show that it needed any attention from the repair man.

BREAK CAUSES WRECK

A recent visitor to Los Angeles was Pablo Cortez, in the Mexican custom service, who has been vacationing in and around Los Angeles. He is very enthusiastic about Southern California's splendid roads and contrasts the highways on the American side of the line with those on the Mexican side, according to N. Bershon of the Bershon Tire Company.

"The service in which Mr. Cortez is employed requires frequent excursions along the border over roads we would hardly call trails in California," said Mr. Bershon. "Many times fast driving is absolutely necessary. On one occasion recently Cortez was driving at about fifty miles an hour on a stretch of rough roads when his drive shaft dropped out and the rear wheels of his car were thrown completely over the front wheels, the car turning a complete somersault.

"Cortez stated that the Victor Springfield tires on his car, in spite of this terrific handling, remained intact without so much as a puncture. Cortez says that Victor Springfields are the most satisfactory tires he has used, lasting far longer than other makes on these roads."

Australia's plan for compulsory insurance of employees by employers has had hard sledding because insurance companies held back in taking out licenses to accept such insurance.

CONTRAST SHOWN IN TWO ROADS

New All-Year Highway Will Save Time and Money for Motoring Public

California's latest road triumph, the new all-year highway into the Yosemite Valley, which was opened to travel Saturday, will be the means of saving huge sums annually to motorists as well as throwing open this ideal vacation spot to motor travel at any season.

Immediately after the road was opened the official road scout car of the Gilmore Oil Company made the trip into the park by the new, or Briceburg, highway and the old Wawona trail. Data gathered under official observation disclosed these facts:

Old road, 102 miles from Merced to Camp Curry.

New road, 94 miles from Merced to Camp Curry.

Time traveling in on old road five hours, eighteen minutes.

Time traveling in on new road, three hours, two minutes.

Gasoline consumed on old road with six-cylinder stock touring car and four passengers, nine and one-fourth gallons.

Gasoline consumed on new road with same car and same load, six gallons.

Oil consumed on old road, one pint.

Oil consumed on new road, none.

It was found necessary to shift into second gear forty times and into low gear three times while making the trip on the old Wawona road, and the car traveled twelve and one-half miles in second.

The entire trip was made in high on the new Briceburg road.

WHY TIRES DON'T LAST EXPLAINED

Bureau of Standards Tells of Tests to Which They Subject All Kinds of Tires

The following conclusions have been reached as to factors which influence the life of tires, according to a paper which has just been issued by the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce.

(1.) A carcass in which the friction rubber is slightly compounded appears to stand up better under test than one in which "pure gum" is used.

(2.) Within the customary limits of air pressure used in tires, the higher the pressure the better the tire will stand up.

(3.) Fabric tires develop a much higher temperature than cord tires, and their life is much less than cord tires.

(4.) Separation, which was the principal cause of failure in these tests, did not always take place in the same location in the tire. It occurred in most cases between the tread and breaker, breaker and cushion, cushion and carcass, or between the outer two plies.

(5.) Any particular brand of tire usually showed a characteristic type of failure.

(6.) Some makes of tires "blow out" much sooner after separation has started than others.

(7.) Compounded inner tubes for truck tires appear to withstand the action of heat better than those of the pure-gum type.

It is interesting to note that of the tires tested, in general not more than one-half the samples passed the test requirements, although a general improvement was noted during the period covered by the tests in the case of some tires.

The publication briefly describes the testing machines developed by the bureau for this work. By using these machines it is possible to determine in forty-eight hours facts which would otherwise require several months' use on the road. A table gives the results of the tests. Tires are identified by letters; manufacturers' names are not given.

This paper is known as Technologic Paper No. 318, and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., at 10 cents per copy.

Highway Information

The following highway information was issued by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California under date of August 4. Motorists wishing further information may obtain it by communicating directly with the club.

Los Angeles to Santa Barbara. Three optional routes are available between Los Angeles and Ventura—one by way of the Ventura Boulevard, one by way of Santa Susana Pass, and another by way of San Fernando, Saugus and Fillmore.

On the route by way of Ventura Boulevard, paved highway is complete the entire distance with the exception of a detour around Chalk Hills Grade. This detour is necessary, as the State Highway Commission is relocating the road over this grade, eliminating many of the turns.

Both the second and third routes mentioned are paved complete. Between Ventura and Santa Barbara, construction work is still in progress along the causeways. These sections under construction are rather narrow and a ten-mile speed limit is enforced.

Los Angeles to Oake Wilde. From Los Angeles paved road is had via North Broadway, Huntington Drive and Fair Oaks avenue to Pasadena. From Pasadena pavement is followed via Lincoln to Ventura street. Here a left turn is made and this street followed through Arroyo Drive, which leads up the Arroyo Seco to Camp Oake Wilde.

From the junction of Ventura street and Arroyo Drive, a dirt road is had the remaining distance to the camp. Some construction work will be found at various places in the Arroyo Seco but it is of such nature that it does not hinder travel in any manner.

Los Angeles to Newport Beach and Balboa. Two optional routes may be had between Los Angeles and Balboa, one by way of Long Beach Boulevard and along the coast through Seal Beach and Huntington Beach, or by way of East Seventh street and Whittier Boulevard through Whittier, Fullerton, and Santa Ana.

On the first mentioned route paved highway is continuous the entire distance excepting a short stretch of unpaved road at Alamitos Bay. On the second route between Whittier and Fullerton pavement is complete the entire distance.

Oakland leads again with the Rubber-Silenced Chassis

Oakland has pioneered many outstanding motor car improvements, including Duco Finish, interchangeable bronze-backed bearings and the Harmonic Balancer, but none more vital and valuable than the newest Oakland achievement—the Rubber-Silenced Chassis.

The Rubber-Silenced Chassis is exactly what its name implies—a chassis refined to a supreme state of quietness—a chassis freed from the disturbing noise and rumbling experienced in ordinary cars—a chassis that permits passengers to ride in quiet, cushioned comfort.

Rubber does it! Rubber, employed as it is employed in no other motor car, absorbs shocks and deadens noise, just as the Harmonic Balancer prevents engine vibration.

This remarkable, new feature—rendering Oakland Six performance smooth and quiet beyond comparison—is exclusive to Oakland. No other motor car has it.

Come in—let us explain the Rubber-Silenced Chassis and Oakland's 77 refinements in detail—then drive the Greater Oakland Six and experience the amazing results of this newest Oakland achievement.

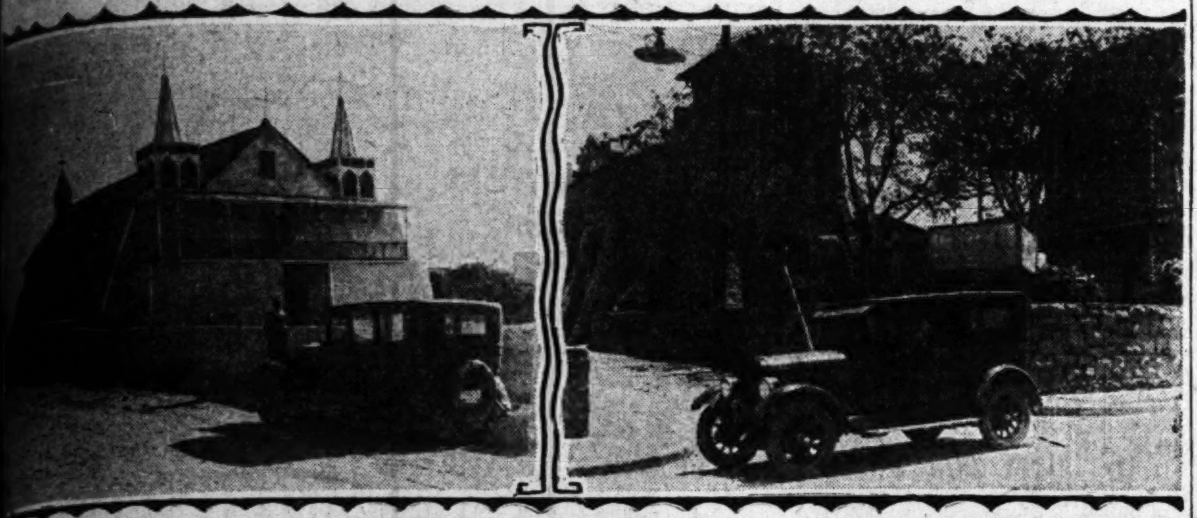
A Couple of Bits of Early Southwestern History



The St. Augustine Church at Iseleta, N. M., was founded 360 years ago and is the third in point of age in the United States. On the right is the San Miguel Mission at Santa Fe, N. M., one of the most interesting of the Spanish missions in New Mexico.

ANCIENT MISSIONS STAND

New Mexico Buildings Are Reminders of the Days Many Years Ago

The Franciscan Fathers in their search for the Seven Lost Cities of [illegible] discovered a race of aborigines whom they named Pueblos. These [illegible] were, in all probability, made up of various ethnic groups. Their [illegible] were augmented by wandering or nomadic peoples who upon [illegible] them became amalgamated provided they were seeking permanent [illegible]. These incomers took on the culture of the resident tribes and in [illegible] a like-mindedness in feeling, religious belief and social organization [illegible] developed. Their devotional rites were characterized by elaborate ceremonials to propitiate certain gods whom they believed were responsible [illegible] rain and plant growth. This characteristic of their culture proves con[illegible] the aridity of New Mexico for hundreds, and probably thousands [illegible] years. Every arable valley was made productive by irrigation, where [illegible] was available. On the commanding points permanent abodes were [illegible] of stone and mud. The deficiency of game, the uncertainty of seasonal [illegible] the high rate of evaporation and rapidity of absorption as a result of [illegible] physiographic conditions, made fixed dwellings and an agricultural [illegible] of food supply a necessity.

Thousands of inches of newspaper and magazine space has been [illegible] to the Missions of California; [illegible] pamphlets, without number, have been printed and distributed concerning the West Coast civilization instituted by the padres and [illegible] by the conversion of the [illegible] to Christianity. The cumulative effect of this exploitation has been such that the older and in many ways more interesting missions founded by the Franciscans in New Mexico, have not received the [illegible] their antiquity, number and variety deserve.

The two here reproduced — the San Miguel at Santa Fe and the San [illegible] at Isleta, are rivals in age. The San Miguel is generally credited with being the oldest edifice erected for Christian worship in the United States and, located as it is in the city of Santa Fe, tens of thousands of tourists visit it every year. The San Agustin at Isleta, eighteen miles from Albuquerque, has become almost as well known because of the [illegible] of the National Old Trails Highway and its resultant use by an endless chain of motorists from the east to the west, or vice versa.

The motor-driven vehicles made highway improvement a necessity. Good roads in turn vastly increased the use of automobiles for long-distance vacation trips. As a result of the almost universal use of motor cars we have developed in America a gypsying class largely made up of family units and in the main, of cultured and well-to-do people. The easterner has become acquainted with the beauties, resources and economic problems of the West. Our West Coast pioneers in turn, driving eastward, vacationing as they go, are gaining a first-hand knowledge of sectional needs and resources.

The Sunshine State is dependent upon both the east and the west. Scattered over its high plateaus are ruins of a forgotten civilization. Still existant are inhabited towns populated by a race practicing the customs handed down by their forefathers over perhaps 1000 years. A little nearer the present we find governmental edifices established by the Spanish of 400 years ago. A concerted and systematic protection of this ancient and medieval American culture should be under way. The motor car and supply dealers are leaders in presenting the attractions of our West to Americans as a whole. True, they hope to advance their financial interests thereby.

The W. P. Herbert Company and the Pennzoil Oil Company are maintaining cars on transcontinental highways, paying the bills for the release of reliable road data and authentic photos of points of interest which may be visited by the motorist.

Michigan Folks Start Caravan for the Coast

BATTLE CREEK (Mich.) Aug. 7.—The "Michigan Automobile Tours" caravan consisting of a number of parties gathered together from many of the middle-western and eastern States, left here Tuesday bound for a three-months' tour of the Pacific Coast, including a feature tour through the Redwood Highway Empire—interstate routing between Portland and San Francisco. The caravan is under the personal direction of J. H. Brown, tour manager, who originated and organized this—the premier tour of the Pacific Coast by automobile caravan on such a large scale.

After visiting Yellowstone National Park, Ranier National Park, Columbia River Highway, and other points of interest in the Pacific-Northwest, the caravan will proceed to Grants Pass, Or., where it will divert west and south—over the Redwood Highway—to Southern California.

Side trips in the Redwood Empire en route will include: Oregon Caves, Trinidad Whalery, Lake county—"Switzerland of America," Russian River resort colony, Valley of the Moon, Burbank's Gardens, Petrified Forest, Mt. Tamalpais and Muir Woods, and other interesting tours. Approximately five days will be spent in the Redwood Empire.

Motorist Has Knowledge of Motor Details

Addressing the Velie dealers of Southern California, during a recent visit to Los Angeles, L. F. Murphy, General Sales Manager of the Velie Motors Corporation, emphasized the alertness and keen interest displayed by American motorists in following the rapid development of the automotive industry and the progress made in the perfection of gasoline motors.

"Stop the average American motorist on the street today and ask him about the most recent development in automobiles and you will find him ready with an intelligent answer," said Murphy. "His information in this respect is not confined to the particular make of car he owns. He is in a general way familiar with the developments of all makes of cars.

"This fact has been clearly demonstrated to us this year, since we announced the advent of our high-powered vibrationless motor. Thousands of motorists from every section of the country are sending in their requests for literature describing the new motor following our announcement in the newspapers, Velie dealers all over the country are busy answering questions of eager motorists; questions that denote their intimate knowledge of motor specifications and their relation to satisfactory motor performance and durability.

TAKE YOUR MOTOR CAR TO EUROPE

It's Easy Now and Many of the Best People Seem to be Doing It These Days

Americans who visit France this season are going to see places of interest other than the famous social centers, if one may judge from the rapidly growing practice of taking private motor cars along on the same steamer that passengers employ in going to the continent. The big French liner Paris on its last trip out carried no less than twenty-eight passengers who checked their automobiles right along with their baggage and will drive them off the dock at Havre.

Among these were Miss Anne Morgan, noted society leader and welfare worker, who took along her Chrysler Imperial "80" town car; Mrs. Edna Chase, editor of Vogue Magazine, with her Chrysler Imperial "800" sedan-limousine; J. P. Dognin, who will drive a Chrysler Imperial "80" roadster in France; Katherine Whitmarsh, who took along a Chyrsler "70" roadster, and Keith McLeod, who shipped his Chrysler "70" coach. Five of the twenty-eight cars shipped on this voyage of the Paris were Chryslers.

Under the present plan it is no longer necessary to crate an automobile in order to ship it on an ocean liner. Instead, it is driven to the dock, hoisted aboard and tethered in the hold of the vessel by means of ropes attached to the wheels. On arriving at the other side it is out of the hold by the time the owner has his baggage cleared and is ready to drive away. Miss Morgan will use her Chrysler in visiting the devastated regions of France, for the rehabilitation of which she has been working ever since the armistice.

BIGGEST TRUCK FLEET IS FOUND

The recent purchase of twelve additional Pierce-Arrow Dual-valve trucks for the Norton-Keating Sand Company of New York, an associate of the Colonial Sand and Stone Company, now gives these associated companies what is believed to be the largest fleet of Pierce-Arrow dump trucks in the world.

The addition of these trucks increases the Pierce-Arrow fleet owned by the Norton-Keating Sand Company and the Colonial Sand and Stone Company to a total of ninety-three dump trucks. The company is the largest retailer of sand in the world.

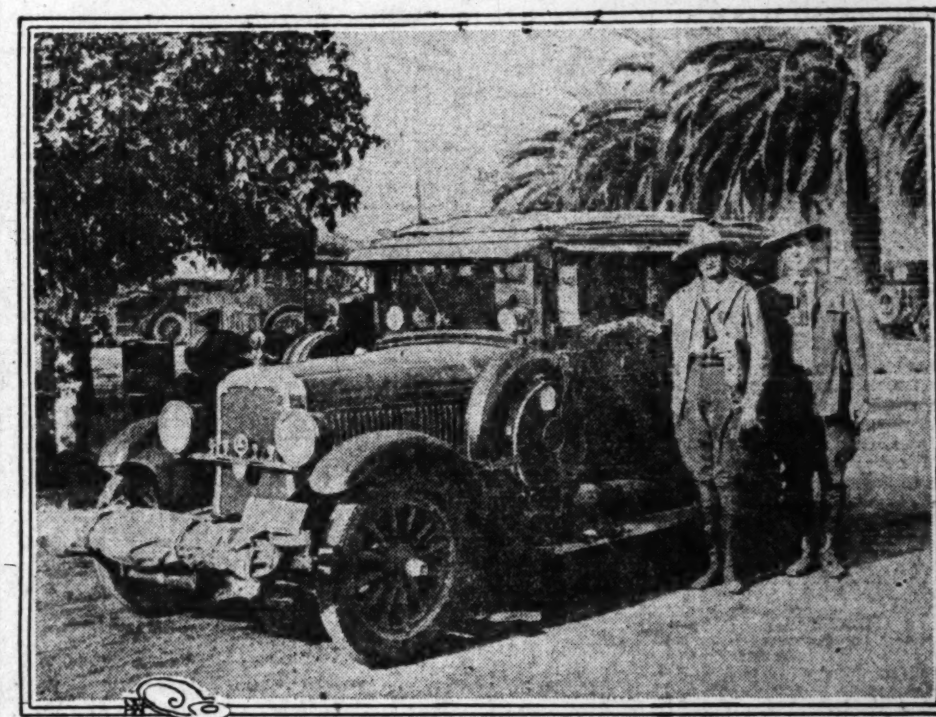
Found Motoring Very Cheap



Mr. and Mrs. Ray D. Vercler of this city have returned from a vacation trip in their Oldsmobile six coach. They traveled 4323 miles and spent only 75 cents for repairs. They carried about 1200 pounds of extra baggage, and slept out of doors every night.

Touring Found to be a Cheap Way to Travel

It cost Mr. and Mrs. Ray D. Vercler just 75 cents for repairs to their Oldsmobile six on a recent outing of 4325 miles, which took them up to Glacier National Park and through the scenic country of the Pacific Northwest. They returned recently and called upon Clair R. Savage, salesmanager for J. W. Leavit & Co., Oldsmobile distributors, to report on the performance of their car. Mr. Vercler is in business at 747 South Hill street, where he handles the smelting and refining of precious metals.

The Verclers carried bedding and camping equipment that brought the total weight of their car up to 3675 pounds, or about 1235 pounds more than this model ordinarily weighs. They had this weight carefully distributed from the front bumpers to the trunk platform at the rear, and even impressed the top into service as a freight deck for canvas.

In spite of the additional weight and the poor condition of some of the roads encountered, only 253½ gallons of gasoline were used, or an average of better than seventeen miles per gallon.

For five days of the trip they drove through temperatures ranging from 100 to 105, and it so happened that when they reached the Siskiyou grade the theormometer showed 105 deg., but the cooling system of the Oldsmobile was on the job and it was not necessary to stop for water.

NEW HIGHWAY HELPS TRAVEL

Doubles Visitors to Sequoia National Park

Wild Flowers in Bloom Attract Many Motorists

New Accommodations Provide Good Comfort

With 604 square miles of area as against 252 in the former park, the enlarged Sequoia National Park now stands in the forefront of America's out-of-door playgrounds. Mt. Whitney, the stupendous canyon of the Kern, the Kaweah peaks and the imposing mass of the Great Western Divide, all added to the mammoth Sequoia forests, have rounded the old Sequoia into a park containing a variety of major scenic attractions unexcelled even in the High Sierras of California.

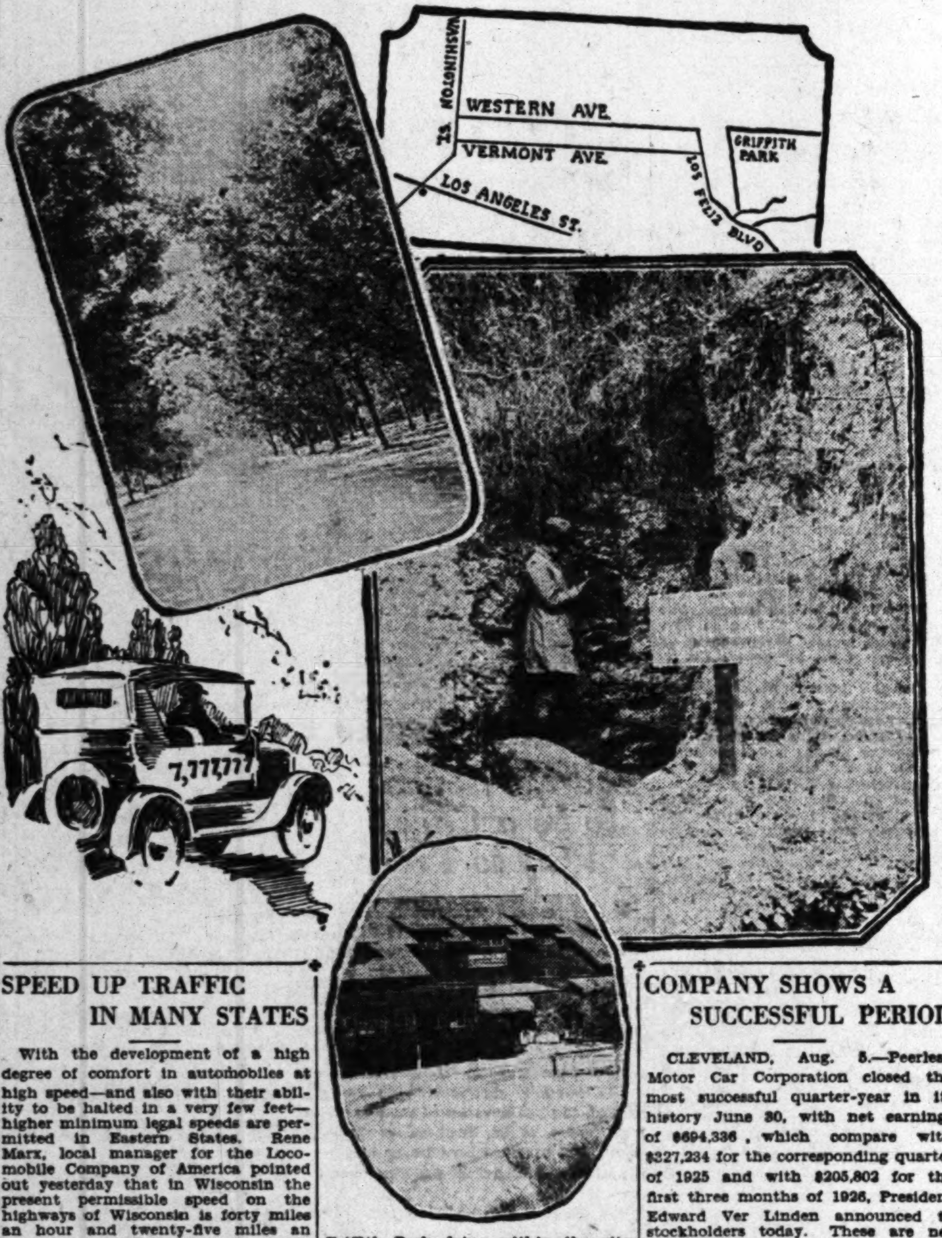
Wild flowers are now at their best in the highlands of the park. Those who ride the upper trails without rejoice in the wealth of color to be seen in every meadow and beside every trickling stream. The leopard lily, the cyclamen, the varieties of pentstemon, all shades of castilleia, the yellow and the pink monkey-flower, these and many others adorn the trail-side. Higher up in the crevices of the towering peaks are the Sierra primrose, the alpine phlox, the fragrant pollemonium, and the delicate yellow columbine. The sight of these flowers would alone justify the trip to the high mountain country.

The new road, the Generals' Highway, one hour from the orange groves and vineyards to the big trees, has doubled travel. To date this travel season 21,472 cars and 61,361 visitors have entered the big tree park as against 8000 cars and 25,000 visitors for 1925. Gen. Grant Park has also shown a healthy increase—36,146 visitors having entered in 1926 as compared with 18,000 in 1925. Despite the heavy travel increase extra exertions by park officers have furnished accommodations for those visiting public auto camps while the Giant Forest Lodge and housekeeping camps have increased their overnight and meals accommodations.

AMERICAN CAR IS A RIOT IN EUROPE

Emmett Flynn, internationally known picture director, writes from Vichy, France, that his special Lincoln sport phaeton is the sensation of Europe. In Flynn's letter to Bill Bomb of the Stephen S. Nersey Company, Hollywood Lincoln headquarters, he says that the crowds' that gather around his Lincoln when it is left in front of the hotel are so great that he can hardly get into the car. Flynn's Lincoln is a special two-toned sport patheon painted in copra and chickle, and before being shipped to rFance was the cause of quite a sensation on the movie-capital boulevard.

Real Scenery Is Close at Hand



Griffith Park, lying within the city limits of Los Angeles, which thousands of people pass daily, but have never visited, is one of the most interesting trips within a radius of 100 miles from Los Angeles to be found. The above photos were taken by a member scout car 7,777,777 sent out by W. D. Dunham, authorized Ford dealer at Washington and Los Angeles streets, to get this story for The Times.

SPEED UP TRAFFIC IN MANY STATES

With the development of a high degree of comfort in automobiles at high speed—and also with their ability to be halted in a very few feet—higher minimum legal speeds are permitted in Eastern States. Rene Marx, local manager for the Locomobile Company of America pointed out yesterday that in Wisconsin the present permissible speed on the highways of Wisconsin is forty miles an hour and twenty-five miles an hour on arterial highways in cities. In Pennsylvania the State motor police have been given orders to speed up traffic on the main highways or compel the drivers to move out of the traffic lane, according to word received by Mr. Marx.

IT COSTS MONEY

"How would you like to own an automobile in Japan?" queries Bob Galindo, sales manager for Rene Marx, Locomobile distributor in Los Angeles. And there being no answer Bob declared that he had just been reading that the annual license fee is more than $200 and that gasoline sells for 40 cents a gallon.

COMPANY SHOWS A SUCCESSFUL PERIOD

CLEVELAND, Aug. 5.—Peerless Motor Car Corporation closed the most successful quarter-year in its history June 30, with net earnings of $694,336, which compare with $327,234 for the corresponding quarter of 1925 and with $205,802 for the first three months of 1926, President Edward Ver Linden announced to stockholders today. These are net earnings after all charges, depreciation and taxes and on the basis of 228,589 common shares which were outstanding during the period, were equivalent to $3.04 a share against $1.43 a share in the corresponding quarter of 1925 and $.90 a share in the first quarter of 1926. The company is entirely out of bank debt and has no bonds or preferred stock outstanding.

Dampness of the tropical climate in British Malaysia is causing a demand for steel and iron trunks there.

Griffith Park Furnishes One-Day Journey

Today, W. D. Dunham, authorized Ford dealer, offers a very short trip, which will occupy most of the day if one wishes to do every interesting thing offered by the park. It is to Griffith Park, the largest municipal park in the world, located in the Griffith Park hills on the northeast corner of Los Angeles.

The park may be reached by two ways: one is via Western avenue and over the Hollywood Mountain Drive, and the other is by way of Los Feliz Boulevard, to the eastern entrance. The Los Feliz road eliminates all grades, while the Western avenue way offers a splendid scenic drive.

The Western-avenue entrance has a fine spot for picnic lunches, but it is on the other side of the mountain that the real scenery and picnic spots are located. The grades over the mountain are an average of 6 per cent and are in very excellent condition. The road is wide enough to pass anywhere on its length, and is maintained constantly by the city.

On the Burbank and Glendale side of the mountain are located the famous municipal golf courses, the municipal aviation field, near which is the Glendale municipal aviation field, and the zoo.

There is an extensive system of bridle paths through the entire mountain and park district. It is here that an equestrienne may ride for many miles without visiting the same spot twice.

Near the zoo there are picnic tables, stoves and benches. Here also are the tennis courts, always in demand by the lovers of the sport; near by the croquet grounds, and at the eastern, or Los Feliz entrance, are the baseball grounds, handball courts and archery range. This part of the park has been set aside as a playground and will eventually have all facilities, including a plunge.

The park is closed at 8 p.m., and all machines must be out by that time, as a chain is locked across the road. It is understood by Mr. Dunham, that the chains are unlocked again at 6 a.m.

The zoo now contains many species of animals, such as camels, deer, elk, mountain goats, monkeys, birds, etc. The camel is the proud mother of a very young baby which is interesting to the kiddies and grownups as well.

In the aviary are fine specimens of peacocks, homing pigeons, doves, canaries, parrots, mackaws and other interesting fowls.

LONG RECORDS

That the Elcar automobile factory must be a pretty good sort of a place to work is the opinion of G. J. Gollmar, president of the Elcar Pacific Company here, distributor of Elcar in seven western States. He has received a notice stating that six men, in the factory personnel have just finished their thirtieth year of continuous employment in the plant.

Arrows indicate the movement of air currents when t Studebaker windshield is set for a rainstorm. The water trough set in the cowl is also shown.

New Windshield Keeps Rain Out but Admits Air

A new-type windshield, adjustable for ventilating a closed car even during a heavy rainstorm without any of the water coming into the car, is one of the outstanding exclusive features of the new Studebaker custom sedans shown in the salesrooms of the Paul G. Hoffman Company, Inc., local Studebaker distributors.

A test with a water hose playing a full stream of water against the new windshield—with a volume of water equal to that which might come with a tropical downpour—demonstrated the all-weather features of this newest type of windshield, which was developed after six months of intensive research by the Studebaker Corporation before it was adopted.

The ventilating features and all-weather protection afforded by this new invention have been hailed by motorists as one of the oustanding contributions to modern car comfort and luxury, Carpenter said.

There are three positions for the new Studebaker windshield, all controlled by the simple turning of a Butler-finished handle above the dash. The glass may be turned outward toward the hood for several inches, in which position it throws the air toward the roof of the car; however, without creating a draft because of an ingenious arrangement. THERE IS NO SATURATION POINT FOR HONEST VALUE

Honest value is a priceless commodity. Every purchaser seeks it, but not always with complete success.

During periods of careful buying he takes unusual pains to find it, and products of inferior merit fail to attract his patronage.

Reports then circulate that the "saturation point" in the automobile market has been reached, when in reality there will NEVER be a saturation point for honest value.

During the first six months of this year, for instance, Dodge Brothers sold 207,115 motor cars and trucks. This represents a gain of 49.3 per cent over the first six months of 1925, and continues Dodge Brothers in the enviable position of THIRD IN THE INDUSTRY.

From June 24th to August 1st 41,866 motor cars and trucks were delivered to customers in the United States—an increase of 80% over the five weeks ending August 1st, 1925, and impressive evidence that Dodge Brothers great sales gain is continuing through the quiet weeks of midsummer.

The more carefully people investigate and compare, detail by detail, the factors that constitute genuine motor car value, the more inevitably Dodge Brothers market expands and will continue to expand, year after year.

ROAD INTO RAINIER IS COMPLETED

Approximately 95 Per Cent Paved Road Makes Improvement in Park

Motoring to and in Rainier National Park, Wash., will be more of a delight than ever before within a short while, according to reports of road improvements reaching the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

But one slightly rough spot remains in the road between Seattle, Tacoma, and the park, which is now more than 95 per cent paved, and that consists of a short detour which will be eliminated in two weeks, states a report.

Within the park a Congressional appropriation of nearly $500,000 is being expended on the roads. They are being repaired, straightened and widened, in preparation for paving. Several new cut-offs, shortening distances and eliminating bad curves, are being put in. In only one stretch of less than a quarter of a mile does the road exceed a 4 per cent grade. Of the twenty miles of road between the Nisqually River entrance and Paradise Inn, all is in excellent condition now except a stretch of about a mile, which is somewhat rough because of grading and surfacing operations.

Something is Coming but No One is in On It

There's a guessing contest going on along automobile row this week. It is not confined to the motor car men by any means for many car owners are also in the game. It resulted from an announcement made several days ago by Don P. Smith, distributor of Moon six and Diana Light straight eight motor cars. Mr. Smith had been visiting the factory and several other places in the East and upon his return he stated that he had a surprise in store for those interested in automobiles.

That's as far as he would go with his information and it was just enough to start the guessing. Friends and acquaintances both in and out of the automobile business asked him quietly when they had opportunity just what this surprise would be, but Mr. Smith would only smile and shake his head.

BRIDGE OPENED

The new bridge south of Pismo Beach has been opened to traffic, states a bulletin from the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. The approaches have not been paved yet.

Five hundred stone houses are to be erected by refugees on land which they have bought near Piraeus, Greece.

Abandoned Nag Comes in for Bit of Petting

Forced off the downtown streets by the automobile, the horses formerly ridden by traffic officers are gone but not forgotten. They have been turned over to the park department and most of them are enjoying a life of ease. Instead of plodding all day over the hard paved streets, they are either doing light work about the city parks or browsing on the grass away from the din of the downtown section.

Nineteen head of these horses are quartered at Griffith Park and nearly every day they are visited by citizens. C. H. Crockett, foreman at the park who is in charge of the horses, said that many persons come to see the animals each week, feed them sugar and candy and spend much time petting their favorites.

A party from the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company went out to the park in a Willys-Knight Great Six roadster recently and dropped around to see how the horses were getting along. One of the visitors was Miss Moyne Van Winkle who wanted to see her old friend, "Laddie," that she used to feed candy when she could find him on Broadway.

OLD-TIMERS SEE EACH OTHER AGAIN

Mexico City was the scene of an interesting meeting the other day when E. C. Morse, director of export sales for the Chrysler Corporation, arrived there to be the guest for a faw days of A. B. Mohler, president of Mohler and DeGress, Chrysler distributers. Mr. Mohler is the oldest export distributor connected with the Chrysler organization, having represented in turn the Thomas Flyer, the Chalmers the Maxwell and now the Chrysler cars during a period of more than twenty years. Mr. Morse is touring Mexico in the interest of furthering Chrysler development in that country He went by rail to Mazatlan, thence to Guadalajara and then on to Mexico City, making a close study of conditions en route. On leaving Mexico City he will cross the country to Vera Cruz, and will sail from there to Havana, Cuba.

ZANE GRAY BUILDS IN THE REDWOODS

GRANTS PASS, Aug. 5. (Exclusive) Zane Grey, popular fiction writer, has chosen an ideal spot in the Redwood Empire for his summer lodge. He has purchased twenty acres at Winkle Bar, near Mule Creek on the Rogue River, in southwestern Oregon.

This famous writer loves to fish, it is said. For several years past he has chosen the Rogue as his favorite outing and fishing territory, according to the Redwood Highway Association.

Grey has sent word that he expects to be there this fall. He will erect a fishing lodge on the property immediately, it is reported, where he may "go to work" and perhaps write a line or two between times.

NEW FEATURES OF KNOWN VALUE
IMPROVEMENTS OF PROVEN WORTH
IN THE NEW SERIES "E"
OLDSMOBILE

Known to all the motoring world is the definite, decided value of such features as Oil Filter and Air Cleaner.

Clear to every automotive engineer are the advantages of such improvements as Crankcase Ventilation, Two-Way Cooling and the Harmonic Balancer.

And the merit of these, and every other improvement now found in Oldsmobile Six, stands proved on General Motors Proving Ground. These improvements add still more to the value of the car already conceded to "ask no favors, fear no road" · · · · they return to you the benefits of manufacturing advantages and economies created by the greatest year in Oldsmobile history. They typify a policy pledged to progress but which adopts no feature till its worth is known. Come in · · see it · · drive it · · know its added value.

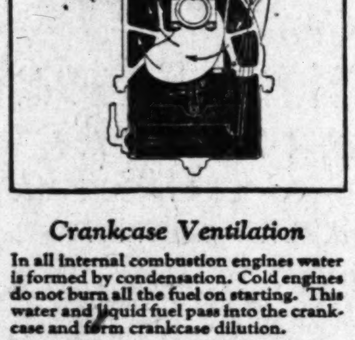
"... that the American family may have, at a moderate investment, a car that gratifies their finer tastes as well as satisfies their every need ..."

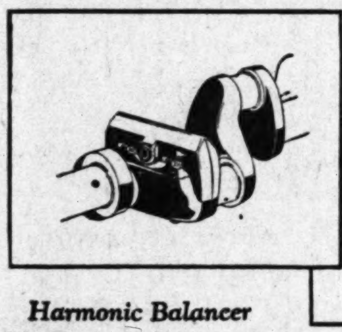
Larger L-Head Engine · · Crankcase Ventilation · · High-Velocity, Hot Section Manifold · · New Axle Ratio · · Dome-Shaped Combustion Chambers · · Honed Cylinders · · Silent Chain Drive · · Exclusive Chromium Plating · · Finer Appointments in the Duco-Finished Fisher Bodies · · New Hood Line · · Balloon Tires.



Crankcase Ventilation

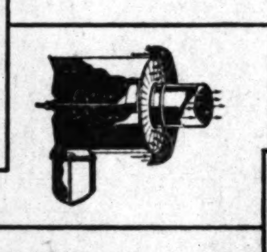
In all internal combustion engines water is formed by condensation. Cold engines do not burn all the fuel on starting. This water and liquid fuel pass into the crankcase and form crankcase dilution.

Excessive dilution is eliminated by crankcase ventilation. One-third of the air that passes through the carburetor is drawn through a breather port in the left side of the engine. This air, cleaned of dust and injurious material by a second air cleaner on the breather port, passes through the crankcase before entering the carburetor. It draws off with it water vapor and unburned fuel that may have passed into the crankcase. This air also carries with it a small amount of the oil vapor, created in the crankcase, which aids in more efficient lubrication of pistons, upper cylinder walls, and valves. Crankcase ventilation improves performance and gives longer life in the engine and longer useful life to the oil.



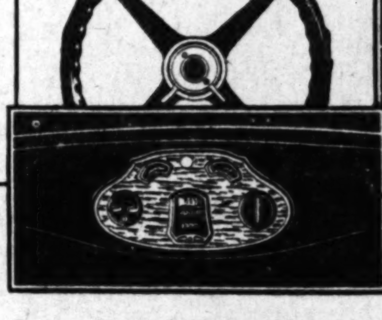
Harmonic Balancer

The Harmonic Balancer, developed by General Motors engineers, counteracts vibration and gives Oldsmobile a smoothness you will quickly recognize when you take the wheel. It is simple, it requires no adjustment, it is positive in counteracting vibration.



Dual Air Cleaning

Road dust and dirt form an abrasive and destructive element in a motor car engine. In this new Oldsmobile, a master cleaner eliminates the injurious particles from two-thirds of the air before it enters the carburetor directly—while the second cleaner, in connection with crankcase ventilation, cleans the balance of the air with resulting longer life.



Greater Driving Ease and Security

From behind the glass face of each instrument in the unit-grouped dash panel, an indirect light glows whenever any of the lights are lighted, illuminating each instrument.

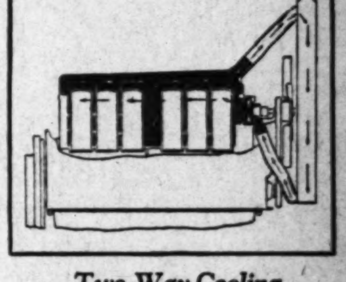
A reliable instrument board fuel gauge, now standard on all Oldsmobile bodytypes, accurately indicates the supply of gasoline.

A new design in anti-theft car locks is a feature of this Oldsmobile. With this thief-proof control the engine cannot be started when the key is left in the lock. Turning off the ignition positively locks the car. The ignition key also operates the door locks.

Twin-Beam Head Lamps

Head lamps have double-filament bulbs, one filament for "bright action" and one for "dim action." On "dim action" the light is bright but thrown at a downward angle that protects the oncoming driver and gives ample vision to the Oldsmobile driver. The twin-beam Oldsmobile headlights are operated without the driver shifting his position, as the light control switch is a neat lever, exactly like the hand throttle, centered on the steering wheel.

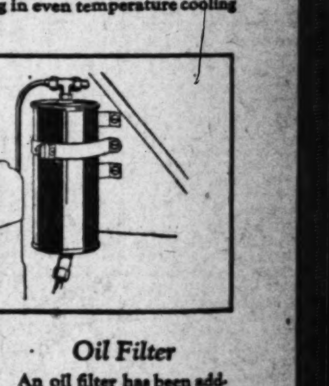
Oil Filter · · Dual Air Cleaning · · Harmonic Balancer · · Twin-Beam Headlights, Controlled from Steering Wheel · · Two-Way Cooling · · Three-Way Pressure Lubrication · · Full Automatic Spark Control · · Thermostatic Charging Control · · Instruments Indirectly Illuminated · · Thief-Proof Car Lock.



Two-Way Cooling

Oldsmobile has been praised for its ability to be driven forty, forty-five, fifty and more miles an hour—hour after hour, without the slightest overheating.

Now Oldsmobile offers "two-way" cooling, which incorporates the best features of the two accepted types ... pressure cooling and thermo-siphon cooling. Parts at the point of greatest heat are cooled by the manifold method of circulation, while the slower thermo-siphon type of action, in which the rate of circulation is largely governed by the reaction of heat upon the water, maintains sufficient warmth about the cylinders for efficient operation. Here is a new type of cooling design, incorporating the best features of all past engineering in even temperature cooling control.



Oil Filter

An oil filter has been added to this Oldsmobile, prolonging still more the life of the engine and the useful life of the oil. Should the filter become clogged with sediment, the lubricating system functions in the common manner.

The citizens' fish and game conservation committee of Southern California, through its vice-president and manager, Jack Hines, is making an appeal to the public to join and [illegible] the good work it is doing.

The State has been stocking forty-[illegible] streams in Southern California with the spawn from Big Bear Lake, but this source will soon be exhausted unless immediate action is taken, due to the black bass becoming so prolific, which, being of a cannibal nature, destroy the rainbow trout "fingerlings" as rapidly as they are planted.

The committee intends to build [illegible] ponds in order that these [illegible] can be aged until they are [illegible] eight inches long. This will [illegible] concrete ponds, fencing, [illegible], food, etc. When turned loose the trout will be able to take care of themselves. It is intended also to [illegible] in lock leven, golden and [illegible] varieties in addition to the present steelhead and rainbows; plant [illegible] for both ducks and fish, clean up streams and lakes, build trails, [illegible] fire hazards, advise the angler and nimrod on the game laws in each locality, and oppose the poacher.

Included on this committee, which [illegible] by "Dad" Skinner, are such well-known sportsmen as J. J. Gayer, [illegible] Hostner, Win Shay, Ed Elliott, [illegible] Crain, Jack Sterrett and Jack [illegible].

On the nights of the 20th and 21st [illegible] Monterey will celebrate the formal opening of the magnificent new Hotel San Carlos, which is located in the heart of that historic city. Hotel San Carlos will be operated on the European plan and is under the management of Jean Juillard, formerly of Hotel Del Monte.

The Hotel San Carlos is a nine-story fireproof structure of steel and [illegible] construction and consists of [illegible] all-outside rooms, each with private bath or shower. The rooms are [illegible] furnished in walnut of [illegible] design. The lobby, the [illegible] lounge, and the ladies' lounge are located on the first and second floors. A beauty parlor, barber shop, news and cigar stand, information bureau and valet service will add to the service and convenience of the guests.

A solarium, effectively furnished in [illegible] typical of the old Spanish atmosphere, is located on the ninth floor and affords a marvelous view of the blue bay of Monterey and the surrounding hills. It will accommodate more than 200 people and is a [illegible] inspirational spot for parties, dances, conferences and conventions. Smaller parties can also be accommodated in the private dining-rooms and banquet halls.

One of the chief attractions of the hotel is the coffee shoppe and sweet shoppe, easily accessible from the lobby, where excellent service and many special dishes are offered.

Vacationists from all over the San Bernardino Mountains are flocking to Green Valley Lake Saturday nights and Sundays to share with the members of the Top-o'-the-World Club the pleasures of their new clubhouse, with its hardwood floor and immense fireplace, and to enjoy the boating, swimming, riding and other privileges that are open to the public this year.

The Saturday-night dances are [illegible] and have proved their popularity by bringing crowds from as far as Big Bear Valley and Lake Arrowhead. Stunts and entertainments are added features on Saturday nights.

The DeWitt-Blair Realty Company built the new Top-o'-the-World clubhouse and will present it to members of the club as soon as 51 per cent of the land in Green Valley is sold.

The clubhouse is on the shore of the lake and is complete in every detail, with a hardwood dance floor, lounging rooms, an immense fireplace and a boat landing. A power plant has been installed to supply electricity to light the clubhouse and lake, and to operate the huge searchlight located on the top of the new [illegible] structure.

The completion of the children's playground at Forest Home in the San Bernardino Mountains near Redlands now adds another attraction to the already popular resort. Forest Home is enjoying a large [illegible] patronage mainly because of the variety of its attractions, according to Frank Culver, manager. There are slides, swings, sand piles and wading pools for the kiddies, while [illegible] fishing and horseback riding appeal to the grown-ups. [illegible] Parr's famous string of horses, which is quartered here, is proving to be an outstanding attraction. Included in the string of twenty-five horses are several ponies especially broken for children. Another reason for the family appeal of the resort is the fact that it is reached by pavement all the way from Los Angeles, thus assuring an easy, enjoyable drive.

A party of four girls from a local [illegible] bureau recently spent a most enjoyable week-end as guests of Camp [illegible] at Big Bear Lake, arriving [illegible] Motor Transit just in time for the big Saturday-night dance which is always a gala affair. A group of U.S.C. collegians who furnished the music for the occasion were well received. The exciting horse and automobile races held last Sunday, as well as the [illegible] events and barbecue, added immeasurably to the pleasant features of the day.

The Sunday chicken dinner, enjoyed in the dining-room overlooking the lake, to the accompaniment of soft music, served as a fitting end to a perfect outing trip.

At present Stillwell's Camp is holding a tennis tournament which will continue through the ensuing week, many players of note participating.

A new chemical known as Dowflake has recently been found, which will attract moisture and thus keep roads and paths wet and dustless. Recently a quantity of this was sprinkled around the paths and walks at Oakglen Lodge, in the mountains fifteen miles east of Redlands, to the great satisfaction of the guests.

This innovation, augmented by the daily watering the paths receive, will go far toward making Oakglen Lodge a dustless resort. It is only one of the things that the management is doing to increase the enjoyment of guests in their mountain outing at this popular resort.

A recent communication from Frank J. McCoy, manager of the Santa Maria Inn at Santa Maria, states that a very busy week has just been experienced by that popular resort.

A partial list of guests at the inn during the past week is as follows: Mrs. J. S. Torrence of Pasadena, who was accompanied by Miss Helma C. Nottinger and Mrs. Royden Vosburg, both of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Strobridge of Hollywood, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Marston of Pasadena, and Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Boisot of Chicago, Mr. G. Allan Hancock, Mr. P. N. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Chapman, Mr. J. H. Moulton and daughter, Miss Nancy Moulton, all of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Griffiths of Beverly Hills.

Commencing with the last new moon, so beautiful at night in the mountains, Fawnskin Resort on the north shore of Big Bear Lake inaugurated moonlight dancing on the open-air platform, located back of the old schoolhouse. Each Saturday night, after the community singing, the Glen Edmunds orchestra plays until midnight, and during the dancing a huge open fire is started in the large stone fireplace, and with wiener roasts, and midnight picnics, a great time is enjoyed by those valley folks who would play under the light of the moon.

Better opportunities for seeing the scenic grandeurs of the High Sierras are being offered at Mammoth Camp, Mono county, this year, than ever before.

Situated thirty miles north of Bishop, at the headwaters of the famed Owens River, Mammoth has long been considered the "hub" of the California lake and mountain country, although but a comfortable day's ride from Los Angeles.

The situation of Mammoth is unique in that it is located in the midst of four national forests, the timberlands surrounding the camp being considered some of the most beautiful in the world.

J. L. Halland, owner of the Catalina Island fishing barge, writes that yellowtail, barracuda, white sea bass and rock bass are all frequently caught by fishermen using his barge. The Catalina fishing barge is in operation daily and upon request, fishing at night can be arranged. A restauran and all conveniences are to be found on board. The booth of the Catalina fishing barge is maintained on the pleasure pier at Avalon.

The Morris fishing boats, operated from the Santa Monica pier daily, have been having splendid fishing the past week. Lots of bass and barracuda and a good yellowtail run are reported.

The Morris boats are under the guidance of expert seamen and may be had for fishing, pleasure, or for charter. Live bait is furnished and patrons invariably return with good catches.

Modern and comfortable housekeeping cabins are available for guests at Woodland Lodge, Big Bear Lake, according to Philip Hauf, proprietor of that resort.

All cabins have electricity, baths, running water, wood stoves, and excellent beds.

The location of the lodge guarantees guests quiet and rest, yet it is conveniently near the village.

Award Contract for San Diego Road Next Week

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 6. (Exclusive) Bids have been opened by the California Highway Commission for the paving of the Mountain Springs grade on the trunk highway in eastern San Diego and western Imperial county. Jahn & Bressi of Los Angeles were low bidders with an offer of $286,627. The engineers' estimate was $316,961.50.

Paving of this grade, which was recently widened and straightened by the commission, will remove one of the worst barriers to travel between the Imperial Valley and the coast. Because of peculiar formation of the soil, maintenance of a satisfactory surfaced highway on this grade has become impossible under present heavy traffic. It forms a part of the Old Spanish Trail.

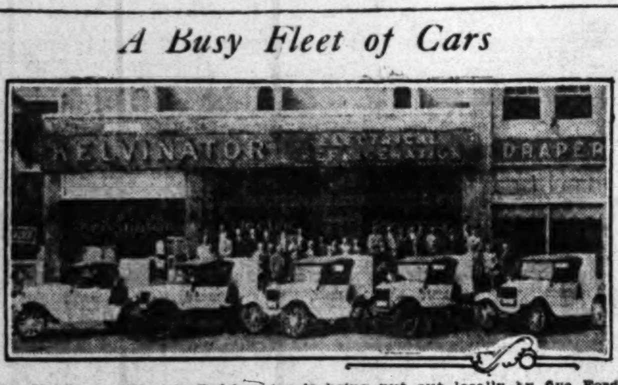
Award of a contract will be considered by the commission at its next meeting to be held on the 16th inst.

LONG WHEELBASE ADDS TO COMFORT

With a wheelbase of 146 1-4 inches, declared to be the longest of any American passenger [illegible], a new Auburn straight eight seven-passenger sedan has been received here and put on display by the White Auto Company, Southern California distributor of the Auburn line. Seven full grown passengers can ride all day in this car with comfort, according to Selig Cahn, vice-president of the company.

The auxiliary seat in the rear compartment are of the bucket type, specially designed, and when not in use fold up inside the back of the front seat. They are of the same level as the other seats, fully upholstered. Ample leg room is provided by special utilization of the space where the seats fold up.

A Busy Fleet of Cars



The Kelvinator Electric Refrigerator is being put out locally by five Ford roadsters supplied by Stephen S. Nerney.

Popularity is a Sure Thing Around South

Everywhere in the United States this week Hupmobile distributors and dealers are urging the citizens in their communities to "get behind the wheel of a Hupmobile eight." Here in Los Angeles the same request is being made, but Mr. A. R. Reedall, sales manager for Greer-Robbins Company at the Hupmobile Building on Figueroa street, is not lifting his voice as loudly as he might if the Hupmobile eight was not already so popular that it is hard to find cars enough for all the people who already want to get behind the wheels.

"It is especially hard to get enough roadster wheels to make everybody happy," said Mr. Reedall. "We are delivering them by the carload and still we can't catch up. Just the other evening we turned over four brand new roadsters to their four owners and if we could have waved a magic wand and obtained fifty more somewhere, we would just about bring ourselves even with the board on this one model."

Mr. Reedall says, however, that there will be a special effort made to conform to the national policy on Special Demonstration Week when it is planned to get as many people as possible behind the steering wheels of Hupmobile eights.

FEWER PLANKS

Five and one-half miles of pavement have been opened across the sand hills west of Yuma, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. This leaves only one mile of plank road.

TEXAS ROAD WORK

The construction between Fort Worth and Dallas, necessitates a detour, has been completed, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Delivered in a Bunch

ERECTED 1854

Dealers Home After Meeting in Humid East

Alemite distributors from all sections of the United States have just returned to their various homes following the regular semiannual convention held in Chicago. C. A. Roesch, president of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California, distributors of Alemite and Zerk products for this State, is back at his desk after an absence of two weeks in which he found that Chicago is as hot in summer as it is cold in winter. He reported that the convention was quite successful and immediately after his return to Los Angeles he called all the Southern California representatives into conference and passed on to them the information he had picked up in the East.

Supplementary to this meeting, another will be held about the middle of August at which C. H. Dalrymple, of the Chicago headquarters, will be the chief speaker. One of the best pieces of news the Alemite organization as a whole has heard in some time was made known at the Chicago meeting when it was announced that the big patent suit against the manufacturers of Thuro products had been won by the manufacturer of Alemite, and that an injunction had been issued restraining both the manufacturer and Montgomery Ward & Co., from making, distributing, selling and useing Thuro products.

TUCSON MAY COPY LOCAL TRAFFIC PLAN

TUCSON (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive) Lyndon R. Wilson, City Street Commissioner, has been spending a vacation in Los Angeles in a study of the manner in which traffic is handled in that city, especially with reference to automatic-control signals. On his return he will present a report to the Tucson City Council, with recommendations for local utilization.

Don't Pick Up Hikers When on the Road

The recent brutal beating of a motorist on the Ridge Route by two boys to whom he had given rides calls attention to the error of "picking up" children on the highways, says the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

"Don't give 'lifts' to children," is the Auto Club's advice, since it only develops the bad habit of begging rides and gives the kids the opportunity of going places where their parents may not wish them to go or may not know they are going. Children are begging rides in greater numbers than ever before, especially at this season when they want to get to the seashore. Whatever happens to the youths is the motorist's responsibility when he "picks them up" on the highways.

A ONE-MAN GOVERNMENT

Mariposa Has an Individual Who is Pretty Nearly the Whole Show

Probably F. W. Burney of Mariposa would vigorously and vehemently deny that he was as numerous as the all-inclusive person about whom W. S. Gilbert wrote when he had him say:

"I am the cook and the captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy's brig;
The boatswain tight and the midship mite,
And the crew of the captain's gig."

But Mr. Burney can almost be called the county government of Mariposa county, having duties and being known variously as deputy County Clerk, deputy County Recorder, deputy County Assessor and sometimes as deputy County Auditor, although Deputy County Clerk, Recorder and Assessor Burney doesn't remember whether or not he was ever officially sworn in as deputy auditor.

Most of these jobs Mr. Burney has held since he entered the employ of the county seventeen years ago—and until a few days ago he was deputy County Treasurer in addition.

But death stepped in and ended the services of the County Treasurer, who had held the office for fifty years, and until the Supervisors of the county elect another to fill the place until his successor is chosen at the fall election the county is without a treasurer—and Mr. Burney cannot function as his deputy. His duties are not so arduous as one would think, however, as the 1920 census credits the county with but 2775 population.

Few of the more than 3000 persons who piloted their automobiles through Mariposa last week-end, when the new all-year road to Yosemite was opened with appropriate ceremony appreciated that a short block off the main highway is the oldest Courthouse in the State.

But the newspaper men and the photographer who were in The Times official press car—a Star six from the Los Angeles branch of the Star Motor Company of California—weren't in such a hurry.

The car was driven to the old Courthouse and Mr. Burney's acquaintance was made. He took the party on a personally conducted tour of the Courthouse built in 1852, and ended it with a trip to the courtroom where malefactors are brought before the bar of justice and where neighbors who have fallen out air their differences.

Mr. Burney takes a lot of pride in the fact that he successfully holds down so many jobs. That he has done so with efficiency may be gained from the fact, hitherto related, that he has done so for seventeen years.

"Why aren't you deputy Sheriff, too?" he was asked.

"That's a young man's job," was the answer. Mr. Burney, it might be explained, is in the afternoon of life. He added that "getting out at night to hunt down stills and gadding around over the country isn't all that it is cracked up to be."

Which illustrates that it all depends on one's point of view. There are a lot of young fellows who would be tickled to death to have a deputy Sheriff's star on their gaudy sport sweaters—vests are passe these days—and "gad" around nights to find hidden stills!

So much for Mr. Burney, who discharges most of the official duties of Mariposa county for the legally constituted officials and who is glad to do so.

The town of Mariposa, county seat of the same-named county, last Saturday and Sunday had more automobiles in it than ever before.

And the residents appreciated it. The local Chamber of Commerce had decorated the streets with "Welcome" banners and everyone who could get away locked up and went to the dedication program for the new road, held at Clark's ranch, six miles east. In the old days all the business houses would have been closed for the event, but Mariposa is on the new highway—and folks who ride in automobiles have a habit of stopping and buying refreshments on the way. So not all the Chamber of Commerce was represented at the program, some of the storekeepers staying home to minister to the wants of the motor travelers who passed through the town.

The Star six, official Times press car, had the double distinction of being one of the first cars over the new road after it was officially opened by Gov. Richardson, being the fifth car in the official group, while it was also in the forefront of those who passed out of Yosemite Park in the first "out" control at 4 p.m. That the new road is destined to become immensely popular was indicated by the fact that in the first control out there were 322 cars in line when the ranger gave the signal to proceed. When the government paving between El Portal and Yosemite Valley is finished the control will be eliminated.

The Star used by The Times editorial party lived up to all expectations. Driven from Los Angeles at high speed to Merced Friday afternoon, it was piloted into the park—ninety miles from Merced—and back Saturday, with ample time to visit the worthwhile spots in the park. Saturday night was spent at Fresno, the photographer arriving in the city Sunday afternoon in time to get out the photographs which appeared in Monday morning's paper.

REGISTRATION SHOWS INCREASE IN SALES

"The Nash sales gain in Southern California, as well as all over the country, has been truly remarkable," says R. S. Breyer, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company. "In Southern California alone Nash gained 109 per cent in new-car registrations the first six months of 1926 over a similar period in 1925, and all indications are that Nash will hold or better this average by the end of the year.

"When it is realized that more than twice as many Nashes are being sold this year as were sold last year the intending motor-car purchaser has to sit up and take notice, for such a high percentage gain for a car which has been a leader in volume sales for several years is truly remarkable. Such a percentage does not carry so much weight or significance if the car happens to be one that never has been a big seller, but happens to embark on an expansion program that brings its sales marks up with a jump.

"But Nash isn't forcing any expansion program—all expansion of the Nash plants (and there has been plenty right along) has been absolutely forced by public demand and not by any preconceived plan on the part of the Nash factory.

INCREASE NUMBER MODELS

The 1927 Jordan models will include a Playboy, sedan and Victoria on the line eight chassis and a five and a seven-passenger sedan and a touring car on the great line eight chassis, according to announcement made yesterday by Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, Southern California distributors of the Jordan. The new models are now on display here and offer a wider variety in the choice of color than last year.

"Jordan, who last fall was a year in advance of other manufacturers with his line-eight motor and all-steel body, maintains his lead again this year. The new line-eight Jordans had traveled thousands of miles in the hands of owners before competitors had even announced all-steel bodies and line-eight motors, and today a casual glance at the advertisements of other prominent makes proves that Jordan was quick to foresee the popular trend. The public today demands not only the line-eight motor and all-steel body, but a compact, easily handled car for increasingly difficult traffic conditions.

"We hear a great deal of talk of the European type of light car, which unquestionably will take the place of larger cars for transportation purposes alone. Jordan's new line-eight models fit into this class admirably for a car of its high character.

"An extremely valuable feature of the 1927 Jordans is the new Fedco number plate system. This unique and entirely new device is standard equipment and consists of a heavy metal plate permanently attached to the instrument board, with the numbers in code, having three numbers and three letters. To my knowledge, the Fedco is the only number device which cannot be changed without mutilating the plate.

"Every Jordan carrying one of these plates is protected by the William J. Burns International Detective Agency, and as it is instantly visible at all times, the motor thief will give it a wide berth, for any attempt to tamper with it is at once apparent.

"It is only another typical Jordan feature which puts him in advance of competition. The prospective buyer of a 1927 Jordan has assurance of permanence in value, because with the straight-eight motor and the all-vision, all-steel body it will maintain a higher second-hand value one year from now than any car in its class."

Orphans Enjoy the Show and a Motor Bus Ride

Seventy-five children of the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum had a real gala day last week when they got a long ride from the orphanage on Boyle avenue through the downtown district of Los Angeles, and through Hollywood to Grauman's Theater, in three new Studebaker big six de luxe busses furnished through the courtesy of the Paul G. Hoffman Company, distributors for Studebaker commercial cars and busses.

The children were guests at the theater of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, and after enjoying the show were taken back to the care of the sisters again, in the new Studebaker busses. Most of the children wanted to ride all night, insisting they could go to sleep if they got too tired in the heavily upholstered chairs with which the busses are equipped.

"The comfort and luxury which made such a strong appeal to the children meets with like response from the public which is now using many of these new Studebaker big six busses in intercity travel," declared E. R. Carpenter, president of the Paul G. Hoffman Company. "We now have the first completely equipped de luxe busses on display in our sales rooms," he declared.

220% Increase

1926 Over 1925 as Shown by Automotive Industries of June 17, 1926

According to Automotive Industries, this gain is the largest gain made by any manufacturer, irrespective of size or type of car, and compares to 17% average increase for the total industry. Auburn rounded out the first half year with the sale of approximately 10% more cars than in the entire year of 1925.

Such acceptance by the public must be deserved—again we say, see, ride in and drive the product of America's fastest growing automobile company—you will be impressed.

The Pride & Profit of Owning America's Longest Lasting Car

The streets today are crowded with fine automobiles.

But Reo, most moderately priced of all fine cars, outlasts them all.

Not one American car lasts as long as Reo—not one

Look at the newest models of the longest lasting car at any Reo dealer's. They are very good looking. You'll see that at a glance, and you'll find as you examine them, that in outward design and finish and inward appointment, there is a simple elegance and luxuriousness that make for lasting good looks.

A Reo is always in good taste.

YOU will find in the clean, flowing Reo lines, in the unstinted ampleness of room, in the aspect of powerful capability, some of the reasons why Reo owners are proud motorists.

Honest Pride in Their Sound Judgment

But the real pride of owning a Reo comes from knowing you have made a gilt-edge investment in transportation, and that you've bought many years of joyous, carefree motoring—that nowhere amongst all the cars of America—even the very costly ones—could you have bought longer life. Reo outlasts them all.

There's a justifiable pride in owning a car that keeps out of the repair shops, in owning a car that piles up its miles, thousands upon thousands, year after year, with a minimum of lost time and lost dollars for repairs, in owning a car that you know is going to get there—whether it be the other side of town, or the other side of the continent; in owning a car of whose quiet, alert good looks you can be proud through its long, long life.

Take one out and drive it. Get the feel of it at five or sixty miles per hour. Twist through tangled traffic, hold steadily all day long over tortuous roads—release that even surge of power which bites into distance and hill alike—then you'll realize again why Reo owners are proud motorists.

With Pride Comes Profit

And with pride in Reo ownership comes profit as well. For the long lasting Reo reduces depreciation to a minimum, and depreciation is the largest single cost of motoring.

Long life is not solely a matter of rugged construction. For coupled with the ability of a car to live there must be the desire of owners to keep it alive. Repair costs must be low in its fifth year as in its first or second, if owners are to get profitable miles out of their car.

For that swift rush to freedom when the day's work is done—the always dependable Reo Roadster.

Built to Keep Upkeep Down

Reo builds of the finest, tested materials. And it builds with one eye always on the future necessity for maintenance—to keep upkeep down.

Valve grinding and carbon removal are required only one-third to one-fourth as often as in most cars—one instance of keeping upkeep down.

There are many others—example after example of how Reo's advanced engineering makes for greater endurance, for less wear, and at the same time insures that when repairs are necessary, they can be made in less time and at less cost than is common on cars of similar price—or a much lower price.

Come in and see them. Your eyes will speedily check the facts. You'll be interested in the simplicity of these great advances which only Reo today provides.

Then, too, Reo combines successfully the operating economy of light weight with the investment economy of longest life. For the Reo Sedan is the lightest six-cylinder sedan of its size in America.

In such ways careful Reo engineering saves owners' dollars—thus Reo owners profit by owning America's longest lasting car.

Only Reo Splits the Seconds

Only in these Reos can you find a brake control that gives you a choice of Split-Second Braking, standard control, or a combination of the two; and Split-Second Steering for instant turning and long easy days at the wheel.

Look at Reo, look at the others, all of them, if you like—then compare the pride and profit of ownership.

Two Other Great Advances

The two great advances demanded by the public, says Ray W. Sherman, Editor of Motor, are:

"1. Cars which will give service for years and not have to be traded in.

"2. Maintenance that does not lay a car up for so many hours as is now the custom and necessity."

These are today found in Reo, and have been for years.

For years the forward-looking, veteran car-buyers who first asked for these advances have been buying Reos.

Come in and see the Reos.

Then take one out and drive it.

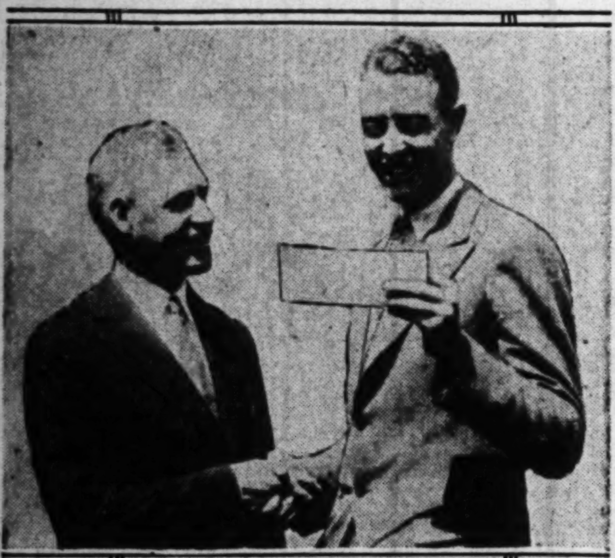
A Good Deed Repaid



A. H. Vernon of the legal department of the Automobile Club of Southern California is congratulating Carroll Wesley McBean who has just received a reward check of $250 from the motoring organization for his capture of a "hit-and-run" motorist.

MOTORIST GETS REWARD

Like the Northwest Mounted Police, Carroll Wesley McBean of this city believes in "getting his man," and, since he captured a "hit and run" motorist who had run away and tried to hide in a hotel after inflicting fatal injuries on a pedestrian, he was paid a reward of $250 yesterday by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

The motoring organization considered that Mr. McBean had complied with the terms of the standing resolution of its directors to pay rewards in such cases since he had prevented the autoist from escaping.

As McBean with two companions was driving west on Seventh street, he says a powerful car passed his machine at an excessive rate of speed on the wrong side of the street. It narrowly missed a number of east-bound machines. The driver of the death car, William G. Moran, was hatless, and an injured man, later identified as M. P. Torino of Los Angeles, was hanging on the front bumper of the speeding car. When it appeared that the machine was about to crash into a number of automobiles halted behind a street car standing at Bixel street, it suddenly swerved and hit a lamp post head on.

McBean ran toward the accident. He had nearly reached it when a man passed him, running from the collision. McBean gave chase as the fleeing "hit and run" driver ran into a hotel, through the lobby and up the stairs. After telephoning for the police, McBean traced Moran into a room the latter had broken into on the second floor. He then brought Moran down to the lobby of the hotel, half carrying him since he was under the influence of liquor, states the evidence. He then held the man prisoner until the police arrived. Moran later plead guilty to a violation of Section 141 of the Vehicle Act and to manslaughter. His application for probation was denied and he was sentenced to two years in the State school at Ione.

MOTOR CAR PLAYS PART

In the recently completed fastest trip around the world Packard motor cars played equally important roles along with the world's fastest steamships, airplanes, and railroad trains. Leaving the starting point, the Pulitzer Building, New York in a Packard Eight, Linton Wells and Edward Evans crossed the finish line in the same car exactly twenty-eight days, 14 hours, 36 minutes and 5 seconds later, practically three times faster than the one-time unbelievable and breath-taking romance of Jules Verne—"Around the World in Eighty Days."

The reason that Wells and Evans chose Packards as connecting links with trains, ships and planes is not far to seek since it was Wells, a famous newspaper man who accompanied Lieut. Leigh Wade on his record breaking cross-country non-stop wheel and motor trip in a Packard Eight. Evans, with Austin F. Bement, both representing the Lincoln Highway Association, drove a Packard Six from Winnipeg to Vancouver in Canada, a feat which had been attempted many times but which never before had been accomplished, there being no road and a major part of the way had to be traversed over tracks of the Canadian National Railway facing the certainty of death had any accident to their car occurred.

The accompanying photograph show them immediately before the start which was delayed as long as possible so as to save ten precious minutes. At the last second the Packard purred away, rushing them to the docks to a revenue cutter which in turn brought them alongside the S. S. Aquitania far out at sea. Again in Germany, in France and in Japan, as arranged for by the two men, Packards met them and so knitted together the world's greatest feat of transportation. In France a Packard, rushed them from the docks at Cherbourg to the flying field where a plane awaited them to make connections with a train in Paris. They found the plane awaiting them in ruins, having crashed shortly before. Rather than trust themselves to another plane Wells and Evans chose rather to depend on the Packard and tore through the countryside in a mad dash, successfully making connections by several minutes.

Nest Camping Outfit Very Easy to Take

"Motor camping as a rule consists of one-night stands and for this reason it is necessary that all the equipment should be chosen so that it can be packed and unpacked in a few minutes' times. As eating is one of the most important factors of camp life manufacturers of equipment have paid much attention to the development of stoves, cooking equipment and utensils," says Earl H. Wilcox of the Western Auto Supply Company.

"The motor restaurant fits in very well with the camping scheme. This compact outfit consists of a dust-proof case fitted with table cutlery and dishes for a party of six. Plates, spoons, knives, forks, jars, cups, salt and pepper shakes—even linen napkins are included in the case. A quart food jar and a quart of Icy-Hot bottle are included in the layout. These two members of the picnic set make it possible to have the luncheon either icy cold or steaming hot, as the camper desires.

"For pots and pans the motor camper can do no better than provide himself with a set of aluminum nesting dishes. This popular idea in utensils and table equipment is so arranged that each pot fits inside the other so that when packed the complete outfit takes up but a fraction of the space as when in use."

GOOD DRIVERS WORK QUICKLY

Motor car driving, to be really proficient, must be the outgrowth of practice that has rendered the correct mechanical operation of the car a matter of subsconscious impulses, say experts on the subject. "The reason so many motorists so often fail to do the right thing at the right time," declares George G. Wurzburger, vice-president of S & W Motors, Inc., local Kissel distributors, "is because they have never learned the art of what I call 'second-nature' driving. When an emergency suddenly confronts them they have to hesitate before they can determine what is best, and while they are hesitating they are often courting serious accident. The proficient driver on the other hand does the right thing at the right time without any preliminary mental debate."

ENSENADA POPULAR

"Thousands of motorists are visiting Ensenada in Lower California this summer, says D. S. Baker, service manager for Reeve Gartzmann, Pontiac and Oakland distributor, "and now that the new pier of the Club Internationale of Ensenada is under construction, it looks as though the little Mexican watering place would become the rendezvous de luxe soon."

Shows Mexicans What Motor Car is Capable Of

When A. M. Williams migrated to Mexico fifteen years ago he started to build a reputation that is proving of benefit not only to himself but to the welfare of the country as well. Mr. Williams's present position is sales manager for the Mexican Auto Sales Company, Reo distributors, and in the interest of selling Mexico on automotive transportation he has seen fit to make some of the most remarkable demonstrations that any automobile dealer anywhere has ever undertaken, even going so far as to take a machine to pieces, lower it over a cliff, and reassemble it on the floor of a valley hundreds of feet below to which there was no access by road, but where motor transportation could be used. The result of this stunt was to sell the car and come back on horseback.

When the Jalapa-Teocelo Railroad faced the problem of carrying passengers and freight on frequent trips over a 45-kilometer route, it was Williams who got busy and built a Reo passenger car to run on rails and carry forty people at a fraction of the expense that it would cost to run an ordinary train. So successful was his demonstration of this innovation that he got orders for five more such jobs in a hurry, three of them to carry freight and two for passenger service.

HOW TO INSURE A COOL ENGINE

NEW YORK, July 29.—From its long experience with the problem of proper automobile cooling, the Motometer Company has issued a number of recommendations to motorists to insure their cars from overheating during the hot months.

Be sure that the hose connections are not clogged.

See that the radiator, composed of hundreds of delicate tubes, does not leak.

Avoid an over-rich carburetor mixture.

Keep the spark advanced.

Examine your water pump for leaks.

Keep the car well lubricated.

See that the radiator drain cock does not shake open.

And, of course, be sure that the radiator is always well filled.

NEW HOME OF AGENCY IS STARTED

Maddux Begins Building of New Plant to be Done by First of Year

...with all members of the sales staff ... Maddux, Inc., Los Angeles exclusive Lincoln dealer, present at the ceremony, the first big steam shovelful of earth was scooped up this last ... from the vacant tract on the ... corner of Twenty-first and Figueroa. Work of constructing the new Maddux-Lincoln permanent sales and service home was on.

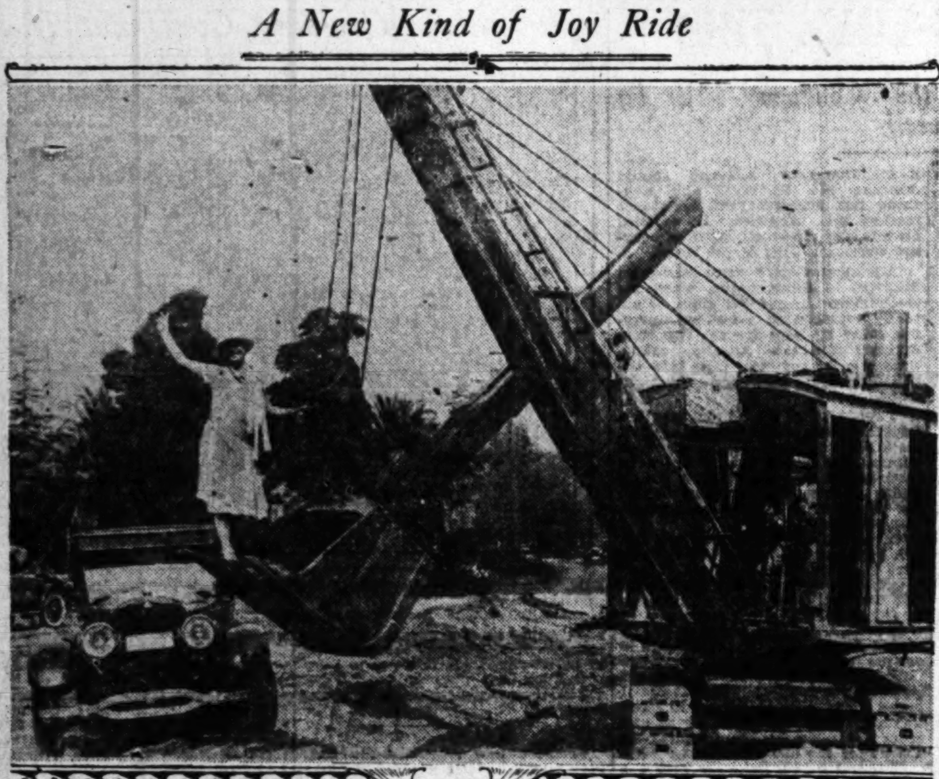
With a battery of cameramen "shooting" the ceremony and with Jack Maddux, head of the firm that bears his name, presiding ex-officio at the "steering wheel" of the giant shovel, the function was marked by much enthusiasm. Following the digging of the first earth, Mrs. Helen Maddux, secretary-treasurer of the company, yielded to the persuasion of the photographers and took a ride in the aerial steam-shovel bucket.

"It was more exciting than riding in an airplane," commented Mrs. Maddux, "and, aside from the fact that the machine shot out hot steam that burned my neck and soiled my gown, I enjoyed the steam-shovel buggy ride immensely." That work will be rushed on the big building in order to have it completed and ready for occupancy before the first of the year was the statement of James [illegible], manager of sales and service for the Maddux-Lincoln organization.

STONE MOUNTAIN CLIMBED BY CAR

Stone Mountain at Atlanta, Ga., the largest solid block of granite in the world, was climbed recently by a Jewett sedan, according to word received here by J. M. Sterling, general manager of the Paige Company of Southern California. Only one other car ever reached the summit before and it weighed under 2000 pounds. The ascent was made over a trail, there being no road.

A New Kind of Joy Ride



Jack Maddux is shown at the wheel of a giant steam shovel giving Mrs. Helen Maddux, secretary of the concern, a ride in the steam shovel which is breaking ground for the new Maddux-Lincoln building.

PROFESSOR GLAD HE BOUGHT AUTO

Its a sure sign that an automobile owner is pleased with his car if the monthly statement for payments due is returned promptly with not only a check attached, but a gratified-sounding note penned across the face of the bill itself. That happened the other day at the Hupmobile Building on Figueroa street, according to A. R. Reedall, sales manager for Greer-Robbins Company, distributors.

Prof. John H. Austin, purchaser of a new Hupmobile some months ago, happened to be in Colorado when the statement for the July payment reached him. Following is the note that he wrote on the statement as he returned it with his check. "Denver, Colo. Tell Reedal 8000 miles since bought car—not a cent for repairs—all Kansas, Missouri, Ohio mud. Top Pikes Peak yesterday. Did not even get hot. Thirty other cars all hung up beside road, boiling."

KINGMAN SEEKING TO DIVERT TRAFFIC

KINGMAN (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—An effort is being made by the Valley Cutoff Association to divert travel to the old highway from Topock to Kingman by way of Yucca, paralleling the line of the Santa Fe Railroad, instead of taking the route to the northward, via Oatman and the Goldroads Pass of the River range.

New Victoria Model About to be Shown

During the period between the 8th and 18th inst., Franklin dealers throughout the country are making a special display and demonstration of the newest member of the Franklin line, the four-passenger Victoria. This car, which is styled by the internationally famous designer, De Causse, possesses many features which are new to motordom in this type of car.

It has the clear vision front pillars which first made their appearance in the three-passenger Franklin coupe, the English coach boot, cabriolet type top and wide doors, with an unusually low belt line.

In the Victoria, the designer has given more than the ordinary amount of attention to the placing of the driver's seat, bringing it as nearly as possible directly behind the wheel, while at the same time affording the driver maximum leg room.

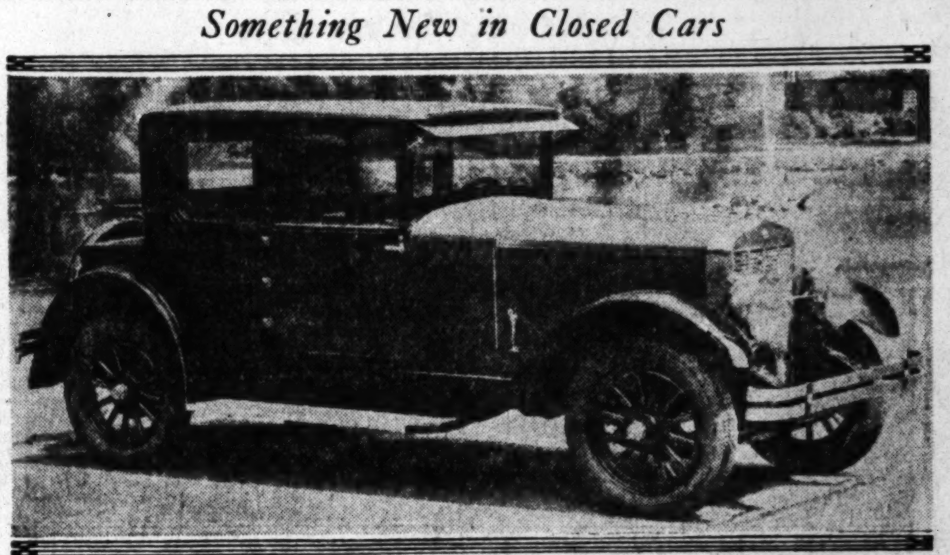
The folding seat, unlike the usual seat of this type, has been designed to afford comfort to the occupant on long rides. When not in use, it folds completely out of the way under the cowl. An unusual feature about its construction is found in the fact that it is fastened only at the front and requires no supporting leg at the back, thereby providing extra space for the occupants of the offset seat.

There is a roomy shopping box directly back of the driver and room for suit cases or large bundles in the spacious English coach boot, which is a distinctive feature of this car. Upholstery is of the finest broadcloth; fittings are hammered silver finish, and the car is finished in Lush green.

HOLDS UP WELL

The highway between Mojave and Bishop is holding up very well although it is getting dusty, states a bulletin from the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Something New in Closed Cars



This is the four-passenger Victoria by De Causa, which is the latest addition to the Franklin line.

OILING SYSTEM IS APPRECIATED FEATURE

Owners of Stutz vertical eight motor cars find they have numerous labor saving features which are much appreciated. One of these features is the chassis oiling system, points out Walter M. Brown, exclusive Stutz dealer in Hollywood.

"You never hear any squeaks or groans about a Stutz vertical eight chassis from joints getting dry," said Mr. Brown. "In chassis lubrication system all working parts are lubricated by a magazine system. It is fed from the engine, is nonclosing, self-cleaning and positive. Oil is fed to each moving part by means of local magazines which contain enough oil for three months' use, mechanically refilled directly from the motor when needed. And a triple duty rectifier keeps the crank case oil at its original purity, eliminating all foreign matter."

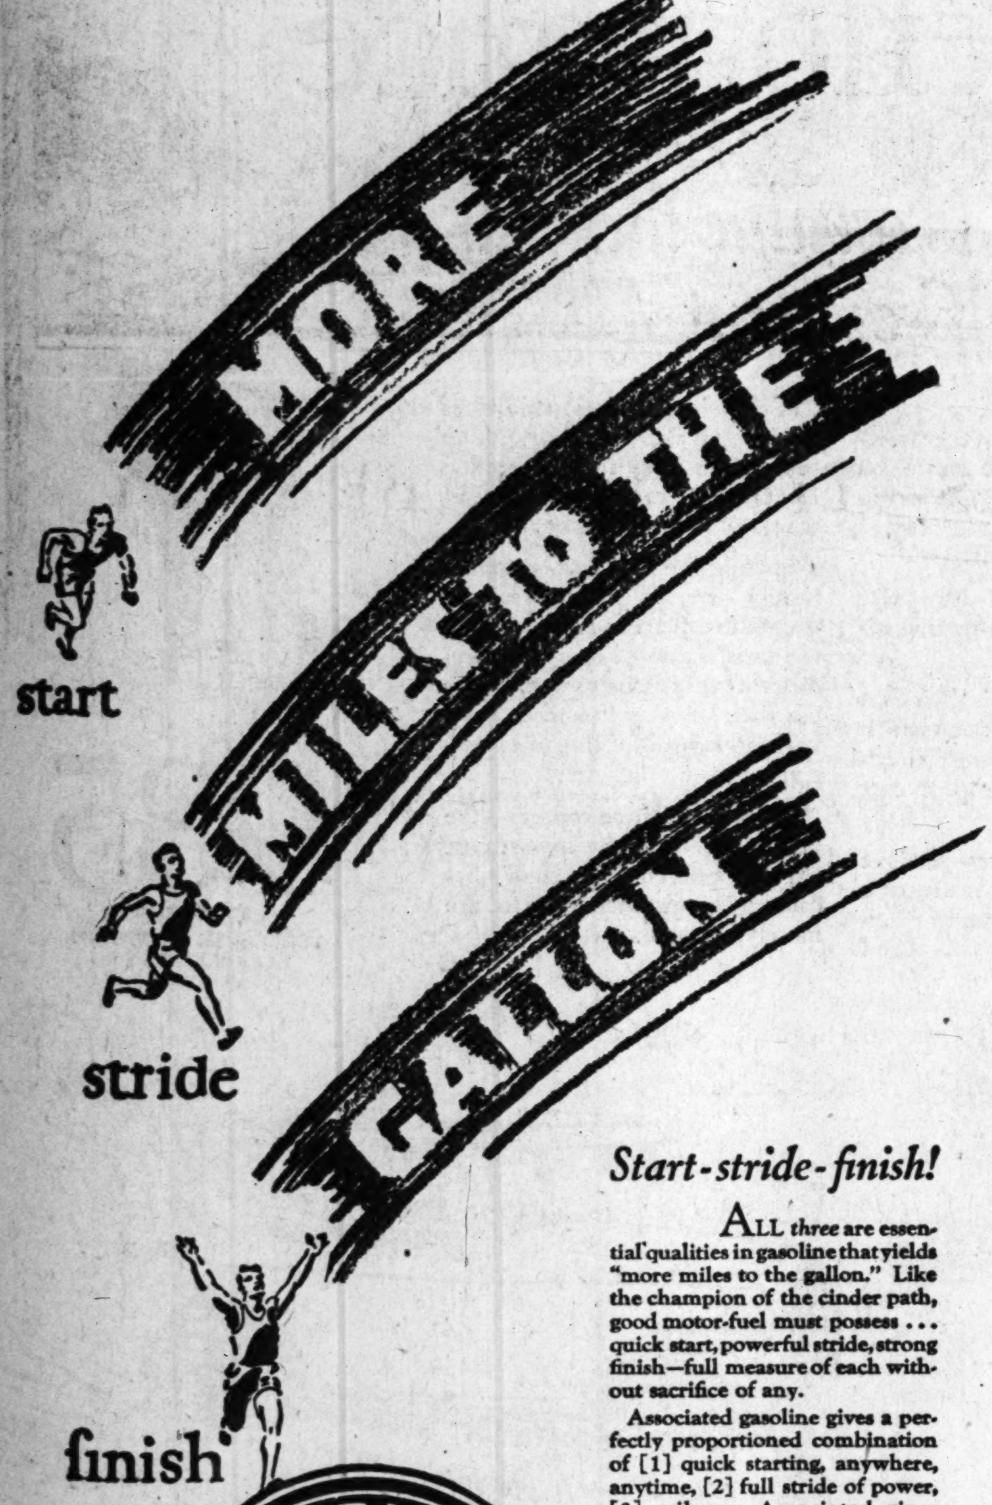
SHOWED SPEED

F. A. Luthy, Auburn dealer at Jackson, Mich., put over a fast one according to information received here by Selig Cohn, vice-president of the White Auto Company, Auburn distributor. Luthy had a prospect who wanted an Auburn roadster immediately. Luthy had none in stock, so he wired the factory to get one ready, put his prospect in an airplane and in fifty-five minutes had his customer sitting in the roadster at Auburn, Ind., ready to drive it home.

GUARD KIDDIES FROM DANGERS

Children are being safeguarded against dangers while playing on school grounds in Los Angeles this vacation, and the guardians are children themselves.

Small boys and girls are prevented from playing in the streets near the playgrounds or taking chances on the grounds through the summer safety committees organized by the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California. As in the school year, safety patrols of boys are at work this summer in approximately 170 schools, watching out for hazards to the lives and limbs of their playmates.



Start-stride-finish!

ALL three are essential qualities in gasoline that yields "more miles to the gallon." Like the champion of the cinder path, good motor-fuel must possess . . . quick start, powerful stride, strong finish—full measure of each without sacrifice of any.

Associated gasoline gives a perfectly proportioned combination of [1] quick starting, anywhere, anytime, [2] full stride of power, [3] mileage. Associated gives "more miles to the gallon" because of its distinctive chain or series of boiling points.

Rough Going for the Boys

Here are Chris de Velschow and I. R. Cato as they were emerging from some of the difficulties they encountered with their Chevrolet coupe while searching for a missing aviator in the wilds of Idaho.

THRILLS FILL SEARCH

Franklin Rose, California aviator, erstwhile air service lieutenant, and more recently air-mail pilot, brought back a thrilling story of the search made for him through the "badlands" of Idaho, after he had been blown sixty-five miles off his course and was forced to land on the slope of Juniper Mountain.

When the first mail ship on the Elko-Boise route took off to inaugurate the service between the two cities, Rose was at the helm. He had engine trouble, early in his flight and then ran into the most terrific windstorm that had swept the lava beds and desert of Nevada and Idaho for many a month. It was almost dark when the aviator had to surrender to the storm. He picked the only landing-place on the side of the mountain and called it a day.

The following morning, searching parties were scouring the mountains and valleys to the south and west of Boise. The Boise Chamber of Commerce met in special session and authorized funds to equip searching parties. But not waiting for this, Chris de Velschow and I. R. Cato, two air-mail service mechanics, set out in a Chevrolet coupe to rouse ranchers in the region to the search. They raced through the isolated Snake River plateau, carrying word of the missing pilot to far-scattered ranchers, where there were no telephone connections. Rose, who has returned to California, declares that their experiences on their rescue tour of the bad lands were more thrilling than his own.

After landing on the mountainside, Rose walked to a near-by ranch where he spent the night. The next morning he got some gas from the rancher and returned to his plane to continue his journey, but found the ship fast in the mud. It was 8 o'clock that night before Rose reached the nearest telephone and reported that he was safe. Borrowing a Chevrolet from the rancher, Rose drove on to Jordan Valley. The roads were almost impassable, and it was midnight before he reached that point with his two sacks of mail, and late the next day he arrived at Boise, where a belated reception took place.

The two boys who had gone out in the Chevrolet coupe to search for the missing flyer returned to Boise late at night on the third day. They were worn out from their long, sleepless search through the desert, but happy to find Rose safe. They had had thrills aplenty, and hard work, nad neither De Velschow nor Cato had had any sleep for so long that they were almost asleep on their feet.

SPECIALISTS SPEED UP WORK OF REPAIRS

High-class motor car repair work has developed expert workmen on various parts. They are called field specialists because they have gained unusual efficiency in certain branches of the work, says J. Benjamin Fahy, head of the downtown "Acre of Service" repair plant. These men work only on certain parts of cars.

"These specialists or experts have made it possible to gain great speed in motor car repair work," said Mr. Fahy. "They don't waste time studying about how a job should be handled or what kind of tools to use. They know just what to do and go about doing it with dispatch. When they finish the job it is done properly in the least time. Of course one does not find this class of workmen in the smaller shops because it is only the large repair plants that have work enough in their particular lines to keep them busy. That is one reason why the larger plants can turn out good work quickly."

TRAVEL IS HEAVY TO NORTHWEST

Improvements on Redwood Road to Increase Traffic is Prediction

Travel to the colorful Pacific Northwest from Los Angeles—over the perfect concrete of the Pacific Highway, or over the more spectacular and scenic, if more difficult, Redwood Highway—has been heavy this vacation season. That it will be even heavier next year, when improvements in the Redwood road are finished, is the forecast being made by touring experts of the Auto Club and other agencies.

That one annoyance which many Southern California motorists have had to encounter during this season will be eliminated in Washington and Oregon next year, was the assertion yesterday of J. C. Graves, manager of sales for the Richfield Oil Company.

"Like the farmer of old who disliked to change horses in midstream, most motorists dislike to change gasoline brands in the middle of a long trip, especially when they are consistent users of a particular make," commented Mr. Graves. "Thanks to the extension of distribution plan, just announced by President Fuller, however, it is fairly certain that the gold and blue colors of Richfield and Richlube will next summer be found flying from independent stations all the way to the Canadian line on both major highways."

Latest Fashion Move Matches Car and Dress

Milady motorist may not know all the mechanical functionings of her car, but she does know upholstery, appointments and colorings with unerring eye. So, her influence has brought striking refinements into the motor car in the last few years. An outstanding example of this is found in the 1927 Buick models which have just been introduced to Los Angeles, by the Howard Automobile Company of this city.

"The Buick designers have gone beyond comfort and richness to the point of introducing fashion into the new cars," explained Harold W. Tuttle, assistant general manager of the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles. "These new Buicks introduce here some of the new colors which will be offered this fall in Parisian gowns.

"To know what would be offered in the way of hues by the smartest dressmakers, the Buick factory sent artists to study in the European centers and visit the dye works, where the latest colors were in process of preparation. Many bolts of silks and other materials were brought back, and then the Duco experts were called in to arrange the most fetching combinations. The new Buick colorings are the result.

"But this is more easily recited than accomplished. In some cases as many as 300 panels were done before just the exact shades were obtained. So this is an example of the thoroughness with which the Buick factory has worked to produce the new model."

New Financing Interests Will Improve Make

Although the Knight sleeve-valve engine has been used for eleven years to power Stearns-Knight motor cars, yet none has been able to wear one of these engines out. The F. B. Stearns Company was the first American concern to adopt it, which action was taken after long and exhaustive tests and study, according to Al Lusby, of Collins & Lusby, Southern California distributors.

"Since the company adopted this motor, it has built and sold many thousands of cars, and the name Stearns-Knight has become a synonym for quality, stability and service," said Mr. Lusby. "Recognizing the possibilities inherent in a Stearns-Knight-motored car of high quality, new financial interests some months ago became associated with the company. Their aim is to push the Stearns-Knight to the top among high-grade cars.

"Two models are now being produced: Model 75, a six-cylinder car of 121-inch wheelbase and model 95, which has a wheelbase of 130 inches. They are now being produced in all body styles, with handsome appointments, ultra-modern equipment, and beautiful color combination."

OLD TRAILS ROAD TO BE SMOOTHED OUT

FLAGSTAFF (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The last bad stretch on the Old Trails Highway is to be smoothed out by a twelve-mile contract awarded by the State Highway Department, east of Flagstaff, between Canyon Diablo and Canyon Padre. When this work is done, the entire distance from Flagstaff, through Winslow, Holbrook and St. Johns, to Springerville and the State line, will be of Federal construction standard.

GIRL LIKES LONE TRIP

Drives Clear Across the Continent All by Herself

Venturing forth on a 3527-mile jaunt across the continent in an automobile holds no terrors for Betty Morris, who has just completed the trip alone in her Pontiac six coupe in a total elapsed time of sixteen days.

"A man is a useless accessory on an automobile trip," says Miss Morris, in relating the experiences of her jaunt to L. A. Hannan, sales manager for Reeve Gartzmann, Inc., Oakland and Pontiac distributors. "I prefer to hit it up alone and I find the company sufficiently entertaining. All I want is a motor that purrs to me and then everything is lovely.

"I ordered my Pontiac here in Los Angeles and took delivery of it in the East and drove to my starting point in New York City for the trip across the country.

"I actually drove only fourteen and one-half days of eight hours each, spending the rest of the time seeing the sights along the route, which took me from New York into Philadelphia and thence into Cumberland, Md. I next headed westward through Ohio to Indianapolis. The going across Kansas was wonderful if one enjoys viewing mile after mile of tall corn stalks waving to the faintest trace of warm breeze.

"The farther west I proceeded, the farther apart became the inhabitants and once in a while I realized that if misfortune or accident should overtake me it would be anything but pleasant until assistance reached me. However, I whistled bravely and drove on, gaining courage with each turn of the wheel.

"My biggest day's drive was from Springer to Albuquerque, when my speedometer showed 432 miles. I actually averaged in excess of thirty-five miles an hour for the trip from Springer into Los Angeles, taking time out for my side trips into the petrified forest and for overnight stops.

"I spent $69.06 for oil and gasoline. Repairs of one kind and another cost me $11.25 and extra equipment which I purchased along the route to be used in an emergency, took $50.50, while sleeping accommodations for the car itself, in other words storage, cost me $9.10.

"More than 1000 miles of the run was over poor roads and 200 of these were next to no roads at all. I had to drive through mud and over rocks, but the Pontiac seemed accustomed to any sort of trail following and in true Indian fashion, never once faltered on its way. I maintained a driving speed of about forty-two miles an hour on roads that would permit of this speed with safety. I found that continued moderate speed was more practical for eating up the miles than frequent unleashing of the motor for short dashes.

"I found that a light car that was huskily built is far superior for this sort of a trip. It takes the bad roads in better shape. It is easier to push it through deep mud and tire changes are more easily made than on a big car."

To the Man who Discounts Price for Performance

here is a value that is self-evident

KEEN judges of value are the first to appreciate the superiority of the Overland Six. Its greatest list of users is found among men whose judgment of real worth is acknowledged.

To them its amazingly low price is only an invitation to investigate what it covers.

Modern engineering is their first discovery—a type of design which reflects the best that eighteen leading American and European cars have developed.

The low swung motor—straight line drive—balanced construction—all means a new type of efficiency—with all the power real and usable all the time.

The chassis construction indicates a strength and wearing quality that means long life and trouble free service—the modern requirements of a modern man.

The body development—room—beauty—evenly distributed weight—comfort and convenience mean the satisfaction of every requirement of every man or woman who use their car day in and day out with no regard for the miles they run it.

Viewed from these aspects—the Overland Six is the lowest cost car ever offered in its class—because it brings much more for the money invested.

OLD CARS TURN UP STILL GOING

Car Built in 1904 Still in Active Service

Oldest Machine of Its Make in Private Hands

Car Which Once Held Record in Los Angeles

Search for the oldest registered Franklin in the United States has revealed some wonderfully interesting results, according to a final report sent out by the Franklin Automobile Company of Syracuse, N. Y. The oldest Franklin in the hands of an owner is a 1904 roadster, No. [illegible], belonging to Evan J. Roberts, [illegible] Amity street, Flushing, N. Y. Records and photographs show that Mr. Roberts's car was purchased in 1904 by Dr. Wm. S. Brown of Flushing, who sold it to Mr. Roberts in 1906, since which time it has been licensed every year and is still in daily service.

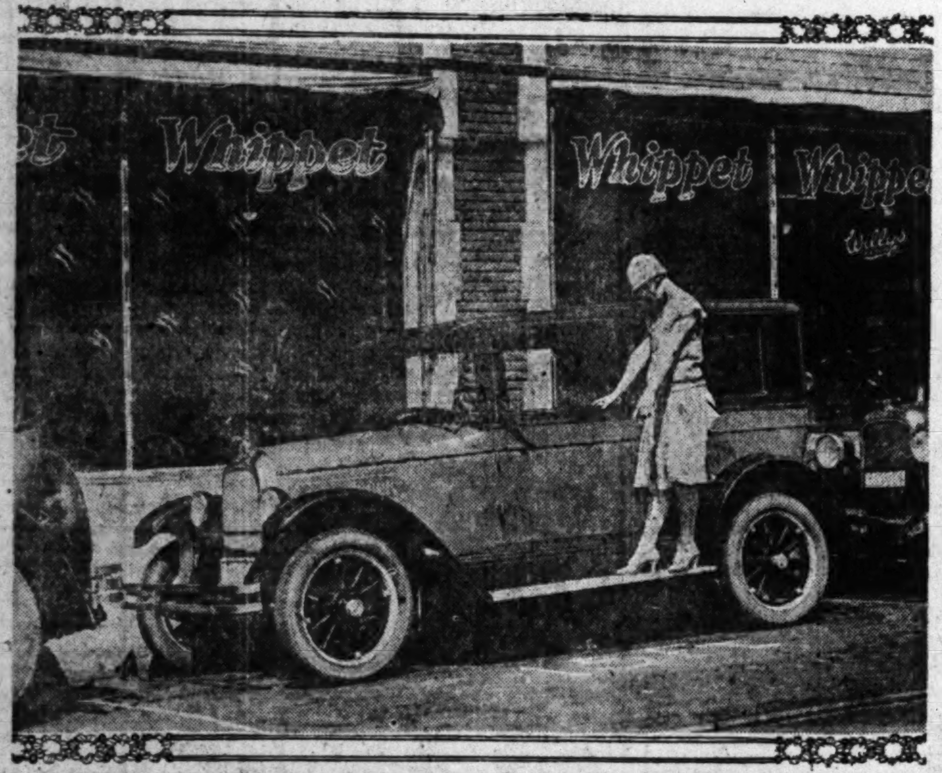
Under date of July 14, Mr. Roberts, who is a building contractor at Flushing, N. Y., wrote: "I began driving this car exactly twenty years and ten months ago today and I kept it up ever since. UUp until a couple of years ago I had been using it in my business nearly every day, but it became so much of an attraction that traffic was frequently blocked so, I do not drive it very often now."

A still older Franklin, but not in the hands of a private owner, is a 1903 roadster, No. 83, in the possession of Cowles Tolman, Franklin dealer at New Haven, Ct. This car was originally owned by Judge Thayer of Norwich, Ct., who used it until 1913, after which it was laid up for six years, or until purchased by Cowles Tolman in 1918.

The second best record received was that of a 1904 touring No. 738, the property of E. P. Griscom of Ralph, Pa. This car came into Mr. Griscom's possession in 1913 after having served its first owner five years and it second owner three years. Mr. Griscom is now using it as a truck.

There is an aura of historical accomplishment about the 1904 roadster, No. 790, which is in the possession of Ralph Hamlin, Inc., Southern California Franklin distributor, for it is the car which in 1904 established a transcontinental record. It was driven by L. L. Whitman and C. S. Carris, and the old records still in the possession of the factory show that its exploits created no end of comment. Hamlin still uses it for advertising purposes and the car has appeared in photoplays considerably.

Doesn't Use Much Space



Miss Eleanor Nelling shows that it requires only forteen feet of room to park the new Overland Whippet sedan, distributed here by the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company.

GEORGE BUYS SPORT

"Willard George, well-known sportsman and furrier has purchased an Oakland six sport roadster to use in business and for hunting trips into Mexico," says L. A. Hannan, salesmanager for Reeve Gartzmann, Oakland distributor.

MAKES RAPID TRIP

Recently a Willys-Knight Six "Seventy" model, carrying five adult passengers, was driven from New York City to Montreal, Can., more than 425 miles, in eleven hours including the time out for meals, fuel, water, and other necessary stops, according to information received by L. J. McCracken, manager of the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company.

Sales Record Shattered by Newest Auto

That the new Overland Whippet automobile has been given a most enthusiastic reception by the public and that it is the car many have been waiting for, is evidenced by the large number of sales in the Southern California territory since the car was introduced. This statement was made by L. J. McCracken, manager of the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company, after looking over the sales record for the last fifteen days.

"The car was introduced fifteen days ago," said Mr. McCracken, "and to date we have sold 275. We have more than 100 unfilled orders.

"We have sold more of these Whippets in fifteen days than our largest month's sales of any four-cylinder Overland car in the past. However, the many features of the new car are just when the average light-car owner wanted and we expect the heavy sales to continue indefinitely."

Springerville Road Will be Open Monday

SPRINGERVILLE (Ariz.) Aug. 7. (Exclusive)—The new El Paso-Silver City-Springerville-Grand Canyon highway is to be formally dedicated the 9th inst., with a dance of novel sort, one held on the concrete floor of a 260-foot bridge that has been thrown across the San Francisco River, near Alma, N. M., sixty miles southeast of this point. The bridge, which has cost $47,000, will be opened for traffic a week later. About thirty cars a day now are passing over the new route, despite difficulty in passing the San Francisco River, and the road is expected to become one of the most popular in the Southwest, as it is of standard Forest Service construction and passes through the thickly-wooded Mogollon Moutain region.

PUT OUT FULL LINE OF CARS

Chrysler Soon to Invade the Low-Price Field

Manufacturer Announces a Small Machine

Will Then Have Models for All Size Purses

What is regarded as one of the most important announcements made in the motor-car industry in years, is a statement issued at Detroit by Walter P. Chrysler, motor-car manufacturer, that the company of which he is the head will definitely proceed with the manufacture of four complete lines of cars of standardized quality to cover the four greatest markets.

What this plan means, according to Mr. Chrysler, is the building of four quality cars, each the finest in its price division, under one name, by one manufacturing organization, in one group of plants and marketed through one unified distributing organization.

It further means, he says, millions of dollars to the motor car buying public because of the greater dollar value which the plan makes possible.

The statement of Mr. Chrysler was in reference to the new four-cylinder car with which he will invade the lower-price field in a short time.

"As we are entirely dependent for the success of our product on the attitude of the public toward it, I have always felt that the public is entitled to know the details of our plans and aims.

"I am frank to say that it has been my ambition for years to standardize quality in the manufacture of a group of motor cars, produced by the coordinated efforts of one organization, but designed, adequately to meet the wants and desires of the different groups into which the buying public is divided.

"When the last word is said, public demand in motor cars is determined by economic factors—and by the use and value of the car. In other words, people buy the sort of car which will render them the service they require at the price they can afford to pay.

"It is my belief that they have now reached the point that no matter what the price may be, the car must come up to certain standards of size, comfort, performance and economy if it is to win and hold public confidence and approval.

"In the past, where one manufacturer has produced cars in different classes, these have been as separate units, thus losing to the manufacturer the efficiencies and economies which should result from group manufacture.

"But under our plan of standardized quality, we not only have all the resources and facilities of our great plants co-ordinated and functioning as one factory, but we have engineering under unified control and all of our activities, right through to the distribution to the public, working together to the one end of giving the greatest possible value in every class.

"This plan of standardized quality has been definitely shaping itself since we first announced the Chrysler "70" two and a half years ago. We proceeded a long step on the way in the presentation of the Chrysler Imperial "80" and went still further in this direction with the Chrysler, lighter, lower-priced "60." Now we come to the final step in the process with the production of a four-cylinder car in the lower price field.

"We are confident that when this new car is definitely placed before the public, it will receive the same enthusiastic reception that has been accorded our other cars."

Woods in Fast Cross-Country Daylight Drive

W. W. Woods of Springfield, Mo., a recent visitor to Los Angeles and other Southern California points, has set something of a record on his drive from this city to his home in a Pierce-Arrow series 80, seven-passenger coach. He made the trip of 2025 miles in five days of daylight driving, according to a letter received by William E. Bush, Pierce-Arrow distributor for Southern California. In the letter, Mr. Woods stated:

"We drove from Los Angeles the first day to Seligman, Ariz., on the Santa Fe Trail, a distance of 463 miles. Next day we drove from Seligman to Albuquerque, N. M., and there our speedometer showed 923 miles for the two days of travel. We started at 7 o'clock in the morning each day and had dinner at 6:30 o'clock each evening.

"From Albuquerque we drove to Trinidad, a distance of 260 miles, and were held up there on account of a severe storm. The next day we drove from Trinidad to Wichita, Kan., which is a stretch of 470 miles. From Wichita we drove home, and our log showed 2025 miles for the entire trip in five days' time. We changed oil once in the engine and added five quarts during the drive. We used 128 gallons of gasoline, averaging a little over fifteen miles to the gallon."

Standard Units Great Aid to Owner of Auto

Owners of cars made up of standard units, have a great advantage over many others when it comes to obtaining parts that may become disabled through accident, declares G. J. Gollmer, president of the Elcar Pacific Company, distributor of Elcar in seven western States. These units can be obtained almost anywhere, he states, and much lost time avoided when an especially made unit is needed.

"In planning the Elcar line the engineers specified standard units throughout," said Mr. Gollmer. "There were two reasons for this. One is because these units have been tested out for long periods after being perfected and proved to more dependable through actual use. The other reason is because they are so easily obtainable.

"Among the Elcar units that have long established reputations for dependability and excellence are the Lycoming motor, Autolite electrical ignition system, Borg & Beck clutch, Warner transmission, Salisbury axles and Ross cam and lever steering gear."

The New Lighter Six, Chrysler "60"

At Last Affording Chrysler Supreme Quality in The Field of The Lower-Priced Six

In the new lighter six, Chrysler "60" you have, unit for unit, the same standardized quality comprehended in all Chryslers—in features, in materials, in craftsmanship, in rigid inspection and test, in characteristics of dependability and long life.

Sixty miles, and more, per hour; unprecedented get-away; gas economy of 22 miles and more per gallon; the striking beauty of Chrysler dynamic symmetry; astonishing riding ease and roadability; the safety of Chrysler four-wheel hydraulic brakes; oil-filter and air-cleaner; full pressure lubrication; seven-bearing crankshaft; impulse neutralizer; road levelizers front and rear; roomy, luxurious bodies.

Never before has the motoring public been offered such supreme quality and value—in the field of the lower-priced Six—as is combined in the new lighter six, Chrysler "60".

For Those Who Demand Something Different

If you are content with blue serge, roast beef, square houses and domestic cigars, then Wills Sainte Claire is not made for you.

Other motor cars of more or less distinction will do just as well.

Happily, there is a small but extremely worth-while group of people who are more exacting in their tastes. They are rather partial to Biltmore tweeds, squab pheasant, sandstone cottages and pure Havana leaf.

They do most of the things worth while in this world, and they do what they do with a flare—LIVE WITH AN AIR!

For these C. Harold Wills created Wills Sainte Claire. One must be born with the divine gift of INDIVIDUALITY, before the half-European beauty, and wholly American pep and power of this remarkable car becomes an irresistible necessity.

FLORIDA LEADS INCREASE

California is third of all States in the Union in the percentage of increase in automotive vehicles to July 1, last, according to a midyear survey, copies of which have been received by local officials of the Star Motor Company of California. Numerically, it is second.

Florida, which held the premier position last year, again is in the lead for the first six months of this year, according to the report, with an increase of 59.1 per cent. Registrations to July 1 this year in that State showed an increase of 7.9 per cent over the same period of last year.

Numerically, Michigan leads in the gains over last year, with a registration increase of 192,990 vehicles, it is pointed out by Frank Hood, manager of the Star-factory branch here, displacing Texas, which was in the lead last year, and New York, which held the honor to January 1, last.

California follows Michigan closely, with a registration increase of 176,367, with New York, third.

New York is in the lead in the number of motor cars registered, the report says, with California, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois following in the order named. All have more than 1,000,000 vehicles registered.

In the ratio of population to motor cars registered, this State leads all of them, with one car to every three persons on July 1, last. Florida is second with a ratio of one car to 3.2 persons. Iowa and Nevada are even with 3.8; Oregon is thirteenth on the list with a ratio of 4.5, and Washington, fifteenth, with 4.7.

Nationally, July 1 registrations of motor cars showed an increase of 11.3 per cent, and the total is 19,579,768.

Coincident with the receipt of the report was one from the New York office of Durant Motors, Inc., manufacturers of Star cars, that the increase in the output and sales of these popularly known automobiles had more than kept pace with the increase in the national registration of vehicles.

For the six months ending June 30, last, the increase in output and sales had been 27 per cent, according to Colin Campbell, vice-president of the manufacturing company.

Yankee Trucks Popular Over on Other Side

American-made trucks enjoy the same popularity abroad that do passenger cars built here, according to figures just received from the Department of Commerce by the export department of the Moreland Motor Truck Company. Not only are trucks made in this country found to be more efficient—and therefore cheaper eventually—but the truck makers of this country are increasing their lead over those from four other leading producing nations.

For 1925, the last year for which figures have just been issued, truck manufacturers from this country exported 70 per cent of all of that class of vehicles made in this country, Canada, France, the United Kingdom and Germany according to the bulletin. For 1924 the percentage was 58.

The difference is found, it is declared by export experts, in the wide difference in the unit value of the trucks from here and those shipped from other counties. And this difference in price is held due to the volume production of the American manufacturers and the methods employed.

In 1924 the average unit value each of the 27,352 trucks exported from this country was $702 while last year it was $643 for the 58,624 shipped. With the exception of Canada this was the cheapest, the next lowest being France, with a unit value of $1804.

The increasing demand for economical transportation of persons and hoods, Moreland officials declare, is a strong factor in the growth of the export markets of all producing countries and this is apt to continue for some time, particularly in such locations as Latin America, Australia, New Zealand and other places where the inhabitants are progressive.

ACCURATE TESTS INSURE SAFETY

"Every day more motorists are realizing the importance of having their brakes tested and adjusted and thus saving themselves from possible serious accident," says The Brake Shop Inc. "This is manifested by the increasing numbers who drive into our place. Here we have scientific machines, constructed especially for this work and they are wonderfully accurate. As a rule the driver remains and gives close attention to the testing and adjusting, and when he drives out of The Brake Shop he has renewed confidence in his car, the brakes of which will stop it instantly in and out of traffic."

BUILD LOTS OF 'EM

Star car No. 400,000 was recently completed and shipped from the Elizabethtown (N. J.) factory of Durant Motors, Inc., according to advices received by officials of the local Star Motor Company of California branch. The 400,000th car produced by the company is a sport-six roadster. Each month this year has shown an increase in production from the factory, reports show.

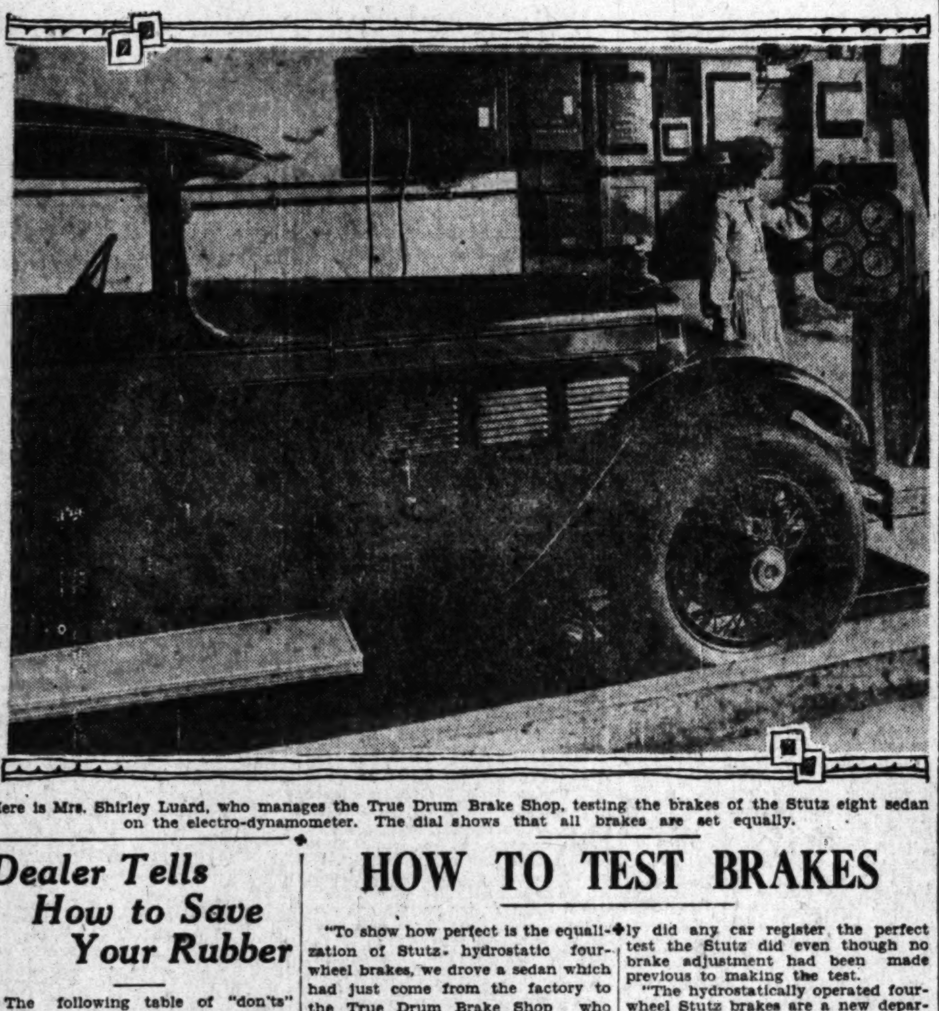
Avoiding Trouble With Brakes



Here is Mrs. Shirley Luard, who manages the True Drum Brake Shop, testing the brakes of the Stutz eight sedan on the electro-dynamometer. The dial shows that all brakes are set equally.

Dealer Tells How to Save Your Rubber

The following table of "don'ts" has been successfully used by the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company, McClaren tire distributor, to help their customers enjoy the long mileage built into McClaren tires. Everyone of these "Don'ts" is a simple, practical and effective way to add to your tire mileage.

Don't give tire unneccessary sunlight, they enjoy the dark.

Don't make emergency stops a habit; every slide takes a layer of rubber.

Don't see how quickly you can start; spinning wheels are out of fashion.

Don't "step on it" just because its raining; speed plus sharp stones multiplied by water equals bill for new tires.

Don't run over all the ash piles, broken bottles, naily boards, and other rubbish you can find; even a harmless paper bag may contain a brick.

Don't park in that puddle of oil; oil eats rubber.

Don't use the curb, as a brake; it may break a casing.

Don't stop on an old bonfire; it may still have some kick in it.

BAD ROADS MADE INTO GOOD ONES

When is a bad road a good road? And when is a good road a bad road? Questions, seemingly foolish, that are asked by F. H. Simon of the Watson Stabilator Company of Los Angeles, in all seriousness, and then answered by him with considerable logic.

"Many motorists," he says, "think of a road with a macadam, concrete or asphalt surface as 'good,' without considering any other feature of travel over it. A road should not be judged by its surface alone, however, in my opinion. In these modern times when the motorist rides on long flexible springs and his car is equipped with efficient devices for checking spring recoil, he can essay gypsy trails and country turnpikes with complete confidence.

PASSING THE BUCK ISN'T A BAD IDEA

Are we a nation of "buch passers"? D. R. McBryde of the McBryde Lubricating Service here, claims we are, but also declares that it is nothing to be ashamed of. In fact he sees it as very much of a virtue. "Passing the buck or letting George do it," says McBryde, "is first of all a natural result of this scientific civilization. Development of machines and diversification of industry make it no longer necessary or desirable for the individual to be economically sufficient unto himself. All production is specialized, and it is better so, for labor is more efficient and what it produces is more lenient with the consumer's purse."

ONE DETOUR

On the inland route to San Francisco a six-mile detour will be found between Modesto and Salida, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

HOW TO TEST BRAKES

"To show how perfect is the equalization of Stutz hydrostatic four-wheel brakes, we drove a sedan which had just come from the factory to the True Drum Brake Shop who have the only electro dynamometer brake testing machine in Los Angeles to test them. This electrical equipment eliminates all guesswork in the testing of brakes and adjusting, and is acclaimed by the foremost automotive engineers to be the most accurate brake testing equipment. The electro dynamometer tests all four brakes simultaneously. When we put the Stutz on the machine, the dials on the brake meter all registered perfect equalization of all four brakes and showed maximum braking efficiency," said Lynn C. Buxton, the Stutz distributor here.

"Shirley L. Luard, proprietor of the True Drum Brake Shop told me rarely did any car register the perfect test the Stutz did even though no brake adjustment had been made previous to making the test.

"The hydrostatically operated four-wheel Stutz brakes are a new departure in brake construction. The inside of each brake is formed by a heavy rubber tube. On the outside of each of these tubes are six segments operating outward against the brake drum like any internal expanding brake. As the brake is applied each of these tubes fills with a solution of alcohol and water. Each brake is connected on the same system and perfect brake equalization is the result. Even if one of the brake linings is worn more than the rest, there will still be perfect brake equalization and efficiency because the tube will exert the same braking pressure as if the linings were all the same thickness."

Trail Blazer Will Try Hand as Salesman

One of the first men to introduce the American automobile to the people of Australia, and who drove hundreds of miles in the "bush country" over the trackless desert, blazing trails for automobile roads that were to come, has finally deserted the ranks of Studebaker service superintendents and put on the toga of a salesman. The man is George Herron, known to thousands of Los Angeles Studebaker owners, who has just resigned as superintendent of the Eighteenth-street shop of the Hoffman organization and is now on the sales staff at the main store.

GEORGE HERRON

Herron became a salesman just fifteen years to the month that he was lost on the desert country of the Antipodes, when he became too adventurous and nosed an old Studebaker into the bush country. During this experience he was forced to make friends with savages by offering them money and trinkets, and lived on native foods. One of his harrowing experiences was eating a native porridge, only to find out weeks later that it had contained the meat of a small Australian snake.

Herron has been identified with Studebaker since 1910, and has served as service supervisor in the field for many years. He came with the Paul G. Hoffman Company six and a half years ago and, because of his technical knowledge and experience, was made a service superintendent. He was content with this post, one of the foremost in its field in the West, until last week, when he drove one of the new Studebaekr custom sedans which have just been introduced to Los Angeles.

HIGHWAY IS OPEN

The main highway between El Centro and Brawley is again open to traffic, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

How Rubber is Silencer When Used on Cars

Public curiosity has been aroused by the announcement of the sensational rubber-silenced chassis in the improved Oakland six, which was recently introduced to the motoring fraternity. Like the advent of all new things in the motor world, the public wants to become conversant with the the features of the rubber-silenced chassis, yet it is something that cannot be seen from the outside of the car, hence its application and advantages must be explained, according to H. E. Franklin, manager for Reeve Gartzmann, Oakland six distributors.

"The rubber-silenced chassis," says Franklin, "is a big step forward in motor-car engineering. It serves to eliminate all road noises and motor rumbles from entering the driver's compartment of closed cars. The application of rubber to the chassis to silence foreign noises means that the rear motor supports are attached to the frame by a rubber block which completely isolates the motor from the frame, forming a sound-proof wall that arrests noises and prevents their transmission into the car."

REPAVE HIGHWAY NEAR CARPINTERIA

Bids have been asked for the grading and repaving of 4.47 miles of State highway between Summerland and Carpinteria. The grade of the existing highway will be raised several feet to better drainage conditions, after which a cement concrete pavement with a width of thirty feet will be placed. The latter project is included in the recently announced program of the State Highway Commission for the rebuilding of State highways in Santa Barbara county, originally constructed by the county and taken over by the State. Bids will be opened in Sacramento on the 30th inst.

OAK FLAT IN SHAPE

The Big Oak Flat route into Yosemite is in excellent condition, excepting between Carl Inn and the floor of the valley which is dusty, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

TRAPPED IN LOST CANYON OUR THREE FRIENDS HAVE SPENT THE WEEK IN A DESPERATE ATTEMPT TO FIND AN OUTLET WHILE THE WOLF AND HIS SAVAGE ALLIES GUARD THE HEIGHTS ABOVE - ANY MOVEMENT IN THE CANYON IS A SIGNAL FOR A SHOWER OF ROCKS AND BOULDERS FROM THE CRUEL WATCHERS ABOVE -
OH BOY! I WAS DREAMING I WAS SAFE AT HOME AND MY MOTHER WAS ABOUT TO HAND ME A GREAT BIG SLICE OF CHOCOLATE CAKE -
AUSPICIOUS OMENS ATTEND OUR UNDIGNIFIED EFFORTS -
GEE, I'M TIRED OF EATING COLD FOOD AND WATER - I'D GIVE ANYTHING FOR A NICE HOT CUP OF COFFEE -
THIS UNDESIRABLE PERSON KNOWS A FIRE WOULD BETRAY OUR LOCATION TO THE WORTHLESS ONES ABOVE - IT IS WISELY WRITTEN HE WHO WOULD LIVE LONG MUST SOMETIMES CHANGE HIS WAY OF LIVING -
LOOK AT THE WILD MOUNTAIN GOAT - IF WE COULD CAPTURE HIM WE WOULD AT LEAST HAVE WARM MILK TO DRINK -
LET US HASTEN FORWARD AND MAKE A WELL EXECUTED ATTEMPT TO CAPTURE THE UNSUSPECTING ONE -
THIS USELESS PERSON'S UNCLOSING EYES OBSERVED THE HONORABLE GOAT DISAPPEAR IN THIS UNDERBRUSH - MAY THE ALL KNOWING ONES LEAD US TO HIS WELL CONCEALED HIDING PLACE -
THE GOAT HAS GONE INTO A CAVE IN THE SIDE OF THE CANYON AND YOU MAY LAY TO THAT - GOLLY, THAT GOAT HAS DISAPPEARED LIKE A CLOUD OF SMOKE - THAT WALL WOULDN'T EVEN HIDE A CRICKET ON IT - I WAS HOPING MAYBE WE'D FIND AN UNDERGROUND WAY OUT OF THIS OLD CANYON -
IT HAS BEEN SAID THROUGH THE BITTERNESS OF FAILURE WE LEARN THE BLESSINGS OF SUCCESS -
YOU MAY WRITE THE NOTE BUT HOW YOU EXPECT TO DELIVER IT IS A MYSTERY TO ME - BUT YOU'RE THE CAPTAIN ON THIS CRUISE AND SAM SALT WILL STAND BY AND OBEY ORDERS - I'LL JUST WRITE A NOTE TO UNCLE BIM AND TELL HIM WE ARE TRAPPED IN THE LOST CANYON -
HERE'S MY MESSENGER BOY, SAM, THIS HOMING PIGEON WILL FLY AS STRAIGHT AS AN ARROW UNTIL HE REACHES HIS NEST -
THIS BRAINLESS ONE BOWS TO DUST BEFORE THE MANIFESTATIONS OF YOUR EMBRACING CLEVERNESS -
TIE THE MESSAGE CAREFULLY, CHING - REMEMBER THIS LITTLE BIRD HAS A LONG HARD JOURNEY AHEAD OF HIM -
NO CUNNING DEVICE WILL BE LACKING TO PROTECT OUR BENEVOLENT MESSAGE -
THIS PERSON CAN CLEARLY PERCEIVE MANY OMENS OF GOOD APPEARING THROUGH THE CLOUDS OF ENDLESS DISAPPOINTMENTS -
NOW FLY HOME AND YOU'LL LIVE IN A GOLDEN COOP FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE -
WHAT A SAILOR MAN HE WOULD MAKE - HE COULD SAIL THE SEVEN SEAS WITHOUT CHART OR COMPASS AND YOU MAY LAY TO THAT - WHEN UNCLE BIM GETS THAT MESSAGE I'LL BET HE'LL FIND A WAY TO RESCUE US AND WHEN HE COMES HERE THE WOLF AND HIS BAND OF SAVAGES WILL BE SORRY THEY EVER FOOLED WITH US - MY UNCLE BIM WILL FIX THEM - I GUESS MY PAPA AND UNCLE BIM ARE THE TWO SMARTEST MEN IN THE WHOLE WORLD -

Mr. Ork Has a Bright Idea

"And s'pose we got afloat on the ocean," said Trot to Cap'n Bill, "where would we drift to, and how long would it take us to get there?"

Cap'n Bill was forced to admit he didn't know. The Ork could fly away from the island any time it wished to, but the queer creature was loyal to his new friends and refused to leave them in such a lonely, forsaken place.

It was when trot urged him to go, on this fourth morning, that the Ork had his happy thought.

"I will go," said he, "if you two will agree to ride upon my back."

"We are too heavy; you might drop us," objected Cap'n Bill.

"Yes, you are rather heavy for a long journey," acknowledged the Ork, "but you might eat of those lavender berries and become so small that I could carry you with ease."

This quaint suggestion startled Trot and she looked gravely at the speaker while she considered it, but Cap'n Bill gave a scornful snort and asked:

"What would become of us afterward? We wouldn't be much good if we were some two or three inches high. No, Mr. Ork, I'd rather stay here, as I am, than be a hop-o'-my-thumb somewhere else."

"Why couldn't you take some of the dark purple berries along with you, to eat after we had reached our destination?" inquired the Ork. "Then you could grow big again whenever you pleased."

Trot clapped her hands with delight.

"That's it!" she exclaimed. "Let's do it, Cap'n Bill."

The old sailor did not like the idea at first, but he thought it over carefully and the more he thought the better it seemed.

"How could you manage to carry us, if we were so small?" he asked.

"I could put you in a paper bag, and tie the bag around my neck."

"But we haven't a paper bag," objected Trot.

The Ork looked at her.

"There's your sunbonnet," it said presently, "which is hollow in the middle and has two strings that you could tie around my neck."

Trot took off her sunbonnet and regarded it critically. Yes, it might easily-hold both her and Cap'n Bill, after they had eaten the lavender berries and been reduced in size. She tied the strings around the Ork's neck and the sunbonnet made a bag in which two tiny people might ride without danger of falling out. So she said:

"I b'lieve we'll do it that way, Cap'n."

Cap'n Bill groaned but could make no logical objection except that the plan seemed to him quite dangerous—dangerous in more ways than one.

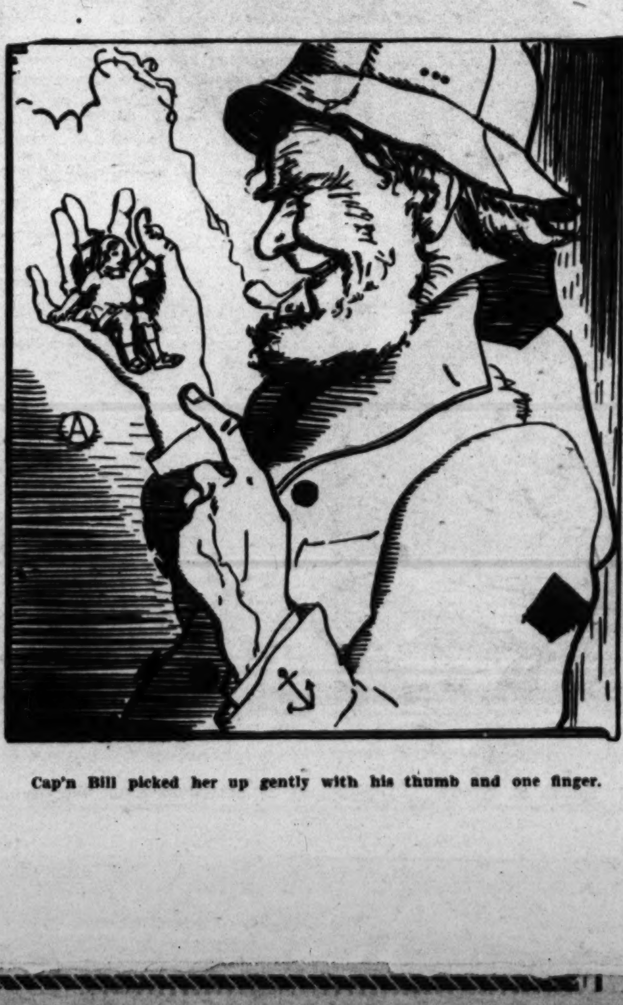
"I think so, myself," said Trot soberly. "But nobody can stay alive without getting into danger sometimes, and danger doesn't mean getting hurt, Cap'n; it only means we might get hurt. So I guess we'll have to take the risk."

"Let's go and find the berries," said the Ork.

They said nothing to Pessim, who was sitting on his stool and scowling dismally as he stared at the ocean, but bore the magic fruits. The Ork remembered very well where the lavender berries grew and led his companions quickly to the spot.

Cap'n Bill gathered two berries and placed them carefully in his pocket. Then they went around to the east side of the island and found the tree that bore the dark purple berries.

"I guess I'll take four of these," said the sailorman, "so in case one doesn't make us grow big we can eat another."



Cap'n Bill picked her up gently with his thumb and one finger.

"Better take six," advised the Ork. "It's well to be on the safe side, and I'm sure these trees grow nowhere else in all the world."

So Cap'n Bill gathered six of the purple berries and with their precious fruit they returned to the shed to bid good-by to Pessim. Perhaps they would not have granted the surly little man this courtesy had they not wished to use him to tie the sunbonnet around the Ork's neck.

When Pessim learned they were about to leave him he at first looked greatly pleased, but he suddenly recollected that nothing ought to please him and so he began to grumble about being left alone.

"We knew it wouldn't suit you," remarked Cap'n Bill. "It didn't suit you to have us here, and it won't suit you to have us go away."

"That is quite true," admitted Pessim. "I haven't been suited since I can remember; so it doesn't matter to me in the least whether you go or stay."

He was interested in the experiment, however, and willingly agreed to assist, although he prophesied they would fall out of the sunbonnet on their way and be either drowned in the ocean or crushed upon some rocky shore. This uncheerful prospect did not daunt Trot, but it made Cap'n Bill quite nervous.

"I will eat my berry first," said Trot, as she placed her sunbonnet on the ground, in such a manner that they could get into it.

Then she ate the lavender berry and in a few seconds became so small that Cap'n Bill picked her up gently with his thumb and one fin-

WHAT HAPPENED IN CHURCH

By Adeline Van Payne

There lay to the west of Miss Babcock's most select school for girls, a dignified grey chapel. The front was a mass of old and shining ivy, and the pastor within was much like his surroundings, old and gray and quiet; one of those men who seldom smiled, but went about with hands clasped in a pious manner.

Of course it was wicked, but to girls in their teens, he was often a subject to provoke laughter. We wondered if he would ever, upon any occasion, burst into a loud, healthy guffaw.

Our curiosity, however, was appeased on the Sunday before Thanksgiving, when we filed, two by two, into the little grey chapel. Even now I can see the shadowy pews, blue incense, and dim, high-colored windows, with the Rev. Mr. Hackensaw in his white robe standing before the pulpit. Outside, the rustle of wind came fitfully, just enough to make one drowsy. Then the organ began to peal and I felt securely and delightfully at peace.

It was after the first hymn, when we had risen with the customary rustle of silks and satins, that I first beheld the dejected, dirty-faced poddle who came waddling up the aisle.

The situation was delicious. Would Miss Babcock see him, and stalk grimly after the wicked wanderer? If so, the dog would in all probability dodge beneath the pew, leaving her in a screamingly funny situation. Or, would he continue down the aisle, run up the steps and confront the Rev. Mr. Hackensaw?

The mere thought sent forbidden shivers down my spine. What a lark it would be to see his doleful lips lift in a smile, and the girls, they would be convulsed.

With round, staring eyes I watched the dog's progress. It was slow and unconcerned. The organ had stopped and just as our pastor came down from the pulpit, the wet, muddy little poodle ran up the steps and stared at the pastor of Ivenhurst Church.

I will never forget the look that passed over the good man's face. His face blanched, then turned a dull red, while his eyes popped rabbit-like from their sockets. The dog put up one filthy paw and wagged his tail. This was too much for me. I struggled with the gulps of laughter that assailed me, but soon gave in. My shoulders were shaking and my cheeks were crimson. The girl next to me began to sniffle, and the two of us emitted a low gurgle.

Then Miss Babcock's dreadful blue eyes found us, but instead of checking the paroxysm it enhanced our queer hysteria. Try as I would, I shook with laughter.

The poodle was still making overtures to the Rev. Mr. Hackensaw, and who, with a grain of humor in their make-up, could keep a straight face?

"Adeline," I heard Miss Babcock say, "you may be excused from church. What is more, you shall sit upon a tombstone until we join you."

I was grateful for my sentence, and dashed from the quiet little church into a beautiful moonlit night. Instead of shivering and sighing, I really enjoyed resting upon one of the large marble slabs.

Miss Babcock, when she joined me, saw tears of merriment in my eyes, but thinking they were tears of contrition, stalked happily ahead of me.

WHAT'S ONE HOUR A DAY!

Persevere and you will accomplish something in the writing game; waste time and you won't.

During five years of reading and revising manuscripts, I have studied authors, as well as the would-be authors who constantly complain, "I'd just love to write more stories, but I'm so dreadfully busy. How do you do it?"

It is an old excuse, shabby and moth-eaten, to say the least, and I always think, "The people who are too busy to do worth-while things soon become back numbers. Everybody in the world is busy. It isn't a novel situation or one that incurs distress."

The fact of the matter is, these same persons are rarely too busy to talk over the phone for thirty minutes at a time or to read trashy fiction. Their evenings are spent playing bridge or doing a thousand equally time-wasting things.

The truth, of course, is that they do not really want to write; they probably think it is an easy, profitable business, one looked up to by the world in general, and so they delight in wasting more time, talking about it.

Now, however, let us consider the person who really has but little time for his very own. Can the young chap attending college, the high school girl knee deep in her studies, produce anything worth while if burdened with their studies? My answer is emphatically and positively "yes!"

We can all snatch a few minutes from the busy day and cash in on our ideas. Suppose a person laid aside one hour, sixty short minutes, to be devoted to literature. On a working scale, a writer should be able to do 1000 words an hour. That would make 7000 words a week or 30,000 words a month, three short stories, a novelette or a serial. Not so bad for one short little hour.

In a year this same system would total up to 365,000 words. Do you realize what steady, consistent plugging amounts to? It means you are producing real stories, learning to handle plots effectively, gaining in speed and accuracy. Your style will become smoother and your work better. So much for daily practice.

But what if you are of the snail variety, producing a mere 500 words a day? Even that would make a total of 15,000 words a month, equivalent to two short stories or serial.

Figure on a system of regularity and perseverence. At the end of one year, the faithful writer will have short stories, serials, articles, and even books placed to his credit, and all in sixty little minutes a day. Doesn't it startle you when you think of it that way? One hour—and success! How many of us waste four and five hours chatting or visiting idly when we could be cashing in in the writing game.

Better think it over; that's my advice. You'll soon realize that even students and busy young mothers have plenty of time to write.

THE SAVING OF NO. 28

By Stetson B. Harman, 390 Ninita Parkway, Pasadena.

The key on the telegraph instrument suddenly grew insistent in its rapid repeated calls, clattering loudly enough to awaken the operator on duty, which was considered quite a feat, for Ned Hinckley had a reputation for sleeping the soundest of any person on the O.W.W. Railroad. He had twice been haled before the superintendent for inattention to his work.

He sat up now and slowly pulled on the head phones. At once his whole being snapped to attention, and as his face paled he snatched pencil and paper and hurriedly jotted down the message. The instrument presently stopped and he was free to read what the message contained.

It ran as follows: "Stop No. 28 above Centralia. Bridge washed out at Grand Junction."

Ned gasped with amazement, then checked himself and glanced at his watch. It was exactly 6:35 p.m., and No. 28 was due at Centralia at 7:40. No time to lose! He ran to the window and gazed two miles up the road to Centralia. His signal tower was the only one between there and Greenborough and No. 28 had already passed that place, and was hurtling along the track at fifty miles an hour toward probable destruction.

Ned gritted his teeth and turned from the window, determined to stop the train or die in the attempt. He pulled on his heavy overcoat and cap, took a lantern, three flares and a bag of torpedoes and set out for a spot one mile above Centralia. As there was no telegraph office at Centralia he could not let them know of the impending disaster, so he had to walk to the designated spot for signaling the train. It was a walk

The POET'S CORNER

FOG

By Bernice Gibbs, 15 years of age, 5206 South St. Andrew's Place, Los Angeles.

A tiny toy town
Lay nestled in a tufted valley,
Asleep for the night.
A greyish-blue mantel
Of gossamer texture
Was flung from afar
Through the velvety darkness.
The tiny toy town
Lay, as a little child,
Tucked in its trundle-bed,
The tufted valley . .
Tucked in by a filmy coverlet,
A bluish-gray quilt,
Fog.
Night was the vigilant mother.

MEMORIES

By Fred Ross, 710 North Lafayette Place, Los Angeles.

As the days of youths are rolling,
O'er their joyous way,
A silent call seems tolling.
From a long forgotten day.
It seems to make the heart beat
With a happy throb and long,
And it tells of a day when we shall meet,
Singing that old sweet song.
Memories of lands and busy marts,
Come crowding back to me,
But the one that always fills our hearts
Is that of the T. J. C.
Those happy times we all do know,
And as the years pass by,
We'll think of these when lights are low,
With many a heart-felt sigh.

At the recent corner-stone laying for the Y.W.C.A. Building in Washington, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, wife of the President, applied all the mortar instead of the usual dab at such ceremonies.

Dr. Richard Strauss, the composer, recently conducted the orchestra in a moving-picture theater in London during the showing on the screen of "The Rosenkavalier."

Maryland club women have adopted a State song which was written by a member of the Association of Blind Women of Maryland.

PRIZES OFFERED FOR TRUE STORIES

ADELINE VAN PAYNE WINS CASH AWARD FOR TALE OF AN AMUSING OCCURRENCE

Of course, you have read about our big, true-experiences contest, our contest for anecdotes of sad and serious occurences. The best part of it is, there's nothing difficult about it. Just think back to the time when you laughed in a street car or giggled in church until your ears turned red. Or perhaps you can recall the most whimically thagic moment in your life. If so, set it down in black and white, so that our thousands of readers may have a glimpse behind the scenes.

Remember we are giving attractive prizes for the best articles submitted. Literary style will not count one jot; we'll even waive spelling and even punctuation, but we do want an interesting story of that something that happened to you, personally, either moving you to terror, tears or laughter.

Two dollars and fifty cents will be awarded as first prize for such stories, with lesser prizes for less interesting articles.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I think it is so nice to have this new contest, as it his such a grown-up air, sort of like the big magazines. That's just the trouble with other junior clubs, they're so babyish anyone past 12 soon loses interest.

Well, I'm going to tell you the funniest incident in my short and uneventful life. You see, I was educated abroad, in England, at one of those stiff, stylish finishing schools, and the calamity which occurred took place in a prosy little church, which made it all the funnier. It was a chapel especially erected for Miss Babcock's girls, and we were always supposed to be sober as tombstones.

Oh! how I wish my little story would win a prize. I'm thrilled to death with your "Junior." There isn't another magazine east or west that can compare with it.

Admiringly and lovingly yours,

[Signed] ADELINE VAN PAYNE.

Note: Please send us your address at once, dear Adeline, as your clever little tale won first prize. Be sure and get in touch with me, as I enjoyed your humorous adventure ever so much.

Devotedly yours,

ger and placed her in the middle of the sunbonnet. Then he placed beside her the six purple berries—each one being about as big as the tiny Trot's head—and all preparations being now made the old sailor ate his lavender berry and became very small—wooden leg and all!

Cap'n Bill stumbled sadly in trying to climb over the edge of the sunbonnet, and pitched in beside Trot headfirst, which caused the unhappy Pessim to laugh with glee. Then the King of the Island picked up the sunbonnet—so rudely that he shook its occupants like peas in a pod—and tied it by means of its strings, securely around the Ork's neck.

"I hope, Trot, you sewed those strings on tight," said Cap'n Bill anxiously.

"Why, we are not very heavy, you know," she replied, "so I think the stitches will hold. But be careful and not crush the berries, Cap'n."

"One is jammed already," he said, looking at them.

"All ready?" asked the Ork.

"Yes!" they cried together, and Pessim came close to the sunbonnet and called out to them: "You'll be smashed or drowned, I'm sure you will! But farewell, and good riddance to you."

The Ork was provoked by this unkind speech so he turned his tail toward the little man and made it revolve so fast that the rush of air tumbled Pessim over backward and he rolled several times upon the ground before he could stop himself and sit up. By that time the Ork was high in the air and speeding swiftly over the ocean.

Cap'n Bill and Trot rode very comfortably in the sunbonnet. The motion was quite steady, for they weighed so little that the Ork flew without effort.

Yet they were both somewhat nervous about their future fate and could not help wishing they were safe on land and their natural size again.

"You'e terrible small, Trot," remarked Cap'n Bill, looking at his companion.

"Same to you, Cap'n," she said with a laugh; "but as long as we have the purple berries we needn't worry about our size."

"In a circus," mused the old man, "we'd be curiosities. But in a sunbonnet—high up in the air —sailin' over a big, unknown ocean—they ain't no word in any booktionary to describe us."

"Why, we're midgets, that's all," said the little girl.

The Ork flew silently for a long time. The slight swaying of the sunbonnet made Cap'n Bill drowsy, and he began to doze. Trot, however, was wide awake, and after enduring the monotonous journey as long as she was able she called out:

"Don't you see land anywhere, Mr. Ork?"

"Not yet," he answered. "This is a big ocean and I've no idea in which direction the nearest land to that island lies; but if I keep flying in a straight line I'm sure to reach some place some time."

Cap'n Bill and Trot take "A Sunbonnet Flight" and eventually alight on a mountain side which they proceed to explore. Don't miss next week's chapter. It's full of thrills. —[Editor.

of four uphill miles and Ned found it hard work to maintain the pace he had set himself to, but he kept at it doggedly, often repeating the old adage, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

He reached his terminal at 7:37 and barely had he lighted his flare when a brilliant headlight shone over the brow of the hill, eating up the darkness as fire devours hay. As the long line of Pullmans came to a stop it was a weary Ned who climbed into the cab of the engine and told the engineer there was a bridge washed out. An hour later the train started, but Ned was fast asleep in the baggage car, sleeping the soundest sleep on the O.W.W. Railroad.

A DOLLIES' SCHOOL

By Edna M. Schrour, age 18 years, 242 South Mentor avenue, Pasadena.

"Oh dear," sighed Mary, and my! what a big sigh it was for a little girl, too. "I wish I didn't have to study so much; I never have any time to play any more at all."

"Now that really is too bad," said a tiny voice, sympathetically, "but maybe I can help you. Won't you let me try?"

"Oh Singing-Heart! I was just wishing you would come. Won't you please stay and help me with my lessons? I really need you just dreadfully."

"Of course I'll stay," answered the minute fairy laughingly, "I have thought of the best new game, Mary. I can hardly wait to tell you about it."

"I don't have much time for games any more, Singing-Heart, since school began," answered Mary, seriously, for a 6-year-old girl.

"Oh, but you'd have time for this one, dearie, because that is the best part of it. You can play this game while you're getting your lessons, and," Singing-Heart beamed, she was so pleased, "it'll help you to do them better, too. You just see."

"I can't wait any longer to hear all about it. Do tell me how to play the new game," begged Mary, hugging the fairy.

"Well," her friend began, "haven't you ever thought, Mary, dear, that your dollies ought to go to school? All well-brought-up dollies do, you know."

"I can't take them to school any more, Singing Heart, the way I used to when I went to kindergarten. Big girls don't take their dollies to school," Mary made herself look as tall as she possibly could, oh! she looked much taller than a 6-year-old usually does.

"But why not have a private school for dollies? You could do that. And you could teach your dollies to read your lessons and make the numbers you make in school and to count, and you could tell them what your teacher tells you. Wouldn't you like to do that?"

"I'd love to. You do think of such nice games, Singing Heart. I'm going to open my school right now. And you wait, all the dollies in the whole neighborhood will be envying mine because they'll know so much."

"Maybe there'll be more than one select school for young dollies in your neighborhood before long, too," replied Singing Heart as she hurried away to make someone else happy.

TRY AGAIN

By Betty Fraser

"Oh, mother, what shall I do! Living out here in the country is so dry. Why, I have joined five different correspondence clubs and not one has been a success. I never have any fun." These gloomy remarks came from 11-year-old Janet, a spoiled country child. She was rather small and had brown eyes, brown hair and a tanned skin.

Now one rainy day she was whining to her patient little mother, who was reading a paper her husband had sent from Los Angeles. It was The Times.

"My dear little girl," mother replied, "I am sure I don't know what you can do. Why don't you go and write a story?"

Janet's face shone, for she loved to write. But her face clouded again as she said, "But if I write it doesn't do me any good; it just tires me." She tried it anyway and when she was gone her o'er-weary mother sighed. Suddenly her face cleared.

"Janet, come here," she cried. Janet hurried in to see mother bending over an interesting looking part of the paper. It was called The Junior Times. They both read it over, laughing at the jokes, saddening when they read the letters of those unlucky members who were asking the advice of a very kind woman, Aunt Dolly, and getting motherly answers.

"Why not join The Times Junior Club?" asked Mrs. Burch.

"Oh, I have tried so many clubs that I feel as if they were no good unless you're there," was the answer.

"Try again, dear."

"Oh, I'm tired of trying, but I s'pose I will." She did. Almost three weeks later Janet's mother heard a joyful cry from her daughter. "I've got it, mother, I've got it!" Janet came tumbling into the house, in one hand a little blue envelope and in the other a copy of The Junior Times. After a few minutes of twisted, excited talk, Mrs. Burch learned that her daughter had won first prize with a story she had sent in to Aunt Dolly.

A more delighted proud girl was not to be found as Janet read her story in The Junior Times. That wasn't all. Aunt Dolly had asked her to be the representative of The Junior Times in her district and she had just got two new subscriptions for the paper.

"Aren't you glad you tried again, dear?" asked Mrs. Burch.

"I certainly am. After this my motto is try again."

QUESTION BOX

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

I feel I must add one more problem to your already heavily burdened shoulders, but hope you will forgive me. It is such a comfort to have some one to turn to when everything goes wrong.

Perhaps if you saw "Stella Dallas," that wonderful picture showing so clearly the tragedy that can shadow a girl's life, making her even ashamed of her own mother, you will understand my unhappy predicament.

Now, please Aunt Dolly dear, do not think I am a snob, the kind that delights in picking people to pieces, but I am heartbroken. For years I have felt a sense of strangeness between us, mother has been, so different from me in so many things. We do not like the same books, friends, or food. Everything she has is loud, and when we go in public people stare at her. Now I am losing the few companions I have had; they call her common, and it is slowly, but surely, breaking my heart. Aunt Dolly dear, how can there be such a wide gap, such a lack of understanding between a mother and daughter. Please help me; I feel so cowardly to even write you.

(Signed) Cynthia.

Cynthia dear, your problem is a real one, the sort that must work itself out rather than be worked out.

But remember that your mother deserves your love and affection. Her outlook on life may be far different from yours, but that does not alter the fact that she is your mother. Try, Cynthia dear, to make her see your viewpoint; suggest little changes in your social activities, even, if necessary, come out and ask her to emulate a higher, better standard. If you do it in a loving, tactful way, I am sure she will not resent it.

Do let me hear from you soon again. Lovingly and devotedly yours,

Aunt Dolly.

FATIMA—THE GIRAFFE

Very few circuses have a Giraffe. They are very expensive and besides it takes a very high railroad car to travel these animals around the country, but nothing is too good for the kiddies who read this paper. So here is Fatima, brought at great expense from the land where Prof. Im Agi Nation lives. He is a wonderful fellow. You will never see him but you may know he is always around when you are running the great Fold-a-Way Colortoy Circus. If he doesn't come when you call him you write me and I'll get after him. Color Fatima a tan color and the spots a light brown. I expect I need not tell you how to color the tubs or the clowns. Don't forget when folding these toys to flatten the folds with your finger nail. Next Sunday: Plume, the Ostrich.

SALEM celebrates its TERCENTENARY

Roger Conant did not get a bit perturbed over the controversy that raged for weeks over the question of whether he or Governor John Endicott settled the Massachusetts city. Mayor George J. Bates of Salem decided that history settled the issue, and so Conant's coming to Salem in 1626 is being observed as the city's birth date, instead of waiting until 1928, which would be 300 years after Endicott arrived. This statue of Conant overlooks Salem Common. —Tilford Photo.

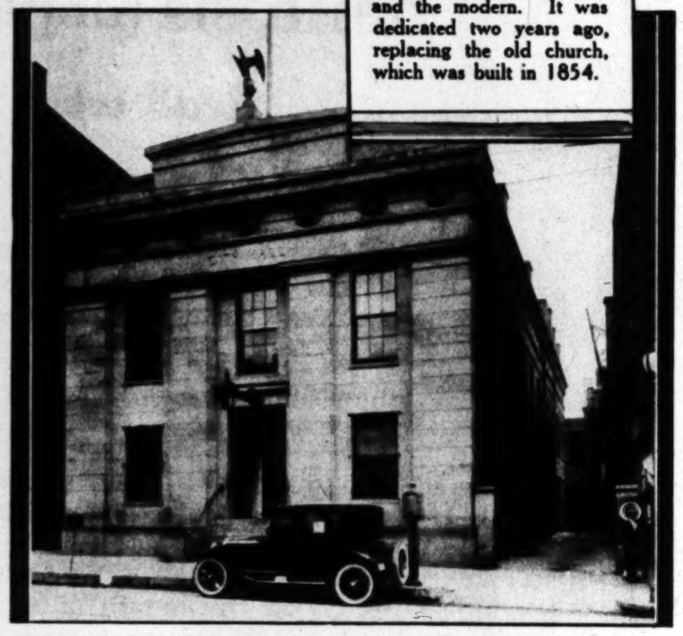
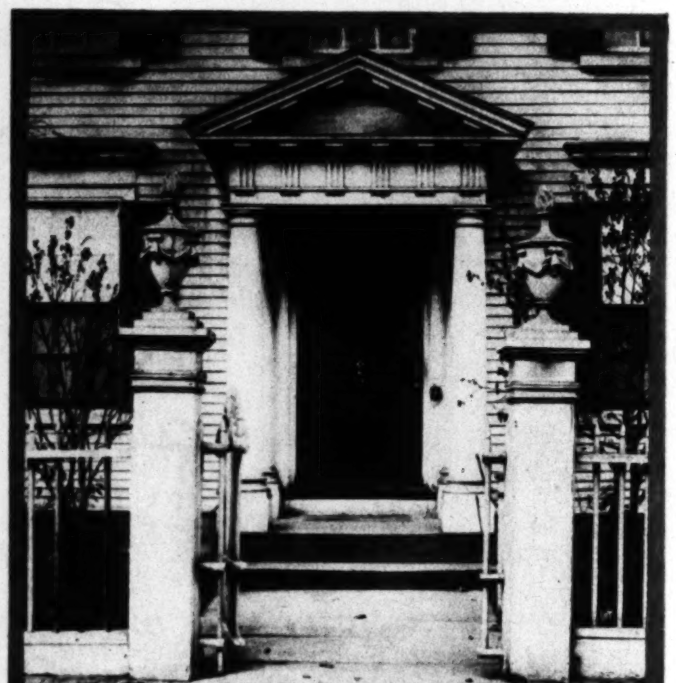
The Tabernacle Church, Salem, is a charming combination of the Colonial and the modern. It was dedicated two years ago, replacing the old church, which was built in 1854.



Salem's City Hall was built in 1838. It contains the original Indian deed, showing the purchase of the community property from the aborigines for approximately $100.



The Peirce-Nichols house, built in 1782, is the finest example now extant of the work of Samuel McIntire, Salem's famous woodcarver and architect.

How many people actually have halitosis (unpleasant breath)?

Read what dentists have to say about this:

EVERY reader of Listerine advertising knows about halitosis (unpleasant breath), that insidious thing that not even your best friends discuss with you.

Yet there are still a few "doubting Thomas" folks who think halitosis is only a state of mind.

Out of simple curiosity we put this question up to a carefully selected list of dentists—1000 of them—and in a letter asked them the following:

> Do you ever use Listerine, in self-defense, in the mouth of a patient troubled with halitosis, unpleasant breath?
> Please answer if you use it this way (1) Frequently, (2) Occasionally, or (3) Never.

Four hundred and forty replied as follows:

83% said "Frequently"
15% said "Occasionally"
Only 2% said "Never."

Now, what human being meets halitosis at closer range, face to face, than the dentist? And who would be a better judge of this condition—and how to combat it—than the dentist?—Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, U. S. A.

SEEN and SCENES

A sheriff out to get his man. Otherwise, Harold Lloyd—caught in the act of playing his own father in "The Mountain Boy."

Hot stuff and an informal pose. Buster Keaton and Marion Mack look quite old-fashioned in this shot from "The General," Keaton's new comedy.

Just an old-fashioned maid. Edna Murphy plays opposite Francis McDonald in "The Silent Panther," the first of a new series of western dramas.

"The minute that seems a year." Circumstances often alter cases—that being the raison d'etre for Douglas MacLean's apparent lack of hospitality. This is a scene from "Ladies First," in which he is supported by Constance Howard and George Pearch.

Old-fashioned romance is always appealing. This beautiful garden view of Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Dunbar is a scene from "The Amateur Gentleman," which was recently completed.

Harry—"The Strong Man." That is the title of Langdon's next comedy for First National. He is disclosed here in his typical pose and manner.

"Ain't it the truth?" . . . . .

Like most human beings, you probably tell white lies about some of the little things of life.

You say you brush your teeth, for instance, three or two times a day—where once would be nearer the truth.

Most of us are lazy in the same way and say the same thing.

In fact, there are still some people who lie about taking a cold bath every morning. Usually they don't and many days they miss the morning bath entirely.

Isn't it true, though, that many of the little duties of life are more irksome than the bigger ones?

Tooth brushing is a good example.

Realizing the truth of this, we set out deliberately to formulate a dentifrice that would furnish the easiest, quickest way to clean teeth. In fact, a tooth paste efficient even in the hands of lazy people—for in tooth brushing, at least, the word, lazy, applies to so many of us.

Listerine Tooth Paste is really very easy to use. It works fast. Just a minimum of brushing and your teeth feel clean—and actually are clean.

You have the job done almost before you know it.

This is on account of the way Listerine Tooth Paste is made. It contains a remarkable new cleansing ingredient—entirely harmless to enamel*—plus the antiseptic essential oils that have made Listerine famous.

How fine your mouth feels after this kind of a brushing! And then, besides, you know your teeth are really clean—and therefore safe from decay —Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis, U. S. A.

P. S.—By the way, Listerine Tooth Paste is only 25 cents for the large tube.

This specially prepared cleansing medium (according to tests based upon the scale of hardness scientists employ in studying mineral substances) is much softer than tooth enamel. Therefore, it cannot scratch or injure the enamel.*

At the same time it is harder than the tartar which accumulates and starts pyorrhea and tooth decay.

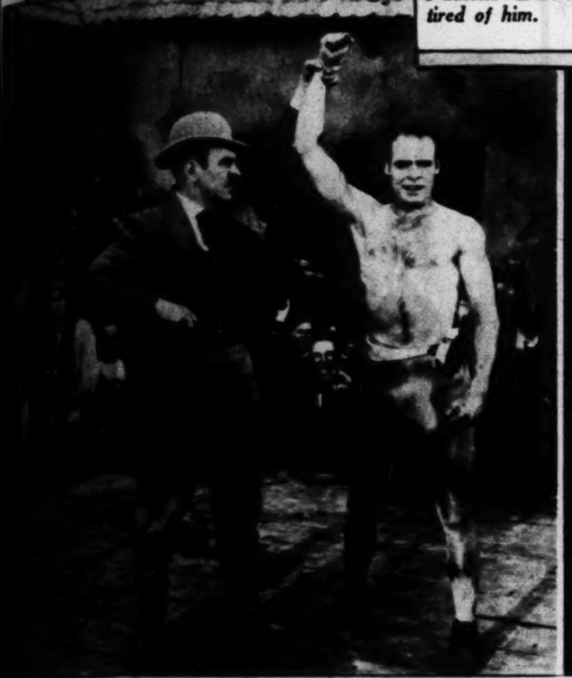
"BLARNEY"

The '70's again—with the prize ring as a setting for one of the most entertaining pictures of the season.

Ralph Graves, with typical James Carabine stupidity, fails to comprehend that his fascinating wife, played by Paulette Duval, has tired of him.



"Champion of Ireland!" Ralph Graves achieves this enviable distinction—and then his grief begins.

True to type, the elusive Paulette, as Marcolina, transfers her affections to the winner, leaving Carabine to his fate after the "championship fight." Malcolm Waite appears as the victorious Blanco Johnson.

"BLARNEY" originally was known as "In Praise of James [illegible]."

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer ver[illegible] of Donn Byrne's story might [illegible] be termed "In Praise of Ralph [illegible]." For the erstwhile Sen[illegible] leading man consistently holds [illegible] interest as the egotistical, [illegible] Irish youth—James Cara[illegible].

[illegible], also, goes to Marcel De [illegible], who deftly directed this ab[illegible] story of a boy's rise and [illegible]. Taking four completely differ[illegible] characters, he has made each [illegible], representative of a cer[illegible] group of humanity.

[illegible] with the quaint—from [illegible] vantage point—period of [illegible] 1870's, "Blarney's" interest is [illegible] by the setting. That [illegible] when dashing ladies wore [illegible] bonnets far back on their [illegible], when their voluminous skirts [illegible] along the floor, when box[illegible] was illegal in the state of New [illegible], when champions of that sport [illegible] the use of gloves. . . .

"Blarney" should have a wide [illegible]. It has thrills, comedy, [illegible] romance to satisfy the mat[illegible] girls—and others—as well as [illegible] character work and [illegible] of satisfying satire. A fine [illegible], that should enjoy extensive [illegible].

[illegible] the character quadrangle [illegible] Graves, of course, is out[illegible].

[illegible] Carabine, in the Graves [illegible], is the personification of [illegible], of that brand so [illegible]conscious, so ingratiating, [illegible] it attracts rather than repels. [illegible], boxing champion of [illegible], believes himself favored by [illegible] gods. Arriving penniless and [illegible] unknown in New York City, [illegible] a moneyed "backer," [illegible] a number of important deci[illegible], marries the beguiling lady of [illegible] heart and . . .

Proves himself of the rare type that does not crumble, even under overwhelmingly adverse circumstances.

Paulette Duval, suave and silken, easily captures the honors among the feminine members of the cast. As Marcolina, darling of the music halls, she is singularly fascinating, managing an effect of smartness. Quite a feat in the costumes of another era.

Renee Adoree, as the faithful little Irish girl, is given no opportunity to display her usual vivacity.

Placidly, she goes right on adoring her pugilistic hero, even when he is so careless as to marry someone else and rush to her, jubilantly, to impart the glad news. Just the nice, pretty miss, who finally is rewarded for her impeccable behavior by winning her somewhat battered idol.

As the hulking Blanco, who both defeats Carabine and steals his wife, Malcolm Waite gives a smooth and intriguingly sinister performance. Though merely personifying the inevitable menace, he contrives to give the role real individuality.

The final scene, where he divests himself of the alluring Marcolina, with whom he has grown excessively bored, is especially well handled. Due credit to both actor and director.

Among the other members of the cast, Bull Montana makes an effective "Poughkeepsie Killer," while Lionel Belmore, as the rotund fight promoter, and Del Anderson, the convivial Sir Valentine, are excellent.

Several of the fight scenes are particularly interesting, by contrast with present-day procedure.

The music hall episodes are entertaining, also, for much the same reason.

Marcel De Sano and Albert Lewin are responsible for the scenario of "Blarney."—B. M.

Renee Adoree makes Peggy much the regulation "girl who was left behind." The customary Adoree fire is entirely absent from this characterization.

BARBECUING here, there & everywher

Since breakfast riding parties are in such vogue nowadays, it remained for Bebe Daniels to give one recently to a host of friends. After the ride the guests barbecue-breakfasted.—Photo by Richee.

Had it not been for her mother, Ena Gregory would have announced her engagement to Al Rogell at Bebe's party.

Stella says that Sylvia Breamer may go back into pictures. She has been seen only once on the screen since her marriage.—Photo by Waxman.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

"IF YOU aren't barbecuing these days, you simply aren't in it," remarked Stella, as she turned her car aside hastily just in time to miss hitting Mary and Jack Ford's machine, as we speeded over to Kathleen Clifford's barbecue party in Clifford Square, Burbank, near the First National Studios.

We found a grove of trees where it was heavenly cool, and where the barbecue party was to be held.

The party was a big one, and we had all gone first to Kathleen's house in Beverly, where we had nice cool glasses of ginger ale and lemonade, and then on to the barbecue.

IN THE sylvan shades, Eddie Carew directed a picture, showing Rosetta Duncan pretending to be trying to sell Lew Cody a lot. Just then Cyril Chadwick, as the typical English tenderfoot, came along, and Rosetta hit him over the head with a sign-board and took his check-book away from him, writing out a check for a sale.

Dinner was served under the trees on long tables, and as the benches were nailed tight to the tables, each man had to lift his lady over into her place. After dinner, we played the game with the egg and spade, in which you are supposed to run without spilling the egg off the spade, and afterward Lew Cody ran a handicap race with Al Rogell, with Lew carrying Kathleen Clifford.

Kathleen, as usual, was the life of the party.

"Or one of the lives," qualified Stella, "because, of course, nobody could be quite The life with a capital T as long as Rosetta Duncan was along."

BREAKFAST riding parties are in great favor these days, too. Bebe Daniels gave a very pleasant one the other day.

The breakfast was a barbecue breakfast and was served over in Griffith Park under some big trees. Afterward, everybody, men and girls both, played baseball and other games, with Buster Collier and Eddie Lowe holding a wrestling match, and Rudy Valentino and Jack White running races.

They were like a bunch of kids, those film stars.

"Oh, look what they're doing now!" exclaimed Stella.

Kathleen Clifford was promoting a hill-rolling match. That means everybody rolls down hill and tries to see which can get to the bottom first. Kathleen won, but was laid up in bed for two days afterward. She had managed to bump along instead of roll, and had landed on the back of her neck.

LILYAN TASHMAN, of course, came with Eddie Lowe, and Pauline Starke and Jack White, who used to be engaged, and who are still on excellent terms if not actually hand-holding ones, were there together, too.

Ena Gregory and Al Rogell, who are supposed to be engaged, and who were indeed on the point of announcing the fact at the party—only Ena's mamma begged her not to for a while—were there and, of course, being in western pictures both naturally were good riders.

Marie Mosquini looked pretty as a picture, and, of course, beat everybody excepting Bebe Daniels with her riding stunts, and there was lovely Diana Kane, Lois Wilson's sister, and Anna Q. Nilssen, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Hawks, the Fords, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borzage.

After the picnic party, everybody went to Bebe Daniels' house for tea and a rest; and while the guests were inside, the horses, tethered in Bebe's grounds back of the house, ate all her nice young bamboo sprouts and corn.

IT IS wonderful, these outdoor parties that are being given nowadays. Doraldina and her handsome husband, Frank Saunders, gave one the other evening at the home of friends, the Moaks, in Coldwater Canyon. Doraldina has a new home of her own, surrounded by a couple of acres of ground, and here the famous dancer keeps herself in condition by actually hoeing in the garden—I've seen her doing it and there was no photographer around, either—but the house isn't quite large enough for the party which Doraldina felt coming on the other day.

"Doraldina is a good picker of houses for parties," said Stella, as we arrived at the beautiful rambling house, built on a little rise of ground against one of the big hills, beneath the shade of a tremendous ancient oak tree. There were seats and swings beneath the big tree, and most of us preferred to remain out there in the warm summer evening.

We met Sylvia Breamer and her husband, Dr. Martin. He is great fun, and when a couple of society flappers passed about their funny little card of rules which had been printed for the party, entreating everybody famous to sign his or her name, Dr. Martin signed one "Harold Lloyd" and the other "Ruth Chatterton."

"Those flappers when they get home will explain, 'Why, I didn't know they were there,' and get a great thrill out of it!" explained the Doctor.

Sylvia is looking awfully pretty and is sweeter than ever. I think she is planning to return to pictures. She has done only one since she was married.

SUPPER was served to the guests wherever they happened to be, whether in the front garden or in the house, and delicious barbecued meat it turned out to be. Russell Simpson had barbecued the meat in the huge oven on his own country place, and the Simpsons' servant had brought it along with them in their car. As they got lost on the way, supper was late.

"We traveled up every canyon in Beverly Hills looking for this hide-away," exclaimed Mrs. Simpson. "We got so hungry that I felt sure we should be compelled to sit down by the wayside and eat the meat ourselves. Only in that case, of course, we shouldn't have dared show up at the party."

DORALDINA danced for us after dinner, though how she got up the energy after preparing for that huge party I don't know. She is one of those marvelous hostesses who seems to be leaving her guests entirely to their own devices, but who nevertheless is here, there, and everywhere, seeing that everybody has a good time.

Doraldina has been keeping in dancing form not only by practicing daily, and by working in her garden, but by walking five miles every morning as well! She deserves to look as pretty and to be in as fine condition as she is.

"And aside from all that," remarked Stella, "Dorie—all her friends call Doraldina 'Dorie'—has the very prettiest arms, hands, legs and feet in the world, I'm sure."

Alan Hale and his wife were there, and Stuart Holmes and his wife, Creighton Hale, and others, including a good many society people.

Creighton Hale's band was present, and entertained us, Creighton proving a very excellent saxophonist, indeed.

"If ever Creighton is working in a picture where the orchestra gives out, he and his gang could certainly oblige," remarked Stella.

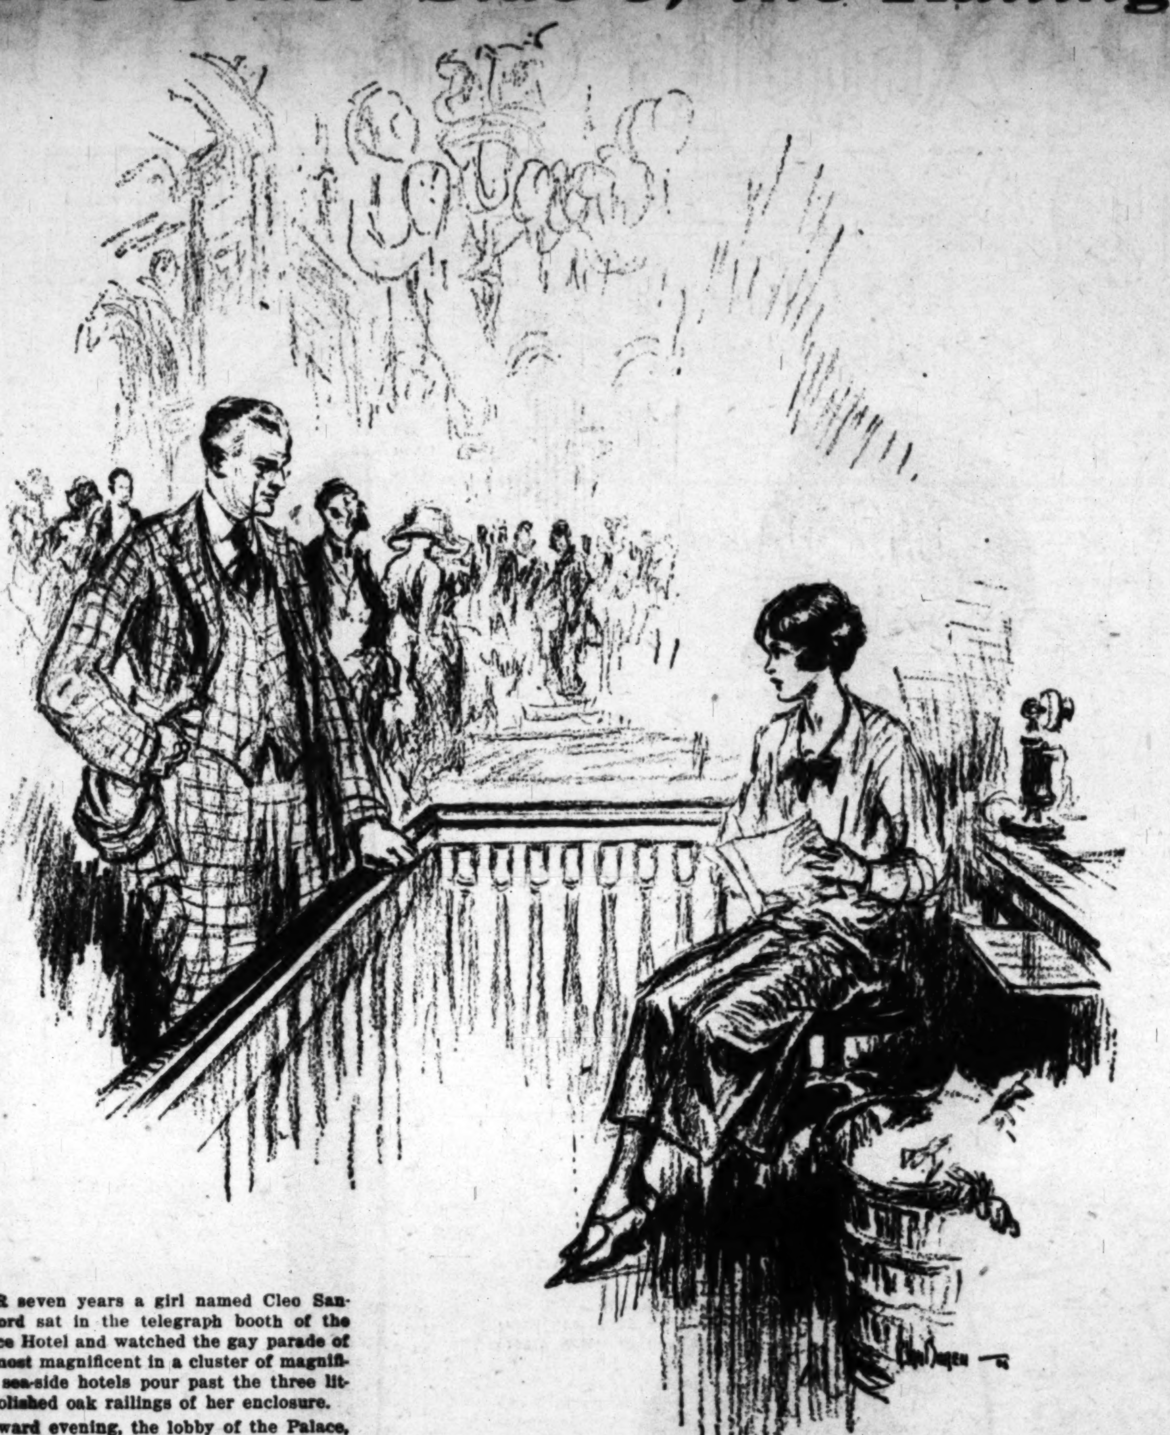
The Other Side of the Railing

By Fannie Hurst



FOR seven years a girl named Cleo Sanford sat in the telegraph booth of the Palace Hotel and watched the gay parade of the most magnificent in a cluster of magnificent sea-side hotels pour past the three little polished oak railings of her enclosure.

Toward evening, the lobby of the Palace, where Cleo had her desk, sprang gorgeously into light when six crystal chandeliers, studding a gold-leaf ceiling, were tweaked on by a page in blue cloth and gilt buttons. The hotel pamphlet announced that it took sixteen hundred incandescent bulbs to light its glittering lobby, and then, when the dining-room fixtures were turned on, too, there flowed into the already light-flooded, gold-studded lobby, the additional light from six hundred extra bulbs.

The Palace-Hotel-by-the-Sea was as splendid as an Arabian Night's Dream. Its suites were fit for kings, and its balconies, grills and ball rooms outdid the storied splendor that was Rome's.

It was a palace set in a tropical garden beside a lovely strip of sea. Tired business magnates and women of fame and fashion, eminent folk from every clime and distinguished foreigners of every color passed through the marble halls of this glittering palace by the sea.

And for seven years Cleo Sanford, who lived with her widowed mother over a drug store down in the village that derived its name from the proprietor of the hotel, watched the magnificence parade past her. Watched it in her prim little shirt-waists and prim little smooth-haired coiffure, from her prim little high-backed office chair. The parade of magnificence. Women who walked down the curve of marble stairway under the glitter of the crystal chandeliers, like fabled peacocks against a terrace of gold. Men in white shirt fronts, in the glitter of dangling monocle and, by no means seldom, in the red ribbon crossbar of distinction.

Music poured into that scene from an orchestra hidden behind a jungle of hot-house flowers. Water dropped into a crystal fountain from a waterfall made out of green tile for background. Men and women, warm, soft, fragrant with good living, danced in rhythm across the shining tile floors of that lobby. A lobby heavy with the scent of flowers and women's scented shoulders and the warm, sweet luxury of the tropics.

It was indeed a scene, seven nights in the week, from the Arabian Nights which Cleo, from her little enclosure, looked out upon. What telegrams went from that office! What messages of romance and big business and gayety were ticked off by her as dictated by the guests. Orders for American beauty roses by the hamper. A lovely girl's birthday message to her distant lover. An order to sell Wall Street stocks that mounted into hundreds of thousands. An impatient lover wiring to his bride. A husband's order to his jeweler for an emerald brooch. More flowers. More lovers. Youth. Warmth. Beauty. Holiday spirit.

Sometimes, when Cleo crept home after her office hours, her heart lay in her breast like a wounded bird.

It was cheerless in the little flat of five incandescent bulbs in all. And for five years Cleo's mother had been a paralytic who could neither speak nor raise her hand and who lay unconscious days at a time while a hired neighbor woman tended her.

It was difficult to throw off the memory of the glitter and the perfume and the beauty of the lobby, sitting there after office hours in the little flat over the drug store that was as bleary as an old woman's eye.

It was difficult not to cry. Salty, bitter; disappointed, yearning tears. Often, even at her desk, for hours at a time Cleo sat aching. Yearning for her part in the warmth and the glitter and the holiday gayety. The women who came down six times a day in lovely and different costumes. The smart youths who started the day in flannels and wound up in the preciseness of evening dress. Portly men who golfed in the morning, went surf bathing in the afternoon and danced in the evening with all the resilience of youth. Scented women who wrote out extravagant messages to dear ones at home. The young men who showed her locks of hair that they carried tucked in the backs of their wrist watches. Loiterers about the telegraph desk who let fall the lovely gossip of their set.

No wonder that for seven years Cleo sat yearning there. Yearning with an ache that was sometimes more than she could bear.

The seventh winter, March Fairbanks, Park avenue and Wall street, came to Tropical Grove. The first day there, fifty, well-preserved, outfitted in home-spun knickers and with his spectacles dangling by a broad black ribbon, Fairbanks wired an order to his broker to sell short on some stocks that amounted to about a half million dollars.

When Cleo wrote down that telegram to his dictation she raised her dark eyes to meet his. Of amazement probably, even in that land of too much plenty.

Three weeks later, the incredible happened. Two days before Cleo's mother died in her sleep in her dingy cot over the drug store, Cleo Sanford and March Fairbanks were married in a local church known as the Third Unitarian.

Another of those fairy-tale romances that happen with sufficient frequency to keep the patine on life.

The Fairbankses divided their time between New York, the capitals of Europe and Tropical Grove.

It did not take Cleo long to acquire all of the surface characteristics she had observed for seven years from the inside of the telegraph railing.

Cleo descended the marble staircase underneath the downpour of lights from the crystal chandelier with all the beauty, grace and manner-born of the best of them.

March Fairbanks was proud of her. They golfed mornings, surf bathed afternoons and danced evenings.

Life from the other side of the telegraph railing glittered just as Cleo had imagined it must.

Except—well, except—it wasn't quite what she had thought it would be. Not that Cleo was ungrateful! Life had catapulted her into lovely highways. But somehow—somehow—the day after day of the glittering parade—were they so much different in their monotony from the drab days behind the rail? The monotony of glitter versus the monotony of the gray.

Of course the glitter was preferable—except—oh, but it was hard to analyze—except—somehow—it was not what she had thought it would be out there on the other side of the rail.

There was a new girl at the telegraph desk. She had smooth hair and wore smooth shirtwaists. She had a young face, except that her lips were not young. They were already pulled and a little bitter, from yearning, all through the days of the brilliant parades, for what was on the other side of the railing.

CARE OF THE BODY

Cumming, United States health officer, although advocating antitoxin, admits that only improved sanitation will finally eradicate diphtheria, an admission which practically puts antitoxin out of court, for if only sanitation can gain the final conquest, who can say that it hasn't been the only real factor all along?

As far as real scientific proof for the value of antitoxin is concerned, we have no more than this, that where a child with sore throat would have become well anyway, it may get well in spite of a doctor and an injection of antitoxin.

Care of the Child

Breathing

Were we to observe ten children, we would find the breathing habits of no two of them alike. This difference would be decidedly pronounced if we used the stethescope to aid our researches.

Were we to draw the typical nurse's chart these individual differences would be most pronounced.

Nasal Breathing

It is not so much the variation in children's breathing as it is the abnormalities in breathing that concern us.

In the first place, breathing should be completely nasal. Nature has produced thousands of tiny filters throughout the nasal passages which purify, warm and filter the air.

Mouth breathing is abnormal and is generally caused by wrong feeding, too much feeding or bad habits.

Snoring

Snoring is a sign of an extremely catarrhal state of the nasal and mouth structures, together with enlarged tonsils and adenoids.

The breathing of a child should be even, rhythmic, without labor, without undue noise and through the nose. It need not be at the same rate with any two children. It will depend largely upon the heart as well as upon the body metabolism process. .

Nasal Obstructions

However, in those cases of abnormal breathing you should trace the responsible causes.

In most children it is due to the formation of enlarged tonsils and adenoids obstructing the nasal passages and consequently retarding easiness of breathing.

Then our objective is to reduce the tonsils by sensible diet.

In other cases it is due to the engorged and inflamed state of the nasal mucous membrane such as is present in catarrh, colds, asthma, bronchitis and similar respiratory diseases.

Then we should strive toward overcoming the parent cause.

Mouth Breathing

Again, mouth breathing may be due to poor posture or to sleeping habits.

Children should not sleep with a pillow. When the head and neck are curved, there is considerable retardation of the normal blood drainage and supply to the structures of the nose, mouth and face.

A child who is accustomed to sleep on his back will breathe more poorly than one accustomed to sleep on his abdomen or side.

Sleeping on the back tends to relax the muscles supporting the lower jaw. Snoring is always much more likely in such a position than it is otherwise.

The Spinal Column

Sometimes defective breathing is due to poor posture or nerve pressure on the spinal cord.

Mothers should constantly be on the lookout to see that the spinal column is straight and that the chest be normally used.

Habits of slouching, slumping or other careless posture should be curbed in their inception.

Gas Pressure

Much of the time poor breathing is due to an overloaded digestive system. When the gas presses against the diaphragm it is difficult for this muscle to raise and lower itself which is its action during breathing.

Children suffer from same "shortness of breath" as do adults when they over-eat. Under such conditions it would be better to feed the child six or seven times per day, sharply reducing the quantity for each feeding and by this means preventing any undue quantity of food entering the stomach at one time.

Wrong habits of breathing, if corrected early in life, will do much toward preventing a great chain of evils and a great deal of ill health in the later periods of life.

Dearest Dad,

Marian and I finally reached this lovely spot last night. Both feeling fine! We think this is going to be the happiest vacation we've ever had—especially since those Princess Pats have put Marian's feet in such perfect trim. Please tell Elsie when you see her that Marian's feet both look and feel fine. Elsie will be glad to know because it was she who told us about these wonderful Walk-Over Shoes, when she found how troublesome Marian's feet had been.

In fact Elsie took Marian down for a fitting almost by force, for neither of us dreamed that shoes scientifically designed to protect and correct the feet could be styled to look well with Fifth Avenue clothes—and you know how Marian loves pretty footwear!

Well, even your fastidious Marian admits for once than sensible things can be beautiful and smart! You should see the chic blonde Princess Pats she wears with her Kasha and pongee frocks and the white-and black ones she has to go with the rest of her wardrobe; they really are stunning! I'm almost tempted to order me some.

Write when you can, daddy dear. Love from both your devoted daughters.

The Dream of Paul Whitsett Comes True

W. P. Whitsett, founder of Van Nuys, banker, agriculturist and member of the Public Service Commission of Los Angeles, became one day inspired with the great vision of making the Mt. Whitney-Owens River section of California a playground for the people that would make Switzerland pale into insignificance.

Being pre-eminently a man of action, he at once put his dream into force. He induced the State to build a good road into that country over which it is now reached in a day's drive from Los Angeles. He caused literature to be sent out describing the wonders of the mountains, the forests, the rivers and the lakes of Inyo.

The result is that the Inyo country is this summer jammed with people—happy people who never before knew the marvels of their own California. And the heretofore-dissatisfied dwellers of the Owens River country have been visited by an unexpected, tremendous prosperity.

It was a splendid dream, and it has come true. And there should be a monument some day, somewhere among the mountain peaks, to Paul Whitsett.

Red Lights for Elevators That Go Down

We were away up on the tenth, or maybe it was the eleventh, story of a skyscraper in the roaring town. And there was a man of the synagogue with us. A man of the synagogue who is also a member of the Congregation of the Faithful, because he says his prayers every night and every morning.

And we felt safer in the roaring town having with us a man who says his prayers. Men who say their prayers have protection that other men do not have. For, by saying their prayers they talk with God. And God keeps under the shelter of His wing those who talk with him as the old prophets talked with Him at the doorways of their tents.

And, by ginger, if anybody should ask you, you can say that if a man needs protection anywhere it is in the roaring town. It is a place where everything conspires against life and limb. Every danged kind of contraption imaginable is there to take a whirl at you. And the police can't always have an eye on you.

So, we felt at least vicariously protected since we had with us this man of the synagogue who, as a member of the Congregation of the Faithful, says his prayers every night and every morning.

But, what we started out to tell you about is the red lights on the elevators.

For the benefit of those who live in quiet country places under far-flung rafters of the synagogue, we should state that in big buildings in cities where they must use elevators to carry the people from one floor to another, they have both white and red lights in operation on each floor.

The white lights mean that the elevator is going up. And the red lights are the signals to tell that the elevators are going down.

On the globe of the white light appears the word "up," and on the globe of the red light the word "down."

Well, as the man of the synagogue and ourself were waiting to leave the building, suddenly a red light marked "down" flashed, a door opened, and there was the elevator stopping to take us to the street.

By gollies, we said to the man of the synagogue when we were out on the street, by gollies, we said, it is wonderful the way they have things going in the roaring town. These fellows that run the big buildings are smart as the dickens, we said. And, did you notice that trick of the red light? we asked the man of the synagogue.

Yes, he replied, I did notice it. And it put me to thinking, he said.

I was thinking, he said, that maybe it is something like that when men die and go to the jasper gates and tackle St. Peter about getting in. St. Peter will ask us about ourselves, and whether we said our prayers, and were good to the poor, honest with our neighbors and kind to them, and everything like that. And he will tell Gabriel to look over the books and see whether the account stands against us or for us.

And, if the account is against us, St. Peter will press a button, a red light marked "down" will flash, an elevator will come whizzing along, and the next thing we will know we will be in Hades where the wind blows out of fiery furnaces and the lakes are of sizzling, molten lead.

Gee whiz, we said to the man of the synagogue, you give us a cold shiver, we said. Although the day was hot in the roaring town, too. But, we felt chilled to the bone by what the man of the synagogue had said to us about St. Peter pressing the button, and the red lights, and all that.

Well, said the man of the synagogue as he lifted a warning finger, there is only one way to be sure. And that way is to say your prayers every night and every morning, be good to the poor, and love your neighbor as yourself.

And, said he, if you will do just that and maybe nothing more, you need have no fear that St. Peter will spring the red light on you.

He was a town man, which he still is, more is the pity. And he was doing us the honor to make us a call at our little high house in the hills.

There Are So Many Kinds of Bugs

And he was a pleasant man that anyone would be glad to see. The only thing wrong about him was that he had been born and brought up in a city. That's all he knew—the city. And there are lots of things to know besides what men know in towns. The country places have great and wondrous stories to tell, also.

This fact came to light in a very simple and natural way while the town man was visiting with us in our little high house in the hills.

And the way it came about was that some sort of small-winged creature flew up to the town man and was taking a notion to light on his nose, which immediately made the town man very nervous. He made wild slams at the insect. He seemed to be afraid that it would be the death of him. And he didn't seem at all pleased when we laughed at his fears.

I never knew there were so many of these darned bugs, he said. I don't see how you can live among them, he said. He declared that they would make life miserable for him.

So, what did we do but call his attention to a couple of thousand more of them, pointing out how beautiful so many of them are. And how harmless they are. We took him down the trail and introduced him to our red beetle—the one we call "The Cardinal." And at last we managed to get him into a frame of mind in which he became quite interested and only half scared any longer.

The Golden Path

Out on the sea, I long to be, when the sun is sinking low,
Out in the tide, the running tide, with a heart that's never slow
To follow the path of the westering sun when the wind is high and gay;
To follow the path, the golden path, 'till night drives out the day.

A rippling, dazzling pathway leads straight to the western sky,
Where low it bends to touch the end of the ocean stretching high.
And the wind is sharp and the wind is clear as it calls us, fellow rover,
And the gulls cry, and our hearts sigh—"we must off 'ere the day is over."

Some men may long for the mountain and some may want the town,
But give me the shining ocean before the sun goes down.
When the snowy clouds are flying, and the wind is wild and free,
When the waves leap high and foamy, and send their call to me.

MARGARET MORGAN.

We told him, to his astonishment, that there are men in the world who know all these myriad bugs and insects by name. They have them all tagged and catalogued. And that there are more than nine thousand different kinds of beetles alone, not to speak of the hundreds of thousands of winged and wingless creatures that are here and elsewhere on the earth.

And do you mean to say that they have all been named and located? asked the town man. And who are these crazy men who have wasted their time doing it?

And it was then that we felt compelled to tell our visitor that he might as well hold in contempt the man who worked out the multiplication-tables, who invented logarithms, book-keeping, weighing scales, telescopes and loose-leaf ledgers. And the various card index systems, and adding machines.

The most wonderful things in the world are not the things that man has made, but the things that God has made, we said. We told him that the insect which had tried to light on his nose is by far a more wonderful creation than a clock or a gas engine. And that if he would take the trouble to learn half that is known about ants and bees, alone, he would be amazed at how ignorant he had been his whole life long.

And danged if the man didn't say that we had aroused his curiosity and that he was resolved to dig into these matters.

We were very happy to hear him say so. Because it is always a happiness to set the feet of a fellow-man on sane and righteous pathways.

A Ray of Hope for Unhappy Russia

We have always been interested in Russia for the simple reason that it has always been an interesting nation. It is a country of great traditions. Its people have done wonders in the realms of art and science. Music and literature both owe a vast debt to Russia.

No wonder, then, that all right-thinking people have grieved over the sad state into which Russia has fallen during the past few years.

Out of that vast land mankind expected great things to come. But these high hopes have been pitilessly broken. When the Czar and his family had been murdered and the revolution completed, Muscovy set out upon a pathway of ruin that has seldom been paralleled in the tragic history of time.

The new rulers of Russia began by a ruthless effort to annihilate religion. They hanged Christ in effigy and jeered Him. And the next step undertaken was to obliterate from the face of the earth its oldest institution—the family.

The Communists went on record with the declaration that "No revolution will be possible so long as the family and the spirit of the family exist. This low-bred institution of the church must be destroyed." And they went on record further as saying that "For the success of the revolution we need the woman. But first she must break away from the home; she must root out that egotistic instinct called mother love. So long as woman cherishes her children, she is no better than a she-dog."

We can't escape the thought that if this doctrine were to be put into effect in America almost the entire population of the country would be wiped out.

It was a dark picture to contemplate, but there is already a ray of hope appearing through the gloom. The people of Russia are, after all, a deeply religious people; and the reaction against the brutal and horrible and unspeakably dirty mind of Bolshevism is beginning to appear.

Not long ago when the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet met to enact a law that divorce would be granted on the mere application of either of the parties to the marriage, and without stating any grounds whatever, the committee was astonished to find the women of Russia fiercely attacking the proposal. Their feeling was eloquently voiced by a peasant woman who declared; "Your comrades may assure you that real love is impossible without your freedom (free love,) but remember that an abandoned mother with her child in her arms is capable of anything."

Well, to make a long story short, the wild atheists of the soviet are backing down on the free love and the "she-dog" program. And the Russian Church is slowly but surely regaining the ground it has lost.

Moreover, the soviet is letting up on the bourgeoisis stuff and is flirting with the hated capitalistic class.

In a word, the wild dream of human debauchery which has made a charnel house of Russia is coming to an end. A once great nation that fell upon days more evil, perhaps, than any other nation has ever known is awaking from its awful depths of despair and is rising once more to seek the light of sanity and happiness.

Antitoxin

By Robert R. Logan

Health boards are constantly sending out notices, which in any other business than medicine would be called advertisements, to the effect that diphtheria is dangerous, that it can be cured or prevented by an injection into the blood of a preparation called antitoxin, which costs from thirty cents to five dollars per dose, according to your doctor, that this preparation is harmless and that you should at once go to a doctor and have him inject it into the blood of your children.

What Antitoxin Is

Antitoxin is the clear blood fluid (serum) of a horse or other animal which has been inoculated with morbid material taken from a person suffering from diphtheria. The animal is not killed when bled, but is used again and again, sometimes for years.

Theory Of Antitoxin

The use of antitoxin depends upon at least four theories—First, that all diseases are caused by specific micro-organisms called germs; second, that the blood of a man or animal suffering from a disease manufactures invisible particles called "antibodies" which destroy or neutralize the germs of the disease; third, that one attack, even a mild one, of a disease renders a person immune to that disease; fourth, that the symptoms produced by the inoculation of an animal are in reality a genuine case of the disease in question.

The Germ Theory

As to the first, the germ theory, some investigators like Bechamp, Bantock, Frazer, Tilden and others have said that the exact contrary is the truth, that germs do not cause disease any more than soil bacteria cause sewage, but that they come where disease exists and by eating up the dead cells of our bodies perform a useful and necessary function. The majority of well people harbor diphtheria or other germs in their mouths or intestines without developing any disease symptoms, and in many cases the supposedly specific germs of a disease have not been found in persons showing all the clinical symptoms of that disease. Furthermore, in contradiction of the original germ theory that we get diseases by eating, drinking or breathing these micro-organisms, it is now asserted that these organiams are harmless unless injected under the skin. The criminal, Baring, was unable to poison his wife by feeding her on diphtheria and other supposedly deadly germs.

Antibodies

As to the second theory, inasmuch as the "antibodies" have never been seen it is at least as logical to deny their existence as to affirm it.

Disease

As to the third theory, that one attack of a disease prevents another, it need only be pointed out that people have been known to have smallpox two and three times and mumps and measles and other contagious diseases as many as six or eight times, and it is now admitted by many physicians that severe outbreaks of smallpox generally begin with a vaccinated person.

Deductions

The fourth theory is of little use if the other three are unsound, but even asuming them to be true there is no certainty that the diseases produced in animals by inoculations with diseased mater are the same diseases as those of men. It is generally admitted that mouse cancer and human cancer are totally different things.

Far from being harmless, antitoxin has been officially recognized as the cause of many deaths, and in 1919, one of the largest manufacturers of antitoxin was forced to pay thousands of dollars in damages to the parents or guardians of children killed by it in Dallas, Texas. Forty-five children were made ill in Concord and Bridgewater, Massachusetts, by the Schick test, which these Boards of Health recommend, and a careful study of vital statistics make it seem reasonably certain that with the general improvement in sanitation the diphtheria death rate would have been still further lowered since 1895, if antitoxin had not been adopted as a remedy. The impartial statistics for Great Britain show that diseases for which there was no antitoxin have decreased more than diphtheria in the last twenty-five years, and it is admitted in this country that for several years the case rate and death rate have remained about the same. IL CONTE ~ ~ By JOSEPH CONRAD

THE first time we got into conversation was in the National Museum in Naples in the rooms on the ground floor containing the famous collection of bronzes from Herculaneum and Pompeii; that marvelous legacy of antique art whose delicate perfection has been preserved to us by the catastrophic fury of a volcano.

He addressed me first. It was over the celebrated Resting Hermes, whom we had been admiring side by side. He said the right thing about that wholly admirable piece. Nothing profound.

We had known each other by sight for some few days past. Staying in the same hotel—good but not extravagantly up to date—I had noticed him in the vestibule going in and out. I judged he was an old and valued client. The bow the hotelkeeper treated him to was cordial in its deference, and he acknowledged it with familiar courtesy. For the servants he was Il Conte. Perhaps he was the only Count staying in the hotel, or perhaps he had the distinction of being the Count, par excellence, conferred upon him because of his tried fidelity to the house.

Having conversed at the Museo (and by the by, he had expressed his dislike of the busts and statues of Roman Emperors in the gallery of marbles: these faces were too inglorious, too pronounced for him.) Having conversed already in the morning. I did not think I was intruding when in the evening, finding the dining-room very full, I proposed to share his little table. To judge by the quiet urbanity of his manner he did not think so either. His smile was very sympathetic.

He dined in an evening waistcoat and a "smoking" (he called it so) with a black tie. All this of very good cut, not new—just as these things should be. He was, morning or evening, very correct in his dress. I have no doubt his whole existence had been so—I mean correct, well ordered, and conventional, free of all startling events. His white hair brushed upward off a lofty forehead gave him the air of an idealist, of an imaginative man. His white mustache, heavy but carefully trimmed and arranged was not unpleasantly tinted a golden yellow in the middle. The faint scent of some very good perfume and of good cigars (that last odor quite remarkable to come upon in Italy) reached me across the table. It was in his eyes that his age showed most. They were a little watery, with creased eye-lids. He must have been sixty or thereabouts. And he was communicative. I would not go so far as to call it garrulous—but distinctively communicative.

He had tried various climates, of abbazia, of the Riviera, of other places, too, he told me, but the only one which suited him was the climate of the Gulf of Naples. The ancient Romans, he pointed out to me, who were men expert in the art of living, knew very well what they were doing when they built their villas on these shores, in Blaiae, in Vico, in Capri. They came down to this seaside to get health, bringing with them their mimes and flute players to amuse their leisure. He thought it extremely probable that the Romans of the higher classes were extremely subject to painful rheumatic affection.

This was the only somewhat original opinion I heard him express. It was based on no special erudition. He knew no more of the Romans than an average informed man of the world is expected to know. He argued from personal experience. He had suffered himself from a painful and dangerous rheumatic affection till he found relief in this particular spot of Southern Europe.

This was three years ago, and ever since he had taken up his quarters on the shores of the gulf, either in one of the hotels in Sorrento or hiring a small villa in Capri. He had a piano, a few books, picked up transient acquaintances of a day, week, or month in the stream of travelers from all Europe.

He was a widower; but in the months of July and August he ventured to cross the Alps for six weeks on a visit to his married daughter. He told me her name. It was that of a very aristocratic family. She had a castle—in Bohemia I think. This is as near as I ever came to ascertaining his nationality. His own name, strangely enough, he never mentioned. Perhaps he thought I had seen it on the published list. Truth to say, I never looked. At any rate he was a good European—he spoke four languages to my certain knowledge—and a man of fortune. Not of great fortune evidently, and appropriately. I imagine that to be extremely rich would have appeared to him improper, outre—too blatant altogether. And obviously, too, the fortune was not of his making. The making of a fortune cannot be achieved without some roughness. It's a matter of temperament. His nature was too kindly for any sort of strife.

In the course of conversation he mentioned his estate. It came out quite by the way, in reference to that painful and alarming rheumatic affection. One year, staying incautiously beyond the Alps as late as the middle of September, he had been laid up for three months in that lovely country house with no one but his valet and the caretaking couple to attend to him. Because, as he expressed it, he "had no establishment there." He had gone for only a couple of days to confer with his agent, or manager. He promised himself never to be so imprudent in the future. The first weeks of September would find him on the shores of his beloved gulf.

It is only in traveling that one comes upon such lonely men, whose only business is to wait for the unavoidable. Deaths and marriages have made a solitude 'round them. and one really cannot blame their endeavors to make the waiting as easy as possible. As he remarked to me: "At my age freedom from physical pain is a very important thing." We spend three evenings together, and then I had to leave Naples in a hurry to see a friend who had fallen gravely ill in Tatormina. Having nothing to do, the Count came to see me off at the station. I was somewhat upset, and his idleness was always ready to take a kindly form. He was by no means an indolent man.

He went along the train peering into the carriages for a good seat for me, and then remained talking to me cheerily from below. He declared he would miss me that evening very much. He announced his intention of going after dinner to listen to the band in the public garden of the Villa Nazionale. He would amuse himself by hearing excellent music and looking at the best society. There would be a lot of people as usual.

Poor fellow! I seem to see him yet, his raised face with a friendly smile under the thick mustaches, and his kind, fatigued eyes. As the train pulled out he addressed me in two languages: first in French, "Bon Voyage," then in his very good, somewhat emphatic English, encouragingly, because he could see my concern: "All will—be well—yet!"

My friend's illness having taken a decidedly favorable turn, I returned to Naples on the tenth day. I cannot say I had given much thought to the Count during my absence, but upon entering the dining room I looked for him in his habitual place. I had an idea he might have gone back to Sorrento to his piano and his books and his fishing. He was great friends with all the boatmen, and fished a good deal with lines from a boat. But he was still there. I made out his white head in the crowd of heads, and even from a distance noticed something unusual in his attitude. Instead of sitting erect, gazing all 'round with serene urbanity, he seemed to droop over his plate. I stood opposite him for some time before he looked up, a little wildly, if such a strong word can be used in connection with his correct appearance.

"Ah, my dear sir! Is it you?" he greeted me. "I hope all is well."

He was very nice about my friend. Indeed he was always nice, with the niceness of people whose hearts are genuinely humane. But this time it cost him an effort. His attempts at general conversation broke down into dullness. It occurred to me that he might have been indisposed. But before I could frame the inquiry he muttered:

"You find me here very sad."

"I am sorry for that," I said. "You haven't had news, I hope?"

It was very kind of me to take an interest. No. It was not that. No bad news, thank God. And he became very still, as if holding his breath. Then, leaning forward a little, and in an odd tone of awed embarrassment, he took me into his confidence.

"The truth is that I have had a very—a very—how shall I say?—abominable adventure happen to me.

"It is very serious, very serious," he went on, nervously. "I will tell you after dinner, if you will allow me?"

He expressed my perfect acquiescence by a little bow, nothing more. I wished him to understand that I was not likely to hold him to that offer, if he thought better of it.

In the smoking-room he did not hang back at all. Directly we had taken our usual seats he leaned sideways over the arm of his chair and looked straight into my eyes earnestly.

"You remember," he began, "that day you went away? I told you then I would go to the Villa Nazionale to hear some music in the evening?"

I remembered. His handsome old face, so fresh for his age, unmarked by any trying experience, appeared to me for an instant. It was like the passing of a shadow. Returning his steadfast gaze, I took a sip of my black coffee. He was very systematically minute in his narrative, simply in order not to let his excitement get the better of him.

After leaving the railway station he had an ice and read the paper in a cafe. Then he went back to the hotel, dressed for dinner, and dined with a good appetite. After dinner he lingered in the hall (there were chairs and tables there) smoking his cigar; talked to the little daughter of the Primo Tenore of La Scala theater, and exchanged a few words with that "amiable lady," the wife of the Primo Tenore. There was no performance that evening and there people were going to the Villa also. They went out of the hotel. Very well.

But at the moment of following their example—it was half past nine already—he remembered he had a rather large sum of money in his pocketbook. He entered, therefore, the office and deposited the greater part of it with the bookkeeper of the hotel. This done he took a caravella and drove to the seashore. He got out of the cab, and entered the Villa on foot from the Largo di Vittoria end.

He had then entered the Villa Nazionale from the Largo di Vittoria end. Villa Nazionale is a public pleasure ground, laid out in grass plots, bushes, and flower beds, between the houses of the Riviera di Chiaja and the waters of the bay. Alleys of trees, more or less parallel, stretch its whole length—which is considerable. On the Riviera di Chiaja side the electric tram cars run close to the railings. Between the garden and the sea is the fashionable drive, a broad road bordered by a low wall beyond which the Mediterranean splashes with gentle murmurs when the weather is fine.

The gardens themselves are not very well lit. Our friend progressed in the warm gloom with his eyes fixed upon a distant and luminous region extending nearly across the whole width of the Villa as if the air had glowed there with its own cold, bluish but dazzling light. This magic spot behind the black trunks of trees and masses of inky foliage breathed out sweet sounds, bursts of brassy roar with sudden clashes of metal and grave, vibrating thuds.

As he walked on, all these noises combined together into a piece of elaborate music whose harmonious phrases came per-

He paused and then, with mingled discretion and pride of knowledge, murmured the word "Camorra."

Flexible, like your foot

The special Cantilever arch, for instance, allows the foot to flex in walking as it would in your hose, though giving ample support.

The naturally shaped sole, slightly raised and extended heel and other features further add to their comfort.

Yet the styles, while not extreme, are pleasing and decidedly smart.

A pair of Cantilever oxfords for walking and general use, and of the very modish Cantilever strap pumps for more dressy occasions, will add much to your comfort.

Helen Wills

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I wish you would say something about Helen Wills, the tennis star, who was operated upon in Paris recently for appendicitis and who, the surgeons declared, possessed the most nearly perfect body they had ever seen!

But that fact didn't save her from the surgeon's knife!

A "perfect" body with an organ missing!

A READER.

There is not a sport-loving enthusiast in the country who is not proud of our Helen. We love her dearly. We take a sincere pride in the fact that she has so gloriously represented clean athletics for this country.

Proud as we are, yet it is with a note of gloom that we see her coming under the same classification as most of our other brilliant athletes.

A beautiful body, perfectly formed! The gods on high were in excellent humor when they gave us Helen Wills. But alas, what avails this beauty of form if she cannot maintain harmony of function?

The fetes and parties, the socials and gatherings in which the guests are luxuriously fed on the choicest viands that the culinary art has ever devised, are literally killing the best of our prominent men and women.

Helen Wills is just as truly a victim of this ill-guided culinary art masquerading in the form of hospitality as our late President Harding.

Unlike him, however, she is still scarcely a child, yet already being compelled to pay the price for the dietetic indiscretions which old and young, great and small, know so little about, and in many cases, care still less.

Some day Helen will learn what she might have been if she had only known more how to take care of the great gifts a kind Nature has bestowed upon her.

Kidney Disease

Dr. Elmer Lee, in his Health Culture, has the following to say on the important subject of kidney disease. After reading this brief excerpt, it should be fairly evident that diet is much more potent in overcoming kidney disease than drugs.

"In a work on nephritis (inflammation of the kidneys) just off the press, its author regrets that there is not anything in our whole therapeutic armamentarium which will influence healing of inflamed kidneys. All that we can do is to wait until the process has run its course.

"While we are waiting for the inflammation to run its course we may attempt to relieve the after effects of the disease by rest, dietetic measures, drugs, warm baths, hot packs, lumbar puncture and so on.

"It is a work of 347 pages, price $5—a book, which tells us that all we can do for the patient is to wait for the disease to subside, that we have no means at our hand to heal him.

"Is it true that we are helpless to assist healing? Are we unmindful of the healing influence of the plant foods and the tree foods and the food of nuts and unmindful of the healing virtue of cool water, good air and exercise?

"Green food matter from the spinach and other green leaf plants if eaten in their fresh, raw, natural state, bring a benign influence into the blood that heals the diseased flesh.

"The giving of the kidneys through the eating of natural, fresh, green food substance, a flow of improved blood that comes from an improved food, is the healing agent to the wounds from disease within the kidneys.

"We have in natural food all that we need for our safety and for our healing. We never need to give a second thought to less important measures. The healing influence resides in body tissue when aided by natural food matter.

"It is for a lack of such food matter in our bodies that inflammation arises in the kidneys, generally speaking. If the kidney inflammation is a result of infection or poison, even so, our better treatment for our dis-

New Home Treatment For Gland Troubles

Medical authorities agree that 65% of all men past middle age (many much younger) are afflicted with a disorder of the prostate gland. Aches in feet, legs and back, frequent nightly risings, sciatic pains, are some of the signs—and now, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science has written a remarkably interesting Free Book that tells of other symptoms and just what they mean. No longer should a man approaching or past the prime of life be content to regard these pains and conditions as inevitable signs of approaching age. Already more than 10,000 men have used the amazing method described in this book to restore their youthful health and vigor—and to restore the prostate gland to its proper functioning.

The Only Woman in the World

By Arthur
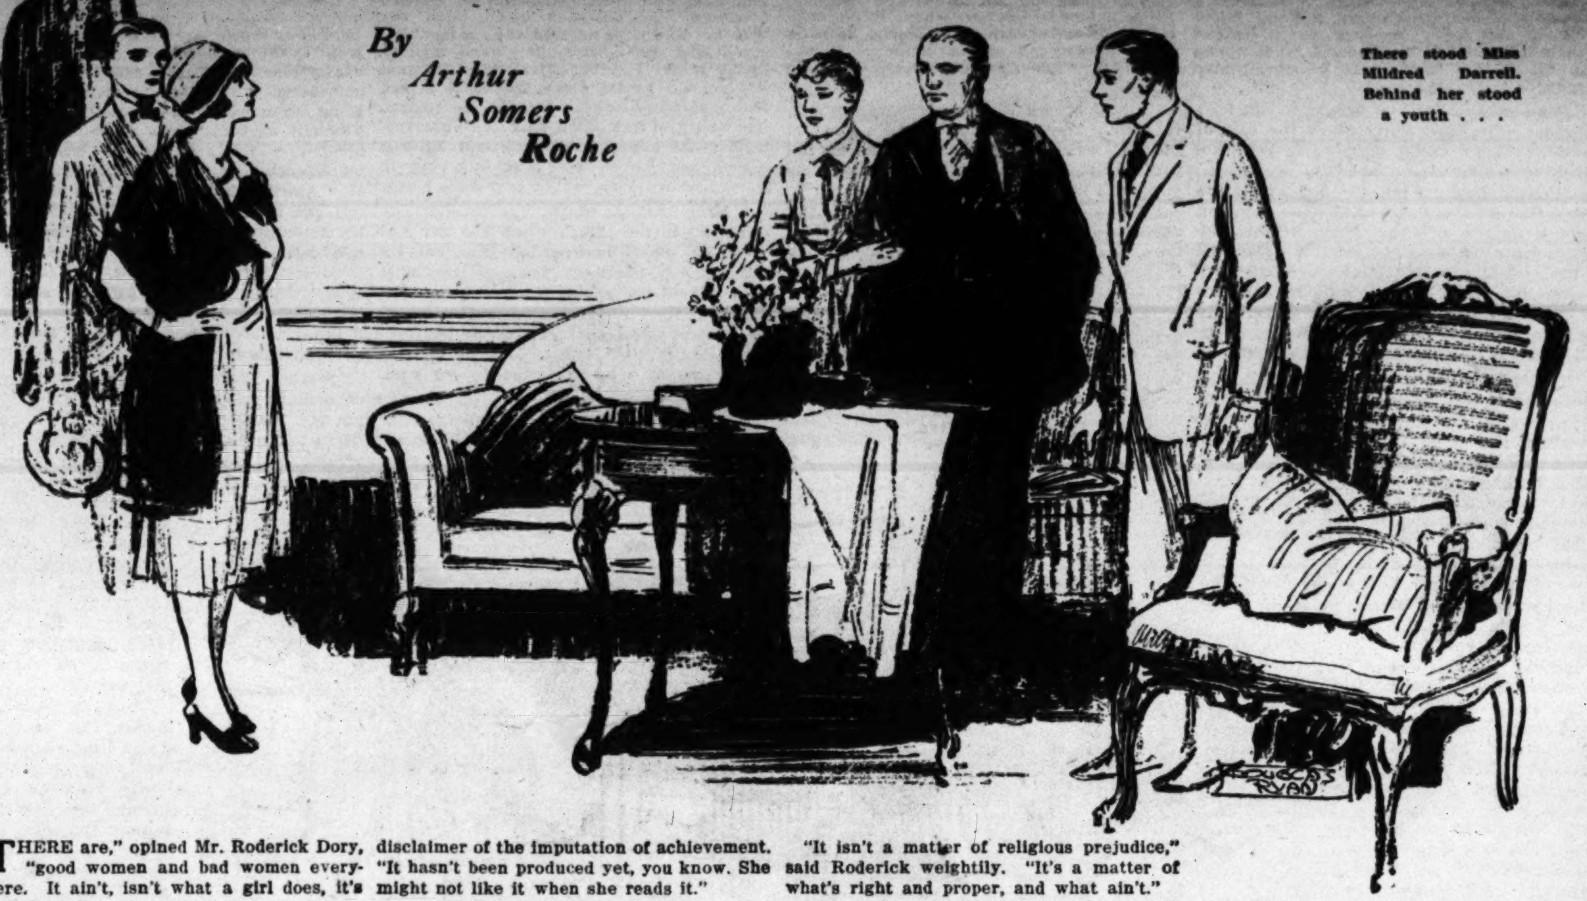
Somers
Roche



There stood Miss Mildred Darrell. Behind her stood a youth . . .

"THERE are," opined Mr. Roderick Dory, "good women and bad women everywhere. It ain't, isn't what a girl does, it's what she is."

His vis-a-vis, Mr. James Kernan, looked up from the bench by the tennis court which the two young men were straddling, and remarked contemptuously, "I don't get any sense in that. A girl's got to be what she does, ain't she?"

"Isn't," corrected Roderick, with a sigh of patience.

"Isn't or ain't, that ain't, isn't the point," argued Jimmy. "You said that what a girl does, she isn't. That don't mean anything."

"Doesn't," said Roderick, wearily.

"Well, doesn't, then," cried Jimmy angrily. "You give me a pain in the stomach. Anyone would think that you thought you were a writer."

Roderick's eyebrows lifted superciliously. "One doesn't think one is a writer; one simply is."

"Simple is right," sneered Jimmy. "You'd have to be pretty simple to think you could write anything. On the level, Roddy, what have you written?" He executed the volte-face with utter lack of self-consciousness.

"You wouldn't understand," replied Roderick languidly. "It's a play."

"Is that what you're writing? What sort of a play?"

"A drama of sex," answered Roderick. "It's about an actress that everyone thinks is bad because she wears tights, and in the last act she rushes from the theater into the church, where her husband, who is a minister, is preaching a sermon against actresses. He doesn't know that she is an actress, and nobody else in his congregation knows that she is, but she left the theater in a hurry because their baby was sick. She runs down the aisle—it's a night service the minister is conducting—and she trips, and her coat falls off, and there she is in tights. She hasn't had time to change her costume. The minister is mad as can be, but an old deacon gets up and hollers, 'No one but a good woman would be so worried about her baby, and you ought to be glad, Reverend Jones, that you ain't married to a heartless woman of fashion.'"

Jimmy stared at the playwright; respectful awe was in his eyes and hero-worship in his voice, as he gasped, "That's a whale of a play! How on earth did you think of it?"

Roderick shrugged. "One can't explain these things; one simply feels them."

"What happens then?" asked Jimmy.

"Why, the minister apologizes to his wife, and then he helps her on with her coat, while all the congregation look politely away from her." Jimmy could make no comment; he simply sighed in rapt and envious admiration.

"Well, I certainly never thought you could write a play," Roderick shrugged a modest disclaimer of the imputation of achievement. "It hasn't been produced yet, you know. She might not like it when she reads it."

"Who?" demanded Jimmy.

"Mildred Darrell."

"The musical comedy singer?" asked Jimmy. "I didn't know she played drama."

"She has genius; she can do anything."

"When you going to try and get her to read it?" asked Jimmy.

"Her new play, 'The Scrub Lady,' will be here next week. I'm going to try and see her then."

Jimmy sighed enviously. His own ambitions suddenly seemed tawdry and unworthy.

"I dunno that engineering is such a great career," he said lugubriously. "I think, maybe, that a business career might be better for me. Suppose I produce the plays you write? I got too much art in me for bridges."

Roderick leaned toward his chum and addressed him earnestly. "I hated ever to mention it, Jimmy. But I've noticed that while you may not have the creative instinct developed to a high degree, you got appreciation and understanding. I can't think of any person I'd rather have produce my plays than you."

"That's mighty white of you, Roddy," said Jimmy huskily. For Jimmy was of the kind that does not lead but is led. In all the days of their chumship, dating back half a dozen years, Roderick had been the planner, Jimmy the doer. The planner impulsively reached forth a hand; the doer grasped it, flattered. It was a moment. Two noble souls were consecrating their youth to the creation and furtherance of art. And into the moment came woman, art's greatest inspiration; woman, who cheers on the artist in his hours of despair, shields him from the contamination of earthly things in his hours of success, gives him from the bounty of her faith, and courage, and adoration, the stimulus he needs.

This woman was sixteen years of age; she was black-haired, and her eyes were hazel. The hoydenish period had not yet passed beyond her; to the aesthetic eye her lankiness of limb promised much, but a youth of eighteen would be apt to term her skinny. She was riding a pony; riding astride, and she swung off her mount with an ear-splitting whoop of greeting and the exposure of at least three inches of thigh. She was was dressed in a bathing suit abbreviated for that year.

"Well, who's going to plunge into the briny with me?" she asked.

Roderick looked at her distastefully. "Your mother ought to do something about you," he said. "You aren't dressed."

Eloise Dennison waved a slender hand toward the beach beyond the tennis court. "A girl can't swim in stockings; and anyway, when did you join the church?"

"It isn't a matter of religious prejudice," said Roderick weightily. "It's a matter of what's right and proper, and what ain't."

Jimmy Kernan was the most loyal of slaves. He had just sworn to a wordless compact with Roderick. But for Eloise in days gone by Jimmy had nourished a hopeless passion and had withdrawn sustenance from it only when her preference for Roderick became too evident for him. He now turned upon his fellow traveler in the world of art. Thus always is it when woman arrives upon a scene held by men.

"Isn't, not ain't," he said with quiet dignity. "Besides weren't you saying that a lady was what she is, not what she does, and doesn't your heroine wear tights? I think that's a lot worse than Eloise going swimming without stockings."

"Heroine? Whose heroine? What are you talking about?" asked Eloise.

Roderick arose from the bench; he straightened carefully the crease in his white flannel trousers. "Well, I guess I got to get back to work," he announced importantly.

Eloise stared at him. "What work have you to do? Going to mow the lawn?" Roderick shrugged disdainfully; his attitude was one dwelling on remote and lofty planes. His manner annoyed Jimmy. Roderick ought not to scorn a lady whom Jimmy, only a few months ago, would have died to attain. Into his voice, which only a moment ago had held admiring awe, crept a note of ridicule.

"He's got to finish his play," he said. Eloise was aware of the subtle implications in the tones of the disloyal Jimmy.

"Play? What sort of a play has he written?" she saked.

Now Jimmy had really been deeply impressed with the outline of Roderick's drama. He forgot his momentary resentment toward Roderick.

"It's a great play," he told her. "All about an actress rushing into church with tights on, and the minister not knowing she's on stage, nor the congregation neither, and her having a baby—"

Roderick's laugh was one of amused tolerance. You've got it a little mixed up, Jimmy," he said. "Let me explain it."

"Oh, do!" cried Eloise. There was something suspicious in her eagerness. But Roderick, in the blindness engendered by artistic vanity, walked into the pit. He described, with great detail, the climetic scene of his great play. All envy left the heart of Jimmy as he heard again the proofs of genius. He turned to Eloise. "Ain't it wonderful?" he asked.

Eloise stared at Roderick. "It's marvelous," she breathed. "I can see her coming down the aisle. I can feel it. Jimmy, you be the minister; stand on the bench. Roderick, you be the congregation, I'll be the actress in tights."

She turned and walked rapidly away from them; twenty feet away she stopped. With absolute and deliberate brazenness, she unbuttoned the skirt of her bathing suit and stepped out of it, slim as a boy in knickers that she wore beneath it. She draped the skirt about her shoulders. She advanced toward the two boys, shrieking at the top of her healthy young lungs, "Our chee-ild is dying, our chee-ild is dying!"

A yard from the bench on which Jimmy stood, she permitted the improvised cloak to fall from her shoulders. "Oh do not judge me, husband, because I have on my working clothes. I am a good woman, and I only wear tights because I am a great artist." And now the subtlety of her genius percolated into the none too active mind of Jimmy. He had said that it was a great play. Now that he saw its absurdity he also saw opportunity to disclaim his statement. He rose brilliantly to the occasion.

"Only men wear pants in this church of mine," he cried. "I don't care if our baby is dying. You go home and put some clothes on you. This is a terrible way to act."

Eloise knelt upon the ground; she rolled upon it, careless that the dirt of graveled tennis court covered her bathing suit. "Be not so harsh with your loyal, loving wife," she pleaded.

Slowly the fire had mounted to the face of Roderick. His cheeks, his forehead, his throat, even the back of his neck seemed to burn. He felt the foundations of his house crumbling beneath him; its walls were collapsing; its roof had crashed. "Eloise Dennison, nice girls don't go round before young men in the pants of their bathing suits. You're disgusting!" He tried to put sorrow into his words, but there was only angry humiliation.

"What are you talking about?" demanded Jimmy, in sudden anger. "Haven't you been talking about it being all right for a lady to wear tights? Didn't you say it ain't what a girl does, but what she is?"

Out of Roderick's own mouth had come confusion for him. He attempted to defend himself. "Art is one thing and life is another," he said.

"And a lot you know about either of them," declared Jimmy.

Dulcet and insinuating was the voice of Eloise. "Why, Jimmy, you mustn't talk that way. Roderick is a great writer. Maybe I didn't act the part well enough. You weren't so good either. Let's do it again." The infamous woman actually walked away, picked up her discarded skirt, and began rehearsing her brutal burlesque again. A moment Roderick stared at her; she was desecrating all that he held finest. With great dignity he turned and walked away. Over his shoul-

How Is Your Health?

When you have been treating thirty or more people every day for years who have constipation (we mean that number of people, not the same people) a special mode of treatment will be developed that will cure them in the quickest possible time. That is why Dr. Shingle at the California Clinorium finds that as this becomes known, many people that have had constipation and for years and have taken gallons of medicine without permanent relief, come here to be cured. First, an X-ray examination is absolutely necessary to accurately determine the exact condition of the vital organs in the thoracic and abdominal cavities. It is the eye with which Dr. Shingle is able to study the concealed vital organs, lungs, heart, kidneys and the action of the food as it passes into the stomach and through the intestine. This X-ray Diagnosis absolutely eliminates guessing as to what is the cause of your illness. There is no excuse for an operation nowadays unless the X-ray shows that it is needed. Several times the X-ray has revealed that cases diagnosed as appendicitis were in the intestines and that the appendix was perfectly normal. Second, after the X-ray examination a careful is made, studying the pulse, the blood pressure and the general physical condition, including a urinalysis. No part of the body is overlooked. Third, when all the examinations are completed Dr. Shingle explains carefully the X-ray pictures and other findings, so that you know exactly what the condition is, and the approximate length of time that treatments will be required. These treatments are given to remove the cause, to improve the blood stream and to restore the body to a normal, healthy condition. It is discouraging work to slowly win one's way back to health. It requires rigid adherence to a detrimental to normal futurity.

Digestive Disorders

Gas Pockets

Physical Examination

"The desire for stimulation extends itself consciously or unconsciously toward food and beverages, with a perpetual whipping up of the sympathetic nervous system and the endocrines. Persons presenting the earmarks of susceptibility to Graves' disease must partake of little, if any, flesh foods, and must abstain from condiments, spices, tea, coffee, and certain other beverages falling under the heading of soft drinks, with or without a Volsteadian kick. We have never met a tea fiend, coffee fiend, ginger ale fiend, Coca-Cola fiend, or even a near-beer fiend whose health was irreproachable.

"It must be emphasized that the majority of human ailments pertaining to the neuro-endocrine make-up would be averted were due cognizance taken of the proper quantity of refreshing sleep. The sleep must be of sufficient quantity and quality to be fatigue-dispelling. Individuals susceptible to Graves' syndrome must avail themselves of at least nine hours of restful sleep preceded by an hour of appropriate reading, conversation, pleasant music, and the like.

"The physician must be on the alert for the presence of incompatible occupations. Though a certain pursuit may be the choice of the individual, it may be the wrong choice. Telephone operating with its nerve-racking incidents, school teaching with its restless working hours and often as restless hours off duty, social work among the poor with its depression, may be deteriorating to body and mind.

"Again, such occupations as present a possibility of acute mental or emotional strain, such as employment at the topmost floor of a tall building with danger of fire or elevator accidents employment in locations where explosions are possible, and other such conceivable means of earning a livelihood, must be taken into account by the physician.

"To the boy or girl born of high-strung parents, home training, especially table talk, either makes or breaks the growing individual. It is to home influences that we largely owe our merits and our faults. This not only applies to the hypersensitive individual under discussion but to the rest of humanity as well.

"The question of amusements could alone occupy an interesting afternoon, especially when discussing the adolescent and young adult. Those who are susceptible to Graves' disease are more apt to participate in the mad rush to be amused, which frequently dominates thought and actions.

"This jazz age with its rush to earn the dollar and greater rush to spent it, its speedy automobiles, exciting movies and stage plays with their morbid sex appeal, not to omit late-hour radio programs—all these make for perpetual diurnal and nocturnal unrest which can only leave unnatural impressions and urgings in such persons to the detriment of future physical and mental health and the destruction of happiness in general.

"I have intimated generally and briefly what I believe to be the duties of the physician in the interest of prophylaxis of exophthalmic goiter. How to increase the threshold of emotional reaction is the vital problem.

"The substitution for the state of emotional alertness by an attitude of sangfroid, in other words, the assumption of the so-called phlegmatic temperament, is the desirable goal. Though the prevention or reduction of the predisposing influences of Graves' disease may appear an abstruse affair, vague in its deductions and in many instances difficult of conception, much can be done by an inculcation of principles which would diminish discord and increase equilibrium between inherent peculiarities and susceptibilities on the one hand and controllable habits and environments on the other.

"The adherence to the broad principles of the simple life and the discovery and fortification of weak links or vulnerable points in the subject's make-up, with an eye to individualization, will finally bring about the desired equilibrium in sufficient degree to be highly gratifying to all concerned.

"Stated in the abstract, an individual standard of conduct to self and the outside world must be formulated for the type of humanity above described.

"It is a two-fold task, each contributing equally to the achievement of the goal, vis., (a) the adjustment or adaptation of the circumstances of life to the singular pecularities of the individual, and (b) the modification and adaptation of the pecularities of the in-

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further.

We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-foot, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

der he glanced back at them as he turned a bend in the road that led away from the Beach Club. He saw Eloise and Jimmy walking toward the water. He seemed to detect, even at this distance, movements of their shoulders that might indicate mirth. He did not frame the hope, but if both of them had suffered tragic death by drowning in the waters of the lake he would have endured it bravely.

Somebody ought to speak to Eloise's mother. He hated to think of the sort of woman Eloise would grow up to be. She had no appreciation; she was so darned conceited about herself and how smart she was, that if anyone else tried to do anything she made fun of them. Then, slowly, dignity came to his aid. After all, she was only a child. As for Jimmy—well, Jimmy's jealousy had been too much for him to overcome. He would dismiss these unworthy people from his thoughts, and turn to contemplation of higher and nobler things.

At his home he viewed with distaste the wide expanse of lawn. It was a wonder to him that his father wouldn't hire a man to perform the menial duties of the estate. It was thus, "estate," that he liked to refer to the large, rambling, old-fashioned house, that increasing prosperity had enabled Mr. Dory to buy a few years ago. But Mr. Dory's ideas had not kept pace with his income. He believed that the modern youth was being ruined by too much pampering; he himself had left school at the age of sixteen, and gone to work. He realized the benefits of education, and was anxious for Roderick to go to college. But he had no use for what he termed society. He believed that Roderick would enjoy things more if he earned them. Wherefore, the unkempt grass of the lawn. Despite his luck at matching dimes, the exchequer of Roderick was not in a very flourishing condition. The two dollars that he would receive for cutting the grass would come in very handily. With a sigh he walked to the barn in the rear of the house and pulled out the lawn-mower. And now a natural interest in mechanical things asserted itself. He took the lawn-mower apart, oiled and polished it until it was a thing of beauty and ran almost noiselessly. He pushed it out upon the lawn. He had completed perhaps a fifth of his task when his attention was attracted by an automobile that stopped directly in front of the Dory house. Sudenly he realized that the driver of the car that had paused near by was calling to him. He walked to the fence.

"Would you mind helping me crank the car?" asked the driver.

For a moment he could not reply. For the driver was a woman, and, unless the study of scores of photographs had taught him nothing, she was that glorious woman of genius, Mildred Darrell. She was as beautiful as her pictures. She wore a trim suit and the breeze caressed her blond curls. There were dimples in her cheeks, and if her lips were made up Roberick did not know it. He vaulted the fence and approached her. "Delighted, Miss Darrell," he said.

The actress smiled at him. "You know me?"

"Who in the world does not?" he retorted.

Her smile was a caress. "You're flattering."

"The truth is never flattering," said Roderick.

She laughed now, and he saw that her teeth were the perfect pearls that her photographs had indicated. And he, Roderick Dory, was exchanging sprightly badinage with this glorious creature! Suddenly he blushed at his own presumption and daring in speaking familiarly to her. He walked to the car and began to examine it. The difficulty was slight; a broken wire of the battery. "If you have tools in the car, I can fix it," he told her.

"Would you?" she asked. There was something thrilling in her tones.

He would and did. When, oil-stained and smeared with grease, he had finished, she said to him, "If you'll tell me your name I'd be glad to leave tickets for you for the opening night of my new play." He told her; he hardly believed that the incident had really happened when she drove away. He left the lawn-mower where it lay, walked into the house and up to his own bedroom. From a bureau drawer, where it lay carefully hidden beneath some shirts, he drew out a photograph of his divinity. It was inscribed, "Affectionately yours, Mildred Darrell."

He had bought it at a photographer's in the city. The inscription was not done in ink, but was photographed. It was an impersonal inscription, but his new acquaintance with her made it personal.

He was pushing the lawn-mower over the grass later that evening when Jimmy Kernan came to see him. Mr. Dory had arrived home and made matters almost unendurable through the course of the evening meal. If his son had any ambition he'd have cut that grass a week ago. There were times when Mr. Dory doubted that the money that he was expending on rearing his son and daughter was being well spent. All they thought of was clothes and good times. That grass must be cut tonight. Hence the sight of a toiling Roderick that greeted Jimmy's eyes.

"Well, how's the great American playwright?" asked Jimmy.

Roderick wiped the honest sweat from his forehead. "You and Eloise think you're pretty smart, don't you?"

Jimmy grinned. "Well. Eloise was darned funny. And you ought not to get mad at her. She's a nice girl."

"She's a skinny brat," said Roderick.

"Aw, forget it," counselled Jimmy. "That's a pretty rotten play of yours, you know."

"Wait until Miss Darrell plays in it," said Roderick. "Then you'll talk different."

Jimmy, with an eye to the Dory veranda—parents were leagued in a conspiracy of espionage—lighted a cigarette. "Fine chance there is of her ever reading it," he scoffed. The burlesque of Eloise had robbed him of all respect for his chum's literary gifts.

Roderick smiled. "She was very pleasant today," he said casually.

"Who was?" demanded Jimmy.

"Miss Darrell," replied Roderick. "She wants me to take a look at her new show next Monday night."

"Who you fooling? Not me," sneered Jimmy.

Roderick shrugged. "All right. I was going to invite you to come with me to 'The Scrub Lady,' but if that's the way you feel—"

"Roderick! On the level?"

Roderick convinced him that it was "on the level." Now Roderick was eighteen years of age, and the restraint imposed on his movements by maternal and paternal solicitude had been largely removed since his last birthday. The fiction was that inasmuch as he was entering college in the fall and would be removed from parental guardianship, it was as well to recognize his manhood now. Therefore, it was easy for him and Jimmy to take a trolley into the city on the next Monday night without having to run the gantlet of family questions. For Roderick knew that among his father's old-fashioned ideas was a disapproval of the theater. So, on Monday night, he sauntered from the house with a great assumption of carelessness, met Jimmy, who, in view of Roderick's acquaintance with the star of "The Scrub Lady," was inclined to believe that after all there probably was merit in Roderick's play and substance in his ambition, and went into town. Miss Darrell had not forgotten. At the box office were two tickets. The boys entered the theater. For two hours and a half they were thrilled. Critics might say that Miss Darrell's figure was not the girlish thing that once it had been, but there was no denying her charm, the beauty of her voice, and her histrionic ability. As a matter of fact, had Mildred Darrell not gained her first following in musical comedy, she would have been a star in drama.

Outside in the street, after the star had responded to the final curtain call, Roderick had a sudden impulse. The mere fact that Miss Darrell had given him seats was sufficient, in the inexplicable fashion in which the mind of youth works, to restore his prestige in the eyes of Jimmy. But the thought that came to him now reduced his companion to abject servility.

"I guess I'll go around to the stage door and congratulate her," announced Roderick. His awe-stricken companion made no protest. He watched Roderick enter the stage door, and then went quietly off. He had walked with genius; he had trembled on the outskirts of the sacred circle of art in the center of which Roderick indubitably belonged. His faith in Roderick was restored.

Miss Darrell's dressing-room was on the ground floor just inside the stage door. A group of enthusiastic admirers swirled in and out of the room, and one of the inward currents bore Roderick on its crest. She recognized him; she accepted his congratulations, haltingly offered, with gracious friendliness. He almost staggered from the room. He rode home in a daze. He went to sleep with her photograph on the pillow beside him. He had never known the pangs of love before. He knew them now. He arose late for breakfast, and his appetite was not improved by his father's stern command that Roderick was not to leave the grounds until the yard had been "picked up." Ordinarily he could have done the work in three hours. He was still at work in the middle of the afternoon when, to his great surprise, his father came home. Mr. Dory walked into the house as though unconscious of Roderick's presence. Something was wrong; he wondered what it could be. He found out five minutes later, when his mother called him in.

"Roderick, where were you last night?" asked his father. Roderick turned white. His mother turned to her husband.

"You promised that you'd not be harsh with him, Frank," she pleaded.

"What's wrong?" demanded Roderick.

His father swelled with indignation. The red veins on his cheeks had never been so prominent. "What's wrong?" he echoed. "I'll tell you what's wrong. Sam Kernan met me at lunch today and told me a tale about your goings on. He said that his Jimmy told him that you went to the theater last night on tickets that had been given you by Mildred Darrell, and that after the play you went back to her dressing-room. Where did you meet this Darrell woman?"

Roderick's shoulders squared. "Miss Darrell, father," he corrected.

"Don't you be impertinent to me, young man," stormed Mr. Dory. "I want to know where you met this woman."

"And I want you to speak respectfully of her," cried Roderick.

"Roderick!" interposed his mother. "You mustn't speak so to your father."

"And he mustn't speak so about Miss Darrell," answered Roderick.

And now Mr. Dory's face was almost apoplectic. "You dare to quarrel with me about an actress, a woman of the stage. You talk as though you were in love with her."

"Suppose I am? I got a right to be, ain't I?" Angela, Roderick's fifteen-year-old sister, had been hovering on the outskirts of the little group. Now she pointed an accusing finger at her shameless brother.

"He's written a play for her, too," she said. "Eloise Dennison told me about it. It's all about an actress that wears tights in church. Eloise says it's the silliest thing she ever heard."

"I guess Eloise's judgment isn't so very important," said Roderick with dignity. "And anyway, I'm not a child, and I'm not going listen to any more of this sort of talk."

His father stared at him. "As long as you're in my house you'll listen to me, young man. Unless perhaps you think you're ready to leave home?" There was, according to Roderick's ideas, unlimited contempt in his father's last sentence.

"Just as you say, father," he said. "I guess I can earn a living."

His mother's eyes filled with sudden tears. Roderick, you raven't really fallen in love with this actress, have you?"

"She is the only woman in the world," he answered. The ringing of the front doorbell broke the pause that followed.

"Angela," said Mrs. Dory, "please answer the bell." His sister left the room and Roderick faced his parents. There was defiance in his eyes. There was aggressiveness in his squared shoulders.

"I don't suppose you have any idea what a young jackass you are, have you?" asked his father.

"You fell in love once, didn't you, father?" retorted Roderick.

"But not with an actress," said his father wrathfully.

"An actress is just as good as any other woman," said Roderick.

"Well, who says she isn't?" demanded a breezy voice from the doorway. Roderick wheeled. There stood Miss Mildred Darrell. Beside her stood a youth of Roderick's own age. Behind them, open-mouthed, stood Angela. The actress advanced into the room. She held out her hand to Roderick. There was something in her manner that was impressive. One had only to see her to know that here was a personage. There was authority in her very stride. "Won't you introduce me?" she asked.

Roderick mumbled her name. He saw his father grasp her hand, saw his mother offer her a chair. Then he heard her ask, laughingly, "Who said an actress isn't as good as anyone else?"

He had always thought his father, despite his material success, somewhat crude of manner. But now he was proud as Mr. Dory answered, "No one, Miss Darrell. We were simply discussing your play. I hadn't seen it, but I read the reviews this morning, and I understand it's about a scrub-woman who goes on the stage."

"I'm glad of that," said the actress. "You know, in some places we of the theater meet with prejudice. I've just bought a house in the next street and intend to live here. And I'd hate to settle in a community where the stage is not appreciated. I met your young son last week and am calling at the first opportunity. I wanted to meet his parents. I knew that the mother and father of such a boy must be delightful persons." Mildred Darrell was sometimes accused of lacking savoir faire, in that she was so extremely blunt of speech. But most people adored her for it. She had charm off the stage as well as on. Before the magnetism eats anything he pleases, will very quickly reduce him. It is not likely, however, for most stout people are blessed with a weak will and an overwhelming love for food.

Any effort to destroy fat in a localized area is bound to be futile. In the general process of weight reduction, Nature will invariably tend to reduce the fat in the area in which it can be spared.

As a rule, I am opposed to all efforts toward reducing in one area and remaining stationary in others. It is the entire body which should reduce and not one part.

The formula for weight reduction is indeed very simple. It may be restated in two very easily understood words—"Eat less."

Prophylaxis of Exophthalmic Goiter

The following article is clipped from American Medicine. This is a technical journal for the "regular" profession. Read it. You will find an expression almost word for word, of the principles advocated by Care of the Body for years and years.

The day in which the snap judgment advice "to have the goiter removed" is done. Prophylaxis, prevention, is infinitely superior to surgery.

"When we observe that the path of least resistance, namely, thyroidectomy, is too often taken in the treatment of exophthalmic goiter, we must conclude that there is a relative deficiency of interest in the prophylaxis and therapeusis of this affection. Surgical attack upon the thyroid gland is resorted to not because Graves' disease is medically incurable, but because there are few physicians who make sufficient sacrifice of time and energy to demonstrate perfect non-operative results. Were the profession to devote half as much time to exophthalmic goiter as to tuberculosis, many cases would be averted, and surgeons, satisfied that internists have succeeded in their task would refuse to operate on these patients.

"In the formulation of plans for the prevention of exophthalmic goiter the recognition of the type of individual susceptible to the syndrome is important. The future candidate for Graves' disease is of unique make-up, differing totally from the individual presenting or susceptible to simple goiter.

"The subject of simple goiter is relatively immune to Graves' disease, presenting normal or below normal basal metabolism, normal or above normal weight, often an unusually dry skin; pulse rate tending toward the below normal point, physical and mental activities not hyperacute, and other features indicating a deficient manufacture of thyroid hormone. In approximately 40 per cent of instances, a distinct history of one or more cases of simple goiter in blood relatives is obtainable.

"On the other hand, susceptibility to Graves' disease is asosciated with totally opposite characteristics. There is often a familial history of exophthalmic goiter, nervousness, and diabetes. Basal metabolism is frequently beyond normal limits; skin is soft and moist, presenting dermographia; pulse rate is higher than normal, with a tendency to tachycardia on the slightest provocation; there is heightened cerebration, mental alertness, and emotional instability with a tendency toward hysteroid attacks; the temperament is highly sensitive; and the eyes, presenting a sparkle or brilliancy, complete the earmarks of one who, meeting with a psychic trauma, quickly develops the dramatic picture of frozen fright indicative of exophthalmic goiter.

"These persons are usually spoken of by their parents as having been nervous and delicate during infancy. Precocity of mind at the expense of physical vitality is frequently described as characterizing school life, though apparent good health is indicated by a floridity of the skin.

"The medical profession must recognize and guide these individuals toward a safe future. The first prerequisite is the equipment of the physician himself as it applies to diagnostic acumen on the one hand, and tact and skill in the interests of moulding human behavior on the other. The second requirement is the ability to create and maintain the necessary sympathetic influence between himself and the patient and household. It is often forgotten that an individual's self consists not only of Mr. A. or Miss B., but that selfhood extends outward to family relationships as well. Hence the physician must include relatives and close friends in an appeal for consistent physical [illegible] to environments.

"In this brief discourse, I can only confine myself to a few generalizations which I have found of use in my own studies of the type of persons under discussion. These suggestions, properly analyzed and adopted, may overcome to a considerable degree the tendencies and habits characterising these individuals, thus reducing susceptibility to Graves' syndrome.

"Physical and mental stimulation, expressed or implied, seems to dominate the existence of these individuals. Considering the fact that the existing age is unnaturally stimulating, we can see why there are more cases, potential and active, of Graves' disease, than ever before in the history of this affection. The quality and quantity of education, food, sleep, occupation, home training, amusements, and many other factors, might be discussed for hours, but we shall merely touch upon these in a general way.

"Education today is, to many who seek it, of such nature as to appear crammed, predigested, revolutionary, and cranium-spreading almost to the point of bursting. This applies more especially to those in whom the painful acquisition and retention of facts and figures, necessary and otherwise, in the interests of a transformation of the growing child into a walking encyclopedia is obviously injurious to body and mind, and certainly

STRUT YER STUFF, KID. STRUT YER STUFF!

HEAVEN should provide special guardian angels for child wonders. If ever a small child needed a guardian angel, it is the bright baby capable of earning a fat living for its parents.

It is in what Harry Carr calls "the show-off" professions that the bright baby needs its guardian angel the most. For it is there that its baby charms sell for the highest prices, if mama and papa have good business heads. The parents of child wonders usually do have good business heads.

And it is terribly possible for that charmed baby to have one of two equally regrettable fates. Either it will become a hardboiled, conceited, egotistical little horror in its teens, or else a cowed and pitifully obedient slave.

Once in a way we read a curious bit of publicity. As for instance: "She (a child actress) is not a great actress or even an exceedingly talented child. In fact, she is just like a million other children, except that she has learned to obey . . . This required strict training and I have made a business of raising her," said her father, "but it has been well worth it, as anyone can see. We have been kind but firm and consequently she has become a good little soldier."

Yes, she has become a good little soldier. It required a few baby whippings, as her father frankly informed me when I went to write a story about her when she was four years old. And I could only hope the dear kiddy really considered her work "play" as she had to rehearse a scene over and over again for hours, with papa in the offing to see that little daughter shone primarily in "obedience."

But, as against this, there was another baby girl, age seven, and looking even younger. This little lady, accompanied by her mama, had been hired to entertain at a great convention banquet. Her act came on at about 11 p.m. when most kiddies of her age are tucked up in bed by 7 p.m. if they don't happen to be child wonders.

And this little girl had been taught to dance—highly sophisticated 'tough' little dances, imitating her grown-up sisters of the profession with diabolical burlesque. The child wriggled and contorted her little form into grotesque and suggestive attitudes and sang a tough little song to the effect that "Oh, gosh, girls, I'm in love."

It was the hit of the evening. So very entertaining to see a baby girl burlesquing adults in their vulgarest and nastiest moods. And the child's mama stood in the wings and beamed gratification as the applause rang loud and long and her baby was called back again and again to wriggle for the multitudes.

But if this little girl was once "obedient" it was wearing off now. You see, she had been a professional for nearly three years. At seven she was realizing that mother was not the whole cheese. So it was highly interesting to hear her call mother "You silly mutt" and decline to get into her street clothes and go home immediately after the performance. Baby had other notions and enforced them. So she came down among the guests in her naked little dress, with her once dear little face all rouged, her lips painted, her eyes beaded, and had a great time saying smarty things to the gentlemen who complimented her lavishly. They told her what a "cute kid" she was and one of them slipped her a $5 bill—and doubtless felt a nice fine generous fellow who "loved children." Oh, I am sure he "loved children."

And of course, the parents of these child-wonders "love children" too. Especially their own bright lambkin. I once had to write a story about famous screen children, and visited the home of a curly, golden-headed little boy of four who was supporting his parents.

They spent the evening telling me how much they loved children, and what a loving little darling their own lambkin was. To my disgust they staged a demonstration.

"Go kiss the lady, dearie. Put your arms round her neck and give her a real hug."

The little lad gazed at me speculatively for a fraction of a second, during which papa's face hardened with complete authority, and dearie approached me with an anxious little rush. Then he carefully went through the motions of embracing me, planted a kiss right on my lips before I could spare him, and concluded with an obedient little jerky hug.

It was heartrending. So this is one of the things it can mean to be a child wonder. Fancy having to kiss and hug any strange female that comes along, whenever papa thinks a demonstration desirable! Oh, baby, where is your guardian angel on such occasions?

Mama and papa fell over each other explaining to me how "kind" they were to dearie-boy. And never, never whipped him.

"You did that time I was scared to jump in the swimming pool," corrected dearie, "and that time when . . ."

But father laughed loudly. Mother laughed hastily. "Oh, well, just a tap. Them taps ain't whippings. It was in a swimming competition and he got scared of the crowds and cried . . . say, imagine a big boy like him crying. The lady couldn't believe it of you. You knew you had to dive in . . . no use crying about it," said father.

"And you were sorry you had been naughty, weren't you dearie?" asked mother, with succulent sweetness.

"Oh, yes, I am always sorry, truly I am," dearie assured me.

Yes, I'll bet poor little dearie always is sorry all right—even if they are only taps But there ought to be a special guardian angel on duty when four-year-old babies are scared to dive before applauding crowds, and taps intrude . . . It is evidently very important to "be sorry."

This little boy often "preaches" from church pulpits. I am sure that the ministers who permit this "love little children" too. I can imagine them introducing dearie with a solemn "And a little child shall lead us." . . . When he doesn't preach, he is often invited to "lead the congregation in prayer." His religious responsibilities are setting in early . . .

Many child wonders have been drafted into pulpits. One child has been preaching for years. Perhaps she is happy in it . . . but she must be missing a lot of childhood, shouldering a lot of other people's woes. . . . Only a little girl of fifteen now, but an important figure in her grandmother's plans, just as her mother before her was. Oh, we must hope that the child's guardian angel is standing by—that all the child-preachers' guardian angels are standing by.

There is a nice accepted tradition that guardian angels are chiefly on duty after bedtime, "to close the children's peepers and guard the little sleepers."

But that isn't when they are needed most. They are needed most of all when mother and father first realize they have a little child wonder in the home, when the parents first see a halo of dollar signs round the wonder child's head, when father decides to devote his life to and make a business of training his wonder child, and during those alarming waking hours when the wonder child is called upon to "do his stuff" for the gratification of jaded adults.

Tut, tut. Everybody "just loves little children!" Won't they pay big money to see child wonders do their stuff, and laugh uproariously when it is quite sophisticated grown-up stuff? And of course, child-wonder preachers are just too darling for anything, and what nicer way could there possibly be to get to Heaven than guided by a child-wonder preacher, or how better receive forgiveness for one's sins than by being led in prayer by a curly-headed blue-eyed baby boy?

But all the same, I can't help hoping Heaven is increasing its staff of competent guardian angels these days.

Making Up

Last year Ralph forgot the wedding anniversary. But Molly just chuckled naughtily and arranged a saucy party to surprise him when he came home in the evening. And Ralph laughed happily and said: "Gee, I'm a lucky chap. I deserved to get my head bitten off."

So this year Ralph wasn't going to be caught forgetting again. The smallest boy who sleeps out with Ralph on the sleeping porch, and wakes with the dawn as small boys will, has a habit of sneaking in to Mother Molly's bed 'round about 5 a.m. And on this anniversary morning he planted a large damp kiss on sleepy Molly's cheek and yelled delightedly: "That's for daddy, because it's a 'versary, and I'll bet you don't know what a s'prise we has for you."

So Molly was all awake in a hurry, and hopped into her prettiest house dress almost too quickly for Ralph and the big boy to get the table all fixed up with the flowers they had planned the night before.

And Molly said: "Goodness, and to think I didn't remember!" And Ralph and the boys thought it perfectly corking to be able to surprise mother.

CARE OF THE BODY

By PHILIP M. LOVELL, N. D.

Our Nervous System

(A radio talk given by Dr. P. M. Lovell over KHJ, The Times.)

Nerves, nerves, nerves! Everywhere, under all conditions, with all groups, young and old, we find this common malady.

To definitely place our fingers on this or that as the cause or remedy is virtually impossible.

Function of Nerves

The nerves are the electric wires of the body, governing every function, being affected in every ailment. Kill the nerve and you destroy that portion which is being fed by it.

Impairment of our nervous system may take place from many directions. When we eat wrongly we are destroying our nervous vitality. When we suffer an injury, it is the nerves which give us the consciousness of pain. When our emotional life no langer sails on an even keel, it is our nerves which quickly make us pay the price for our indiscretions.

There is not an action of being, mental, physical, emotional, dietetic, hygienic, which is not governed in its most intimate and most remote detail by our nervous system, the most wonderful structure of the human body. It is the means by which we are biologically transformed from the lower animals, the distinguishing mark which raises us higher on the evolutionary ladder than any other living being.

Nervous Superiority

Other animals have better digestive systems, have larger muscles, have more efficient bodies in general.

It is only because we have, proportionate to our size, a more ably developed nervous organization that we have been able to ascend above them physically.

The brain of man is the most highly organized, thoroughly specialized portion of life ever devised by Nature.

Starting in the new-born child, with practically no capacity whatsoever, it is capable of rising to heights and performing prodigies of effort and labor utterly impossible of any other species.

Brain Power

The human brain is infinitely potential in its power of development. The brain, however, is merely the central powerhouse, the dynamo which issues forth the dictates and commands to every cell of a highly complex, co-ordinately and co-operatively functioning body.

In its function, the nervous organization may be compared with a splendidly organized telephone system. The brain is the power house from which the energy is manufactured. It is the source, the central point of all impulse.

The spinal cord, the appendage to the brain, is somewhat similar to central operator. In the spinal cord is a large collection of nerves emerging to various areas of the body.

The main trunk may be compared with the individual lines, each having its peripheral terminal point, leading to central operator, the spinal cord, and from there to the main powerhouse, the brain.

Each individual nerve, in turn, divides and subdivides, producing an enormous number of individual minor nerves until its ramifications become so tiny that practically every living cell of the body is touched by them.

Thus far we have a general outline of structure.

Nervous Function

Next we must consider the divisions of function.

The nervous system is roughly divided into two general categories known as the autonomic or automatic, or involuntary nervous system, as distinct from the voluntary, conscious nervous system under the control of the will.

Every organ is governed by one or both of these systems. For instance, the heart is governed principally by the automatic nervous system. Consequently, its functions go on ceaselessly, without thinking and without the command of the conscious brain.

The external muscles of the body are governed by the voluntary nervous system.

Will Force

We can, by the exercise of our conscious will, contract or relax any external muscle of the body.

On the other hand, under certain diseases such as St. Vitus Dance, palsy and paralysis, this conscious, voluntary function is lost and the involuntary or automatic nerves govern the function of these structures.

You can easily see the close and intimate relationship between these two parts of the nervous system.

Specialization of Work

The specialization of function continues to a much greater extent.

Not only have we the voluntary and involuntary systems but we also have specialized nerves of distinct function.

We have the motor nerves which govern muscular contraction: the sensory nerves which control the reception of all sensation; the secretory nerves which govern secretion in the various glands of the body: the dilator nerves which open the tiny orifices of glands and other structures: the constrictor nerves which contract them.

Centers of Action

We have specialized areas in the brain and spinal cord having more or less distinct functions. For instance, we have a speech center, a thought center, a love center, a hate center, a sleep center, a hearing center, a sight center and a smelling center, and thus on through the various instincts, feelings, emotions and purely mechanical functions of the body.

Every part functions co-operatively with every other part, all working in a smooth, harmonious rhythm to produce the manifold tasks which are performed in the ordinary process of living.

The Nervous System and Health

Not only is each nerve center directly related to every other center but there is a close, intimate connection with the general health.

We know, for instance, if we were to markedly increase or decrease the blood supply to the brain, nervous co-ordination would cease.

If a blood-vessel broke and brain hemorrhage resulted, we would have a stroke of apoplexy in which there is a complete cessation of function in the area of the brain affected.

From the affected center, all the nerves leading from it would be correspondingly injured.

Effects of a Toxic-Laden Blood

Again, we know that if we rob the brain of considerable quantities of blood as in fainting, shock or convulsion, unconsciousness results with its retardation or destruction of certain nervous functions.

If the blood circulation is of a kind loaded with foreign substances, the effect on the nervous system will very quickly be apparent.

For instance, neuritis or inflammation of a nerve is induced principally by a blood stream charged with toxic wastes.

Again, if we induce pressure on a nerve or injure it in any way, its effect is felt from the point of pressure or injury to its distal terminal point.

Causes of Pain

Every reaction of pain, distress or ill feeling of any nature is nothing more than an impulse traveling up the length of a definite nerve to the brain centers of consciousness.

The causes of all pain, the causes of all disease are, therefore, directly related to the nervous affliction of the body.

We cannot treat the brain, the spinal cord and the nerves of the body as separate entities with out also considering the co-ordinate functions of every other portion of the body.

The study of the brain and the nervous system is an intensely interesting one but, far more important, its knowledge is vital toward the establishment and the maintenance of health, vitality and the extraction of the maximum efficiency of life.

Diet and Reducing

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I am a young man, married, twenty-four years old; height, five feet nine; weight, two hundred pounds. My weight is my problem.

Being a salesman, I am on my feet, walking all day. Aside from this, I do no physical work.

All my fat is confined to the region from my hips up, my legs and thighs being proportionately thin and quite solid. My chest is very flabby.

I eat no meats, no white bread, but aside from this, I have no definite ideas as to proper diet.

I will be most appreciative if you will advise a rational method of reducing, also advising me what my proper weight should be.

A READER

Reducing involves acts of omission and commission. The "do's" and "don't's" are many.

Here is the case of a young man much too heavy. Merely because he eats no meats and white bread, he probably sees no reason why he should be so considerably overweight.

Outside of these two elements, he states he has no other definite ideas as to proper diet.

To meet this problem, it is not of such considerable importance that he be a dietitian. The knowledge of a balanced ration or the composition of every food is of considerably less importance than a fair measure of self-control and will-power.

Excessive avoirdupois is due, primarily, to the overconsumption of starches and sweets, fats and proteins, under-exercise and overeating, in general.

Even if he doesn't know the difference between a fat and a protein, again that is of minor concern. Were he to correct the quantitative element of his diet, he would get results.

Again, walking is not a satisfactory exercise for reducing. Walking gives very little exercise to the muscles of the pelvis, abdomen, back and chest. It is necessary that he take special abdominal and pelvic exercises.

A one-meal-a-day program, even though he

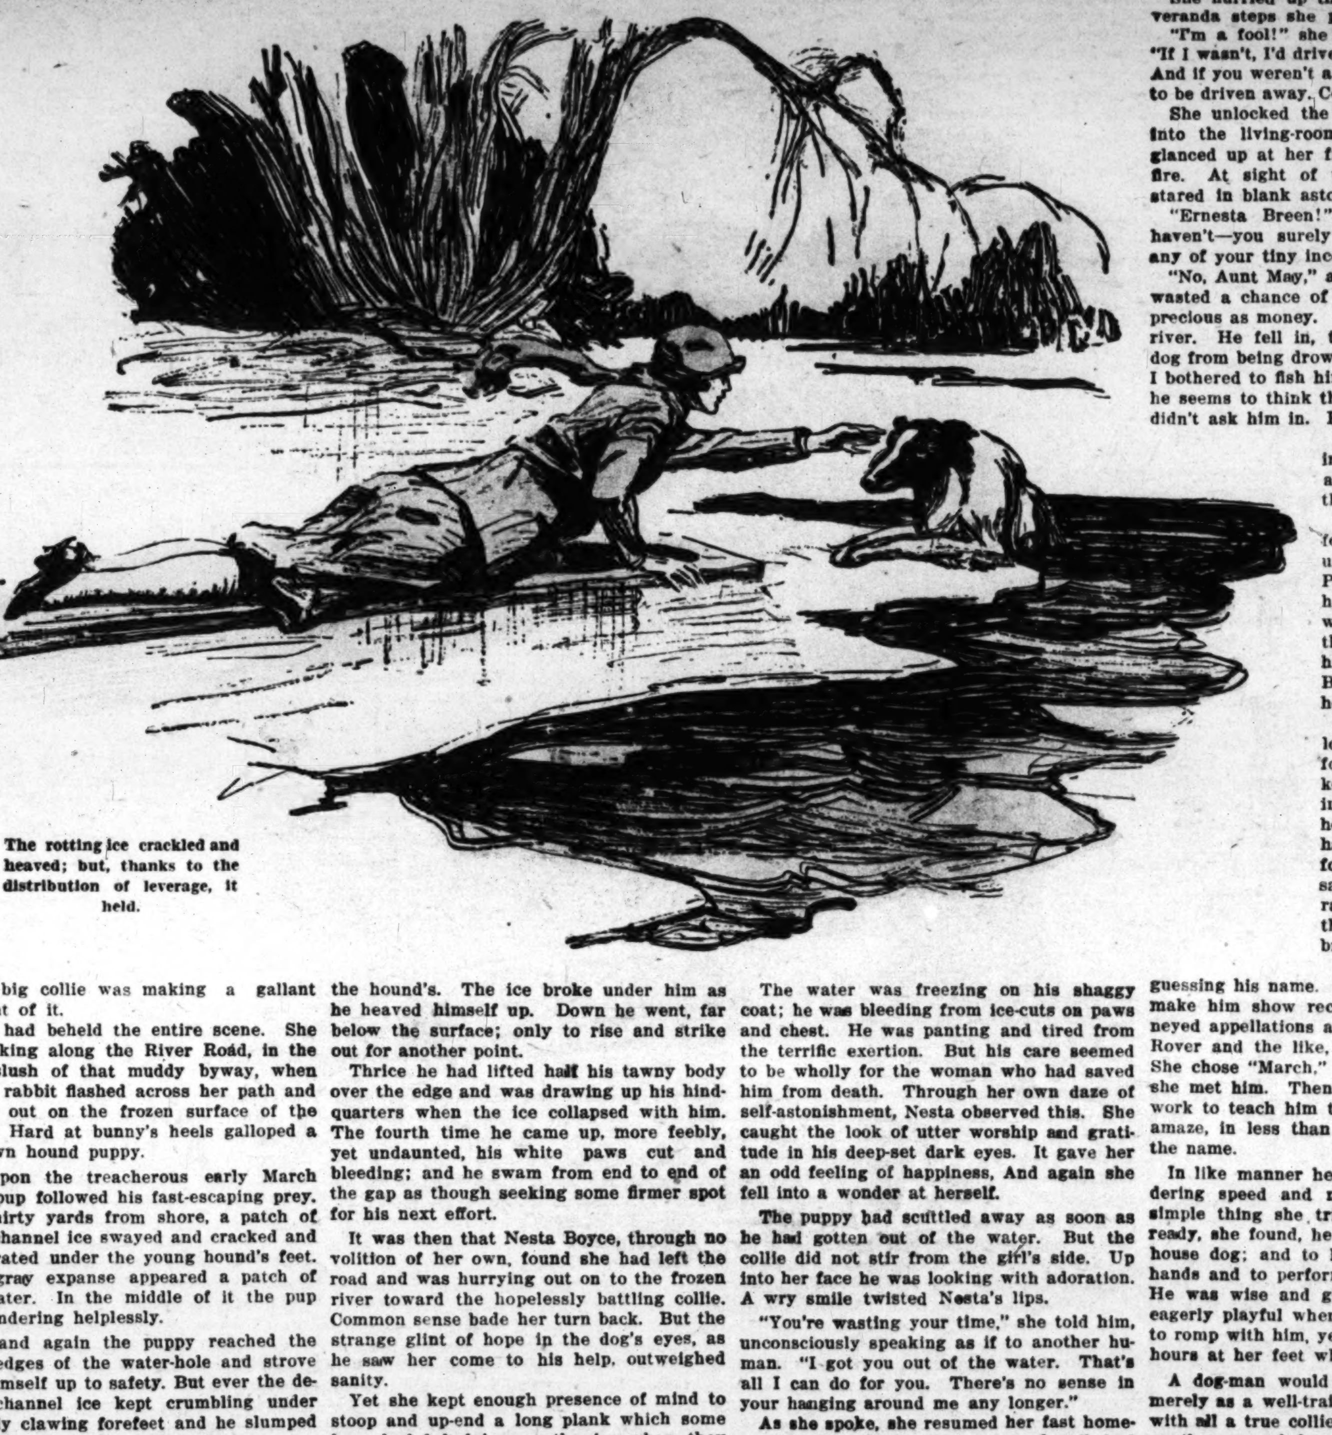
TO THE RESCUE

By Albert Payson Terhune

ILLUSTRATED BY HAROLD LUND



The rotting ice crackled and heaved; but, thanks to the distribution of leverage, it held.

THE big collie was making a gallant fight of it.

Nesta had beheld the entire scene. She was walking along the River Road, in the frozen slush of that muddy byway, when first the rabbit flashed across her path and scurried out on the frozen surface of the stream. Hard at bunny's heels galloped a half-grown hound puppy.

Out upon the treacherous early March ice the pup followed his fast-escaping prey. Then, thirty yards from shore, a patch of rotting channel ice swayed and cracked and disintegrated under the young hound's feet. In the gray expanse appeared a patch of black water. In the middle of it the pup was floundering helplessly.

Once and again the puppy reached the broken edges of the water-hole and strove to lift himself up to safety. But ever the decaying channel ice kept crumbling under his wildly clawing forefeet and he slumped back, his whole head submerged.

Then something brushed harshly past her toe. She looked to see what it was. A collie had come upon the scene from nowhere in particular and was dashing across the firmer shore ice toward the exhausted puppy.

As he neared the ragged gap, the ice began to bend and crack under him. He came to a sliding halt at the edge of the hole and braced his white feet, leaning far forward to catch the frantic puppy by the scruff of the neck and to draw him out of the water.

Before his jaws could close on the wriggling victim, the ice had given way under him. The gap was larger than before. In it now two dogs instead of one were struggling.

The collie secured his hold on the pup's neck. With an effort that carried his own head and shoulders far out of water he swam to the edge of the hole and fairly thrust the hound upward over the edge.

Perhaps here the ice was less weak than at the point where both had fallen in. At any rate it did not break under the puppy's fore feet. With a last effort of strength, the little fellow clawed his way to the surface of the ice and dashed off at top speed for shore.

The impact of the youngster's jump drove the collie's head far under. He came up beneath the ice. Whether by instinct or by luck or by brain, he swam up-stream a yard or so. Once more his head appeared in the gap, dripping and gasping. To the edge of the hole he swam, at the place where the puppy had clambered to safety. But his own weight was far greater than the hound's. The ice broke under him as he heaved himself up. Down he went, far below the surface; only to rise and strike out for another point.

Thrice he had lifted half his tawny body over the edge and was drawing up his hindquarters when the ice collapsed with him. The fourth time he came up, more feebly, yet undaunted, his white paws cut and bleeding; and he swam from end to end of the gap as though seeking some firmer spot for his next effort.

It was then that Nesta Boyce, through no volition of her own, found she had left the road and was hurrying out on to the frozen river toward the hopelessly battling collie. Common sense bade her turn back. But the strange glint of hope in the dog's eyes, as he saw her come to his help, outweighed sanity.

Yet she kept enough presence of mind to stoop and up-end a long plank which some boys had left lying on the ice when they had been seeking bonfire material.

Nearing the gap, she placed the plank in front of her on the ice, and crawled face downward along it. The rotting ice cracked and heaved; but, thanks to the distribution of leverage, it held. Presently she was able to reach forward to the dog.

The collie had swum close to her side of the gap; and as she reached he made one supreme effort to lift himself over the edge. The ice crumbled again under him. But this time Nesta had firm hold of his ruff. The ice groaned and chuckled and bent as she pulled him toward her.

Right valiantly did the dog second her efforts. Scrambling, heaving, writhing, he drove forward and upward as she tugged him to her.

And now both of them lay on the flat plank—panting and worn out.

Then, inching her way, Nesta began to retreat toward shore, still on the plank. Even after she had come to the landward end of it, she continued to lie face downward, arms out, and to work her way toward the bank in that fashion, until she felt beneath her the thicker and rougher ice on which she had made the first part of her short rescue journey.

Then only did she venture to stand up and to make the rest of the few yards on foot. She was sick and shaken and dizzy. But most of all, she was astounded at herself and at this insane thing she had done. She could not understand it.

Throughout the shoreward trip the collie had accommodated his pace to her snail-like motions, remaining close at her side.

The water was freezing on his shaggy coat; he was bleeding from ice-cuts on paws and chest. He was panting and tired from the terrific exertion. But his care seemed to be wholly for the woman who had saved him from death. Through her own daze of self-astonishment, Nesta observed this. She caught the look of utter worship and gratitude in his deep-set dark eyes. It gave her an odd feeling of happiness. And again she fell into a wonder at herself.

The puppy had scuttled away as soon as he had gotten out of the water. But the collie did not stir from the girl's side. Up into her face he was looking with adoration. A wry smile twisted Nesta's lips.

"You're wasting your time," she told him, unconsciously speaking as if to another human. "I got you out of the water. That's all I can do for you. There's no sense in your hanging around me any longer."

As she spoke, she resumed her fast homeward walk. The collie's plumed tail had wagged appreciatively at her tart words whose purport meant nothing to him. Now he fell into step at her side, once more accommodating his pace to hers, thrusting his cold muzzle lovingly into her cupped palm. The touch startled Nesta, so tender was its caress and so full of trusting affection. She stopped short, eying the dog bemusedly. Then she said more sharply:

"Go home. I don't want you. I told you there's nothing more to be gotten out of me. A man wouldn't have needed to be told that twice. A man didn't need to. You're only a dog, so you're stupider than he was. Go home!"

Steadfastly the collie gazed up into her face as she harangued him. His look gave her a queer feeling that he was not deceived by the crossness of her words but that he read past them into the lonely soreness of her heart. The fantastic notion would not be laughed away. Moreover, as she moved on he trotted again at her side.

"I don't like dogs," she told him grumpily. "I don't want you with me. Go home."

As before, she felt he was disregarding her command because he read past it and because of the unhappiness in her heart. She shrugged her shoulders and walked faster. Presently she stopped before the gate of a shabby bungalow, deep in a shabby lawn.

"I live here," she said, turning on the collie. "Now that you have seen the house, perhaps you'll be wise enough to do as the man I told you about. He called here only once, after we had to move down to this place from the Terrace. Once was enough."

She hurried up the frozen walk. On the veranda steps she paused.

"I'm a fool!" she announced to the dog. "If I wasn't, I'd drive you away with a stick. And if you weren't a fool, you wouldn't wait to be driven away. Come in, if you want to."

She unlocked the front door and passed into the living-room. An elderly woman glanced up at her from a chair beside the fire. At sight of the collie, the woman stared in blank astonishment.

"Ernesta Breen!" she exclaimed. You haven't—you surely haven't been wasting any of your tiny income on—on a dog?"

"No, Aunt May," answered Nesta, "I only wasted a chance of drowning. Nothing as precious as money. I pulled him out of the river. He fell in, trying to save another dog from being drowned. I don't know why I bothered to fish him out. But I did. And he seems to think that he belongs to me. I didn't ask him in. He came."

"But you're never going to keep him? Why, a great big brute like that eats as much as—"

"As the people who forget to come and see us since we went broke? Perhaps he does. But he's ever so much more welcome to it. I never thought about keeping him till you spoke of it. But I am going to. If he'll stay—"

For the first time in a long year Nesta Breen found something to be keenly and non-corbidly interested in. Despite herself, she realized she had a genuine affection for the great dog she had saved. In her gross ignorance of canine nature, the collie's quickness of brain astounded her.

She had no way of guessing his name. After trying in vain to make him show recognition of such hackneyed appellations as Towser and Tige and Rover and the like, she named him anew. She chose "March," for the month wherein she met him. Then, studiously, she set to work to teach him the new name. To her amaze, in less than a day he had learned the name.

In like manner he picked up with bewildering speed and much enjoyment every simple thing she tried to teach him. Already, she found, he had been trained as a house dog; and to lie down and to shake hands and to perform other ordinary feats. He was wise and gentle and unobtrusive; eagerly playful when she was in the mood to romp with him, yet ready to lie quiet for hours at her feet while she read or wrote.

A dog-man would have classified March merely as a well-trained collie of high type, with all a true collie's brain and pluck and gentleness and humor. But to Nesta he seemed the embodiment of everything marvelous. Her first careless fondness for him grew to a devotion. He was her inseparable comrade, indoors and out; her guard and chum. The lonely girl's heart expanded under his companionship. Her hard-acquired youthful bitterness softened strangely under his splendid normalcy. She ceased for days at a time to brood morbidly over her loss of money and position.

One morning in early summer, Nesta and March were swinging along the river road, the dog trotting some yards ahead. A cloud of dust heralded a motor-car chugging laboriously toward them down the stretch of unsurfaced byway. As always, the sight of the distant car made March drop back to his mistress's side.

Nesta drew to one side of the road to avoid the on-coming motor's dust. The car lurched onward over rut and bulge. It was passing the girl and the collie when its passenger, a stout man on the rear seat, called to the chauffeur to stop.

By the time the machine was at a standstill he had jumped out on to the road and was hurrying back toward Nesta.

A glance told her that the stout intruder was nobody she knew. So, with only the mildest curiosity, she awaited him. But as the man came closer March growled softly, far down in his throat, and took a warning step forward. The man stopped with ludicrous suddenness. Apparently he was enough of a dog expert to read the quiet menace aright. He stood there in silence for an instant, studying every line and aspect of the collie. Then lifting his hat in a

Helen on a Reckless Midnight Mission

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

IN the held-up traffic at a congested Broadway crossing.

From their panting taxi Helen gazed unseeingly at the after-theater throng. Trying not to watch Mrs. Rawson, pale and tense, beside her. But poignantly conscious of the tremulous hands twisting a platinum vanity.

The strangeness of this midnight mission! Why had she come? Why had she yielded to her hysterical pleadings?

A desperate, futile mission. She realized that now.

"You're not going in? You promised me you wouldn't—"

"No, no, we'll just drive by the house—just to see if his car's there."

"But what will that prove?" persisted Helen. "If you know he goes there, what difference—"

"If he takes our car or a taxi? None. But I want to see the house—what kind of place she lives in."

They were driving on now. A quieter side street.

On through the warm, cloying night. Brown stone houses. White gowns and glowing cigarettes on the stoops. The relaxing languor of a summer night.

Warren in Philadelphia, Helen had asked Mrs. Rawson to dinner. For months she had known of Mr. Rawson's neglect—but not until tonight of the "other woman."

After dinner Mrs. Rawson had broken down and told the whole wretched story. She knew everything. Even her address—from a telephone number he had called. She had practically accused him—and he had not denied it.

A crisis was imminent. They could go on no longer. Every day more unbearable.

Helen shrank from the intimate disclosures. What could she say or do? Words seemed so inadequate.

Swayed by emotional sympathy, she had yielded to the sobbing entreaties to drive by the house—just to see if his car were there.

"The next street!" Mrs. Rawson gripped her arm. "We'll get out and walk past. No, I'll not go in—I promise."

Not heeding Helen's protests, she jumped out, paid and dismissed the driver.

"128—this side," in a tense whisper, drawing Helen along.

Apartments. Lights from myriad windows. Cars before every doorway.

"There!" the hand on Helen's arm tightened. "That gray car—"

The next second she was in the back seat, dragging Helen after her.

"You're not going to—"

"I'm going to wait here—till he comes out. Yes, you must stay with me!"

"But you promised. You said—"

"I promised I wouldn't go in—I'm not! But we're going to wait here. I must have it out now—I can't go on!"

"Oh, no, no, don't you see—this will only make it worse. He'll be furious. He'll—"

"He'll have to choose between us!"

"But not before me! Think how humiliating—for you both. Let me go—you must!"

Too late now. Mr. Rawson emerging from the canopied doorway.

Trapped! Horrified, indignant, Helen shrank back.

No escape now.

He paused to light a cigarette. For a second the match illumined his face. More callous and cynical than Helen had ever seen it.

A breathless moment.

About to get in. He had not seen them. Was it possible that he wouldn't—

At the wheel. A jingle of keys as he unlocked the shift.

The car trembled, chugged—

Then he saw them—in the mirror!

Mrs. Rawson, rigid, frozen, gazed back.

The car's tremors died. Not a sound now. The silence ghastly.

"Ah, a little sleuthing on your own?" he addressed the mirror. "Sorry I kept you waiting," ironically. "You should've sent up your card."

"I—I didn't want to disturb your directors' meeting," her voice taut.

"That was considerate. Oh, good-evening, Mrs. Curtis. I didn't see you. Well, where'll we go from here? A little supper?"

"Oh, Harvey, don't!" hysterically. "I can stand anything but sarcasm."

"Well, what is my cue?" still holding her eyes in the mirror. "Just what did you think you'd gain by this?"

"I was desperate! I—I had to be sure."

"Well, now that you're 'sure'—what next?"

"You've got to choose between us. You can't have us both—"

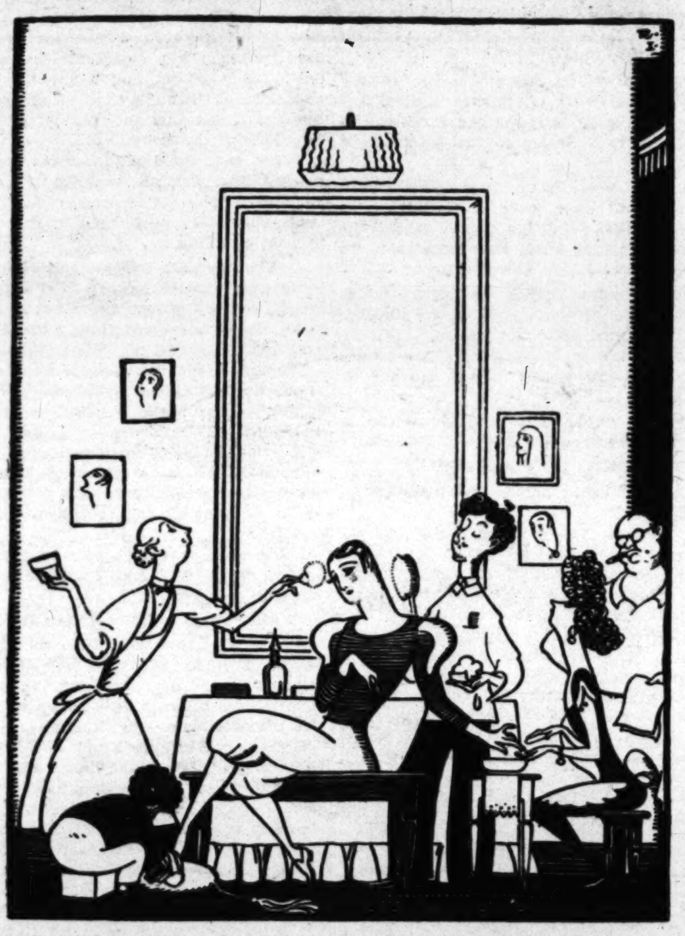
"Both? I don't want either of you," contemptuously. "She's never meant anything to me—and it's a long time since you have. You haven't kept up your end—and you know it."

Now turning from the mirror, he confronted Helen.

"This must be very illuminating for you, Mrs. Curtis. But since you chose to come with Martha—"

"Oh, I didn't know," crimson, she shrank back. "I didn't dream—"

"Well, it doesn't much matter—after what Martha must've told you. And everybody'll know soon."



Cecil Fayne, whom movie fans will recall for his supberb work in "The Great Necker," is shown here dressing for the filming of his new role, "Rowdy Riley, the Halfback of Notre Dame."

Life

"Harvey, you mean—"

"You forced this issue. The sooner we're quits, the better. You've been snooping around spying on me for the last six months. Now I'm through!"

"Harvey, what have I ever done to—"

"What's the use of going into all that again? We certainly aren't happy together—why stick? You get the divorce—I'll not balk at the alimony."

"Alimony! I don't want a cent of alimony," passionately. "I was making eighty dollars a week designing when I married—and I can make that and more now. I happen to know I can get my old place."

"How d'you know you can?" sternly. "Been looking for a job? Haven't I given you all the money you want?"

"Yes, but that's all you have given me. I'm left alone every night. I wanted something—some work to keep me from going mad."

"Might put a little on the apartment and yourself. Need it."

"I haven't the heart. Why should I dress when you never come home to dinner?"

"Why should I come? To hear you nag? Where've I been the night before—where'm I going? If there weren't some one else—your suspicions would lead me to it."

He had been driving on slowly as he flung back his bitter tirade, but now he shot forward with vicious speed.

The rest of the ride in silence. A charged silence.

Mrs. Rawson gray-white. Helen gazing out at the deserted streets.

She felt sick. That sense of nausea any emotional scene always brought. To have witnessed the nakedness of their tragedy! Their corrosive recriminations. Searing words—they could never forget.

Nearing home now.

Helen dreaded the leave-taking. The awkwardness of getting out, of saying good-night under such circumstances.

The Rawsons lived in the adjoining block. They would drop her first.

Almost there. Now they were drawing up.

To Helen's surprise, Mrs. Rawson sprang out, too.

"I'm going to stay all night with you," she quivered.

Under the portal lights, Mr. Rawson's face grimly set.

"You're going home with me!" he almost forced her back.

Then with a ceremonious good-night to Helen, he sprang into the car, and they were off.

In an emotional daze, Helen turned into the now dimly-lit entrance.

He still cared! She was sure of that. It was not too late. Even now they might—

Off the elevator. Fumbling for her key. The lights! Had she left them on?

"Hello, Kitten!" Warren strode from the library. "Where in blazes you been?"

"Oh, you dear!" running to him. "Why, how—"

"Closed that deal sooner'n I expected. Thought I'd get home tonight. Where in thunder you been?"

"I had Mrs. Rawson to dinner—and I—I went home with her," forced to fictioneering.

"Stayed late enough. Know what time it is? After twelve."

"Yes, I know, but they brought me home in the car. Oh, I'm so glad you're here!" hugging him. "I—I just dreaded being alone tonight. If you'd only wired me—"

"Didn't know until the last minute. Had a lively session with Duncan. Don't let me forget these," taking some papers from his suit case. "Here, scoot! Nothin' in there for you."

"She knows you've been away," as Pussy Purr-Mew sniffed at the bag. Then irrelevantly, "Dear, am I getting slovenly—careless about the apartment and myself?"

"Eh? Better put these papers out in the hall with my hat."

"Dear, do tell me—am I letting myself go? Am I less attractive than I used to be?"

"What the Sam Hill you drivin' at, anyway?" tossing a time-table at the waste-basket. "Been readin' some slushy novel?"

"Just a short story," snatching at this alibi. "Where a man turned to another woman because his wife didn't keep herself up and—"

"Darnation! This watch stopped again—dropped it on the train. Here, you get it fixed tomorrow."

"Dear, won't you listen? I want to know—I do keep myself up—and I don't nag, do I?"

"Better not," grimly. "Where's that other watch? What's that? Don't care how cheap it is—it goes!"

"Dear, I don't think you ever notice how I look! It was in that drawer. But you're wonderful! I just know you'd never think of another woman—"

"Maybe I wouldn't—but you needn't hand yourself bouquets," ripping off his vest. "It's not 'cause you're such a prize! I'm too darn busy to fool 'round with any skirts. Now, you forget that story. If you must have somethin' to worry about—gun up somethin' else!"

Fount of Youth

By VINCENT JONES

As butterflies love brodiaeas
And larks the dewy morn;
So I love you, oh rugged hills
Among which I was born.

No inch of you is strange.
Full oft my feet have trod
Each ridge and peak and nestled vale.
I know where blue-bells nod.

They, only, know, who love
Your labyrinthine ways—
Whose oft-repeated truancies
Have honey-combed the days.

I would not so oft return
To your sympathetic heart,
But for your sending back to me
Of your vast strength a part.

gesture which held only the most rudimentary civility, he demanded of Nesta:

"What dog is that?"

"It is my dog." she made answer, voice and eyes level in spite of a sinking in her heart.

For months she had had an undefined fear lest March's owner might some day appear and claim him. It seemed impossible that the possessor of such a marvelous chum would not scour the whole world in search of him.

"He is mine." she repeated, turning away as if to continue her walk.

"One minute, please," he said, stepping after her and then halting with great suddenness as March spun about and faced him with a louder growl and a show of eye-teeth. "Late last Winter I was driving along this road, on my way home from New Haven. We had a blowout. Vile road then, as it is now. I left a valuable collie dog in the tonneau while I got out to help my chauffeur. The dog slipped his collar and jumped out after me. I didn't see him do it; but I found the collar and leash when I got aboard. I suppose he wandered off and you found him. Yes, that's the dog."

For a moment Nesta was tempted to run, calling March after her. But she stood her ground.

"You are mistaken," she said carelessly. "This is my dog. I am sorry you lost yours, but—"

"He wasn't mine," corrected the stout man. "If he had been, he wouldn't have run away from me. I wouldn't have had to tie him in the car. That kind of collie sticks by his master. He—"

"If you don't even claim he is yours," began Nesta in polite contempt, as she made as though to turn away once more, "I—"

"He belongs to a cousin of mine," said the man. "My cousin bought him from an English kennel, and had him sent to a handler, to take on a circuit of the American shows. He'd won his championship in England before he came to this country. Won it at eighteen months. He completed his American championship at the New Haven show this year. He is International Champion Harrowgate Peerless. His kennel name is 'Squire.' My cousin paid three thousand five hundred dollars for him in England. His American championship makes him worth an easy five thousand dollars. This dog here is one of the greatest collies on either side of the Atlantic. He—"

This dog of mine?" queried Nesta innocently. "I'm glad you like him. But I thought you were talking about an English collie that—"

"Same dog!" snapped the man annoyedly. "I can take oath to that. I saw him at the Madison Square Garden show—Westminster,—in Februry, and again at New Haven. I made a close study of him both times. My cousin had to go to Europe the morning of the New Haven show. So he asked me to take charge of his dog after the show and bring him home. My cousin lives at Paignton, about a mile from me. About five miles from here. I got the dog from the handler and tied him in my car. I've told you how I lost him. Pretty position I was in when my cousin got back to America and found I'd let his three-thousand-five-hundred dollar dog get away! I've advertised all over. And now I blunder on him by sheer good luck! I—"

"You seem determined to think—or to pretend to think—that this is your dog," interposed Nesta, a trifle wearily. "I have told you he is mine. I think that is all. Come, March!"

"Squire!" called the man.

At sound of the name, March quivered and turned about.

"March!" said Nesta softly.

Instantly the collie wheeled and ran to her, thrusting his nose into her hand and wagging his great plume of a tail.

"You see," commented Nesta, as she moved off.

"I see." retorted the man hotly. "I see he recognized his kennel name when I spoke it. He—"

"You saw he answered to the name of 'March,'" corrected the girl with amused tolerance. "If he showed interest when you called him, it was because you stepped forward as you spoke. I really wouldn't advise your coming any nearer. Mr.—Mr.—"

"My name is Vanden," supplemented the man, as she hesitated. "I'm acting in this for my cousin, Mr. Derek Royce. This is his dog. And," stubbornly, "I saw he recognized his name of 'Squire.' Not that I needed any more proof. I suggest you give him to me now and save trouble."

Nesta did not reply. The last part of Vanden's speech had gone unheard. Her attention had stopped short and jarringly at Derek Royce's name. She stared stupidly at the stout man. He repeated more truculently:

"I suggest you save yourself trouble by giving him to me at once."

"Certainly!" retorted Nesta, a gust of rage sweeping her. "Certainly. If you want him, take him. March!"

At the anger and appeal in her voice, the big collie stiffened. Facing Vanden, he crouched slightly, his lips upturned from his white tusks, his eyes ablaze, his mighty body tensed as for a spring. Nesta laughed in nervous excitement.

"If he's yours or your precious cousin's," she taunted shrilly, "take him! If I give the word, he'll take you! If you want him, take him. This is the last time I shall give you the chance to. And if you follow me or try to get him I'll say only one more word to him. That word will be enough. Now, do you want him or don't you?"

Vanden looked at the collie. March had begun to move stealthily toward him in a sinuous motion that carried a world of menace.

"Call him back!" said the man thickly.

"Good!" assented Nesta. "Come, March!"

She walked away, March bounding along beside her. Vanden turned upon his chauffeur.

"Drive me to the postoffice," he commanded, "and then to one or two of the shops. It ought to be easy to find who she is and where she lives. There can't be two women in this suburb with such a dog. Any one ought to be able to tell me who—"

"I can tell you, sir," said the chauffeur "and save you all that trouble. She's Miss Ernesta Breen. Lives down on the Wyckoff turnpike, about two miles soutth. Used to live up on Park Terrace till her father died. Folks thought her dad was worth all the cash in the Treasury. But he died just about flat broke. She and her aunt went down to a bungalow of his to live. They—"

"How in blazes d'you know all that?" asked Vanden in surprise.

"I knew it when I drove for Mr. Roycé," answered the chauffeur, "before I came to work for you, last Autumn. He used to be at her house a lot of times when she lived up on the Terrace. I only drove him there once after she moved down to the Wyckoff pike. He—"

"H'm!" mused Vanden, his face clearing. "That ought to make it easier. Let him go there himself and get his dog. It's past me. I'll tell him about it when I go home."

Nesta was hurrying on with March. For the first time she realized how dear the collie had become to her and how much of her lonely and loveless and embittered life he had come to fill. She had no doubt at all that Vanden had spoken the truth about him. She knew, also, that Derek Royce would have no trouble at all in proving possession.

"March," she said presently, "March, they're going to try to take you away from me. They shan't have you! They shan't have you! Do you hear, March? You belong to me. I gambled with death for you; and you're the only friend who never went back on me. Nobody's going to get you away from me, March. We'll fight this out together."

Her words meant nothing to the collie, save the frequent repetition of his own name. But her voice told him she was wretchedly unhappy. Whining under his breath, he licked her hand and laid his head against it, peering up worriedly into her sorrowing face.

"They're not going to take you from me, March," she repeated, this time with a new hope. "I don't know how I'm going to prevent it. But I am. It would be bad enough if you were going to a stranger. But you'll be going to the most despicable man who ever lived, March. He made me think he cared for me once. And he made me think I cared for him. We weren't engaged. March. But I was sure we were going to be. Then dad died, and all the world fell down around my head. And when I crawled out of the wreckage, March, I was in the bungalow, with just enough to keep alive on.

"He came to see me there. Just once. That was all. He never came again. I don't even know why he came there that once, March, unless it was to quarrel horribly with me and make that an excuse for never coming near me any more. But he let me see he had no use for me, now that I hadn't any money or any position or any friends. He was just like all the rest of the people I had known. Only they hadn't pretended to care for me, and he had. No, March, you're not going to him! I'd sooner shoot you. We'll fight this out, we two."

The fight began sooner than Nesta feared. As she and March were walking through the rose-garden alongside the bungalow, after lunch, a car stopped at the gate. Nesta looked up, nervous and apprehensive. Derek Royce was coming across the patch of lawn toward her. Already he had cut off her retreat to the house.

Her hand on March's ruff, she faced him.

"How are you?" Royce greeted her, seeming not to see that she ignored his half-extended hand; then speaking to the dog with a cheery "Hello, Squire, old boy!"

This time March did not stiffen nor curl his upper lip as when Vanden had approached him. Instead, he viewed Derek with friendly courtesy, waving his tail in salutation. True, he did not seem overjoyed or excited at encountering his long-lost master. Yet he was politely glad at the meeting.

Nesta saw his amicable greeting of the loathed Derek, and her heart sank within her. Her miserable gaze strayed to the car at the gate. In the tonneau lounged Vanden his thick fingers idly toying with a dog-collar and leash. The action, and all it implied, set the girl's temper ablaze.

"My cousin told me he met you and Squire on the River Road this morning," Royce was saying. "so I ran over to see if the dog was really the one I lost."

"He isn't," Nesta made answer, her voice curiously muffled. "He is my dog. And you aren't going to take him away from me."

For an instant Royce did not reply. He was looking from the girl to the collie. March had discovered a hop-toad in the grass and with pricked ears and head on one side he was following gravely the toad's frightened hops. Then Derek said:

"When I went away from here the last time, I told myself I should never come near you again, I didn't care to go through another such evening or hear things said to me that you said then. I've spent a solid year trying to forget them and to forget you. Then, today, when I found a legitimate excuse to bring me back, I came to you as fast as I could. I'm afraid I am a rather poor apology for a grown man."

"I am afraid that is the kindest thing you can say of yourself," she returned, adding: "And now, will you please go?"

"No," refused Derek, "not quite yet, if you don't mind. I have been doing a good deal of wondering this past year— especially at night. Then, yesterday, in my woods, I found a sparrow that had got caught by one wing in a mesh of vine-tendrils. He was half dead with pain and fright. I set him loose. But as soon as I touched him, he pecked furiously at my hand. I understood why. He was so terrified and harrowed that he thought the whole universe was his enemy. He—"

"I am not interested in ornithology," she intervened, "or in poetic speculations as to the heart-throbs of sparrows. Will you please—"

"That made me wonder if I hadn't found the key to something else," pursued Royce. "I remembered how bitter you were when a crowd of worthless parasites dropped you after your—your misfortune—and how you got to looking morbidly for slights, even when there were no slights to find. You were sick with grief over your father's death, and you were incredulously angry over the way some few toadies had treated you afterward, and you got to thinking the whole universe was like those toadies. So—"

"May I ask you once more to—?"

"No, not yet. I called here when things were at their worst and when you were most on the lookout for slights. You blazed out about some mighty good friends of mine who weren't in that category at all. I defended them, I remember. It made you still angrier. You turned on me and hinted that perhaps I might care to drop away, too, since I could stand up so eagerly for other people who did. That started our silly, red-hot quarrel. I suppose I said a lot of rotten things; and I know you said things that made me vow I'd never see you again. The sparrow pecked at my hand when I was saving it from that vine-tendril. I wasn't angry at the sparrow, because I understood what it must be suffering. Then I got to

CROSSED WIRES

By John T. McCutcheon

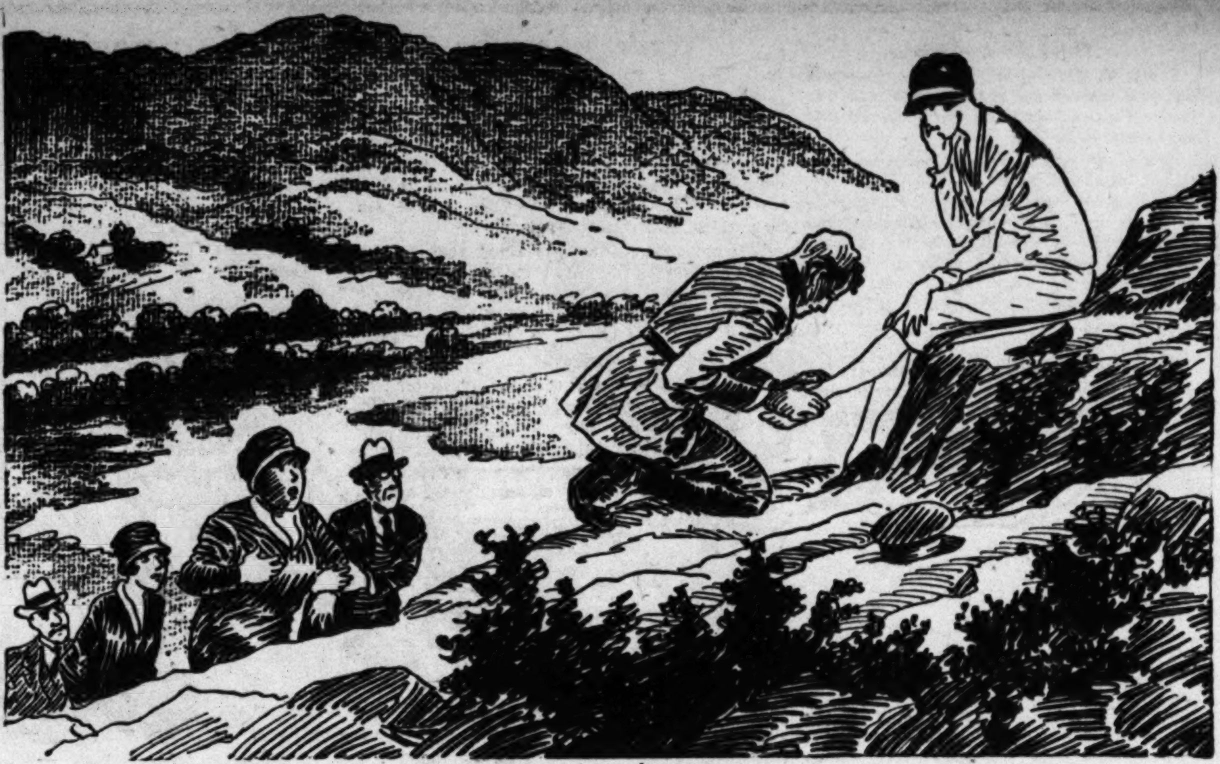
ILLUSTRATED BY THE AUTHOR

THE STORY SO FAR: The Craytons, wealthy Americans, are in Paris. A worthless Frenchman, Pierre de Barsac, tries to win Virginia. The mother approves, but Mr. Crayton is suspicious. To divert Virginia he arranges to have a young American named Rasher, whom he has met in Paris, return on the Leviathan with them. Virginia becomes intrigued by the manner of this man. It is a great shock to her sensibilities, therefore, to learn he had formerly been a truck driver. This fact does not daunt her father, who immediately hires Rasher as chauffeur.

On reaching New York the Craytons are met by de Barsac, who had arrived before them. Virginia and her mother invite him to accompany them on the motor trip home. Young Rasher pays a secret visit to his lawyer. His real name is Bacon, and he is extremely wealthy. Because of a love of adventure he frequently travels incognito.

The trip begins. They stop at a village for lunch, and Rasher notices that three men eye them as they enter the hotel. Shortly after resuming their drive they are halted by a man whom Rasher recognizes as one of the three. The other two appear and rob the party. Rasher is shot trying to protect Virginia. She later visits him in a hospital and finds she loves him. She refuses to continue the trip until he is better.

Mr. Crayton, meantime, on the brink of a great financial loss, is saved by a mysterious gift of $600,000. A friend of Rasher's plays the role of chauffeur and the trip is continued, Rasher being left behind. Virginia sprains her ankle and Wells, the chauffeur, comes to the rescue.



Wells was on his knees before her.

INSTALLMENT TWENTY-SEVEN

FROM the veranda Mrs. Crayton watched Virginia and the Count depart on the little sightseeing trip up the neighboring hills, guided by the inexcusably good-looking chauffeur. She noted with satisfaction that her daughter was particularly nice to the Count, and as long as they were in sight her beaming eyes never left them.

She was glad she had declined to join them. The surroundings were beautiful and the setting a favorable one for romance; the pleasant opportunities for physical contacts which climbing rugged paths afford the gentleman would not, she was sure, be neglected by the gallant Count.

So she found a comfortable chair and gave herself over to day dreams of the future, when she would be a welcome visitor to the chateau of the Count and Countess de Barsac.

An hour passed and then another. Instead of becoming anxious, she construed the prolonged absence to be an excellent augury of romantic events now transpiring some place up on those lovely heights. She closed her eyes in gentle speculation.

When she reopened them and glanced down the pathway leading to the hills she sat up in sudden alarm. The Count was coming—alone. He was walking very fast and was carrying his hat. With the other gloved hand he frequently mopped his brow. Something must have happened!

She ran down the steps to meet him.

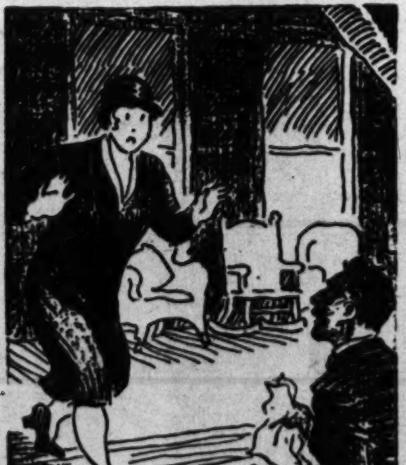
"Your daughter," panted the Count, "has sprained her ankle."

"Mercy!" she cried, much agitated, "but you haven't left her alone up there?"

"No, madam, the chauffeur is bringing her down slowly. I thought it best to hurry ahead and see that a doctor is on hand when she arrives."

"How thoughtful," she murmured, vaguely disappointed. Subconsciously she had an uncomfortable feeling that her dream castles were again threatened with collapse.

They hurried into the inn, and after a short delay were assured that a doctor was on the way and would soon arrive. In a quarter of an hour that seemed much longer a sedan dashed up to the door with a grinding of brakes and the doctor, a pompous little man, came running up the steps. He at once demanded to be taken to the patient.



She ran down the steps to meet him.

"The patient has not yet arrived," said Mrs. Crayton, "but she will be here presently. The chauffeur is bringing her in—she has sprained her ankle."

As the minutes passed with no sign of the patient, it occurred to the doctor that it would be well to go out and meet her. So he, with Mrs. Crayton and the Count, reinforced by Celeste, the French maid, started briskly out toward the scene of the mishap.

Pierre and Celeste fell a few paces behind.

"Oh Pierre," deplored the maid in a tense whisper, "What has become of your cleverness? How could you have left her when you had such an opportunity to be heroic?" She raised her eyes in desperation. "And to leave her with that chauffeur—the most attractive man I've met in this stupid country! Ah, mon dieu, my friend, you are losing your cunning."

"Shut up!" growled the Count.

"Ah ha, you tell me to shut up!" she flamed. "You don't like to be reminded that you have acted with monumental stupidity! You throw this girl into his arms—what can you expect? They will fall in love, my friend, mark my words!"

Something in her tone made him glance quickly at her.

"I believe you're in love with this handsome empty-headed chauffeur yourself."

"Idiot!" she snapped, and with an ominous tightening of her lips and a dangerous glint in her black eyes, she redoubled her pace and left him lagging behind.

Virginia Crayton and Wells were found a few hundred feet farther on. Wells was on his knees before her. She had removed her stocking and he was tenderly but firmly massaging her ankle. Both looked up as the relieving party arrived and both seemed annoyed at the intrusion.

"Oh, Virginia, my child!" cried her mother, dramatically, as she struggled up the incline. "Oh, my child, are you suffering terribly?"

"It's nothing, mother, dear. I'm sorry you've been alarmed. It's only a twisted ankle." She turned to the stranger. "You are the doctor, I suppose."

"Yes, miss." The doctor, with the authority of his calling, displaced the chauffeur and skillfully manipulated her swollen ankle. "It is not serious," he said, frowning professionally. "A few days of care and attention will find it as good as new. However, we must now get you down to the inn and dress it properly. I'm sorry you have been obliged to walk on it."

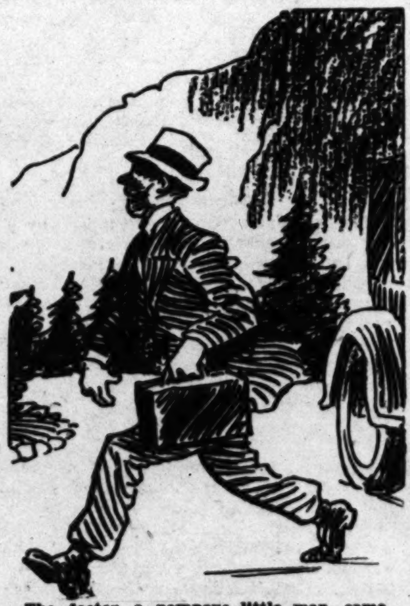
"But I haven't walked on it," replied Virginia, with a sudden effusion of color. "He has carried me," and there was no mistaking the softness of the glance she gave the chauffeur.

Celeste shot a bitterly triumphant glance at the Count, who was biting his mustache.

Wells now spoke up. "The path was very steep and rough," he explained, "and so we had to go pretty slow."

Mrs. Crayton sniffed. "You should have been back half an hour ago."

The chauffeur's answer to this rebuke was a faint smile not at all in keeping with his position. He then lifted Virginia gently in his arms and resumed his way to the inn. Mrs. Crayton glanced helplessly at the Count, whose narrowed eyes evaded hers. He also evaded Celeste's glare of withering fury. The sight of another woman in the arms of the chauffeur was maddening to the French maid, who, in spite of her cold-blooded sophistication, had been so stirred by this attractive youth.



The doctor, a pompous little man, came running up the steps.

If she was quick to fall in love she was equally quick to hate and her hatred was now turned toward her accessory in this fortune-hunting plot.

It was a brooding group that followed Virginia and the chauffeur. There were no more delays and the party soon arrived at the inn.

"Will it be safe to resume our trip?" Mrs. Crayton asked the doctor.

"Oh, certainly, after a day or two," he answered, "but unless there are urgent reasons for haste, I would advise remaining here at least until tomorrow or the next day."

She sighed resignedly. There were really no reasons for haste.

One thing was evident, Virginia Crayton was in love with the handsome Wells, or, if not in love, something very near it. To be clasped in the arms of an extremely good-looking young man, one whose good looks were supplemented by humor, education and physical strength, and to be tenderly carried in this way for an hour or more with occasional stops during which he gently massaged her bare ankle, were likely to stir emotions in even a less impressionable girl than Virginia.

And Wells had not escaped heart-whole. While the doctor was bandaging her ankle, he sat in a secluded spot some distance from the inn, his head in his hands. "What a ghastly complication," he thought. Here he was, committed by all that was loyal, to protect the interests of his friend, Harry Rasher, whom he assumed to be deeply in love with Virginia. And now through no intention or purpose, he was feeling an aching tenderness at the thought of her. He knew what that meant.

"Confound it, I've tried to fall in love a lot of times when there were no barriers. Now I've got it good and plenty and with a girl that I'm in honor bound to lay off of. Talk about tough luck!"

He revolved the situation dejectedly. Something inside of him which he would not put into words told him insistently that Virginia—well, liked him, perhaps a good deal. The question was, did she care for Rasher? That was the crucial point. And even if she did not, would he ever be able to convince Rasher that he had acted as a loyal and honorable friend should act?

In his mind, it was a point of honor. He had embarked in this enterprise in a spirit of fun and adventure. His mission was to circumvent the Count even if in so doing he might have to make a little love to the girl. He hadn't the slightest fear that his own emotions might become seriously involved.

But love is something you cannot turn on or off, like a faucet. It comes, sometimes unbidden and even unwelcome. The mind counsels one course, the heart another. The heart repeals the advantageous marriage which the mind advocates.

"Love," reflected the unhappy Wells, "is a damned illogical and unreasonable thing. You can't head it off, or steer it up a side street, once it gets going."

He walked gloomily back to the inn, deep in thought, and hardly noticed Celeste, whose eyes filled with tears at his preoccupation. It was the first time in years that an honest tear, mothered by an honest emotion, had dimmed those cold, designing black eyes.

One had the feeling that some one would sooner or later have to pay for those tears.

They found Ben lying on the floor behind his desk, unconscious.

The Yellow Dog's Bone

By Lowell Otus Reese

IT WAS the end of a chaotic day. Since sunrise a terrific sandstorm had been raging across the Mohave Desert; a steady blast of hot wind driving before it a constant fury of stinging sand and burning alkali dust. The one main street of Mesa Caliente was a channel, down which drove the berserk storm, and not even a scrap of sun-yellowed paper stayed to litter the thoroughfare. Old tin cans, long buried in the loose sand, were dug from their graves and sent rolling and leaping along the street, to vanish at last across the open space which encircled the town, ending finally in the greasewood brush beyond.

At the worn old desk, far back in the rear of his store, Ben Camp shut his books with a bang, threw them into the safe, locked the safe and made for the door. It was still too early to close the store, but on an evening like this he knew there would be no business. Everybody would be congregated in Ike Naylor's place, drinking near-things and waiting for the storm to pass. Ike Naylor's place had been a saloon and dance hall once upon a time. That was long ago, before society took the overconfident John Barleycorn by surprise and slipped him such a jolt that his mourning seconds are working over him yet. But Ike Naylor did not go down with Johnny Barleycorn. He stayed, featuring card tables and a place for gregarious desert men to congregate. The old bar stayed too, and behind it old Ike stood as of yore and dealt cool near-drinks to the thirsty citizens who now came to use the place as the civic center.

Ben Camp clung to the knob while locking the street door behind him. When he straightened up, he looked across the street to where a yellow light glowed in the window of the telegraph office. Above the low railroad station the telegraph wires hummed in the gale.

Leaning and tacking against the incredible wind, his eyes held half shut against the stinging sand, Camp won across the street and went into the station.

A girl looked up from the telegraph key and nodded, smiling: "Hello, Ben!"

"Hello, Carlin! Gee, what a day!"

"Gee is right, Ben!"

"No. 3 late again?" inquired the young man.

"Two hours," answered the girl. "Been bucking sand drifts and wind ever since she came up over the rim of the desert."

"Where's the night operator? He ought to be here."

"Night operator's late too. I don't know what's delaying him."

"You'll miss your supper, Carlin."

"Supper's full of sand anyway, Ben. I don't care.

"I'll tell you," said the young man with a sudden inspiration, "I'll run over to Ike Naylor's place and get a can of salmon and some iced milk and crackers. Then you and I will have our supper here while you're waiting for the night operator to come on the job."

"Loud applause!"

Once more the young man battled across the street. When he came back he had miserable news. "You poor kid!" he said. "I saw Doc Sigler in Ike's, and he says the night operator has been taken suddenly sick. Ptomaine or something. He won't be able to work tonight."

Carlin Travis accepted the matter with resignation. "It's up to me, then," she said. "But, after all, who could sleep on a night like this? Did you say something about iced milk, Benjamine?"

Camp spread a newspaper upon the desk and unwrapped his purchases. "Never mind, Carlin," he said. "About another year of this and our little old mine up on the butte will be on its feet. Then we'll be married folks. And we'll kiss the grim old desert good-by and go down into the Sonoma Valley and buy a ranch. Hop vines over the kitchen door; red roses in the yard; oranges and lemons all over the place, and chickens cackling their fool heads off! A cool spring in the back yard and a flivver in the garage. About one more year, little feller!"

"Don't, Ben! I want to give three cheers and there's so much dust in my throat I can't. . . . Wait—"

She turned to her key. When she resumed her place at the table her face was serious.

"It was from Price & Overton's messenger," she explained. "He's coming up on No. 3 with six thousand dollars in currency for the Dexter mines. He has been taken suddenly sick and wants me to have some responsible person to meet the train and take charge of the money, in case the Dexter wagon isn't here yet."

"Must be an epidemic!" said Camp. "First the night operator—and now it's the Price & Overton messenger! Hard luck always comes in a flock! Say, I didn't see anything of the Dexter wagon. Storm's probably laid it out too."

"You think you can take care of the money until morning, Ben?"

"Sure can. Six thousand dollars! Say, Carlin, if you and I had six thousand dollars we could make all our dreams come true, couldn't we? Well, never mind. When our mine starts producing, why, six thousand dollars will look like sixteen pennies in baby's bank!"

"Ben." Carlin was worried. "I don't like to put this responsibility on you—"

"Aw, say! It's too hot to sleep. You said so yourself. Besides, I'm away behind with my posting; so I'll just chuck that wad of lettuce in the safe and get busy. When morning comes I'll be caught up with my books. Hello—there's No 3's whistle, Carlin."

It was the middle of the night, but the social gathering in Ike Naylor's place continued to surge about the card tables, for it was too hot and stifling to think of sleep The phenomenal storm still roared across the desert. Above the thunder of its raging and half drowning the noise of flying gravel, which stippled the uproar with staccato patterings against the windows, arose the constant vociferation of tongues. Glasses jingled upon the bar where Ike and his underlings dealt out their wares. Everywhere cards smacked upon the worn tables with a thumping of heavy knuckles and a cacaphony of ejaculations, exultant or disappointed, but always scandalous. The speech of the desert is not polished.

Hunched forward in his chair, his lean cheek resting upon a card table, old Topango Jake Shinn slept heavily. He was very tired, for late in the evening he had come in from Table Butte, fighting the storm all the way. Topango Jake was in the way, certainly, but no one disturbed him. It is not considered good form to stir up a desert man unnecessarily, however old and insignificant he may appear.

The player at the old man's right went broke and arose with an outraged observation which need not be repeated here. Another eager adventurer took his place just as the deal came to his turn. As the new arrival dealt, he leaned slightly to his left. His coat and vest were unbuttoned; something dangling from a half-hidden inside pocket of the vest tickled the sleeper's nose.

Topango roused and found his face within six inches of a man's chest. The thing that tickled his nose was a worn rabbit's foot, dangling at the end of a thin chain, and it wiggled grotesquely as the dealer sent the cards rippling above the old man's head and flowing round the table in a lisping stream.

Still half asleep, Topango studied the rabbit's foot. There was a broken place in the chain, and the two links had been tied together with thread. The threads had worn almost in two, and the rabbit's foot dangled precariously. This much Topango saw and then he drifted back to sleep. But as he did so, he heard above the roar of the storm and the clamor of the crowd the voice of old Jeff Plummer shouting: "What time is it, Ike?"

And then Ike Naylor's answering yell: "Twelve-ten, Jeff. The midnight passenger has just gone through."

Then old Topango Jake was gone once more into peaceful oblivion.

About daybreak the storm went suddenly by and a deep stillness succeeded it. Carlin Travis rose wearily from her chair and looked out of the back window toward Camp's store. A dim light still glowed from the window, but there was no sign of life.

"Strange!" thought the little operator. "Ben ought to be whistling and sweeping out the store. I never knew him so quiet so early in the morning."

She went back to her key, but a vague feeling of uneasiness persisted. At last she left the office and went across the street to Camp's store. A moment later she stumbled from the place and ran screaming down the street to Ike Naylor's. Old Ike rolled off the bar and rubbed the sleep from his eyes as the girl burst into the room.

"What's the matter, Carlin?" he asked.

"Ben!" sobbed the girl incoherently. "Oh, come—hurry—Ben's been murdered!"

When Topango Jake next awoke, the storm had been succeeded by a strange quiet. The vocal tumult was too stilled. He had slept very, very heavily, for he had heard nothing of the excitement, and even the cessation of the roaring outside had not wakened him. The terrific heat continued, and the air was thick with an impalpable dust which had been left behind by the storm and which afflicted the nostrils.

As he stirred, the old prospector became aware of excited conversation over the bar, where half a dozen men were grouped, talking with Ike Naylor.

"What time did she happen?" Topango heard Jeff Plummer ask.

"Hard to tell," replied Naylor. "Must have happened early in the night, though, for there ain't any doubt the robber got away on the midnight passenger."

"But wasn't the night operator there when the train went through?" demanded Plummer.

"Night operator was layin' off," said Naylor. "Sick. Carlin Travis took the night trick."

There was a short silence. "Is he hurt bad?" inquired a voice.

"Doc says he'll be all right in a few days," said Naylor. "Shocked a heap and lost a lot of blood, but he'll pull through, doc says. Little Carlin's over at the hotel takin' care of him."

Old Topango got stiffly out of his chair and walked over to the bar. "What's the matter?" he asked.

"Ben Camp was sittin' up in his store last night," Naylor told him, "guardin' six thousand dollars belongin' to the Dexter mines.

Good Short Stories from Everywhere

COMPILED FOR THE TIMES SUNDAY MAGAZINE

More Than Foam

From A. S. Crockett comes the story of the way one of the subeditors of the late James Gordon Bennett's Paris Herald had his salary increased.

It was the custom of the men to send out about midnight for a supply of beer. Among those who worked at the long copy desk was a person of the most abstemious habits, and one evening, when a footstep everybody recognized sounded in the hallway outside, the empty bottles were hastily stacked on a shelf immediately above the head of the teetotaler.

As Mr. Bennett entered, every pair of eyes was bent upon the copy on the table. The row of bottles caught his gaze. He smiled.

"Ah, Mr. Blank," he said, "you apparently have to buy a lot of refreshment."

"Yes, sir," replied the other timidly, and not daring to utter more.

"On your salary I don't see how you can afford it," went on the commodore. "I think we shall have to increase your pay one hundred francs a month." And the salary was put up.

Extra Kick

The meter reader tried the back door and found it locked. Then he rapped. Getting no response he thumped, and finally the door was opened. When he entered he saw a boiler on the stove, and leading from it a coil and a pipe, making it instantly recognizable as a still. Perhaps his manner was unintentionally brusque, and when he asked, "What are you doing with that thing?" the man who was operating, said, "Oh, I'm just doing my washing," and with that he chucked a dirty shirt into the boiler.

The meter reader laughed, passed through the kitchen and down cellar. The householder followed and saw that instead of making a search of the cellar for mash and bottles he simply read the meter.

"So that's it," he muttered, as he went back upstairs. "And that shirt was so danged dirty that I'd hate to use that mash now; but the other fellow won't know the difference."

A Little Long Fellow

John Boynton was a dignified and very solemn little boy, and at the age of five he made his first visit to his grandparents. Kind efforts to make him feel at home were futile. He refused to talk or warm up to his anxious hosts. Even an early supper with chocolate cake left him unresponsive.

So he was escorted up to his bedroom by despairing relatives. Here an old-fashioned, elaborately carved child's walnut bed had been set up for him. At sight of it he became wildly excited, broke into a run, clambered in, lay flat on his back, stretched, rolled over, then sat up with a beaming smile of supreme satisfaction and relief, and announced to the breathless relatives, "Yes, it fits!"

Horrible Example

Rev. W. P. Nicholson recently appeared at an evangelistic meeting with his trousers rolled up to his knees and his arms and chest bare. The men gasped at him in astonishment and the girls and women giggled themselves almost into hysteria.

The preached finally explained that he was only showing the girls their own appearance in the eyes of others, when they wore low neck and sleeveless frocks.

Purity

It wasn't so long ago that the craze for pineapple and lamb chops swept through the motion-picture studios. After all, diet is quite important among picture people.

The other day, Norma Shearer dropped into a downtown restaurant and when her order arrived asked the waiter if the salad contained the usual vitamines.

"No ma'am!" exclaimed the waiter emphatically. "Dat lettuce am perfec'ly clean. I done saw de cook wash it wif my own eyes!"

Avoid Disgrace

Isaac and his wife went to the clothing store to buy Isaac a suit of clothes. After inspecting a number of suits Isaac found one to his liking, the price of which was $75, and, of course, Isaac thought that was much too much money for the suit.

After arguing the matter of price for quite a while the clothier reiterated:

"It will take $75 to buy this suit."

While Isaac was hesitating his wife spoke up and said, "Oh, Isaac, give him his $75. Don't be so Scotch!"

Modern Pirate

The late James Gordon Bennett, one of the most remarkable journalists of all time, was little known as a practical joker.

"On one of his cruises in the North Sea," writes A. S. Crockett, "with a congenial party on board, he put into port. The guests had become a little bored because of the disagreeable weather, and their host decided he would provide them with an original sort of entertainment.

"An excellent theatrical company was playing at one of the local amusement houses, and Mr. Bennett invited its members aboard the yacht one afternoon. While they were occupied below, he gave the orders to put out to sea. When the actors and actresses realized where they were, land was no longer in sight, and there was no hope of getting back to port in time to play the performance booked.

They were in great distress, but the commodore had them give a private performance for the benefit of his guests, and not only handed each a liberal present, but reimbursed the theater for its loss.

Novel, at Least

Jason Robards, stage and screen leading man, told this one the other day between scenes of "The Door Mat" over at Warner Brothers studio:

A more than slightly inebriated person stepped out of what was formerly known as a "saloon."

Across the street an antique dealer was moving his wares to a new location up the street a block, and had hired a big husky to carry a grandfather's clock to the new store.

The inebriated one watched the big fellow struggle with the clock for a hundred feet or so and then staggered after him.

When he got within hearing he said: "'Scuse me. Don't want to 'pear 'pertinent but why the deuce don't you buy a wrist watch?"

Too Risky

While Grant and Leota Whytock were in France with Rex Ingram, they naturally made a number of friends, many of whom took great pride in their family histories. One family in particular had an album of which it was very proud and when the opportunity presented itself, nothing would do but what Grant and Leota must see the pictures.

"And this one," said the hostess, after an interval, "was killed in a feud."

"How distressing," exclaimed Leota, "I always feel nervous myself, when I ride in one of those cheap cars."

Midgets

Just before the term ended some of the kiddies from the primary grades were taken to San Pedro to visit the fleet. They went on board the Pennsylvania and no sooner were they on deck than one little fellow pointed to a group of sailors and asked:

"Please, teacher, what are those men in the funny hats and pants?"

"Why, those are sailors, Johnny."

Johnny looked doubtful. Finally he said: "Well, if those are sailors, I want to see one fall asleep on his watch, like we read in class the other day."

Quite Correct

A superintendent, visiting a school in the country, was asking the children general knowledge questions.

"Now, children," said he, "I wonder if any of you can tell me what an 'average' is?"

There was a silence for a while; then a little chap jumped up and said, "Please, teacher, it's a thing to lay eggs on."

"A thing to lay eggs on? But what makes you say that, Tommy?"

"Well, sir, mother says that our old hen lays six eggs a week on an average."

Inadequate

Donald and Jeanie were putting down a carpet when Donald slammed the end of his thumb with the hammer and began to pour forth his soul in language befitting the occasion.

"Donald, Donald!" shrieked Jeanie, horrified. "Dinna swear that way!"

"Wummun!" vociferated Donald, "din ye know ony better way, now is the time to let me know it."

Preferred Brand

When Eddie Montague received a hurry call to go to New York to consult on stories for 1927 production, Agnes decided to go along too, and what with the packing and one thing and another, had very little time to prepare meals.

She was ordering some ready-to-eat things from the grocer and in a pause the latter said:

"How about a couple of cans of peaches? —I'm sure your husband will like them."

"The peaches my husband likes," snapped Agnes, "come in bathing suits, not cans; that's why I'm going to New York with him!"

Playing Safe

Irving Berlin, at a dinner party in New York, listened in silence to a number of harsh criticisms on the music of Mr. Blank, a popular composer.

"Well, Mr. Berlin, what do you think of Blank?" a woman asked.

"I think it's rather unwise to make fun of Mr. Blank's compositions," said Mr. Berlin, "for you never know who composed them."

Wanted Change

When the Hollywood skating rink opened, Emmy Emerson caught the craze and went to the rink nightly. One evening she boarded a car to go home, her skates dangling from her arm. An elderly gentleman rose and offered her his seat.

"No, thank you," said Emmy sweetly, I've been skating all evening and I'm tired of sitting down."

Heads or Tails

The following story is accredited to James Whitcomb Riley:

In the early days of the Civil War two young men, Tom and Jim, from the same little northern town, were privates in the same regiment. They were devoted chums, and they made a compact with each other that under all circumstances, no matter how exciting the battle, they would safeguard each other. Should one be wounded and fall, his comrade would immediately try to carry him to safety and care for him.

A day of terrible fighting came, and, as the regiment was storming up a hill, Jim fell. Tom stopped at once, dropped his musket, lifted up his wounded comrade, placed him over his shoulder, and started for the rear.

He had carried his buddy a little way, when a shell burst about them and blew off the head of the wounded man. Tom did not know of this second casualty, but courageously plunged on with his burden toward safety. The captain saw this soldier carrying this headless corpse, and shouted at him, asking him what his idea was in carrying a dead man.

Tom halted, placed his comrade on the ground, looked at him with amazement, and said, to his superior officer, "Well, by gosh, Jim told me it was his leg!"

Just Fit

The teacher had explained that an anonymous person was one who did not wish to be known. A little later in the lesson someone in the class laughed out loud and lessons were halted.

"Who laughed?" demanded the teacher.

"An anonymous person," promptly replied King Baggot Jr.

Rubbing It In

Perhaps the crankiest artist that ever painted a picture was the famous Whistler. Mark Twain once visited him in his studio. Putting on an air of hopeless stupidity, Twain approached a picture on which Whistler was working.

"Not at all bad, Mr. Whistler, not at all bad. Only, here in this corner," said Twain reflectively, "if I were you I'd do away with that cloud."

"Gad, sir!" shrieked the artist, "do be careful! Don't you see the paint is not dry yet?"

"Oh, I don't mind that," Twain replied, "I'm wearing gloves, you see."

Guaranteed

William Lord Wright, the serial king, is quite a collector of antiques and is always receiving bric-a-brac from friends who know Bill's failing.

The other night, one of these friends, recently returned from the Holy Land, called at Bill's Hollywood home and presented him with a vase which he declared Rebecca used to take to the well.

"I'm sure it is genuine," said the friend, "because the boy I bought it from assured me it was the original, as he had stolen it himself, and I believed him because he had such an honest face."

Great Fun

Madame De Lange, whose luxurious hair vies in fame with that of the Seven Sutherland Sisters, naturally deplores the bob. "In too many cases, though not always, a woman loses much of her feminine charm. Even children notice it, as I had occasion to observe when the twins, Tessie and Teddie, were condoling with one another.

"Of course you can never be a boy," conceded Teddie, "but you can cut your hair the way the other girls do and maybe I can forget you're a girl and give you a nose bleed and black eyes just like the rest of us boys."

This mornin' they found Ben layin' on the floor behind his desk, unconscious. He'd been walloped on the head with a pick handle, and the safe was busted open and the money gone."

This was black news. Old Topango had lived many years in this little village before going to Table Butte, where he now had large mining interests.

Ben Camp had been a great favorite with him since the boy was a child; and Carlin's father and old Topango had been almost like brothers in the old days.

He went straight to the hotel and up to the little room where Carlin sat beside the bed. Ben was unconscious. Carlin looked up as her old friend entered. There was terror in her eyes, and a great hopelessness. She did not wait to greet Topango.

"The sheriff has just been here," she said. "He's going to arrest Ben as soon as he regains consciousness?"

"What for?" demanded Topango, amazed.

"He says it's—a—plant!" wailed Carlin. "He says Ben stole the money—and that I—I helped!"

"You?" Topango sat down weakly in a chair. "Is he drunk?"

"I don't know!" The young man on the bed moaned, and Carlin forgot everything else. Doc Sigler came in.

"Say!" were Doc's first words. "Maybe that sheriff's a detective—but I'll be cussed if I can see how Ben Camp could have hit himself such a welt over the back of his own head with a pick handle!"

Topango said no more. He got up and went over to the store. Here he found the sheriff sitting upon Camp's desk, a big black cigar clamped in his hairy jaws.

"You got any clue, sheriff?" asked Topango.

The sheriff regarded the miner with a sarcastic grin and winked at the bank messenger, who had recovered on hearing the news and who now sat on the counter opposite, silent and moody.

"We ain't foolin' with clues," said the sheriff. "We got the robber."

"Meanin' who?"

"This fellow Camp. He's over in bed at the hotel, playin' 'possum. I got a deputy watchin' outside. Camp'll get tired of this here 'possum stuff pretty soon, and then I'll see that he comes across."

"But see here," argued Topango. "I've knowed Ben Camp ever since he was a yearlin'. Ben never done that. He couldn't."

"I've seen a lot of that kind!" retorted the sheriff. "Just the sort of people to pull this kind of thing. Sure!

"Wasn't he hard up? Wasn't he needin' money to develop a mine he's got up on the butte? Wasn't him and that sharp little telegraph girl plannin' to get married and shake the desert for good?

"I got all the dope, old-timer. What was easier than for him and this Travis girl to frame the thing together? Nobody but them two knew the messenger was sick. The storm kept everybody away from the station and the store. Even the Travis girl says nobody left on the midnight passenger. They had everything in their favor. It was a cinch. But one thing they didn't count on—me bein' an old bird at this game!"

"You got it right, sheriff," applauded the mesesnger. He was a fat man with close-clipped mustache and a steely, unfriendly eye. "You sure got it right. Plain case!"

Topango Jake Shinn was breathing thickly. "Sheriff," he said, "I got a big healthy interest in the McQueen mines, over in Table Butte. I can write my check for twenty thousand easy. I'll bet you that much your're wrong. I'll bet it against a dollar!"

Again the sheriff winked at the messenger. "Good odds," he admitted. "But I'm an officer of the law, doin' my sworn duty. I wouldn't take your money, poor feeble old man! Price & Overton are offerin' a thousand dollars for the robber and the money. That thousand'll do me, I reckon!"

For a few moments there was absolute silence in the room. Topango made no move, but his thin, transparent old nostrils quivered and his eyes never left the officer's face. When he did speak, his voice was low and smooth. "Maybe I am old and feeble," he said. "And I know that the law is a mighty ticklish thing to fool with. Same time, I got something left inside of me that never yet saw an innocent party gettin' a raw deal and laid down without makin' some sort of a play. Now—"

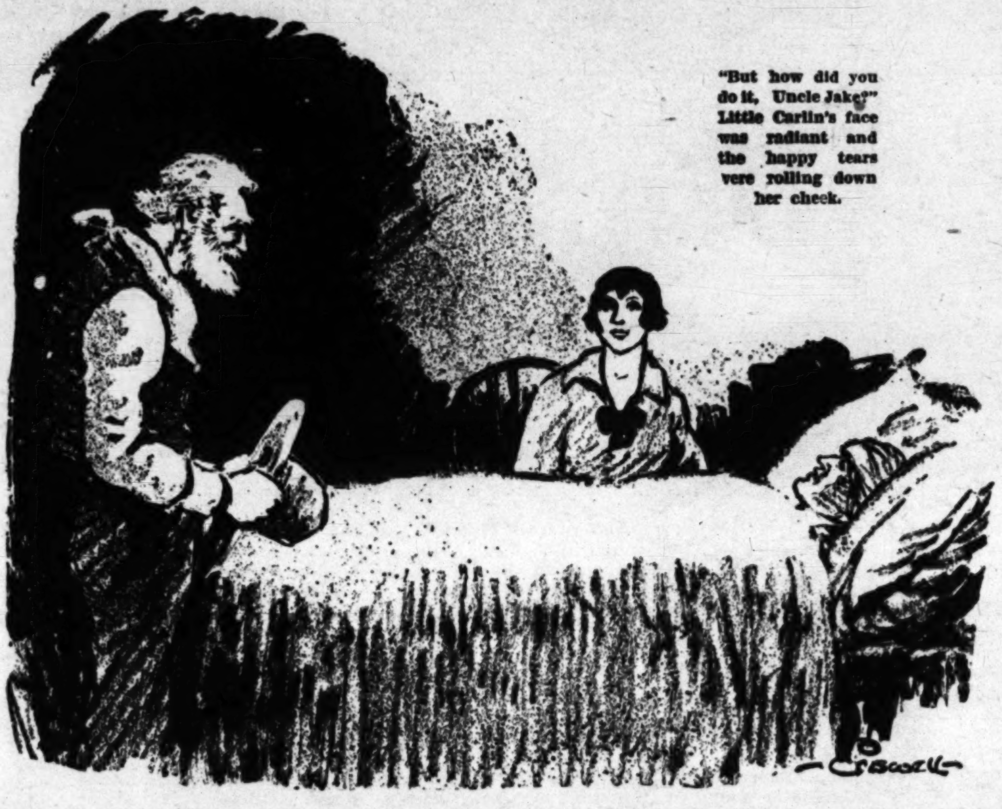
The sheriff did not know Topango Jake Shinn. He merely saw a stooped, gaunt old man, inoffensive and tiresome. He slid from the desk, for he had seen Carlin Travis hurry up the street and enter the telegraph office.

"I reckon he's ready to spill the big news by this time," he said, ignoring Topango and starting for the door. "I'll just travel over to the hotel and get him while he's ripe. And on my way I'm goin' to drop into the station and throw a scare into that Travis girl—"

He stopped. Somebody had slid around and now stood between him and the door. "Wait a minute!' said Topango, and smiled.

"Sheriff," went on the old man, still smiling, "I won't bet you twenty thousand this time, but I'll tell you what I'll do: I'll bet you a cigar against a grasshopper's hind laig that you don't worry Carlin Travis none—not till you've found Ben Camp guilty!"

He waited. One gnarled old hand hovered close to his belt, the trigger finger twitching. There was a dead silence in the house.



"But how did you do it, Uncle Jake?" Little Carlin's face was radiant and the happy tears were rolling down her cheek.

The sheriff hesitated. He too knew that you never can tell.

"Oh, all right," he said presently. "It don't matter. If she's such a great friend of yours—"

"She is," said Topango briefly. "And don't you forget it!"

The officer went out, followed by the messenger. Daddy Parsons peeped from the door and watched The sheriff did not go in the station.

"You skeered him, Topango," crackled old Daddy Parsons. But Topango did not answer. Upon the floor at his feet, tucked closely beneath the edge of the desk and half covered by bits of crumpled paper and the other litter following the sheriff's search, lay an object that interested him profoundly.

With elaborately assumed indifference, Topango stooped and picked the object from the floor. When he was out on the street he examined it carefully,

It was a worn rabbit's foot. To the link still clung some bits of the thread which had held it together precariously the night before when it had tickled the old man's nose.

But now there was a red-brown stain on it.

Topango looked across at the hotel. The sheriff was just entering the door, followed by the faithful Price & Overton messenger.

"Well, sheriff," he mused. "Mesa Caliente's wrong in one way. It thinks the robber went away on the midnight passenger. But this little rabbit's foot tells me he didn't. The passenger train went through at midnight. Ten minutes later this durned rabbit's foot was ticklin' my nose in Ike Naylor's place. There ain't been a train since.

"No, sir, Mesa Caliente's wrong. The robber's still right here in town!"

Topango Jake went back to Ike Naylor's place and sat down by a window in an inconspicuous corner. He wanted to think. But the more he thought the farther away he found himself from a solution of the problem. Along toward the middle of the after*noon the citizens of Mesa Caliente congregated in the big room and the regular Sunday celebration began. Topango still occupied his chair by the window, and now his* temper was growing to be the temper of a grouchy rattlesnake. He listened sneeringly to the conversation all about him. Mesa Caliente to a man believed the robber had left on the midnight passenger train.

"Sure," he heard Jeff Plummer say, "whoever he was, he slipped on to the blind baggage, or maybe on to the rods, and now he's down in Los Angeles, spendin' that six thousand like water!"

But Topango knew better. That moment was vividly before his mental vision—the moment when he awoke with this rabbit's foot tickling his nose. It belonged to the robber, of course. And again he heard, above the roar of the storm:

"What time is it, Ike?"

"Twelve-ten, Jeff. The midnight passenger has just gone through."

Topango looked through the window. The storm had gone by and the sun was shining. Far to the east the Panamints lay against the sky, and all in between was freshly drifted sand waves. Old Topango sighed.

"Yellow dogs!" he said bitterly. "That's what they are. Yellow dogs that sneak around, living off the labors of decent creatures." He looked out again upon the drifted sand. Not a track had been left by the gale. An idea came to the old man.

"Now what would a yellow dog do," he wondered, "if he had a bone that he was afraid to try to get away with? Bury it? Shorely. But where? Suppose he stole it out of Ben Camp's store. He wouldn't dare to hide it any place in town. He'd carry it out into the desert a ways and bury it. He'd figure the storm would cover his tracks; that is, if he was a cunning yellow dog.

"And after the yellow dog got his bone buried good and the storm had covered up his tracks and the marks of his diggin', wouldn't he sneak off and wait till all the other dogs had forgotten about him, then slip back some dark night, dig up his bone and carry it away? Shorely. If he was a wise yellow dog. Yes, sir; if he's buried it anywhere here, it's gone—and Ben and Carlin are in a heap of trouble. Because he won't go near it; no, sir, he'll just look innocent and let us hunt till we're black in the face."

A man sitting next to him reached over and tapped the old prospector gently upon the shoulder. Topango turned and saw a long, narrow gentleman with piercing black eyes, ferocious black mustache, and wearing a long-tailed, shiny Prince Albert coat. The stranger's eyes and mustache were indeed Mephistophelian, but the smile was engaging, and it displayed a remarkable collection of gold teeth.

"You live here, friend?" he inquired.

"Not now," Topango told him.

"Lonesome thing, bein' a stranger in a big crowd like this," said the long, narrow man. He got out a greasy card and handed it to Topango politely. The old prospector took it and read:

PROFESSOR TREVOR MONTAGUE
Psychic Explorer. Clairvoyant
Lectures Consultations
Lost Articles Found

The professor cleared his throat. "Friend," he said, "I've been observing you for some minutes, and it has come to my psychic perception that you are perplexed. If I can assist you—"

The gleam of another idea shot up on the far back horizon of Topango's mind. Superstitious! The yellow dog was superstitious! Else why had he worn a rabbit's foot? He contemplated the greasy card with increasing interest.

"Does your card mean that you can locate hidden treasure?" he asked. "Money and things?"

Again the wide; gold-filled smile. The stranger removed the high silk hat from his head and carefully smoothed the worn nap with his sleeve. "That's my specialty, friend," he said.

Topango thought rapidly, and suddenly the whole beautiful idea burst fullorbed across his mental sky.

"Professor," he said, "is it on the level that you can do it?"

The professor straightened haughtily and glared. My dear sir—" he began, but Topango interrupted.

"I know—I know—" said the old desert man.. "But this is on the level, I mean. Man to man, you know. Hey?"

He waited, grinning. The professor glared some more, then scratched his bony chin. Plainly the glare was beginning to grow hard to hold. Presently the professor's face relaxed, and he grinned too.

"Brother, he said, "don't whisper it abroad! On paper I'm a he wolf and I've got all the oldtimers skinned a mile for prophesyin' stuff. But just between you and me, brother; I'm a horse doctor early in my life; then I joins up with a circus and graduates into a medicine show. Right now I'm busted like a bladder, and for two whole days I been far, far away from a square meal. There, you got it. Honest confession, they say, is good for the soul—but I never heard tell of it buyin' any beans. Still, this time I reckon it'll buy me a meal and a shakedown at yonder hotel, hey, friend?"

Topango gravely took a five-dollar bill from his pocket and handed it over. The overcome stranger burst into thanks, but Topango restrained him. He leaned across and put a hard forefinger against the professor's dagger-like knee.

"Professor," he whispered, "could you make Mesa Caliente believe you're a sure-enough treasure finder? Could you throw a front that would convince every soul in town that you're a he wolf like you said? Can you scare 'em?"

"For how much?" inquired the professor cautiously. His psychic perception scented further aggrandizement. Perhaps as much as five dollars more. "For how much, brother?"

"For one thousand dollars," whispered Topango, and the professor nearly fainted. He opened his lank jaws three times before he could speak.

"Brother," he said tremulously, "for one thousand dollars I can throw a front that would scare the devil himself into a bad fit of nervous prostration!"

Topango Jake Shinn hitched his chair closer. "Brother," he whispered, "listen here. Listen good."

For five minutes they whispered together earnestly. No one noticed the animated colloquy, far back at the rear of the room. Their conference ended, Topango Jake and the professor drew apart and were utter strangers again.

The evening meal was over and Ike Naylor's place was crowded again. In his accustomed chair, far back in an obscure part of the room, old Topango Jake Shinn sat and crooned to himself:

I said I was a howlin' wolf from old Missouri
State;
I found I was mistaken, but I found it out too late;
I could chaw up any man—so my conversation ran—
When I rolled my prairie schooner into old
Shy-anne.

As he crooned Topango watched the street door from the corner of a sun-faded eye. Presently he was rewarded; a tall, narrow man wearing a shiny Prince Albert coat and a high silk hat entered and paused dramatically just inside the door.

"Gentlemen!" he intoned. It was the voice and the attitude of the ancient prophet, announcing to the frivolous citizens of Nineveh that moving day was impending. The crowd stilled instantly and looked toward the door, where the professor stood glaring terribly, his black mustache waxed until the points stuck out like daggers.

"Gentlemen," said the stranger again and waved a large, bony hand toward the bar. At the same time one sensed a gracious unbending of that proud spirit.

Nearly everyone present recalled the old days when an invitation to the bar might not be ignored. In those ancient days, when a stranger entered a saloon and invited the house to the bar, a refusal to participate was absolutely unthinkable. It simply was not done. In fact, to have refused would have been tantamount to pulling your host's nose at a church dinner. Old memories came strongly upon the men of Mesa Caliente, and they lined the bar, six deep. When every glass was full of the near-drink, the crowd stood silent, waiting expectantly upon its host. That gentleman was regarding them gravely, and there was something in those black eyes that made the flesh creap.

"Before we drink to our auspicious meeting," said the professor, "I wish to announce that tomorrow night I shall give a reading on the Hidden Mysteries. At the town hall, friends. I am a clairvoyant I find lost and hidden things. I lift the veil and let you look into the future. Gentlemen," he finished with an awesome lowering of his voice, "here's how!"

He drank expertly, but with the dignity of a potentate drinking with a swineherd. Hardly had the glasses been returned to the bar when some one asked a respectful question.

"Do you mean that you can find things that have been stolen and hidden, professor?" he asked. "Or taken away, say to Los Angeles?"

Down at the end of the crowd a wizened old prospector looked at the mirror back of Ike Naylor's burly form and met the professor's eyes. But neither made any sign. The long, narrow man showed all his gold teeth in a tolerant smile.

"Why, who found the treasure of the Calico mine?" he asked, amused. "Me, friends. Ten thousand dollars in specimen ore which the high graders had hidden in the sand. Buried, gentlemen, out in the trackless wilderness! Who found—"

"Ben Camp's store was robbed last night," burst out an excited individual, "and six thousand dollars was taken! You reckon you could tell where she is, professor?"

Again Topango's eyes met the professor's eyes in the mirror with a fishy stare. The professor turned to his new questioner with a smile that was benevolent and patient.

"My friend," he said kindly, "should I gain by telling you a lie? And should this thing be hard for one who three years ago located the La Jolla treasure—fifteen thousand dollars in minted gold which fleeing smugglers had secreted in the sand dunes beside the rolling Pacific? You recall that notable case, do you not, friends?"

No one did. But no one doubted that such a noble thing had been done. Yes, the professor had impressed Mesa Caliente to the last man.

"It is my business to discover buried treasure," he went on. "Tomorrow night at the town hall I shall point out the exact spot where you may find your six thousand dollars. If it is secreted near here, I can do it in five minutes of concentration. If it is far away, why, then, it will, of course, take longer. Moreover, in such a case I might perhaps fail. But should it be within a mile of Mesa Caliente, I shall tell you where it is without doubt. In five minutes! Remember that, gentlemen—in five minutes!"

The long, narrow man left the place and his going was as the going of Mephistopheles. Behind him the crowd talked in hoarse whispers, their games forgotton. The professor undoubtedly had made a tremendous impression.

Topango Jake Shinn watched for a few moments, then slipped unostentatiously out into the gathering night. He was crooning again:

Oh, listen to my song, and take advice from me!
And when you leave Missouri, this wicked world to see,
Dress up if you can, like a trouble-huntin' man
But don't you hunt no trouble down in old Shy-anne!

The moon was high now and it flooded the desert until it was almost as light as day. A long, dark figure was just disappearing round the corner of the station house. From the baggage truck on the other side of the station a hidden watcher could see all the way up and down the western side of town.

Topango grinned in the moonlight; then he slid into the alleyway and made for the rear of Ben Camp's store, where he stood close against the wall and settled himself for an all-night wait if necessary. He was crooning again beneath his breath, so that he would not have been heard three feet away:

Now the victim I selected weighted about a hundred pound;
Fifty inches up and down and half a span around;
Oh, my troubles they began with this sickly little man,
For he ruined me completely, down in old Shy-anne!

It was nearly midnight. Topango's old legs were quivering with the strain of standing still so long, but he stuck doggedly to his post. Before the old man lay the open space that encircled the village. Beyond the open space was the low brush, silent and unreal in the night, shot with the silver arrows of the moon and full of mystery.

Across the open space, furtive and stealthy as a moving cougar, stole the figure of a man and entered the brush. A hundred yards he traveled, and then he stopped, knelt, and began pawing the sand at the foot of a scraggy yucca tree. It was exactly like a yellow dog digging up a bone. Only a short while and he laid hold of some object and pulled it from the sand. As he did so, something that resembled an ancient catamount fell upon his back, twisting a skinny arm about his neck. At the same moment his assailant uttered a raucous screech which was answered immediately from behind the station on the other side of town, two hundred yards away. Then both men went to the ground together. The yellow dog struggled to reach the gun at his belt, but a calloused old hand met his wrist and he could not break that grip. He relaxed just as a second figure, wearing a long Prince Albert coat and carrying a rope, loped up through the brush.

"Who is he?" wheezed the professor, and sat on the victim's legs.

"I don't know," gasped Topango, working scientifically with the rope. "I been too busy to notice.

They turned the bound man over, and the moonlight fell upon his face as he opened his eyes and struggled for breath. It was the Price & Overton messenger.

"He-he!" snickered old Topango. "Lost your rabbit's foot, didn't you? Thought you'd sneak out and dig up your bone and leave on the midnight passenger before the professor started clairvoyantin' round here, didn't you? That's what comes of bein' superstitious. He-he-he!"

"But how did you do it, Uncle Jake?" Little Carlin's face was radiant and the happy tears were rolling down her cheeks, for it had been a breaking strain. Old Topango grinned and his glance shifted to the face of the sick boy on the bed.

"I figured he was superstitious," said the old man. "So I got the professor to spread the news that tomorrow night he would start clairvoyantin' after that money! Tomorrow night; see? Naturally the messenger got it into his head that he'd better beat the professor to it and get out of here. Tonight. Professor and me—we figured he'd do just that—we laid for him. That's all."

Topango began to croon again, exactly like a contented cat:

Oh, they took my scalp off tenderly and hung it on my ear;
They took me all apart and scattered pieces far and near;
There was nothing left to scan, of the bad Missouri man,
When they quit and went to supper, down in old Shy-anne!

In a Cafe

At a corner table in the little cafe, Femininity sat and gazed coyly over her fan. Near by were Egotism and Logic.

"Ah!" cried the former. "She's flirting with me."

"Nonsense!" replied Logic. She means me. I can prove it to you."

And the two began a long, tiresome argument. Whereupon, Action, who had just entered, bowed politely to Femininity, and, escorting her to the door, drove off with her in a taxi through the park of Adventure.

wondering how I had been such a fool as not to understand why you—"

From the gateway was issuing a most prodigious racket.

March had followed the hopping toad across the grass to the gate, where the toad ended the chase by slipping into a hole under a post. Vanden, from the tonneau, had viewed the slow approach of the collie.

Into the stout man's brain seeped a really brilliant idea. How simple to end the whole dispute by lifting the collie into the tonneau and bidding the chauffeur drive off! Royce could get a taxi from the village station to take him home. On his arrival he would find his dog in his kennels. Possession was nine points of the law.

While March was engrossed with his toad-trailing Vanden got to the ground, collar and leash in hand. With great swiftness he swooped down on March from behind, seizing him with one hand by the nape of the neck and lifting him bodily over the fence.

Skillful was his grip; and it rendered the growling dog impotent to bite or to escape. It was this growling that attracted the notice of Royce and Nesta. By common consent they started for the gate at a run. Vanden heaved the dog aloft to thrust him into the tonneau. The man's toe stubbed against the corner of the gate-post, throwing him off balance. He thrust out both arms instinctively to right himself. The collie tore free from the loosening fingers.

Scarce had March touched ground when he was at the man who had sought to kidnap him. He hurled himself roaringly at Vanden. The latter, his balance still uncertain, slipped and fell with a crash in the roadside ditch.

Like a furry avalanche, March was after him. Half-stunned by the impact of his head against a stone, Vanden lay helpless, his throat exposed to the ravening jaws.

Then, almost in mid-air, the dog checked his charge. His foe was down and no longer could defend himself. March ceased his attack on an enemy who had been rendered impotent and prostrate. He stood gazing down at the dizzy Vanden and making no move to renew the charge.

"Good sportsman, Squire," applauded Royce, vaulting the fence. Good clean sportsman! You're too clean to punish him when he's down and out. Get up," he went on, far less approvingly, to his cousin. "Get up and climb back into the car. Why on earth did you do such an abominable thing?"

"And now," said Nesta, trying to speak calmly, "will you please let go of my dog and go away? I—"

"Her dog?" snorted Vanden, scrambling back into the safety of the car. "Her dog? We can get a hundred reliable witnesses to prove—"

"Shut up!" ordered Royce. "We can't do anything of the kind. From your description I thought maybe this dog might be Squire—my Champion Harrowgate Peerless. That's why I came here. Well, I came on a wild-goose chase. I didn't get—I didn't get anything I came for. The dog looks a bit like Squire. But it isn't Squire. I never saw this dog before. So—"

"You're crazy!" shouted his cousin, aghast "Why, I saw Squire time and again! I can swear to him."

"He was my own dog, and I saw him much oftener than you did," declared Royce. "And I can testify this isn't the dog. We've made fools of ourselves by coming here after him. I never saw this dog before, I tell you. Miss Breen, will you try to forgive my intrusion if I promise never to repeat it? I congratulate you on owning such a fine collie. Good-by."

He got into the car, forbearing to meet Nesta's wide-staring eyes. As the chauffeur made ready to start, Derek heard a stifled little voice begging tremulously:

"Will—will you please come back here—just a minute?"

Unbelievingly, Derek stared down at her. Then he was on the ground and following her into the garden. As soon as they were out of earshot from the car, Nesta turned to face the eager man.

"Take him," she said, her eyes on March, who was standing protectively beside her. "He's your dog. You lied. But it—it was a beautiful lie. I lied, too, when I said he was mine. And it was a disgusting lie. You—you and March—I mean Squire—you two aren't going to be the only clean sportsmen in the world. I've—I've been learning something—from both of you."

"He belongs to you!" cried Royce, his face alight with a wondering hope. "I won't take him—without you. I—I—"

"Derek Royce!" sobbed the girl, her hands tight in his, but her tear-misted eye focusing on the fat figure in the car, "Derek Royce, did any one ever tell you—you have the most atrocious taste in cousins?"

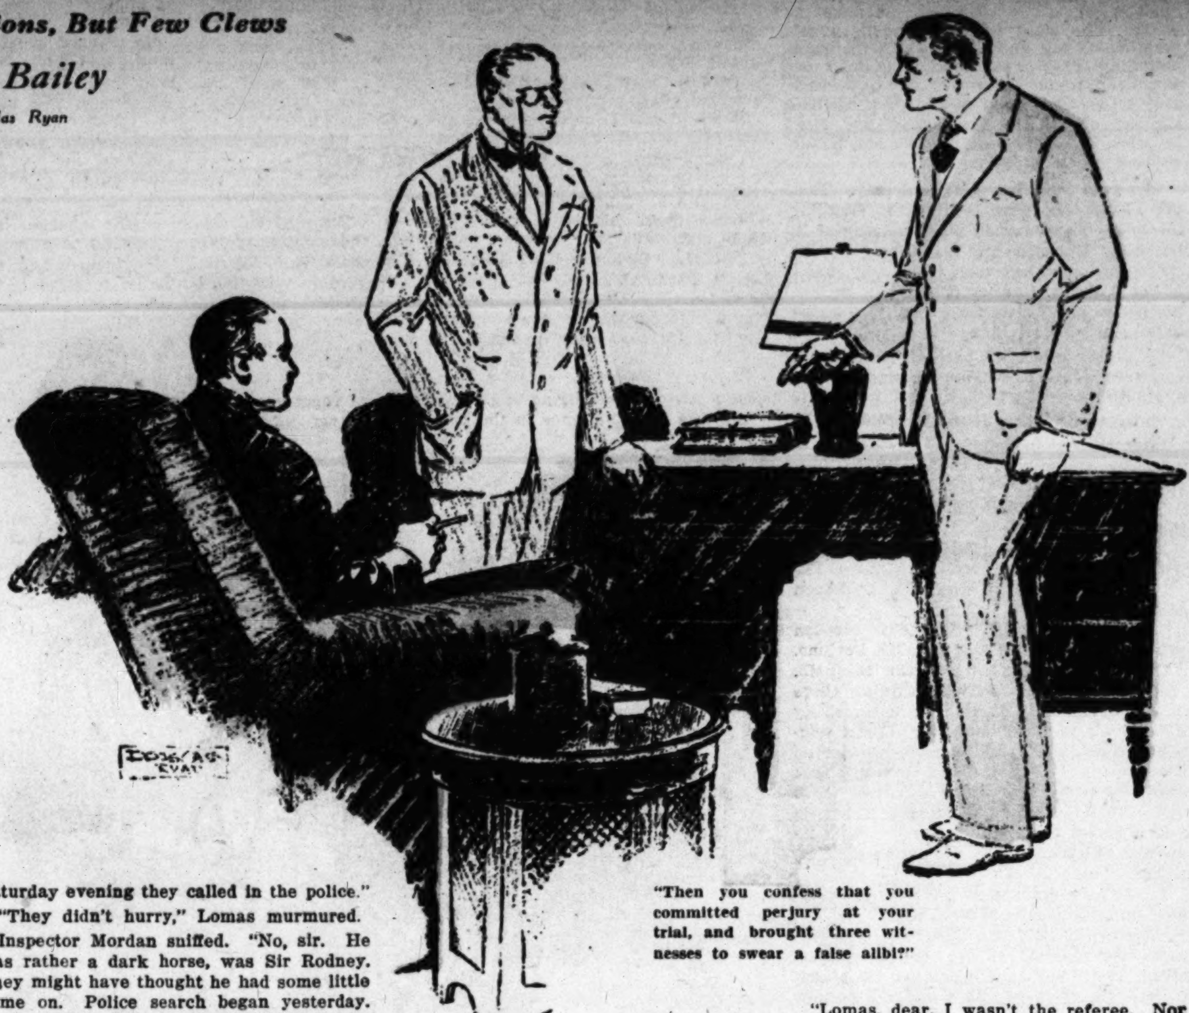
THE YOUNG GOD

Murder, Plentiful Suspicions, But Few Clews

By H. C. Bailey

Illustrated by Douglas Ryan



"Then you confess that you committed perjury at your trial, and brought three witnesses to swear a false alibi?"

THE front of Brighton flowered in June sunshine. Conspicuously jaunty among that flippant crowd tripped the Hon. Sidney Lomas, chief of the Criminal Investigation Department. By the lawns he was stopped. His adviser on the medical and other problems of crime stood in his way.

"Are you up already?" Mr. Fortune inquired.

They made their way slowly through the Sunday crowd, impeded by opulence expanding itself and women displaying for their admirers what Art can do for Nature.

"The world is too much with us," Lomas said. "It is like being in a musical comedy, Reginald. We are the crowded chorus. Rather gaudy, rather noisy we are. No wonder chorus girls look bored."

"We're a musical comedy and the audience jumbled together. I feel like somebody in the dress-circle, Lomas. So innocent and humble."

"There's somebody who knows he isn't."

Reggie Fortune looked at the man, a magnificent creature towering out of the crowd with shoulders worthy of his height and a sunburnt, aquiline face. He had a cluster of admirers round him, women and men. The passing crowd sent many a glance at him. He was well aware of it.

"Worship him, don't they?" Lomas chuckled. "One of England's gods."

"He's a noble young god," said Reggie. "It makes you feel alive to look at him. I saw him score his try in the last international. Took the ball off the feet of the Scottish forwards and cut right through. And we all went mad. Very uplifting, Lomas, old thing."

"Oh, a splendid animal," Lomas agreed. "The big blond beast in perfection. These be your gods, Oh, Israel."

For this young man was Douglas Charlbury, center three-quarter for England and the most dashing bat in the merry Sandshire team, and his portrait and his praises were in all the newspapers.

After lunch Reggie Fortune discovered that Sandshire were to play Sussex next day and was joyful.

"Lomas, old thing, we will go watch the young god sport. If he don't bat, he'll be fielding, which is almost as good. The music of motion. Full orchestra."

But it was not to be. When Reggie propped up his paper against the coffee-pot on Monday morning he saw a headline: "Sir Rodney Trale Missing." It appeared that Sir Rodney, who lived on the South Downs, had not been seen since Friday night, and his family wanted news of him. Reggie sighed. For Sir Rodney Trale was the uncle of Douglas Charlbury. It was not likely that the nephew would be playing cricket for anyone till the uncle was found.

Reggie finished his lonely breakfast—Lomas was invisible before noon—and wandered out. When he came back to the hotel he saw a lank back which turned to show him a gaunt, dark face, that grinned.

"Mordan?" Reggie groaned.

"Good morning, sir," said Inspector Mordan briskly. "Lucky I found you. Mr. Lomas in, sir?"

Reggie groaned again and led him to the lift. They found Lomas sitting in front of his dressing-table perfecting that work of art, the wave in his hair.

"Very sorry, sir," said Inspector Mordan. "It's the Trale case. They've found the body and called us in."

"What is the Trale case?" asked Lomas peevishly.

And Inspector Mordan told him at length. Sir Rodney Trale lived with his sister and his niece in the ancient house of Chantries, which stands in a park under the Downs. Sir Rodney, who was a great man on the turf, had his training stables close by. On Friday evening he walked across the park to dine with his trainer. He ate that dinner, they talked horses, and he left the house about half-past ten.

"That's what the trainer says," Lomas murmured.

"Just so, sir," Inspector Mordan nodded. "Well, after that, Sir Rodney vanished. No one was sitting up for him. On Saturday morning his valet found that his bed hadn't been slept in. The family rang up the trainer. They looked about for him. On Saturday evening they called in the police."

"They didn't hurry," Lomas murmured.

Inspector Mordan sniffed. "No, sir. He was rather a dark horse, was Sir Rodney. They might have thought he had some little game on. Police search began yesterday. This morning they got to dragging the lake in the park and they found him." He turned his beady tyes on Reginald. "That looks natural enough, as you might say. Gentleman after dinner tumbles into his lake. But the chief constable has phoned us to take it up and bring an expert. It's quite providential your being down here already, Mr. Fortune."

They packed themselves into a car and drove away up the valley till the steep northern scarp of the Downs rose above them and they came upon great trees and wide, misty green spaces of the Weald.

The park of Chantries is a pleasant place of little hills and little cliffs clothed in ancient velvet turf. The house of Chantries is mellow red brick of the time when Wren was playing with Hampton Court.

At the door they were met by a bluff military chief constable, who said it was a bad business, and he was glad to see them. They came into a hall hung with family portraits and Reggie drifted from one to the other, while the chief constable told Lomas that he had nothing to tell him.

"We've got the body and that's all we've got. I hope your man can make something of it. I've got Trale's own doctor here, but he's no good at this sort of thing."

"Fortune!" Lomas called, and Reggie turned reluctantly from the portrait of a seventeenth-century Douglas Charlbury, the bold, aquiline face of the young god of football and cricket looking out of a periwig.

Sir Rodney's doctor was a pleasant old fellow. He received the great Mr. Fortune with the homage an anxious father would give to a capable son come to take trouble off his hands.

"A terrible affair, Mr. Fortune. I fear there must have been foul play. I shall be so relieved to have you take the case. You see—"

And Sir Rodney was not pleasant to see. He lay in his sodden evening clothes, a bulky man of sixty. His face was bruised in ugly colors, his lip cut and swollen, and, thus injured, the fierce aquiline features had a look of horrible malignity.

And after a long while:

"Well, well. What did you make of it, doctor?" said Reggie.

"I—I'm very much afraid those injuries were inflicted before death, Mr. Fortune."

"Yes, yes. There was a fight and then he was drowned. And rather a curious fight. Yes, that's all he can tell us."

The old doctor gave a sigh of relief. "That is death by drowning, then."

"Yes,"—Reggie gazed at him—"yes. He died because he couldn't get out of the water. But why couldn't he get out of the water? And how did he get in?"

"Really, Mr. Fortune, I have no idea!" the old doctor cried.

"He had, though," said Reggie, looking at the rage on the dead face.

When they left that room two people came out of another, a young woman, short and frail, an old woman, even smaller, who leaned heavily on her arm. White hair and the wrinkles of ill-health in the elder could not disguise how like they were in delicacy of feature and in the gentle simplicity of their dark eyes.

"Dr. Turner"—the young woman spoke—"can you tell us anything?" And Reggie Fortune liked her soft voice.

"I am most distressed, Miss Charlbury. I'm afraid I must tell you—your poor uncle—there must have been foul play. Mr. Fortune—oh, Miss Trale, Miss Charlbury, this is Mr. Reginald Fortune, the great authority on these cases—" Mr. Fortune made his bow. "Mr. Fortune has formed the opinion that Sir Rodney was—was murdered."

"Oh!" said Miss Charlbury.

"No, I wouldn't say that," Reggie murmured. "I didn't say it. What I have said is that Sir Rodney met with violence before his death."

"Is there any difference?" said Miss Charlbury.

"Oh, Joyce! Oh, my dear!" Miss Trale wept.

"It's very good of you to help us, Mr. Fortune," said Miss Charlbury, and led her aunt away.

Downstairs Lomas and the chief constable were closeted together in a little library, turning over many papers.

"Well, Fortune, what about it?" Lomas cried.

"The man was drowned. Before drowning he was knocked about with fists by a rather hefty fellow. And somehow he got something poked into his right eye, something thin and narrow and sharp."

"That didn't kill him?"

'Oh, no. But it must have hurt. He might have lost the sight of the eye if he had lived. Nothing worse."

"How did he get stabbed in the eye if the other fellow was using fists?"

"Lomas, dear, I wasn't the referee. Nor am I a clairvoyant. He might have fallen on a spike—a splinter—a stump."

"But you can swear it was a fellow with a punch that hit him?"

"A very hefty fellow with a powerful left," said Mr. Fortune.

"That's murder," said the chief constable, and lay back in his chair and looked with horror at Lomas. "What a terrible thing for the family!"

Lomas, who was again turning over papers, passed him one. It became clear to Reggie Fortune that he could be more use somewhere else. He drifted away. The family portraits in the hall again attracted him. The pattern of face and body which Sir Rodney Trale and his nephew both possessed was plainly hereditary. Big, fair, aquiline, high-colored, the men of the family had been like that for centuries. But another strain showed itself. Many of the daughters of the house were of the dark, frail, gentle beauty which had come to Miss Trale and Miss Charlbury.

Reggie turned to find the family doctor behind him. The old man had been up to see Miss Trale. She had felt the shock sadly, and her health had never been good.

"Poor dear lady!" the old man sighed. "Her brother to go first and like this! She was devoted to him. How often that happens, Mr. Fortune! Weak women give their lives up to watch over strong men."

"Yes, yes. This is a curious family, doctor. All the men are big and strong and most of the women weak."

"Very true," the old doctor sighed. "Splendid fellows, the Trale men. Have you ever seen Douglas Charlbury? His mother was a Trale, of course. He is Miss Joyce's brother. Curious how different they are. Poor dear Joyce! Between her uncle and her brother"—he pulled up short—"ah, Mr. Fortune, it's these weak women who save men's bodies and souls."

The old doctor bustled off, and Mr. Fortune wandered out into the park.

He proposed to go down to the trainer's house and see what might be seen on the path by which Sir Rodney had walked his last walk. But he was diverted by the garden from business, which is one of his bad habits, and so he came into the park by a walk between noble yew hedges in which hollows were cut for stone seats. Where the rolling turf of the park opened before him he saw something glitter on the ground and picked up a little piece of greenish-brown quartz carved into the likeness of a heard every note. Then the band crashed fortissimo, and that creature rolled his eyes, and gnashed his teeth, hissing at me with the greatest ferocity, 'Be silent! No noise or—'"

I could not get over my astonishment.

"What sort of knife was it?" I asked stupidly.

"A long blade. A stiletto—perhaps a kitchen knife. A long, narrow blade. It gleamed. And his eyes gleamed. His white teeth, too. I could see them. He was very ferocious. I thought to myself: If I hit him he will kill me. How could I fight with him? He had the knife, and I had nothing. I am nearly seventy, and this is a young man. I seemed even to recognize him. The moody young man of the cafe! The young man I met in the crowd. But I could not tell. There are so many like him in this country."

The distress of that moment was reflected in his face. I should think that physically, he must have been paralyzed by surprise. His thoughts, however, must have been extremely active, they ranged over every alarming possibility. The idea of setting up a vigorous shouting occurred to him, too. But he did nothing of the kind, and the reason why he refrained gave me a good opinion of his mental alertness. He reflected that nothing prevented the other from shouting, too.

"This young man might in an instant have thrown down his knife and pretended I was the aggressor. Why not? He might have said I attacked him. Why not? It was one incredible story against another! He might have said anything—bring some horrible charge against me. What do I know? By his dress he was no common robber. He seemed to belong to the better classes. What could I say? He was an Italian—I am a foreigner. Of course I have a passport and there is our consul—but to be arrested, dragged at night to the police office like a criminal."

"But what did you do?" I asked, greatly excited.

"Nothing," answered the Count. "I let my hands hang down very still. I told him quietly I did not intend making a noise." He snarled like a dog, then said in an ordinary voice:

"'Vostro portafoglio.'

"So I naturally," continued the Count—and from this point acted the whole thing in pantomime. Holding me with his eyes, he went through all the motions of reaching into his inside breast-pocket, taking out the pocketbook and handing it over. But that young man, still bearing steadily on the knife, refused to touch it.

He directed the Count to take money out himself, received it into his left hand, motioned the pocketbook to be returned to the pocket, all this being done to the thrilling of flutes and clarinets sustained by the emotional drone of the hautboys. And the "young man," as the Count called him, said: "This seems very little."

"It was indeed only 340 of 360 lire," the Count pursued. "I had left much of my money in the hotel, as you know. I told him that was all I had on me. He shook his head impatiently and said:

"'Vostro orologio.'"

The Count went through the dumb show of pulling out the watch, detaching it, presenting it. But as it happened, the valuable gold timepiece he possessed had been left at a watchmaker's for cleaning. He wore that evening (on a leather strap) the Waterbury fifty-francs thing he used to take on his fishing expeditions. Perceiving the nature of this booty, the well-dressed robber made a contemptuous clicking sound with his tongue like this, "Tse-Ah," and waved it away hastily. Then as the Count was returning the disdained object to his pocket, he demanded with a threateningly increased pressure of the knife on the epigastrium by way of reminder:

"'Vostri anelli.'"

"One of the rings," went on the Count, "was given me many years ago by my wife; the other is the signet ring of my father. I said, 'No. That you will not have!'"

Here the Count reproduced the gesture corresponding to that declaration by clapping one hand upon the other and pressing both against his chest. It was touching in its patient resolution. "That you will not have," he repeated firmly, and closed his eyes, fully expecting—I don't know whether I am doing right by recording that such an unpleasant word had passed his lips—fully expecting to feel himself being—I really hesitate to say—being disemboweled by the push of the long, sharp blade resting murderously against the pit of his stomach—the very seat in all human beings of anguishing sensations.

Great waves of harmony went on flowing from the band.

Suddenly the Count felt the nightmarish pressure removed from the sensitive spot. He opened his eyes. He was alone. He had heard nothing. It is probable that the "young man" had departed with light steps some time before, but the sense of the horrid pressure had lingered even after the knife had gone. A feeling of weakness came over him. He had just time to stagger to the garden seat. He felt as though he had held his breath for a long time. He sat all in a heap, panting with the shock of the reaction.

The band was executing the complicated finale, and with immense bravura it ended with a tremendous crash. He heard unreal and remote, as if his ears were stopped, the hard clapping of two thousand, more or less, pairs of hands like a sudden hail shower passing away. The profound silence which succeeded recalled him to himself.

A tram car, like a long glass box wherein people sat with their faces strongly lighted, ran along swiftly within ninety yards of the spot where he had been robbed. Then another rustled by, and yet another going the other way. The thick ring about the band had broken up, and dark figures were entering the alley single and in small, conversing groups. He sat up straight and tried to think calmly of what had happened to him. The vileness of it took his breath away again. As far as I can make it out he was disgusted with himself. I do not mean his behavior. Indeed, if his pantomime rendering of it for my information was to be trusted, it was the perfection of dignified, calm, almost courteous resignation. No, it was not that. He was not ashamed. He was shocked at being the selected victim, not of robbery so much as of contempt. It was something like this. His tranquility had been rudely disturbed. His lifelong kindly, placid, nicety of outlook had been disturbed, defaced.

Life

The kind of curl that men forget.

Nevertheless at that stage, before the iron had time to sink deep, he was able to argue himself into comparative equanimity.

As his agitation calmed down somewhat, he became aware that he was frightfully hungry. Yes, hungry. The sheer emotion had made him simply ravenous, he told me. He got up from the seat, and after walking for sometime found himself outside the gardens and before an arrested tram car without knowing very well how he got there. He got in as if in a dream, by a sort of instinct. Fortunately he found in his trousers pocket a copper to satisfy the conductor. Then the car stopped and as everybody got out, he got out, too. He recognized the Piazza San Ferdinando, but apparently it did not occur to him to take a cab and drive to the hotel. He told me he had wandered aimlessly on the Piazza like a lost dog, thinking vaguely of the best way of getting something to eat at once.

Suddenly in a flash, he remembered his twenty-franc piece. He explained to me that he had the piece of French gold for something like three years, and he used to carry it about with him as a sort of standby. Anybody may have his pocket picked—a quite different thing from a brazen and insulting robbery.

The Monumental archway entrance of the Galleria Umberto faced him at the top of a vast flight of stairs. He climbed these without loss of time and directed his steps toward the Cafe' Umberto. All the tables outside were occupied by a lot of people who were drinking. But he wanted something to eat. He went into the cafe, which is divided into something like aisles by square pillars, set all around with long looking glasses. He sat down on a red velvet settee against one of these pillars, waiting for his risotto, and his mind reverted to his abominable adventure.

He thought of the moody well-dressed young man with whom he had exchanged glances in the crowd—around the band stand and who, he felt confident, was the robber. Would he recognize him again? Doubtless. But he did not want ever to see him again. The best thing was to forget this humiliating episode.

He looked around anxiously for the coming of his risotto, and there to the left against the wall—there was the young man! He sat alone at a table with a bottle of some sort of wine or syrup and a carafe of iced water before him. The smooth olive cheeks, the red lips, the little, jet-black mustache turned up gallantly, the fine black eyes, a little heavy and shaded by long eyelashes, that peculiar expression of cruel discontent which is met in all its force only in the busts of some Roman emperors—it was he, no doubt at all. But that was a type. The Count looked away hastily. The young officer over there reading a paper was like that, too. Same type. Two young men farther away playing drafts also resembled—

The Count lowered his head with the fear in his heart of being everlastingly haunted by the vision of that young man. He began to eat his risotto. Presently he heard the young man on his left call the waiter in a bad-tempered tone.

At the call not only his own waiter, but two other idle waiters belonging to quite a different set of tables, rushed toward him with obsequious alacrity, which is not the general characteristic of the waiters in the Cafe Umberto. The young man muttered something and one of the waiters, walking rapidly to the nearest door, called out loudly into the Galleria, "Pasquale." He is the old fellow who, shuffling between the tables, offers for sale cigars, cigarettes, picture postcards, matches to the clients of the Cafe! He is an engaging scoundrel. The Count knew Pasquale. He say the gray-haired, unshaven, sallow ruffian come in his shabby clothes, the glass case hanging from his neck by leather strap, and at a word from the waiter made his shuffling way with a sudden spurt to the young man's table. The young man was in need of a cigar, with which Pasquale served him fawningly. The old peddler was going out when the Count, on a sudden impulse, beckoned to him.

He approached, his smile of deferential recognition combining oddly with the ironic, searching expression of the eyes. Leaning his case on the table, he lifted the glass lid without a word. The Count took a box of cigarettes and, urged by a fearful, aimless curiosity, asked casually:

"Tell me, Pasquale, who is that young signore over there?"

The other bent his box at once.

"That, Signor Conte," he said beginning to rearrange his wares busily and without looking up at once—"that is a young cavaliere of a very good family from Bari. He studies in the university and is the chief capo of an association of young men—of very nice young men."

He paused and then, with mingled discretion and pride of knowledge, murmured the word "camorra" and shut down the lid. "A very powerful camorra," he breathed out. "The professors themselves respect it greatly. It is una lira e cinquante centesimi, Signor Conte?"

Our friend paid. While Pasquale was making up the change he observed that the young man of whom he had heard so much in so very few words was watching the transaction covertly. After the old vagabond had withdrawn, with a bow, the Count settled with the waiter and sat still. A numbness, he told me, had come over him.

The young man paid, too, got up and crossed over, apparently for the purpose of looking at himself in the mirror a little behind and at right angles to the Count's seat. He was all in black, with a dark green tie. The Count looked around and was startled by meeting a vicious glance out of the corners of the other's eyes. The young cavaliere from Bari according to Pasquale (but Pasquale is, of course, an accomplished liar) went on arranging his tie, settling his hat before the glass, and meantime he spoke just loud enough to be heard by the Count. He spoke through his teeth, with the most insulting venom of contempt, gazing straight into the mirror.

"Ah! So you had gold on you—you old birba—you furfante. But you are not done with me yet."

The fiendishness of his expression vanished like lightning and he lounged out of the Cafe with a moody, impassive face.

The poor Count when telling me this trembled and fell back in his chair. His forehead broke into perspiration. There was an extravagance of wantonness in this outrage which appalled even me. What it was to the Count's delicacy I can't even imagine. I am sure that if he had not been too refined, too correct to do such a blatantly vulgar thing as dying from apoplexy in a cafe, he would have had a fatal stroke there and then. But, irony apart, my great difficulty was to keep him from seeing the extent of my commiseration. He shrank from every excessive sentiment and my commiseration was practically unbounded. It did not surprise me to hear that he had been in bed two days. Then he got up to make his arrangements for leaving Southern Italy at once.

And he was convinced that he could not live a whole twelve months in any other climate.

No argument I could advance had any effect. It was not fear, though he did say to me once, "You do not know what a camorra is, my dear sir. I am a marked man." He was not afraid of what could be done to him. To be so marked hurt his delicate conception of life's ease and serenity. He couldn't stand it. No Japanese gentleman hurt in his exaggerated sense of honor could have gone about his preparations for hara-kiri with greater steadfastness of purpose. For it really amounted to that with the Count. He was going and there was an end of it. He was going the very next day—to die on his estate, I suppose, from the excessive infamy of that outrage tainting life itself—as it was.

There is a saying of Neapolitan patriotism intended for the information of foreigners I presume: "See Naples and then die." It is a saying of excessive vanity, and everything excessive was abhorrent to the nice moderation of Il Conte. Yet as I was seeing him off at the railway station, I thought he was behaving with singular fidelity to its conceited spirit. He had seen Naples. He had seen it completely. He had seen it with a startling and excessive thoroughness. He had seen more than his niceness could stand. He had nothing else to see. He had seen—and now he was going to his grave. He was going to it by the International Sleeping Car Company's train de luxe via Trieste and Vienna. As the four long, somber carriages pulled out of the station I raised my hat with a queer sensation of it being a tribute of respect to a funeral cortege. His profile, much aged already and stonily still, glided away behind the lighted pane of glass. Vedi Napoli e poi mori.

of her smile Mr. Dory's prejudices gave way. He fluttered about her, flattered by her presence. But Mrs. Dory looked upon the woman jealously. She was beloved by Mrs. Dory's son. And then Miss Darrell completed her conquest of the seniors of the Dory family. For she beckoned to the youth who still stood in the doorway.

"One of the reasons I called without waiting on formality," she said, "was because I thought that your son would be such a jolly companion for my son. Thomas, come here." If Mr. Dory or Mrs. Dory had laughed, Roderick would have hated them forever. But they didn't. Even though the mouths of both of them twitched, they kept back their mirth. But the minute that the guests had gone, mother and father turned to each other. Gross, vulgar, Gargantuan laughter shook the household. From it, Roderick, illusions shattered, and love driven from his heart, fled to his own room and locked the door. But in the hall outside was the telephone, and through the panels of his door he could hear the shrill tones of his sister Angela talking.

"And Eloise, you ought to have seen Roddy's face when he found she had a son as big as he is. Eloise, I almost died!"

At the other end of the wire was a freckled-faced, skinny tom-boy, with the keenest sense of humor in the world. Also she had a sharp and biting tongue. Roderick, lying on his bed, visualized Eloise. He buried his face in his pillow. But he could not shut out from his brain the picture of her mocking face, nor from his ears the memory of her mocking tone.

One thing he knew: he was through with love forever.

[illegible] face with a queer long nose. As he stood he was hidden from the park, but the path was not far away, and when he walked on he saw the lake gleam in the sunshine.

To the lake he went. The path came close to it, where the bank overhung the green water in a little white cliff. There, whether he fell or was thrown, it was probable Sir Rodney had gone in. And the water was deep there. It would not have been easy to get out again in the dark up that slippery chalk, and Sir Rodney had been battered, dazed, perhaps, or stunned, before he went in.

The grass was trampled and gray. That must have been done by the men dragging the lake. Reggie could make nothing of it, but as he moved to and fro he saw a scrap of something whiter than the chalky grass. It was a chip of bone or ivory. It went into his pocket-book with the quartz face as he heard steps behind him.

"Well, sir, not much here, is there?" said Inspector Mordan. "They've stamped out anything there was."

"Is this where they found him?"

"Out there. In ten feet of water. Not far from the bank. He couldn't swim, they say."

"I dare say he didn't feel much like swimming."

"What, sir, was he dead before he was in the water?"

"No, no. He went in alive. Bnt he'd been badly hammered."

"My oath, he had!" Inspector Mordan grinned. "I've found that out, Mr. Fortune. This way, sir." He led on down the path. "See, there's blood. And big footprints there in the damp stuff. That's him, or somebody his size. Now, look here, sir." By a spinney two or three hundred yards farther on the inspector stopped. The turf was torn and broken by deep footmarks and there were scattered stains of blood. "What do you make of that, Mr. Fortune?" The inspector was triumphant. "That's a fight all right."

In the long grass at the edge of the spinney were the prints of large feet.

"There was only one man in it, Mr. Fortune. He stood there and smoked a cigarette." Inspector Mordan held out the stump of it. "He could see Sir Rodney coming a long way off, and when the old man came he went for him."

"And he was a big fellow and he smokes Aristides cigarettes," Reggie murmured. "Yes. You have it all, Mordan. Except one thing. How did Sir Rodney get drowned?"

"The fellow may have knocked him out and thrown him in the lake."

Reggie measured the distance with his eye. It was some quarter of a mile. "Hefty throw," he murmured.

"Of course he'd have to carry the body to the bank," the inspector explained angrily.

Reggie wandered hither and thither in the park and out of it. He found nothing, but in the lane where a small car had stopped, another Aristides cigarette.

When he came back to the house Sir Rodney's trainer, Captain Ferne, was reporting himself to Lomas and the chief constable. Captain Ferne, who possessed the physique and face of a jockey, had nothing to say and kept saying so. He had bidden good night to Sir Rodney on his doorstep at half-past ten on Friday night and had never seen him again. Sir Rodney was quite sober. There was no one about. Did he know of anyone who had a grudge against Sir Rodney? A successful owner of race horses always had enemies, and Sir Rodney had been very successful.

"So I have heard," said Lomas dryly.

But the trainer knew of nobody in the district, no one who was likely to be violent, could not suggest anyone.

Then Douglas Charlbury strode in, brusque and imperious. "Mr. Lomas? Which is Mr. Lomas? I'm told you want to see me, sir."

"I hoped to have seen you before, Mr. Charlbury."

"I am playing for Sandshire, sir. We have been in the field all day."

"Really?" Lomas put up his eyeglass. "Your uncle was found dead this morning."

"So I have heard, but I don't understand why you want me."

"There is evidence that he was murdered, Mr. Charlbury."

"What evidence?"

"He was assaulted before he was drowned."

"Where?"

"Here, in the park, on his way home from Captain Ferne's house."

Douglas Charlbury exchanged a glance with Captain Ferne, which was not affectionate. "Who did it? Any evidence about that?"

"Can you help us, Mr. Charlbury?"

"I haven't been living here for over a year. I was on tour with the Sandshire eleven."

"You have no suspicion of anyone?"

Douglas Charlbury gave an angry laugh. "My uncle wasn't altogether popular. Ferne knows that."

"I don't know what you mean!" cried Captain Ferne.

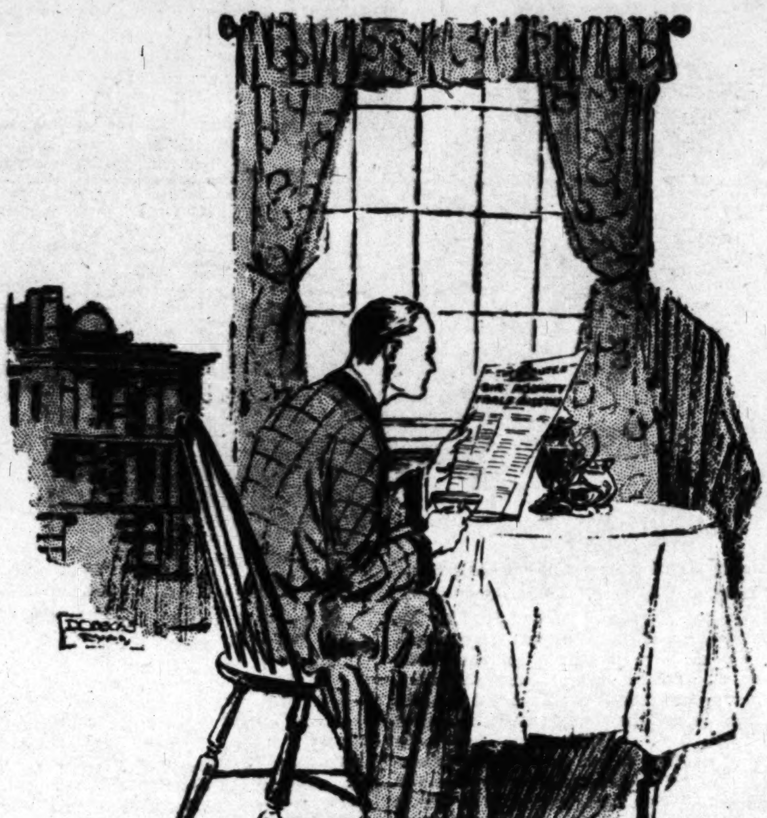
Again Douglas Charlbury laughed. "If Ferne can't tell you, no one can."

"Really?" said Lomas. "I must own you disappoint me, Mr. Charlbury."

"I don't know what you expected," said Douglas Charlbury. "Anything more, sir? I want to see my people."

Lomas shook his head, and Charlbury strode out.

"I'm afraid they were on bad terms, sir," Captain Ferne shook his head. "Very sad. Sir Rodney felt it."



When Reggie propped up the paper he saw the headline, "Sir Rodney Trale Missing."

"Really?" said Lomas, and got rid of Captain Ferne too.

"He's rather like a weasel, you know," Reggie murmured. "What's between them, the weasel and our young god? An angry young god it is."

"Quite," said Lomas briskly. "Well, Fortune, you went round with Mordan, didn't you? Do you agree?"

Mordan touches the spot as ever. A large fellow lurked by the spinney smoking an Aristides and set about Sir Rodney. Yes, we have no objections."

"Anything to add?"

"Well, there was another Aristides smoked in the lane where a small car stopped. That might have a bearing. Also there was this by the lake"—he displayed his fragment of ivory—"and that by the garden hedge." He produced the quartz face.

"Asiatic, eh?" said Lomas. "Chinese, is it?"

"Lomas, dear, you shouldn't say things like that. It exposes the department. Not Asiatic. The other side of the world. American. Say Honduras or Yucatan. A work of the Maya culture."

Lomas said he had never heard of the Mayas. "What's the other trinket? A Babylonian toothpick? Or a bit of Cleopatra's paper-knife?"

"I don't know. But I'm not proud of it, Lomas."

"Whatever the things are, they may have been in the park for weeks. The bit of glass"—here Reggie groaned—"wasn't near the crime; and if you know why anybody uses a scrap of bone to punch a man's head and drown him, I don't."

"There's such a lot of things I don't know. That's why I'm humble," said Reggie sadly. "Is there anything you do know, Lomas? What was in those papers you were browsing on?"

"Douglas Charlbury had a violent quarrel with Sir Rodney. It began with a racing dispute—that fishy affair in the Rutlandshire."

The chief constable sighed and shook his head. "Sir Rodney was getting a bad name on the turf."

"There isn't a bad name Douglas didn't call him. And it got to threats, Fortune."

"Well, well! And then a large man who knew Sir Rodney's habits comes and hammers him."

"Something for your young god to explain, isn't it?"

"But he did. He had an alibi."

"Yes, they often have." Lomas smiled.

But they did not see at the inquest. For the caution of Lomas decided to offer no more than the medical evidence, and the verdict was murder against persons unknown.

It was afterward that Reggie was called to Scotland Yard and found with Lomas, M. Montague Finchampstead, the Public Prosecutor, that large and florid man. "Why do you look so happy, Finch?" he asked anxiously.

"Finchampstead hopes to take action in the Trale murder," Lomas explained.

"Zeal, all zeal," Reggie murmured.

"I think it will probably be my duty, Fortune," said Mr. Finchampstead. "I have therefore called a consultation. On the facts brought before me I consider there is a strong case against Douglas Charlbury. I do not of course wish to charge him with murder unless I can be reasonably sure of a conviction." Here Lomas yawned. "I shall be glad of your opinion on that."

"You're not a moral man, Finch," said Reggie sadly. "You want to know if you can convict him. You ought to want to know if he did it."

"I see no difference," Finchampstead rebuked him with dignity. "I consider the matter as a lawyer."

"That's what I complain of," Reggie murmured.

"Be good enough to consider the case. Douglas Charlbury had quarreled with his uncle about the way Sir Rodney conducted his racing affairs. Sir Rodney's horse should have won the Rutlandshire handicap, and it was not placed and Charlbury lost money—"

"Like the rest of the world," said Lomas. "The old man was a blackguard."

"Quite possible," Finchampstead swept on. "There were other cases. Charlbury wrote furious letters. He suspected his uncle of arranging that the favorite should not win the Leeds Cup, and we have a letter in which he declares violently that he will interfere. That was written three days before the murder. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday Charlbury was playing cricket at Southampton. The match finished at noon. The rest of the team went on to Brighton by train. Charlbury had with him a small two-seater car. He left Southampton in the afternoon alone. He and his car were seen in the road near Chantries that evening. We have a tramp who will swear that he saw a small car like Charlbury's deserted in the lane by the park that night. We found traces of that car, large footprints, and the stump of Aristides cigarettes. We know Charlbury smokes that brand. We know that Sir Rodney was attacked by someone familiar with his habits. I understand you are prepared to testify that Sir Rodney's injuries were inflicted by a man of great physical strength. The cumulative force of this evidence is very strong. I shall be glad to hear if you have any doubt that it proves Charlbury guilty of the murder."

"I don't know," Reggie said slowly. "Have you thought about the unknown quantities, Finch? My quartz face, my bit of ivory? They don't fit with Charlbury?"

"They don't fit with anything," Lomas grumbled.

"I consider them irrelevant," said Finchampstead.

"Well, well," Reggie sighed. "It's a wonderful thing, the legal mind. You'll have to produce me, Finch. And I shall have to say there was a punctured wound in the man's right eye, which could not have been made by a fist. That's rather relevant."

"You said yourself that he might have fallen on a stump, or a splinter, or a spike."

"Yes. But we didn't find spike, or splinter, or stump."

"What does it matter? It is a trivial injury. You say so. And the assault was violent. Come, Fortune, have you any real doubt Charlbury was the murderer?"

"Oh, yes! Some. I don't like the case, Finch. I can't satisfy myself. And you don't satisfy me."

"Do you advise me not to bring Charlbury into court?"

"If I were on the jury—would I convict?" Reggie said slowly. I don't know, Finch. I don't know."

"It will be a doosed unpopular prosecution," Lomas grumbled. "The shady old uncle who robbed the public rigging races is done in, and you put in the dock this handsome nephew who's a god on cricket and footer grounds. Finch, you'll be hooted in court."

"I am aware it will be unpopular," said Finchampstead. "That is another reason for pressing the case. "I will let you know my decision." He went out in majesty.

Lomas at least was right. The prosecution was most unpopular. All England and the newspapers rallied round Douglas Charlbury. Yet a brutal bench of magistrates committed him for trial. His counsel was content to say nonchalantly that Mr. Charlbury preferred to reserve his defense, but had a perfect answer to the charge. And the opinion of the junior bar was that he would want all the answer he had got. The carefully marshalled evidence for the Crown was impressive.

When the case was tried before little Justice Golding, cross-examination made a hole or two in the prosecution. The tramp who swore to seeing a car in the lane became a vague and unconvincing tramp. Inspector Mordan could not swear that the footprints in the long grass would fit Douglas Charlbury's feet, and confessed that they were not precise footprints. Inspector Mordan admitted that many people smoked Aristides cigarettes. Inspector Mordan could not explain how the body came from the scene of the fight to the lake. Mr. Fortune, unshaken, unshakeable upon his evidence that the injuries were inflicted before death by a strong man's fists, declined to offer any theory of the wound in the eye.

"Not such an injury as you would expect in a fight, Mr. Fortune? No. You don't know how it happened? No. In fact you don't know how Sir Rodney met his death?"

"Yes. I know he was drowned after he had been hit."

"But you don't know how he was drowned?"

"I don't know," Mr. Fortune agreed gravely.

Counsel turned to the jury.

"He doesn't know. The Crown's own expert doesn't know, gentlemen! And a man is charged with murder!"

There was a murmur in court. The junior bar looked at each other, and someone said: "That's torn it!"

Counsel for the defense opened his case confidently. The jury would observe that he had nothing to answer, for the Crown had not proved that a murder had been committed. But in order that no shadow of suspicion should remain on Mr. Douglas Charlbury, he would show that Mr. Charlbury did

Anybody Can Mend a Car ~ By James J. Montague

WE kept the little car going fairly well for a couple of years, and then things began to happen to it. Out on the road, twenty or thirty miles from home, sounds of crunching would come from the inside, and after that there would be no response from the wheels when the engine was thrown into gear. Then we would telephone to the nearest garage man, who would come out and tell us that the gears had been sheared off, and we would have to have a new set put in. So we would leave the car with him and come home by train.

At other times the crunching sound would come from under the back seat. Then both wheels would insist on turning when we went around a curve, with the result that, despite frantic twisting of the wheel, the car would go off the road at a tangent when we were rounding the next bend.

From the time it contracted this series of internal ailments we spent most of our money on repairs. But it was no use; just as soon as one trouble was adjusted another would crop out. We began to wish that we had bought a new car from a dealer instead of a used one from a real estate man who had moved away to Florida.

At last, however, we found a garage man who said that by getting all new parts except the engine block he would guarantee us perfect satisfaction and put in subsequent parts free if anything happened for a year. The price he fixed for this service was about equal to what we paid for the car, but still there is no use having a car if it won't run. Used small cars are of little value as ornaments to the premises.

We were about to take up this offer, and were looking forward to a pleasant summer, when Ambrose came to visit us. Ambrose used to be a blacksmith in his boyhood, then he took a correspondence course in mechanical engineering, with the hope to practice that profession as soon as he had saved up enough from his insurance solicitor's salary to pay the first month's rent for his office.

"You are very foolish to pay a lot of repair bills and bills for new parts," he told us. "There are millions of cars like yours in the country and thousands of them are thrown away while a lot of their machinery is still in perfect condition. I know of a dump not far from here where there must be a couple of hundred of them, and I can go out there and get all the parts you need and install them for you for nothing."

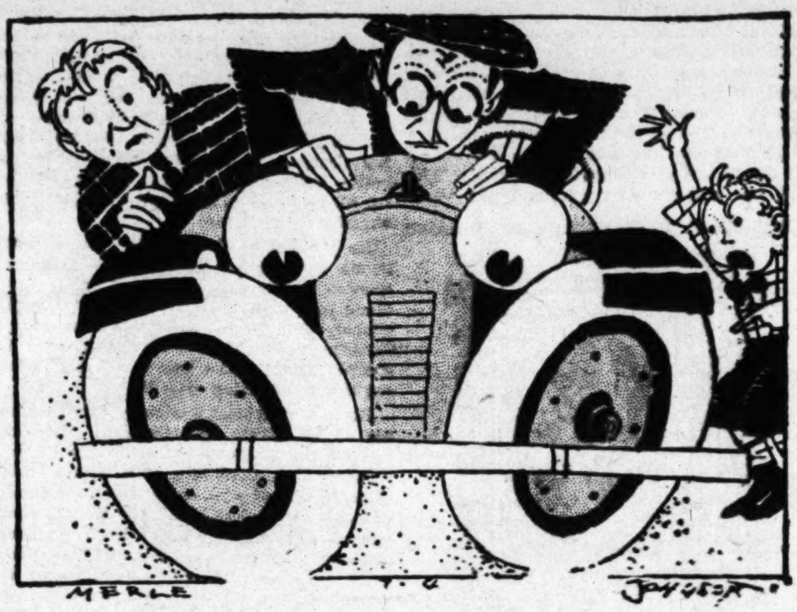
This looked like a very good offer, so we took it up. Ambrose took the car the next morning and set off for the dump. He said that the first thing it needed was a couple of front wheels, the wheels it was wearing at present being a little wobbly.

I said that they were still giving good service, and I thought it would be a mistake to junk them just because they didn't run quite evenly. But he told me he knew what he was doing, and invited me to hold my peace till he had a chance to prove it.

That night when I got home from work I found him in our garage. He had the front of the car jacked up and was spinning the wheels.

"Look at that," he said proudly, giving one of them a whirl. "Not a wabble in it."

I was very much impressed, and eager to try the car. So we got the jack out from under it and ran it out on the drive. Just then one of the children came up.



"Look," he said excitedly, "the car is all pigeon-toed."

"Look," he said excitedly, "the car is all pigeon-toed."

I stepped around in front and looked. The boy was right. The wheels approached each other in front like the foreparts of the feet of an Indian chief. And when they ran they sort of rasped the pavement as they went along. After a mile trial both tires blew out.

But Ambrose was undaunted. The next day he found a new pair of wheels on the dump which fitted a little better. He also brought home a new differential which he installed after a week of hard work. The device looked all right from the outside, but there must have been something wrong with its interior, for the wheels refused to go around when the engine was geared in. So he took it off and replaced it with another, which worked all right for a mile or two, then for some reason one of the wheels would begin running one way and the other in the opposite direction. This movement spun the car around from the back, as a dancer wheels on his heel. It was very disconcerting and attracted a great deal of unpleasant attention from people we met on the road.

The third differential Ambrose got worked all right, and we were convinced that he knew what he was doing till he decided that there was something the matter with the clutch, and set out to find a new one.

He was successful in his quest, but the clutch he had found was temperamental. Sometimes it would lock the engine and the rest of the machinery so that when we cranked up the car would leap forward and necessitate a rapid sidestep to avoid a casualty. Again it would start with a great rush, and refuse to have anything to do with the rest of the car, no matter how we worked the clutch in and out.

But you couldn't discourage Ambrose. He got three more clutches, and the third worked to perfection.

It was about this time that the cylinders began to backfire, and Ambrose said we needed a new timing system. He overhauled ten or fifteen cars before he found one, as timing systems are comparatively small and easily removed, and it seemed that Ambrose was not the only man who was getting parts cheap and saving repair bills.

There was no backfiring when we started out for a tour with the new system—not for the first twenty miles. Then there was a spluttering inside the cylinders, and to our annoyance the machine began suddenly to run backwards, at an astonishing speed.

Ambrose was driving it, and he clapped on the brakes as soon as he could, shutting off the gas at the same time.

Then he got out, climbed into a grimy linen duster, and began to see what was the matter. He worked for perhaps an hour, and then he called to us that it was impossible to do anything, and we'd have to get home as best we could.

Getting home was all that interested us by that time, so we said to start. His idea was to throw her into reverse, which would cause the car to go forward. But by that time something had happened to the clutch and she wouldn't throw into reverse. But Ambrose is not a person to lie down and quit when there are still resources left.

"We'll get home all right," he said. "Watch me."

And we did get home. We backed home. Ambrose is a skillful driver and he kept the car in the road most of the way, but we attracted a great deal of attention from the passersby, and some of the drivers of cars we met became so interested that they turned around and followed us all the way home. We were at the head of a long procession when we reached our own yard, and on alighting were surrounded with people who wanted to know if he had backed twenty miles to win a bet, and how much he had won. All of them expressed great admiration for the feat, and Ambrose was quite proud of it.

His visit ended just then, and we took up the offer of the garage man. The car runs all right now, but we do not have nearly such interesting adventures with it.

suasively through a great disorderly murmur of voices and shuffling of feet on the gravel of that open space. An enormous crowd immersed in the electric light, as if in a bath of some radiant and tenuous fluid shed upon their heads by luminous globes, drifted in its hundreds 'round the band. Hundreds more sat on chairs, in more or less concentric circles, receiving without flinching the great waves of sonority that ebbed out into the darkness.

The Count penetrated the throng, drifted with it in tranquil enjoyment, listening and looking at the faces. All people of good society, mothers with their daughters, parents with their children, young men and young women all talking, smiling, nodding to each other. Very many pretty faces and very many pretty toilettes. There was, of course, a quantity of diverse types; showy old fellows with white mustaches, fat men, thin men, officers in uniform, but what predominated in the masculine part, he told me, was the South Italian type of young men with a colorless, clear complexion, red lips, jet-black little mustache, and expressive black eyes, wonderfully effective in leering or scowling.

Withdrawing from the throng, the Count shared a little table in front of the cafe building with a young man of just such a type. Our friend had some lemonade. The young man was sitting moodily before an empty glass. He looked up once and then looked down again. He also tilted his hat forward. Like this . . . The Count made the gesture of a man pulling his hat down over his brow, and went on.

"I think to myself; he is sad. Something is wrong with him. Young men have their troubles. I take no notice of him, of course. I pay for my lemonade, and go away."

Strolling about in the neighborhood of the band, the Count thinks he saw that young man twice in the crowd. He was alone. Once their eyes met. It must have been the same young man, but there were so many of that type there that he could not be certain. Moreover, he was not very much concerned except in so far that he had been struck by the pronounced, as it were peevish, discontent of that face.

Presently, tired of the felling of confinement one experiences in a crowd, the Count edged away from the band. An alley, very somber by contrast, presented itself invitingly with its promise of solitude and coolness. He entered it, walking slowly on till the sound of the orchestra became distinctly deadened. Then he walked back and turned about again. He did this several times before he noticed that there was somebody on one of the benches.

The spot being midway between two lamp-posts, the light was faint.

The man lolled back in the corner of the seat, his legs stretched out, with his arms folded and his head drooping on his breast. He never stirred, as though he had fallen asleep there but when the Count passed by, he had changed his attitude. He sat leaning forward. His elbows were propped on his knees, and his hands were rolling a cigarette. He never looked up from that occupation.

The Count continued his stroll away from the band. He returned slowly, he said, I can imagine him enjoying to the full, but with his usual tranquillity, the balminess of this southern night, and the sounds of music softened delightfully by the distance.

Presently he made out the man on the garden seat still leaning forward with his elbows on his knees. It was a dejected pose. In the semi-obscurity of the alley his high shirt collar and his cuffs made small patches of vivid whiteness. The Count said that he just noticed him in a casual way getting up brusquely, as if to walk away, but almost before he was aware of it, the man stood before him asking in a low, almost melancholy tone whether the Signor would have the kindness to oblige him with a light.

The Count answered this request by a polite "Certainly" and dropped his hands with the intention of exploring both pockets of his trousers for the matches.

"I dropped my hands," he said, "but I never put them in my pockets. I felt a pressure there."

He put the tip of his finger on a spot close under his breastbone, the very spot of the human body where a Japanese gentleman begins the operation of the hara-kiri, which is a form of suicide following upon dishonor, upon an intolerable shock to the delicacy of one's feelings.

"I glance down," he continued in an awestruck voice, "and what do I see? A knife! A long knife—"

"You don't mean to say," I exclaimed, amazed, "that you have been attacked like this in the Villa at half past ten o'clock within a stone's throw of fifteen hundred people?"

He nodded several times, staring at me with all his might.

"The clarinet," he declared solemnly, "was finishing his solo, and I assure you I not meet and could not have met his uncle on the night that Sir Rodney was drowned.

Douglas Charlbury went into the box. He swore that he had not seen Sir Rodney for many months. On the night of his death he was traveling in his own small car from Southampton to Brighton. He came by way of Chichester, Houghton Bridge, and Steyning. It was therefore possible that he had been seen on the road near Chantries. But his car had not stopped there. He had dined at the Four-in-Hand Inn on the Grinstead Road, which was kept by an old servant of his father's, and spent the night there. He had been smoking with the landlord all the evening till he went to bed.

Cross-examination only drew from him a justification of the violence of his letters to Sir Rodney. He had no doubt that Sir Rodney and his trainer had arranged for their horses to lose races.

"And for you to lose money?" counsel sneered.

"Half the sportsmen in England lost money, sir."

"And you naturally resented the loss."

"I resented the foul play, sir. I resented the disgrace to my family. We have run straight for three hundred years."

"What did you mean by your threat to prevent Sir Rodney playing tricks with the favorite for the Leeds Cup?"

"I meant that I would expose him, sir."

Counsel let him go. Counsel could make nothing of the landlord of the Four-in-Hand Inn, and the landlady and their daughter. They swore that Mr. Douglas had come to their house at eight and not gone out again. They were quite clear and confident.

The jury were not out of court five minutes. They found Douglas Charlbury innocent. And there was a cheer.

"Come on, Fortune," said Lomas. "Better get away before the crowd hangs us on the lamp-posts."

But in the press seats a reporter said:

"It was old Fortune got him off. He's deep, is Fortune. I wonder what his little game is?"

In the morning the papers were fuller than ever of Douglas Charlbury. He was a champion of British sport; he had suffered gloriously to vindicate the purity of the turf; and it was obvious to every sane man that he hadn't killed his uncle, and the officials who ordered the prosecution were fools and knaves.

Over the telephone Mr. Fortune asked Lomas to lunch. "Can you eat, Reginald?" said Lomas. "I have no appetite. I hear a mob in Whitehall howling for my blood."

"How's Finch this morning?"

A chuckle came over the wire. "Finch has gone sick."

"So he ought to be," said Mr. Fortune. "Come along. Elsie is putting on one of her best souffles. I told her you wanted to be comforted."

Not till that souffle was eaten, and the two men looked at each other with the eyes of those who have enjoyed pure Art, did Mr Fortune come to business. He peeled a nectarine, he tasted it, he sipped his Barsac.

"Do you remember the Trale case, Lomas?" he said dreamily.

"Don't be brutal," Lomas groaned. "I was happy."

"Curious family," Reggie murmured. "None of the family came to the trial, I think, Lomas."

"Miss Trale has been very ill—pneumonia."

"What happens to the old man's estate?"

"He left no will. Divided between Douglas and his sister—and Miss Trale, if she lives."

"Yes, a curious family. Lots of unknown quantities. Lomas, old thing, have you heard of anybody down at Chantries who has anything to do with Yucatan?"

"What are you thinking of now?"

"My quartz face. I wish you'd have somebody look about for a person from Yucatan."

Mr. Fortune, much against his will, was extracted from a hammock among the roses of his riverside garden and led by a stern parlor-maid to the telephone.

"We've found your Central American," said Lomas. "Come and hear all about him, Reginald. Interesting but enigmatic fellow."

"I do not like you, Lomas," said Mr. Fortune sadly. "But you may dine with me. Good-by."

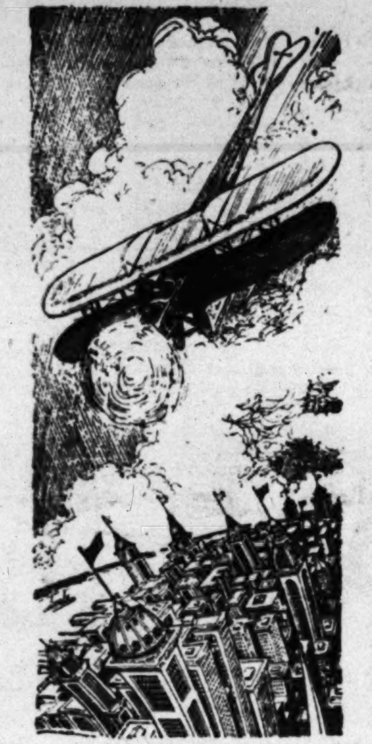
So it was under the tea rambler which had heard so many tales of crime that Lomas told him of the discovery of Charles Stanton. Mr. Fortune blew smoke rings into the moonlight. "What does it come to?" he said dreamily. "Our Central American is down there before the murder. He remains abroad till the trial is over and all is peace. Then he comes back. He is a bore, but for that, alas! we cannot hang him. He bothers me."

"Well, you wanted him. And we've found him. What about it?"

Mr. Fortune sighed. "You will be logical, Lomas. Let us see Charles of Yucatan. Let us talk to him."

The chief of the Criminal Investigation Department wrote to Mr. Charles Stanton and asked him to call. A lean, brown man presented himself to Lomas and Mr. Fortune. He had a mouth which shut tight. His manner was stiff.

"Do sit down, Mr. Stanton. Sorry to trouble you, but I hope you'll be able to help us." Lomas was at his blandest. "Now I wonder if you can tell me, do you know anything of this trinket?"



[Copyright Life Publishing Co.]

The One in the Rear: You kinda look after things, will ya, Bill? I think I'll grab off a little five-minute nap.

Stanton took up the quartz face. "It's mine," he said; and showed no emotion. "A mascot of mine. The thing is a bit of Maya work I picked up in Yucatan."

"I wonder if you ever gave it to anyone?" Lomas suggested smoothly. "Or lent it to someone, perhaps."

Stanton frowned. "No, I didn't!" he said sharply. "I always carried the thing till I lost it."

"Could you tell me when that was?"

"I can't put a date to it. When I was last in England."

"Or where you lost it?"

"If I had known I should have looked for it."

"Yes, I suppose you would. Can you tell me how you lost it, Mr. Stanton?"

"I've no idea. You are asking me the deuce of a lot of questions, sir."

"So sorry you should feel that. Well, Mr. Stanton, I must ask you one more. Your quartz face was found in the park at Chantries just after the murder of Sir Rodney Trale and close the scene of the murder. Can you give me any explanation of that?"

Stanton stood up. "No!" he said. "I'm wasting your time, Mr. Lomas! You won't get any further!"

"Really, Mr. Stanton, wou're not doing yourself justice!"

"I'm the judge of that, sir!"

"You force me to ask you another question. Why did you leave the country immediately after the murder?"

Stanton laughed. "Why don't you give me the usual warning, anything I say may be used as evidence against me?"

"I have been asking you to assist us in investigating a crime," said Lomas gravely. "Do you wish me to understand you decline?"

"I am not responsible for what you understand, sir. Good day!" And out he went.

"Deeper and deeper yet," Reggie murmured.

That night Lomas received a telegram from Douglas Charlbury. It was imperious. It instructed Lomas that he must be in his office next morning to receive Douglas Charlbury, who had something to say to him.

In the morning Douglas Charlbury marched in upon them bigger than ever (so they have complained,) more vigorous, more arrogant.

"Who's this?" he scowled at Reggie. "I'm here to talk to you and nobody else, Mr. Lomas."

"Mr. Fortune is my colleague. Mr. Fortune knows all about your case."

"Does he? I think not!"

"I shall not hear you except in his presence."

Douglas Charlbury laughed. "Oh, if you want your fellows to know what a fool you've been, I don't care. Mr. Fortune, isn't it, the wonderful medical expert? You didn't cut much ice at my trial. Better try again, doctor. Now, Mr. Lomas, you've been trying to drag Charles Stanton into this murder. You can't do anything, that's how you stand. The case is finished."

"Because Mr. Douglas Charlbury was acquitted? I'm afraid that leaves us with a murderer at large."

"Murderer nothing! Because I was acquitted and I killed the man. You meddle with anyone else, and the first thing you know I'll tell the world."

Reggie sank deeper into his chair. Lomas stared a long minute. Then he said carefully: "Have you come here to confess you murdered your uncle?"

"No. A jury said I didn't. You can't try me again. I'm innocent. But I swear to Heaven I killed him!"

"Then you confess you committed perjury at your trial? And brought three witnesses to swear a false alibi?"

"They believed what they swore, good souls. That's no perjury. And I—I don't answer to you for what I did! You get up any dirty case against Charles Stanton, or anyone else, and I'll own it all."

He stamped out.

Lomas lay back in his chair. "This is the biggest bluff that I ever met!"

"Was it bluff?" Reggie murmured. "He meant it all."

"Did he? How can you tell? We can't call his bluff. If we had a case against Stanton and he came for the defense and swore he did the murder himself, half the jury would say he was a noble, self-sacrificing hero, and the other half wouldn't convict against his evidence. And he—he's been found innocent, and we've got nothing fresh against him but this melodramatic confession. Deuce take him, he has us beat!"

That night a letter came to Reggie Fortune. The old family doctor of Chantries wished to consult him about Miss Trale. An attack of penumonia had left her very weak and she did not gain strength. The doctor was himself unable to suggest any treatment but rest and careful nursing.

She had expressed a very strong wish to see Mr. Fortune, and if Mr. Fortune could give the time, it would be a kindness.

In the morning Reggie Fortune lay in his car and watched the dim blue line of the Downs come clear of the mist till Chanctonbury stood sharp. He wondered whom he would meet at Chantries. He did meet the old doctor, who was all apologies for troubling the great Mr. Fortune.

Reggie nodded gravely. It appeared to him that the old doctor knew something he did not mean to say.

Joyce Charlbury came into the hall, pale and worn. Reggie found himself looking into tragic eyes. "I hope we've done right, Mr. Fortune," the girl said.

"Yes, I think so," said Reggie Fortune.

In a big room to which the sunlight came in many colors through the old uneven glass of an oriel window, Miss Trale lay in bed, a tiny shape which hardly raised the coverlet. Her face was gray as her hair.

"Only Mr. Fortune," Miss Trale said.

Joyce looked at her and drew the old doctor away.

Miss Trale turned laboriously and looked at Reggie. "You know why I sent for you," she said, "I killed my brother."

Reggie sat down by the bedside and took her pulse in his hand. "I'm a doctor, not a policeman, Miss Trale," he said gently.

"I believe you mean to do right. I have tried to do right. I read what you said at Douglas's trial. Oh, if I had known! If I had known! But I was ill, and they told me nothing. My poor boy!"

"Douglas is safe."

"But now you are trying to accuse Charles Stanton. It wasn't he, Mr. Fortune. He did nothing. I killed Rodney. And—and I'm glad!" She fell back panting.

"You need not fear for Mr. Stanton," Reggie said gently.

"I want you to know. I want to make sure there is nobody, nobody but me. Rodney was wicked. He played foul, he always did. But we kept it hidden till this rascal Farne came to him. Then he began to cheat with his horses. Do you know what that meant to us, Mr. Fortune? Our colors have been on the turf a hundred years, and he—he had his horses run crooked. A Trale of Chantries! That was why Douglas quarreled with him. But he went on. Then Douglas heard he was playing tricks with a big race. They met down there in the park. It was he struck Douglas first, Mr. Fortune. I saw him. I was out there with my darling Joyce. Charles Stanton was coming to say good-by to her before he went away and Rodney had forbidden her to have him in the house—oh, that was like Rodney—and while they talked beyond the garden I watched in case Rodney should come. Douglas and Rodney fought, and Douglas knocked him down and left him. And Rodney came on swearing and found me. I am lame, you know. I don't move very quickly. He said I had brought Douglas to beat him, and he struck at me. I lifted my stick to keep him off—my ivory stick—and he broke it. I hit him in the face. I think it went into his eye. That—"

"That was what I found. I see now. That didn't kill him, Miss Trale."

"No. But he fell into the lake. And I threw the stick into the water and went away, and he was drowned. And I found Joyce and brought her back to the house. I did not tell her then. I left him. I did it. It was no one but me, Mr. Fortune. Do you understand? Do you believe me?"

"I believe you, Miss Trale," said Reggie Fortune. "I understand everything. There will be no more trouble."

"I—I had to do it," she said feebly. "I am not sorry, Mr. Fortune. He—he made us ashamed." She looked at Reggie Fortune, she took up the ebony stick by the bedside and tapped and the nurse came.

"You will have no more trouble, Miss Trale," Reggie said. "There is rest now, only rest. Good-by." He bowed over her hand and turned away to meet at the door Joyce Charlbury. She drew him out.

"Is that true—what you said?" she whispered eagerly.

Reggie looked down into her dark wild eyes. "Yes. No more trouble. No more fear. It's finished."

"Ah!" She put her hand to her brow and trembled.

"Yes, you knew all the while. It's been hardest for you."

"Me?" she laughed. "Oh, Douglas had worse."

'He played the game," Reggie smiled. "You've all played the game. Good-by, Miss Charlbury." And he went down to the hall where the old doctor was waiting for him under those family portraits of large arrogant men and frail women. "Yes. A curious family, doctor," said Mr. Fortune.

that that French Jew bought the black pearl in the Low archipelago. That was in 189—"

In 189—, that was twenty-eight years ago, and as far as Mark Stonor knew he was twenty-eight or twenty-nine himself. He felt queerly calm and queerly certain that a clew to his parents had come to him at last. He cut short the old man's memories to find out where Hibeau, the old shipmaster, lived, and he went to him. Hibeau was old, over seventy, but his memories were alert. Mark Stonor gave him no opportunity for garrullity. He said: "They tell me you have a wonderful knowledge of out of the way islands. Can you tell me any island that has a hill like that!" He sketched on a piece of paper the outline of a witch's hat.

"It looks like the landfall of Futa-Huoa, a little place north of the Manihiki. It's uninhabited."

"You're sure?" said Mark Stonor in dismay.

"No," grinned the old skipper. "Things happen, and I haven't been there for thirty years, but it was then. It's a lovely spot.'

"Could you take me there?" asked Mark, but the old man said he was past that, though he recommended a younger man He was not very satisfactory, on the whole. He remembered the bearded man, and the wife, and the young baby, and the uncle, of twenty-eight years ago when Mark probed his memory, but that was about all. He had nothing more to offer.

Mark Stonor hired a schooner and sailed the long slant to Futo-Huoa. At first he was excited, and then his senses dulled. He remembered that the old gossip in Noumea had declared that these people he hoped to find on the island with the witch's hat were fugitives from the law. He tried to tell himself that this was rubbish, that if they were his parents it couldn't possibly be so. But the thought stuck and chilled his eagerness. What if, after all, this strange obsession, this strange search had led him to a disgraced name? It seemed likely. Why did they choose a lonely island if not to hide?

They made Futa-Huoa in the very early morning, while Mark was still asleep. They were entering the bay when he came on deck, and being close in like that the sight of the Witch's Hat came as a shock. It was his Witch's Hat. What he had thought a dream was only the memory of somewhere under two or three. He stood trembling on the deck staring at the place. It was smaller, but in this bay he had lived. He saw the great breakers tumbling on the sand, and they were the breakers he had remembered. He saw the sand, and it was the fine and glowing silver of his dreams. He saw the house set back against the green of palms. It was not quite the same, but that was because creepers had covered it with a riot of flowers—and he knew it.

A man at his elbow told him that breakfast was served. He said, "No—I'm going ashore now."

The Kanakas took him skillfully through the surf and he landed on the silver beach. His heart was pounding and he was dizzy with his feelings. It was the same, unaltered. He lifted some of the sand in his hands. It was hot and slipped away with a queer, tickling sensation. Walking up to the house was like walking up a mountain, so deeply did he feel the strain. He supposed the room of the house was the same, but it was so small now, so very small where it had been bright and vast to a baby. He stood in the veranda staring in through the door, wondering who lived here now, and as he did a woman came from the interior of the house and said: "Nearly ready—" and stopped with a gasp.

Then she cried, hand on heart, "John"—and then again—"John, you've cut off"—Then she seemed to realize it was some one stranger and—younger. For she stood trembling, her sweet, pitiful face looking at him in mystification, and—yes, anguish.

He saw a woman a little beyond the middle fifties, graying hair, but figure still neat and alert, despite homemade clothes. He saw a face that was perhaps older, but which had never changed. How stupid he had been to confuse that dear, lovely face with Mrs. Stonor's. And she hadn't gone down with the cutter! He took an involuntary step forward, his eyes fixed on hers, both their eyes recognizing and understanding, it seemed. He could see her hand working in agitation at her breast. She choked, cried huskily:

"John!—Johnny!"

"Was that my name?" he said simply.

She gave a sob, cried out: "It can't be!"

He went toward her. "It is," he said shakily. "You know I'm your son, don't you, mother?"

She was in his arms, crying. And how tight her thin arms held him.

Presently she was saying: "I can't believe it! I can't! It's a miracle, Johnny! Johnny! It is you. Oh, I can't believe it yet! Tell me! Tell me!"

He began to tell Roger Stonor's story of his rescue, though he felt that he was the one to be told. In the middle of his telling she sprang up from the settee on which she had drawn him, clapped her hands, and even before the answering Kanaka boy was in the room was crying out: "Go fetch the master. Tell him something wonderful has happened. Tell him some one has come ashore from the schooner in the bay. Tell him to prepare for something big. Go on, Johnny! Go on, dear!"

Mark Stonor went on with his story. She stared at him with a tremendous hunger, touched him as though she could not believe yet, caught his hands and fondled them. She was vivid with excitement. Again she broke into his narrative. "You were rescued by those dear people, they looked after you. How good they were. Oh, we thought you dead. You were so ill. We could not make you well here. We thought you would die without a doctor. So Robert—Robert was my brother, your uncle, Johnny—went off in the cutter with your nurse and the Chinese servant. Went off, and the cutter never came back. There were storms, and it was an old cutter. We thought all of you had been drowned. You see we could never hear anything, cut off here. And I wished I'd gone, too, and been drowned, too. I wanted to go!" Suddenly she was still, rigid, looking at him with a strange fear. She said as though in agony, "But I could not go. Tell me, Johnny, all about your life in England, what have you become?"

He told her. She listened, not with excitement now, not fondling him, but with a queer stiffness and fear, her hands tight clasped in her lap. He could see she was trembling, but for another reason than joy. When he told her his profession she gasped and cried: "A lawyer," and looked at him almost in misery. And when he had finished she repeated her words: "A lawyer, a great lawyer at the criminal bar!"

"And Burdon briefs you," said a strained voice from the door, and both turned with a start to see a man standing there.

He was a tall man, a year or so older than the woman, with gray hair and a big gray beard. Mark would not have recognized him but for the eyes and nose and forehead he had seen so often in his own mirror. It was his father, he knew, and was awed and pained by the austerity and suffering he saw in that face. His mother gave a little sob, cried, "John, this is—"

His father held up a hand. It shook, but he was master of his voice. He said, "This is a lawyer, I heard him say, Mary. A rising young lawyer, a protege of Henry Burdon's. A young man of promise—"

"I am also your son, sir," said Mark steadily.

"My son was drowned as a baby," said his father steadily. "Have you taken silk yet, sir?"

"Not yet," said Mark bewildered. "It will come, and does it matter? I am your son, sir." The man made no response. "Won't you acknowledge me?"

"You are a lawyer," the man said stiffly. "Did you ever hear of the Clavell case?"

Mark stiffened, amazed. "What?" he cried.

"I see you have," said the man. "I am John Clavell."

Mark stared, amazed. Then he almost shouted: "So that's why Old Burdon picked me out! That's why he interested himself in me."

His father started, began to tremble. "Henry Burdon picked you out, interested himself in you? I don't understand."

"But it's simple," cried Mark. "He acted for you—by Jove, don't I know that! And he knew all along you were innocent. Then when he saw my face, which is your face, sir, without a beard, and heard my foster father's story he put two and two together and befriended me—for your sake, sir."

"Befriended you for my sake. I don't understand, boy," said his father shakily, and he felt for and dropped into a chair.

But Mark saw, he saw it all. He saw the whole fineness of Old Burdon in befriending the son of a colleague. He even saw Old Burdon's friendly guile in getting him to give an opinion on the old case Whillon vs. Clavell. Old Burdon had felt that one day Mark would trace his real parents, and having traced them, would discover his father's real identity, and had taken care to assure him of his father's innocence in advance. And there was no doubt of that innocence. When his father cried: "But how can you say I am innocent? The case went against me."

"I know," laughed Mark. "Why, Old Burdon gave me all the material with new matter just before I sailed. He may have had an intuition I should find you, he may have wanted to prepare for any eventuality. You must have had a poor defending counsel, sir; I guaranteed I'd have got a verdict for you, even on the old material. But with the new—Charles Whillon is dead now, you know, sir. His diaries make it plain that he gave you verbal instructions to convert those trust funds. He was a coward and a weakling, though. He funked facing the music when the crash came and the funds vanished into thin air. Perhaps he thought he had risked jail, too, in ordering you to sell out safe stock and buy that risky stuff. That's why he took refuge behind the fact that there was no evidence of his order and lied in court. But now—why, proving your innocence is going to be child's play. But—but why did you abscond on the bail and hide away here, sir?"

"I was a coward," said his father hoarsely.

"No," said his mother. "He did it for me—and you, Johnny. You were coming, you know, and the case seemed hopeless. Whillon had won his day, and there was no evidence on our side once Whillon had lied. It meant prison for your father. He thought of me and the shame and shock to me in my condition, and he thought of you, born with a convict for a father. So he sank his determination to face it out and came away for our sakes.

"We had determined to start with a new name in a new world for your sake, Johnny. My brother, who was surety, was agreeable. In fact, he came with us. We crossed into France, caught a boat for the South Seas at Marseilles and reached Noumea just in time for you to be born. We had to get away from there quickly because even in such a place word had got out about our flight. We bought a cutter, and hired a captain and mate to take us sailing over the South Seas. Your uncle, who was a yachtsman, got the captain to tell him about all the lonely islands he could think of, and when we had put him ashore in the Marshalls we set out in search of a likely place. We spent almost two years going from place to place before we came here. You practically lived on the sea, Johnny."

"I know, I remember some of it. It helped to bring me out here," said Mark.

"We decided to settle here, it was the most cut off of all the places," went on his mother. "We hired natives from the Marquesas and they built this house. We planted as best we could, and lived as best we could. Your uncle did a little trading with the cutter, and when that was lost with him we had to make do with a big canoe. We've been homesick, but happy. Very homesick of late, my dear, because we missed you, as well as home."

"And now you've got me—and I'm taking you home."

"You can't, as a rising young lawyer, take John Clavell, an absconding lawyer, home, my boy," said his father thickly.

"Can't I?" laughed Mark. "For wasn't it the John Clavell, lawyer, in my blood that has made me the lawyer I am? It is your blood in me, sir, that will prove you innocent."

His father hid his face in his hands and Mark rose and walked to the window. He saw the Witch's Hat towering above the trees as it had always towered in his dreams.

"You made up a story about that hill, didn't you, mother?" he said.

"Do you remember that, my dear?" she said, coming softly to his side. "It was a silly little story about that being the hat of the witch who protected and looked after us always."

"It wasn't silly, and you were right about her," he smiled. "For she brought me here. The memory of her hat stuck in my mind, though I forgot the story."

"Would you like to hear it again, Johnny?" she said softly, so very softly.

"Yes, dear," he said, putting his arm about her thin shoulders; "tell me now, as we look at it for the last time, for I feel that none of us are going to see it again."

ON THAT evening in July when every one seemed talking of Mark Stonor's brilliance in saving Jerome Brann from imprisonment for fraud, Old Burdon, who had briefed the young barrister, was saying: "But the ball is at your feet, Mark; to go off now for a long sea voyage—why, it's sheer folly."

Mark Stonor, staring out at the lovely dinginess of the Temple, answered without turning around: "Oh, I don't know. The courts will be up in a week or two, and I'll have the whole of the long vacation before me."

"You haven't," said Old Burdon. "You'll have people tumbling over each other to secure you for the Michaelmas sittings. Don't you realize that you are on the verge of fame, that now or never is your chance?"

"I know," said Mark, turning a troubled face to the solicitor. "But—I've got to go."

"It's flaunting fortune," cried Old Burdon. "Even a man of your ability mustn't run away from his opportunity like this. There'll be work in chambers, for instance."

"I'm sorry, sir," said Mark Stonor, "but I've told you before how it is—I just seem to have to go."

Old Burdon frowned. As Mark indicated, this was not the first time he had gone off in this queer, strange way. It gave him another line of attack.

"Even apart from missing work," he said, "what are people going to think of a barrister, however able, who goes off when the whim moves him on such mad vagabondage? What possesses you, my boy?"

"I don't know," said Mark Stonor, frowning and reddening. "I call myself a fool, too, and yet I go—I sometimes think it is in my blood. I think my father must have been a sailor, sir."

The older man shot a quick look at the fine, clear cut face.

"I should have argued your father was a lawyer," he said. "Your gifts suggest that is in your blood, too."

He seemed to be trying to find out something as he spoke, but Mark was too concerned with his own strange emotions to notice. He said slowly: "That, too, I seem to be the prey of two obsessions—the law and the sea. Nearly always the law is the stronger and seems to command my whole life. But then the sea begins to pull, and it is more powerful. It's a sort of fever, a command to go off—somewhere. I try to fight it, but I can't. It comes between me and everything. When I lost you the Lemoin case, that was through trying to beat it under. I had made up my mind that this going off was ridiculous and this time I would not go. But all the time I should have been fighting for Lemoin the tug was at me, I could think of nothing else—and I made a hash of that case."

He walked to the window again and stared out. Old Burdon's keen eyes watched him sympathetically. He knew the boy's history.

Mark went on: "I must go. I can't explain it well, but it's as though I did wrong by not going. It's as though I shall miss something, leave something undone by not going. And I'm afraid of missing something."

"What?" asked Old Burdon sharply.

"I don't know—it's only a feeling, you know. Just the queer pull to go out there to—something. Perhaps it's nothing after all, a memory of my forgotten childhood, a strain inherited from my lost father. It's absurd, it plays the deuce with my career. But I've got to go."

"What does your stepfather say?" asked Old Burdon.

"Oh, he thinks I'm foolish, too; but he has become resigned to my idiocy. And then he—he half understands my impulse. He feels that I am searching for my parents and that one day I might pick up facts about them."

"But you never have?" said the old solicitor, watching him closely.

"No, sir; not a thing. Perhaps I never shall—still, it may be the instinct to find out who I really am that is driving me on. I might find out something some day."

"You might," said Old Burdon slowly, and he sat back and stared out of the window himself. Then he said in a determinedly light tone. "You might find something to make you stay down there where you were found, and I should be robbed of the most promising junior I'd ever briefed; so, before you go, I think I'd better get as much out of you as possible." He pulled out a drawer. "You might look into these three cases and give me your opinion on them. Oh, and here's another, an old matter, Whillon versus Clavell. We lost that case many years ago, but some new evidence has lately come to hand. Look through it and see if it is worth reopening."

Mark Stonor left Old Burdon's office, genuinely sorry that he should seem to fail the great lawyer who had done so much for him, yet elated that soon he would be on the sea again and away—away down to the warm seas that so strangely called him. All through his life this queer pull had commanded him and forced him to obey; all through his short life his career had been threatened with shipwreck because, at an impulse and at short notice, he had packed up, left everything, and set out for those strange sunlit waters that called and called to him with a strange imperativeness.

During boyhood this tugging at his heartstrings had been a meaningless torment until one day the man he called father, Roger Stonor, had explained much to him. He was not really Roger Stonor's son, but a castaway. He had been the only white survivor of some wreck in the South Seas. Roger Stonor had been making a journey from Australia to California with his wife in this ship that effected the rescue. This ship had been forced out of its course by the storms that must have wrecked the vessel the child, now Mark Stonor, had sailed in.

One day a small group of atolls had been sighted and would have been ignored, for they were charted as uninhabited, only smoke was seen rising from one of them. A boat putting ashore found three Kanakas in an advanced state of exhaustion, and a native woman who was expending the last remnants of her strength in the cave of a very sickly white infant.

These were taken back to the ship, and the nurse died in the course of the next day, and one of the Kanakas a few days later. The two remaining Kanakas had practically nothing to say about the white child.

They had been the deck hands of an interisland trading schooner. They had been beating up toward the Constellations during a stiff blow when they sighted a cutter making very heavy weather. This cutter followed them into Lagoon inlet, which is the only good harbor of the Constellations, and a boat came off from it. It brought aboard a tall, thin white man, an old Chinaman, his body servant, the native woman nurse, and the white child, who was very ill. This white man had bargained with the captain of the schooner to carry them quickly to a near-by port so that a doctor could attend to the child. The little cutter was too dangerous a craft for such weather.

The man's price must have been good, for the master of the schooner put out against the barometer and a day later was caught in the bad weather which wrecked him. He, his mate, and the thin white man were drowned when the schooner went down to deep water. Four Kanakas got ashore with the woman and Chinaman, both badly hurt, and the child. They had been on the island more than a week before being picked up, during which time one Kanaka and later the old Chinaman died.

Before she died the native nurse had been unable to speak, and the surviving natives could tell nothing about the child, its name or from where it came. The woman and the Chinaman seemed to have been curiously secretive and dwelt apart with the child on the atoll. They had learned that the white man was not the father of the child, but the brother of the mother, but whether the mother and father were alive, and if so, where they lived, had not been discovered. The Kanakas had never before seen the cutter that appeared so mysteriously out of the sea, and the cutter had added to the mystery by being nameless. There was nothing on the baby to help identification.

Apart from an insufficiently maternal stewardess, Roger Stonor's wife was the only woman on the rescuing ship, and she, with the aid of a doctor going on leave, saved the baby's life.

By the time San Francisco was reached he had become a fine, healthy boy of between three and four years old. And something else had happened. He had endeared himself to the childless Stonors, to Roger quite as much as to his wife, and they had made up their minds to adopt him, if possible. It proved only too possible. The child's parents were never found, though Roger Stonor, a rich solicitor, had done all that was humanly possible by lawyer and advertisement to trace them. It was, in time, decided that mother and father must have gone down with the cutter in the rough weather and that the child must be an orphan. He was therefore given the name of Mark Stonor and brought up as their child.

This revelation, though leaving Mark with a certain blank, served to explain a great deal. It explained what he had thought were his queer dreams. They had been strange dreams for one who lived in cities. There had been ships in them and the lift and swing of the sea. Some had the throb and the heave and the sense of stuffiness of a small steamer cabin, with the face of a woman bending over him. That was probably Mrs. Stonor nursing him back to life on the small ship that rescued him. The vast swinging deck of a liner was undoubtedly that one which carried them all from America to England.

But the other dreams had wanted some placing. The dream of a small kicking deck and sails that swung clattering above his head, of a black man snatching him up in his arms because somewhere the swing of that sail had meant danger to him, of seas coming with a flounce and a crash over the bows of a small ship, and his game at being frightened at the seas. And half naked brown men who had laughed with a great display of bright teeth at his pretense of fright.

He had never been able to understand how the heave an drush of that small sailing ship had got into his dreams before Roger Stonor explained. Nor the wonderful brightness of the days through which that ship sailed; nor little fairyland of green islands that shyly crept by them at times. Only when Stonor spoke of his hidden past did he realize that he must have sailed on that small vessel—the cutter, perhaps, or a schooner—and sailed on it for a long time.

His father, he came to think, must have been the master of that vessel. From amid his glittering dreams he disentangled a tall, somber man with a beard.

There was another white man, too, a tall, thin one, undoubtedly the uncle who had been drowned on the inter-island schooner. And there had been a woman, a dear woman. She carriel him and played with him a lot. She was, he felt, his real mother. And yet he wondered if this was but a mere confusion of memory, because in his dreams that woman also seemed to be bending over him in a stuffy ship's cabin as well as in a hot, bright room of some house on land. Was he mixing this dear memory up with Mrs. Stonor, who had also been lovely and tender?

The house on land was by a thundering blue sea. It was set against dancing green palms on the edge of a beach of silver. He remembered that sand with glamour. The feet slipped back in it as one walked. Also it had a glorious hot, tickling effect if let escape from the hands on to the bare legs. The whole of the memory of this place was exquisite; its color, its jewel-like flowers, the clear, warm wonder of its sunlight, the vision of the small sailing ship anchored off shore and looking like a lovely toy, and finally the queer single hill away to the right, which somehow came to his memory as the Witch's Hat. It was always in the picture, that queer, sharp hill that rose so abruptly out of a mat of greenery that seemed to make its brim. But why he called it the Witch's Hat he did not know. Had the woman made up a story about it?

The loveliness of this place, the thunder of the sea on the silver white beach, the heave and dip of the sea under the small dancing vessel, the memory of the dear woman had wrung him all during his boyhood, dragged at him with a strange and powerful allure. Roger Stonor did not know of this nor had he spoken of Mark's past, save from some mention of the fact that they had traveled in his boyhood. It was only when Mark, after a delicious, agonizing spell of such dreams and longings, had said that on the whole he thought he wouldn't be a lawyer, as he had planned, but would become a sailor, that Roger Stonor told him about his rescue from the atoll.

Roger Stonor told him in the hope of settling his mind. He had noted that the boy, he was in his middle teens then, had been vague, dreamy, disturbed, and his brilliant school work had fallen off in consequence. When Mark spoke of his desire to go to sea, Roger Stonor felt he understood the pull of the blood. He told the story, emphasizing the fact that the boy's father and mother had probably been lost at sea. He wanted to make Mark feel the cruelty of the sea, to make him hostile to it as the murderer of his parents.

He did not altogether succeed. The revelation of his early days seemed to satisfy the boy for a time. He passed some glamorous weeks dwelling on the mystery and wonder of his birth, and during that time his passion to go out on the sea spent its force. He went back to his work with the curious lucid brilliance and acuteness that foreshadowed a future of exceptional capacities.

The lawyer in Roger Stonor was delighted to observe that all the tendencies of his adopted son were toward the law. By the time he went up to Cambridge it was already plain that Mark was a born lawyer; that, indeed, there might be, as Old Burdon had argued, something in his blood that gave him outstanding qualities in pleading. He swept the board at Cambridge, though he gave Mark Stonor a period of panic. In his second year he threw over all his plans for the long vacation and went off on a vagabondage in the South Seas.

He didn't attempt to explain himself; he just said he felt he had to go. The curious tug had come to him again. Whether it had been aroused by going to a South Seas play, then acted in town, or whether some inner impulse had moved him, he did not know, but he did abruptly become the victim of a vague but overwhelming desire.

He must go down to that place where he had been found, feel the heave and kick of a small ship under him, hear the wind in the sails, see the wonder blue of wonder seas and the dancing green of palms. He must look and look for a beach of silver and a bright house against emerald foliage. He must look for the Witch's Hat. It was a pull, a reasonless pull. He felt that his parents were dead, that he would find nothing to establish his name down there in the jeweled seas of the south; and, indeed, that scarcely moved him, for he was content with the name he bore—but he just had to go. There was something down there.

Roger Stonor let him go, and spent many anxious months. He saw all his hopes of Mark ruined, and the boy a wandering sailor among the islands. But Mark came back in time. He had traveled Malaysia and did not like it. There were too many biting insects in Borneo; Java was hot, uncomfortable, and noisy; the other islands did not appeal to him. He found life on small steamers monotonous, and the schooners were cramped and sometimes dirty. Queer—there had been none of the glamour of dreams in actuality, and he was glad to be back in town. He had learned nothing at all about himself, except, as he told Roger Stonor, "That I definitely haven't a love of sailoring in me."

He was certain of that. Roger Stonor, lately a widower and fearful that Mark would leave him, rejoiced. He watched Mark's career at Cambridge end gloriously, saw him brilliantly begin his studies for the bar.

There was no doubt from the first that Mark had exceptional talents for criminal law. He was an outstanding student in an outstanding year. And not only had he great gifts; he had great luck. Sir Henry Burdon, a Bencher of his Inn, picked him out at a big dinner one night. During that meal Mark Stonor had noticed this old man staring at him with a strangely searching look. A companion at table had told him that this was Old Burdon of Burdon, Predell & Burdon, "one of the mandarins before whom we mere barristers bow," the man said. "If a nabob like that briefs the likes of us, then the future is all motors and glory."

Mark was fascinated by the great solicitor, but astounded when Old Burdon sought him out after dinner and demanded his name. Mark told it, and wondered why Old Burdon stared. Mark said, "I'm the son, or rather adopted son, of Roger Stonor, whom you may know, sir."

"Adopted son," echoed Old Burdon, and stared harder, and then began to talk of other things, drawing Mark out with a good deal of cleverness. Mark thought no more of this, but a week later Roger Stonor told him that Old Burdon had called on him and shown a great interest in Mark, so great an interest that he forsaw a career already in the making for his adopted son.

He was justified—though Mark himself threatened to wreck it. Old Burdon seemed to make a point of being intimate with Roger Stonor for the sake of Mark. He became a friend of the family; he was enthusiastic about the young man's cleverness, and when Mark passed to the full status of barrister he was ready with the first brief.

And Mark refused it—to go off again on a sea vagabondage.

Mark knew it was folly. He knew he was endangering a career; he knew he had been disillusioned before. But he had to go. The strange, commanding force was too strong. He felt that somewhere, down there on the wine colored seas and under the gold of the sun, was—something. He must go. He dare not resist:

Roger Stonor, in a panic, talked to Old Burdon, asked him to persuade the boy and to suggest other holidays. Old Burdon tried, and yet it was Old Burdon who sent him off. He looked strangely at Mark for some minutes, then said: "Let him go. We won't hold him while this is on him. And perhaps he ought to go."

This time Mark wandered the islands from the Ladrones to the Sporades—and then came back. He was not so dissatisfied with things this time. He had seen beauty, if schooner sailing was still cramped and rather dirty. He came back because the pull had dwindled and gone, leaving him once more pure lawyer and a denizen of cities. On this trip he had tried to find out something about himself, about a trading captain of twenty-two years ago who sailed with his wife on a cutter. He tried to find out about an island with a hill like a witch's hat on it. He found nothing.

For the next two years he steadily built up a career and a reputation, justifying all Roger Stonor's and Old Burdon's hopes of him. He was certainly the most promising junior at the criminal bar, and his extraordinary flair and thoroughness in defenses suggested that the day was not far off when he would be wearing silk and when he would be a leader in all the greatest cases of the day.

For two years he demonstrated his astonishing natural genius for law—then the old strange urge came to him once more. The command to be off and wandering on the warm seas assaulted him in the middle of his work. He fought it, and in doing so turned his mind into a turmoil that lost him the Lemoin case. His reputation suffered a little over that, for he had already shown that he should win his verdict, and his failure started people. Old Burdon readily agreed to let him go off on a holiday, for he thought the young man was overworked. And Mark had spent months in Australasian waters, wandering and asking questions and trying to find out if there was such an island as that which had a hill like a witch's hat.

He had returned, obliterated every doubt about him the Lemoin business had called up in a single dazzling case, and had stepped out on to the highway of fame. For more than twelve months he marched along that highway with an assurance that was almost awing. His reputation began to spread beyond the courts. The great public began to realize that when Mark Stonor's name appeared as counsel for the defense it quite frequently meant that he was the counsel who got the verdict.

Finally he had been briefed as leader in the cause celebre of the day; he had defended Jerome Brann, the great financier, against a charge of fraud. Public opinion had made up his mind that Brann was going to jail. But Brann not only did not go to jail, but by the time Mark Stonor had finished with the case Brann was almost a popular figure as a much wronged man. Mark Stonor was more than popular. He had become, decisively, the one man to get by hook or by crook when a big case had to be defended.

He knew that; Old Burdon knew it. Old Burdon, Roger Stonor, and he himself had worked for this day. And yet now that the day was here he was going off again, going off on a strange, reasonless vagabondage that might lose him the position he had so laboriously attained.

Well, he couldn't help it; he just had to go, as he had said. Something forced him, something drew him down there. Was it the glamour of the sea and the sun and the shining islands? He did not know. Was it the mystery of his parentage? He did not know. He only knew that the impulse was on him and that he would have no peace until he obeyed. And he obeyed.

He fulfilled his obligations to Old Burdon and gave his opinion on the cases handed to him. Of the case Whillon versus Clavell he said: "An interesting case, that. I don't know why you lost it, sir, even on the old evidence. It seems obvious to me that the solicitor, Clavell, was acting under the instructions of the trustee. The new evidence you have gathered confirms this. I should certainly reopen it. That poor wretch Clavell should be cleared. If—if you could hold it over till I return I'd like to see him. After an interview, I feel I might almost guarantee a verdict."

"Well, we might leave it over," said Old Burdon, who did not seem highly interested. "We'll see." He tossed the papers into his desk and went on to talk of Mark Stonor's trip.

Mark Stonor went down to the South Seas. He went straight through to Australia meaning to catch a boat from Hobart to some southern islands. He had to wait three days for a connection, and, bored and impatient, got on a tramp running up to the Fijis instead. He was uncomfortable. He was anxious about his work in England, he was cursing himself for a fool for coming upon this senseless trip. The heat was not glorious, it was intolerable and fairy islands stealing out of sparkling seas become monotonous with familiarity.

Quite suddenly his mood had changed. He would have done with this foolish traipsing around. He would not stay away even as long as he intended, but go straight home at his first chance.

At New Caledonia he left the ship. The captain tried to entice him on with stories of Fiji, but he was sick of wonder and beauty and the call of the courts was powerful in his ears. He acted so hastily that again he was stranded, this time in Noumea, waiting for a boat. He walked the Gallicized streets of that town bored to death. The pull had left him, he was going home, he had no more concern with the South Seas.

It was just at such moments that fate shows what a fickle jade she can be. With his traps packed ready for the boat which would call next day, Mark Stonor spent the evening at a club by the beach, and to pass that evening submitted to the talk of a queer old man of uncertain nationality. During that talk the old man said: "You are a lawyer, eh? These seas are full of victims who have escaped you. I have seen many. Very many." He told of a number, but Mark listened very little until the old fellow said: "And I remember an Englishman and his wife, and another Englishman with them, a long thin fellow, not bearded like the husband. He was the brother of the wife. I remember these particularly because they came off a Marseilles boat and tried to be French, because, also, they did not want to land here, but had to. Yes, had to. Nature takes no heed of flight.

"The lady—they were all people of breeding—had a little son born here. She was only landed just in time. How those runaways fretted at being kept, especially the one with the beard, which was a new beard, as one could tell by the curiosity with which his hand yet felt it. And they were off so quickly. They bought a little cutter in the harbor and hired a master and mate.

"The master was my good friend Hibeau of this town still, and off they sailed before the lady was really fit. I remember the women saying that her going was suicidal, but she went and she was willing. She was afraid for that gentleman with a beard. Hibeau, when he came back, said they were queer ones. They had talked to him about nothing but lonely islands, the lonelier the better, and when they had gotten all they wanted they paid him off and put him ashore at the Marshalls, and took the cutter on alone. I remember them well, the woman was so good to look at, and they were intelligent people, too, not mere clumsy bolting thieves."

Four things stood out in that humdrum narrative. The man with a beard, the wife, the thin man, her brother, and the cutter. These were figures of Mark Stonor's dreams and his story. He asked with a dry throat, "And when did this happen?"

"Oh, a long time ago. It was the year

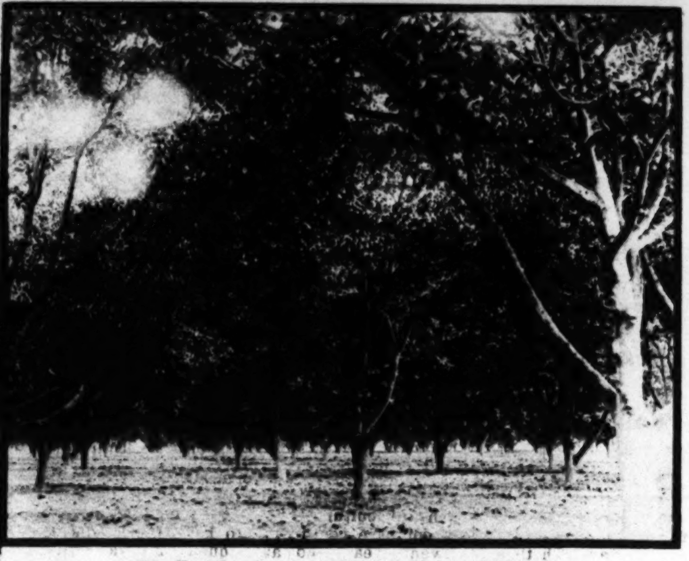
Fruit Trees Appeal to Both the Palate and the Eye

By Frances Duncan

Flushed with maidenly delight, a radiant thing is the peach tree in springtime.

The orange tree in blossom or in fruit is lovely enough for any garden.



The English walnut is a noble tree with beautiful branch structure, giving shade but not excluding air.

THE OLDER gardens had an appeal to the palate as well as to the eye. An English naval officer visiting Philadelphia long before the Revolution wrote of the Evans garden that "even a glimpse through the palings at its nectarines and apricots was enough to make the mouth of the passer-by to water." The Old Testament idea of peace and plenty was that a man might "sit under his own vine and his own fig tree." Any account of the early California Missions is incomplete without due notice of the Padres' adventures in horticulture, for they not only planted fruits, but fruits of quality. New England settlers from the East to Ohio have blessed the memory of Johnny Appleseed. Nothing gives quite the feeling of homelikeness as the ability to set on one's table fruit from one's own garden.

And fruit trees are very beautiful. The fact that they are so exceedingly useful has, curiously enough, obscured their decorative value, being rather in the same case with the eighteenth century damsel who, to be properly ornamental, had to be of no economic value and couldn't possibly earn her living. The soft gray-green of olive trees is very lovely on a rough hill slope. There is no tree more beautiful than the orange tree—its lustrous foliage is no less handsome than that of the camellia, and then the overpowering beauty of its flowering and the richness of its succeeding golden fruit! It might easily pose for a picture of the apples of the Hesperides. A notable part of the elaborate gardens of Le Notre at Versailles was the Orangerie—the orange trees in tubs which decorated the terrace and were housed in the colder weather. Probably they were by no means as handsome specimens as the simplest California ranch can show. Richly beautiful in flower and foliage is the pomegranate, which was prized in the gardens of old Greece. As a shrub, it is as decorative as one could wish. Pear and peach and almond are wonderfully lovely in blossoming. The plum in California suffers little from the pests which so distress it in the East—curculia and black rot; also it thrives in poor soil, doing well even in black adobe. The walnut, especially the English walnut, is usually very beautiful in form, with a wide spread of branches, loose airy head, and most attractive foliage. Where the winter sunshine is desirable the walnut makes a delightful shade tree and an excellent street tree—especially beloved of the small boy.

Blackberry vines are quite brilliantly effective, and grow extremely well when planted against the wire fence of the chicken yard. In fact, the gardener with small space, who needs to consider economy, could do much in making a place charming by a skillful planting of fruit alone. Strawberries make a delightful edging to a flower bed, and if the runners are kept clipped the plants will fruit year after year; and though grapes grown commercially are close-pruned and not allowed to become rampant vines, on the home place there is no more worthy pergola vine than a grapevine. The shadows of the leaves are peculiarly beautiful, and the fruit so grown is excellent. It may also be grown on a trellis and cover the whole side of the house.

Beside the well-known fruits, others, less commonly planted, are highly ornamental as well as useful. There is the White Sapote, peculiarly drought-resistant, a tree introduced into California by early Mexican settlers. The Feijoa, or pineapple guava, is an imposing looking evergreen shrub, with very beautiful flowers, white, waxy petals as pure white as a white camellia underneath and shading to crimson above. Delightfully fragrant is the fruit, as well as toothsome. The avocado tree is generally of stately form and handsome foliage and deserves a prominent place among the ornamentals which pay their way with beauty as well as fruit.

The Natal plum should be better known as a hedge plant; it forms a thick-growing, thorny barrier several feet high, and the flowers in spring are white and fragrant; the bright scarlet fruit which follows is most attractive.

The wild yellow flowering currant does well in very difficult soils from sandy to black adobe, and, being a native Californian, experiences none of the difficulties the eastern red or white currant encounter. It makes delicious jelly, and from midwinter to spring it is a joyous mass of deep yellow, buttercup-colored flowers that are very effective. Try it on a bit of waste land or rough hill slope. Extremely interesting is that Himalayan, the giant evergreen raspberry which grows to the height of fifteen feet. The yellow fruit is excellent but must be used for home consumption—it cannot stand shipping.

These are a few of the plants which should rejoice the heart of the frugal-minded gardener.

> That though on gardening she was bent,
> She had a frugal mind."

Wire Worms and Dahlias

An ancient enemy of the dahlia is the wire worm, and so far the most effective treatment, according to one authority, is calcium cyanide in a granular form. The method used successfully for corn is as follows:

Soil is prepared as for planting and worked into a good condition of tilth. The corn is planted very thickly in rows three feet apart. One week later the calcium cyanide in granular form is sowed right over the tops of the seed rows so it lies an inch above the seed, using about a pound to a thousand feet of row. A week after the seed is planted gives the wire worms sufficient time to gather for the feast but not quite time to enjoy it, so that when the poison gas is released it results in a good kill.

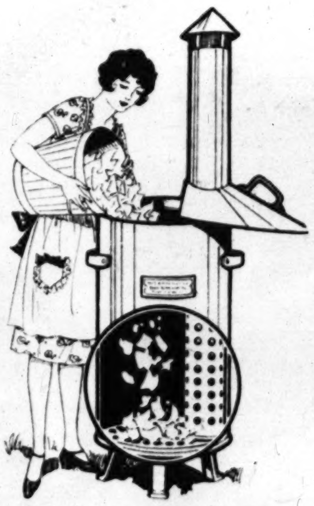
Now it is this practice for corn which is used with good effect for dahlias. A trap crop such as corn or split peas is planted before the dahlia tubers are put into the ground and the worms are enticed and murdered as described above, and the dahlias enter into cleared territory. There is also the old "army method" of dealing with wire worms. Sink a potato in the ground, a wire with a white flag on it being stuck in the potato that it may be conveniently located. After a few weeks the wire worms will have settled in the potato, and it is taken up and destroyed.

Grapevines trailing over the arbor yield a creditable crop of fruit as well as shade for this Pasadena garden—Ex-Senator B. W. Hahn's.

The gorgeous pomegranate is as striking today as it was centuries ago.

Not always is the fig tree big enough to sit under, as the Biblical writer would have it, but these San Joaquin Valley specimens are.

The Perforated Flue



Means Complete Combustion and a Smoke Minimum

The perforated flue feeds air to the burning mass and nothing is left but fluffy ashes. Anything burnable disappears. It is impossible to clog the draft. And the flue being at one side, the capacity is remarkably large. Cram into it all the rubbish you can find—light it at the top—it burns to the bottom. And the sparks stay in!

"The Porter of the Backyard"

is made of heavy tank steel and cast iron which will not warp, sag or crack. Yet it is easily moved about the yard. And you'll find it isn't necessary to clean out the ashes for three months. Ask your hardware man about the Martin Spark-Proof Incinerator, or mail the coupon for information.

Cleaning Up on the Summer Crop of Poultry Pests

Spraying poultry houses thoroughly with a good disinfectant is necessary, and especially is it needed in warm weather when insect pests multiply rapidly. The bucket pump sprayer is handy for killing mites that may be hiding in the crevices of the poultry buildings.

The hand sprayer does not have the capacity of the bucket pump sprayer, but it is effective at close quarters and handy to work with under the roosts.

Sodium fluoride is highly recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture for ridding the birds of pests. It can be administered dry or in a liquid solution. This shows the powder method of lice control.

Dipping may be done in warm weather. In a tub partly filled with tepid water containing one ounce of sodium fluoride to the gallon, the bird is submerged so that the solution reaches all parts of its body. Ruffling the feathers hastens penetration. The bird's head is "ducked" under, bill down, to prevent it from swallowing any of the liquid. It is a sure kill for lice.

Spading up the chicken yard sweetens the soil through the action of sunlight and air, and the oftener it is done the better. It improves the appearance of the yard also.

Fine birds should be identified. This White Leghorn hen is getting a colored legband to show how good she is. Where there are many birds, numbered bands are used. Cleanliness, culling and identification are essential on modern poultry breeding farms.

Eliminating Guesswork in Citrus Feeding

Twenty Years of Experiments Give Growers Valuable Data—Nitrogen and Organic Matter Held Vital Constituents—Cottonseed Meal Produces Best Results for Its Cost at Chaffey

BY CHARLES J. BOOTH, Chaffey Junior College, Ontario.

AT a recent meeting of citrus growers some one made the comment that the longer a farmer is engaged in the business of growing citrus the less he knows about the subject. Prof. Robert W. Hodgson of the division of subtropical horticulture of the university was present and commented on this statement, pointing out the gradual increase in knowledge about citrus fruits and their culture, and emphasizing the fact that any grower who keeps in touch with this developing information must in the very nature of things know more about the subject each year that he continues in the business.

Prof. Hodgson is right. To take only one subject connected with citriculture—fertilization—we need only compare conditions today with those of twenty years ago to realize that the increase in knowledge on this important subject alone has been simply stupendous. About the only figures quoted twenty years ago as a guide to fertilizer practice were those dealing with the amount of plant food elements removed by the crop and the fertilizer recommendations based on these figures. There were no orchard experiments by which to check up the information thus noted. Indeed, fertilization of citrus fruits at that time was not carried on with a background of scientific data for guidance.

The situation today is entirely different. The Rubidoux experiment of the University of California was started in 1906 and is now in its nineteenth year. Other experiments of the university have been maintained for shorter intervals, but some of them now cover a considerable number of years. Different experiments are being conducted in various parts of the State. Experiments begun at Chaffey in Ontario in the fall of 1915 are now rounding out the eleventh year.

There has been a changed attitude toward experimental work in general on the part of the growers of citrus fruits. Branded at first as "impractical" and "theoretical," these experiments are now coming to be appraised by the growers as exceedingly trustworthy guides for determining fertilizer practice.

For several years the young grove of the citrus experiment station at Riverside, on the Box Springs road site, has furnished a splendid example of what could be done in the development of a citrus property through the use of organic matter grown between the trees. This young grove is now nine years old. At a recent meeting of farmers, Gordon Surr of the station pointed out that during these nine years the total cost of this young grove, including cost of land with water, preparation of land, original cost of trees, annual application of water, cultivation, pest control, and all other items of expense excepting interest and taxes, amounted for the nine years to a total per acre of $1171.64. During the same time the income from the sale of oranges and of black-eye beans (grown between the rows during the first two or three years after the trees were planted) amounted to $1106.39, leaving a total cost for the trees during these nine years of an amount equal to only $65.25 per acre. A remarkable showing!

THE VITAL FACTORS

As a result of these experiments in fertilization it has been shown again and again that nitrogen and organic matter constitute the vital factors in any fertilizer program for the soils of Southern California. There have been, of course, slight modifications of these general conclusions, and other factors have been emphasized from time to time. For instance, there is some evidence that small quantities of phosphorus may contribute to increased yields. The evidence seems quite certain that in years of light rainfall, such as those of the two or three seasons through which we recently passed, there is a tendency for nitrates to accumulate in the soil, creating a condition which may call for some modification of fertilizer practice. There is an increasing inclination on the part of farmers to have their soils tested for nitrates at frequent intervals. As a result we will unquestionably have in the near future a very greatly increased fund of information on this subject.

Dealers in fertilizers of various kinds will point to this or that individual grove as proof positive of the merits of the particular fertilizer they have to sell. There is no question that citrus fruits can be successfully grown with many different kinds of fertilizers provided always that the fertilizer program makes provision for the two essentials already mentioned—nitrogen and organic matter. But one of the essential questions connected with any fertilizer program is that of cost. The writer recently gathered information regarding the cost of a ton of nitrogen from a number of different sources. Please note the reference is to "a ton of nitrogen," not "a ton of fertilizer." A ton of nitrogen from nitrate of soda, for example, would mean approximately six and two-thirds tons of the nitrate of soda. A ton of nitrogen from blood analyzing 13 per cent would require about seven and one-half tons of the material. The figures which follow are for sufficient fertilizer material to furnish one ton of actual nitrogen.

It was found in this study that a ton of nitrogen in the form of sulphate of ammonia would cost approximately $375, while in the form of a complete fertilizer analyzing 4-8-6, this same amount of nitrogen would cost more than $1300. Here is a range for the same amount of nitrogen of more than $900. Other materials come between these two extremes. A ton of nitrogen from nitrate of soda cost approximately $400; from nitrate of lime, over $500; from cottonseed meal, approximately $600; from 8-8 tankage, more than $700. The complete fertilizer, of course, was relatively high in cost because to the original cost of the nitrogen is added that of phosphoric acid and potash, as well as a charge for mixing.

WHAT EXPERIMENTS SHOWED

It may be urged that while some of these materials cost more they give increased returns. The results from the Chaffey fertilizer experiment this year dealing with that point are illuminating. In the discussion which follows, those plots are selected from the Chaffey grove which received one-half of their fertilizer in the form of barnyard manures and one-half in the form of the particular fertilizer under investigation. There were five plots.

The first received its fertilizer one-half in the form of complete fertilizer and one-half in the form of barnyard manure; the second, the tankage plot, received its supply one-half from tankage and one-half from the barnyard; the third had all of its fertilizer from the barnyard; the fourth received one-half from sulphate of ammonia and one-half from the barnyard; the fifth received one-half from cottonseed meal and one-half from the barnyard. In each case every tree received a total of two and one-half pounds of nitrogen. After deducting in each case the cost of the fertilizer, it was found that there was a wide variation in the income from each of the different plots. The data which follow bear this out very conclusively.

The income per tree this year from the "complete" plot, above the cost of the fertilizer, was $1.64. The income from the tankage plot was somewhat higher, to be exact, $2.25 per tree. Barnyard came next in the series with an income of $3.14. The value of the fruit on the sulphate of ammonia trees, above the cost of fertilizer, was $3.49. In the cottonseed meal plot the income, after deducting fertilizer cost, was $4.40. This shows a range extending from $1.64, in the case of the complete, to $4.40 in the case of the cottonseed meal plot. In other words, after paying for the cost of the fertilizer, cottonseed meal produced almost three times as much in actual money as did the complete trees.

These figures are based on an assumption of 3.4 cents per pound for the fruit, an assumption which will not be very far from the actual returns as shown by the packing-house figures. Of course, the question naturally arises as to the quality of

Hope Hovers Over Moreno Valley Again After Years of Disappointment

By R. R. BENSON

RIVERSIDE.—Some thirty-six years ago the bird of agricultural promise hovered over Moreno Valley, when the extension of the Big Bear irrigation project was conceived, and even alighted for a brief visit, during which some scattering orange and olive groves were set out. Then the bird took flight and soared away to the north over parched and ragged hills to Redlands. The dry years of the early '90s left too little water in the Big Bear reservoir to allow of any extension of the ditch to Moreno.

The Moreno Valley's broad acres are deep and fertile in general, with an occasional wave uprolling over some granite outcrop and rising gently to the north and west where Moreno Hills and Box Springs Mountains form divides between San Timoteo Canyon and the Highgrove watershed of the Santa Ana River. But, as with other Southland projects, water has been the "sine qua non" of Moreno Valley.

The first hope of watering Moreno was awakened as early as 1880 when the State Engineering Department authorized a survey of Bear Valley as a possible reservoir site. The report of the survey was favorable and evinced a careful and thorough study of the formation and its practical possibilities. It said:

"This valley has the appearance of once having held a (natural) lake whose water at an elevation of 135 feet above its bottom overflowed at the east end into the head of a canyon which leads away into the Colorado Desert. Now, however, we find a deep and narrow rockbound gorge leading out of its other extremity and joining the canyon of the Santa Ana River about ten miles above its outlet into San Bernardino Valley. The bottom plane of the valley is twelve miles long and varies between a few hundred yards and a mile in width. Its lower end is narrow and rockbound, then a couple of miles above the damsite it opens into a couple of beautiful meadows whose level plains, 700 to 800 acres in area, are thirty to forty feet above the outlet, and at the upper end of the valley is another such flat covering about 800 acres and twenty to thirty feet higher."

Actual construction on a dam followed a visit to the valley by F. E. Brown, a young civil engineer, and his partner, Hiram Barton, in 1883. They secured 4500 acres for their reservoir, 3800 from Los Angeles owners and 700 from the Southern Pacific Railway, and organized the Bear Valley Land and Water Company, with a capital stock of $360,000 held by eleven subscribers. It was incorporated in San Bernardino. Excavation began in September of the same year. In 1884 it was brought to its full height, 64 feet. It was of the single-arch type and was built of granite blocks laid in cement mortar. It cost $75,000.

Distribution of the impounded water was effected through the purchase of a half-interest in the North Fork Canal Company, with water and ditch rights at the mouth

Winter Poultry Show Dates Are Set

At a meeting of the Greater Southern California Poultry Association held recently at Los Angeles, the following officers were elected: W. Vaughn Scott of Los Angeles, president; Paul E. Kennedy of Pomona, vice-president; Henry H. Mumford of Los Angeles, secretary-treasurer. The executive and show committee is composed of J. Will Blackman of Los Angeles, chairman, Albert George Sly, George L. Ashton and W. B. Merwin of Los Angeles and George C. England of Inglewood.

The dates for the coming Los Angeles winter poultry show have been announced as November 30 to December 5 inclusive. No place for holding the show has been selected as yet, but it is announced that it will be centrally located and in keeping with the high standard set by previous exhibitions.

Poultry Raising in the Southland

There are certain factors which especially support the business of poultry raising in Southern California; the climate favors production and the growth of green feed all the year around, and the continued growth of Los Angeles and other smaller cities here furnish a wonderful market. This is the introduction, in brief, to a little booklet issued by the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. So many inquiries regarding poultry conditions here are received by the Chamber of Commerce that it has prepared the pamphlet as a blanket answer to most of them.

The booklet is inclined to encourage entrance into the business by more people, on the basis that from an economic standpoint the section ought to produce enough eggs at least to feed its own people. Before 1916 the poultry industry was comparatively small and large quantities of eggs were imported. Later came a time when the Southland exported a few carloads of eggs, but while the industry has grown steadily, the population has grown still faster. In 1925, the Los Angeles market received 456,458 cases of eggs from California points, 62,048 cases from Idaho, 24,052 from Oregon, 15,713 cases from Utah, 5018 cases from Washington, 3526 from Colorado, 3015 from Montana, 2765 from Texas, and 2464 cases from Arizona, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois and New York.

Land well adapted to poultry raising, the booklet states, may be bought for from $400 to $1200; the cost of buildings will run at about $1.25 per hen on an average; the cost of laying stock will average $1.25 per hen, and the profit above feed cost averages from $1.50 to $2 per hen, with a net profit per hen of from $1 to $1.50. The land usually devoted to a poultry ranch here is from two and a half to five acres, and to make a living the poultryman should operate with 1500 to 2500 laying hens, it is pointed out.

The booklet touches on the meat poultry business and devotes several pages to turkey raising.

FRUIT ECONOMIES STUDIED

VISALIA.—Perhaps no department of the Tulare County Farm Bureau is more active than the deciduous fruit division. A study of peach production economics is in progress and promises to be valuable to the growers. Twenty-five records on cling peaches are being kept over a period of three years, showing all the factors in the cost of production. Eight pruning demonstrations are being planned for the coming fall and winter, with two pruning tours in contemplation. Two surveys have been started on shipping plums, to show the relation of thinning to the quality of crop. Four soil moisture meetings and one on pest conerol will be held during the present season. Six thinning meetings have been held for deciduous grapes.

New Course Announced

A new professional course in agricultural engineering has been established in the university of California. A new building for the division is being erected on the University Farm at Davis. Prof. L. J. Fletcher is in charge and states that considerable interest has been shown already in the course, he says, to provide training in engineering fundamentals together with such agricultural subjects as will enable the student to apply engineering principles to rural problems.

ELIMINATING GUESSWORK

fruit from the different plots. Each of these plots has been graded separately for several years and records have been kept of the grades each year. There is not a great difference in the case of the different plots, but what difference there is would tend to make the margin even wider than that indicated in the figures quoted above. That is, the quality of fruit on the plots receiving cottonseed meal has always been equal to if not a little better than the quality of fruit on the other plots, and the quality of fruit on the complete plot has not in any case been superior to that of the other plots.

It is interesting to notice a comparison of cottonseed meal with barnyard manures. At prices prevailing this year, that is, of $39 and $40 per ton, cottonseed has apparently been fully as cheap as barnyard at $4.75 a ton; or, if sold on the unit basis, it has apparently been as cheap as manure selling for $5 per unit of nitrogen and 5 cents per unit of organic matter. The yields in the two cases have not been materially different, but what difference there has been has on the whole been slightly favorable to cottonseed meal. For example, while the net income from that plot fertilized by barnyard and cottonseed meal quoted above has been $4.40, the net income per tree from the fruit fertilized by cottonseed meal alone has this year been $4.88 per tree.

COST VITAL FACTOR

In making sweeping statements of this sort regarding the merits of any one material as a fertilizer, two things must be kept in mind: First, the figures are for 1926 only; second, one very essential consideration is that of cost. If cottonseed meal next year should be materially higher in price than it is this year, then the statements that are here made with regard to it might be entirely changed. But that simply emphasizes the general proposition that in deciding on the purchase of one fertilizer material as against another, cost must always remain an important factor in the final decision.

The elements which enter into cost constitute a subject for study in themselves. The question of supply and demand, of course, always has an exceedingly important bearing on it. Because of that fact the price of cottonseed meal is liable to fluctuate from year to year. Because of that fact, also, the price of sulphate of ammonia will probably continue to remain low for some time to come, as it is a by-product in the refining of iron ore. The time when the order is placed is also a determining factor in cost. When fertilizers are being purchased by large numbers of persons for immediate delivery, the price is liable to be somewhat higher. Whenever schemes are devised whereby financial risk is reduced to a minimum, sellers can afford to take less profit. There is no question of the fact also that dealers can afford to make better prices for materials in large than in small quantities. It is, therefore, always a good idea when growers can agree in general on material which they wish, to pool their purchases. The writer realizes that purchases for 1926 will practically all have been made before this article is read; but this is exactly the time to begin to think about next year.

of the Santa Ana River, and the taking over of the South Fork Canal Company. An agreement was made with the Redlands Water Company to extend the South Fork ditch to Lugonia, Redlands, and, possibly, Moreno. This brought the dove of promise, but the water did not follow, and the old brick buildings which still stand at the Moreno crossroads on the Riverside-Banning highway are mute monuments of unrequited hopes fostered in 1891.

The present Bear Valley multiple-arch dam was completed in 1912, with its crest 28 feet above the top of the old structure. But the increased capacity of the dam was absorbed in the growth of the Redlands district. Moreno remained a vast hay and grain field. However, the orange groves were not neglected and today the orange area, though small, has been isolated from pests and diseases and the growers boast great economy in production.

In 1919 the Moreno Mutual Irrigation Company was organized at a mass meeting of landowners. Seventy acres were secured on the old Singleton ranch in San Timoteo Canyon and five wells were driven. Pumps give a maximum flow of 500 inches, and water rights on 3000 additional acres of water-bearing land indicate the possibility of increasing this flow. A contract was let for the completion of a pipe line from the wells to the valley in August, 1926, and the extension of the distributing system is to be effected through six or eight miles of concrete mains and laterals.

During the last two years permanent improvements have been made along the Moreno highway. About 200 acres have been set to walnuts and the trees are thriving. On the Nelson ranch forty acres have been planted to walnuts and this tract is being intercropped to potatoes. This year the crop is estimated at 125 sacks to the acre. Another young walnut grove is interset to grapes.

Indications point to a sound, substantial growth in Moreno Valley. The water system now under construction will irrigate a considerable acreage, and the bird of promise seems to be giving signs of returning again, accompanied by the most important of the whole flock, the bird of fulfillment.

Former Alaskan Finds Gold in Berries

COSTA MESA.—"There is gold here, in berries and other crops, even as in Alaska," says Louis F. Rochat, who with his mother is growing blackberries on 25 acres in Costa Mesa. He should know, for he landed in Dutch Harbor in 1901 and stayed in Alaska for twelve years. His experiences there were extremely interesting. He says he was well acquainted in his "sour dough" days with Rex Beach, whose books he enjoys greatly, as he recognizes the originals of many of the characters in them.

One of the memories he cherishes of the Alaskan country is of the flowers. The three-month summer in the "north country" is a blaze of color, for time is short and plant life there enjoys continual sunshine day and night and grows with amazing rapidity. Mr. Rochat has brought his love of flowers south with him, and maybe his experiences in the gold rush have made him enjoy doing difficult things. For recreation in leisure hours he grows roses, specializing in the yellow varieties because, he says, they are hardest to keep pure in color.

He came to Costa Mesa two and a half years ago, and credits common sense for achievements on his land. First he had an analysis made of his soils, so that he would be aided in determining what would grow best. Then he laid out his tract carefully and leveled it. He made his preparations before he began cultivation, he says, not because he had learned agriculture by experience (for he knew nothing about it) "but because that seemed to be the proper way to do anything."

His principal crops consist of blackberries, loganberries, blackcaps, red raspberries, dewberries and strawberries. Berries begin to bear in their second year, and he says they will yield satisfactorily for nine years. This year he picked the first berries on March 17. Some varieties continue to fruit until the middle of August. Early berries bring a good price. He marketed his first at a large hotel in Pasadena for $10 a crate, but as other fruit arrived, the price dropped.

Mr. Rochat says that the spirit of co-operation is vital for the farmer. By working together, by using common sense and by having a willingness to learn, he says, the growers will win with berries as with other crops. His mother believes that vision is also something a farmer needs. She says:

"When we first came here I couldn't see anything but sand, but Louis saw just what the place would look like after years of labor, and that vision is being fulfilled."

RABBIT MEN MEET

POMONA.—H. Richard, vice-president of the local branch of the Associated Rabbit Breeders of Southern California, presided at a recent meeting of the organization, at which plans were made for enlarging the rabbit show at the Los Angeles County Fair. The association will enter a winter show at the annual meeting of the American Rabbit and Cavy Breeders' Association at Anaheim in December.

PEACHES ARE DRIED

SHAFTER.—Peach drying is under way on the Sill and Jones Ranch near this place. Forty women are employed in cutting, and thirty-eight men are busy picking and handling the fruit. One day's cutting is said to have disposed of 20 tons of peaches. It is said that by the end of the drying season 500 tons of fresh fruit will have been cut and dried, which will amount to about 100 tons of the dried product. Prices on dried peaches are reported to be very good this year.

Farm and Orchard Magazine
Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

From Florida

WITH a frankness that commands admiration, the Better Business Bureau of Miami is gunning for the real estate concerns selling worthless or grossly overpriced Florida lands by various and devious methods. The bureau has issued pieces of paper of the size and general color scheme of a currency bill and labeled "Bogus," with the recommendation that they be used to buy the many worthless investments offered. These "bills" are being widely distributed in other States. Along with the "stage" money the organization is giving some sound advice in these words, "Before you invest, investigate!"

There is plenty of worth-while land, honestly priced, to be had in Florida, the bureau points out in its literature, and the time has come to warn the world against the unscrupulous sharks who are so willing to cloud the State's fair name by exploiting other kinds. The bureau is going farther and condemning the promoters who deal in half-truths by misrepresenting the possibilities of production or income on parcels of land which, while perhaps good enough in themselves, are too small or otherwise unsuitable for the purposes advertised. The sincerity of the movement that has thus been so fearlessly launched is apparent.

The business men back of it are unquestionably doing their State a real service. Crooked exploitation, permitted to go on indefinitely, would have given Florida a black eye from which it would have been a generation recovering, and events now being reported from the section reveal too plainly that great harm has already been done by the faking land boomers. Florida is likely to have a headache for some time as a consequence of its spree of the last few years, but it will get back on the sound basis of deserved prosperity the quicker for the actions of responsible thinking folk like the Miami business men.

There are exploitation projects in California, it must be admitted, that will bear the closest watching and it is gratifying to know that the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and other responsible business agencies are alert to that fact. There may come a time when the Miami plan could be used to advantage here.

The big thing that sticks out in the Miami bureau's sound advice to the public is the earnest admonition to every would-be buyer to investigate before he puts up any money. It is the old common-sense injunction to "look before you leap," and there would be a few million less heartaches in the world if all humanity had been heeding it. God gave people brains to think with, and there is no stranger thing in human experience than the fact that so many do not use them for that purpose. If every investment in lands, in Florida, California and everywhere else, were the result of careful investigation, a greater national prosperity would unquestionably be ours. There is no sense in most of the economic waste and loss that comes from blind plungings into this and that and the other scheme cooked up by crooks or get-rich-quick promoters.

Misnamed Insects

WE MUST not be deceived by the names given to our insect pests. Just because we call one a corn-ear worm, and another a tomato worm is no sure sign that these creatures will stay on corn or tomatoes and not touch, taste and handle anything else in the garden.

Back in Georgia the corn-ear worms are reported to have practically destroyed a crop of peaches on 4000 trees. The orchardist grew a crop of vetch in his orchard and did not turn it under soon enough. The worms took vetch for their breakfast food, climbed up into the trees and devoured the green peaches for dessert and then, still unsated, started out to dine in other orchards near by.

Many of our pests are almost omniverous. They may prefer the plant after which they are named, but if that particular favorite of their dietary is not handy, they aren't going to starve. They learn to like other things, and acquire new tastes readily.

There is only one safe way to deal with a pest and that is to exterminate it if possible.

Check Enzymes' Action

Enzymes exist in all fresh fruit and vegetables. These agencies bring about normal ripening and, unless checked, cause final decay. The heat of cooking and canning stops their action. In addition, minute bacteria in the air cause spoilage if allowed to work unmolested on vegetable growths. If they are all killed and the product is sealed within a sterile, air-tight container, no spoilage occurs. Choosing fresh fruits and vegetables for canning, processing (heating sufficiently to kill bacteria) and air-tight sealing are the three steps in successful home canning.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS

HEMET.—The Hemet City Council has passed a resolution of intention to purchase twenty acres of land adjoining the 40-acre peach orchard now owned by the city, where the Hemet sewer system empties. The present farm will bring a tidy sum to the city coffers this summer from the peaches and the corn interplanted in the rows. The twenty acres to be bought will also be set out to peach trees, it is understood.

SURVEY UNDER WAY

RIVERSIDE.—The first field meeting of citrus growers interested in the soil moisture survey now being conducted by the agricultural extension service of the University of California through the Riverside County Farm Bureau, and the Citrus committee of the Riverside Chamber of Commence, was held at the Dammers grove in Riverside recently. The survey, with both orchard and laboratory tests, will extend over a period of two years, and information will be compiled which is expected to be of great value to the entire citrus district in determining the proper handling of irrigation water.

CAULIFLOWER ARRIVES

SAN FERNANDO.—Home grown cauliflower retailing at 15 cents per head is coming on the local markets. The quality of the first lugs is excellent, the heads being large, crisp and white. Several fields adjacent to San Fernando are devoted to growing this vegetable.

TIME TO CUT HAY

PHOENIX (Ariz.).—The Roosevelt Hay Growers' Association is urging alfalfa growers to pay more attention to quality. Farmers are told that too many leave the fields till they are in full bloom before cutting, and that "to be of proper quality hay should be cut just as it goes into bloom." Many farmers believe that they lose weight if they cut too early, but it is asserted by the association that most of the weight is in the leaves, and that after blossoming the leaves shatter and fall and little is left but the stems. A warning is given against rerakings and discolored hay, which should be used at home and not baled for sale. Alfalfa should not, the association declares, be baled while the dew is on it, and the California method of baling at night in the dryest period is recommended.

DEVELOPS NEW TOMATO

POMONA.—L. C. Johnson, who specializes in the growing of tomato plants, has, after three years of experimentation, developed a new tomato variety which he has named the "Pomona." He reports that it produces the fruits in clusters on single stems and is hardy and blight-resistant. He believes that much blight may be prevented by proper irrigation. He keeps his soil moist but does not allow the water to get on the plants themselves.

GOOD PRICES FOR FIGS

DINUBA.—Tulare county's Black Mission figs have been better received on the eastern markets this year than ever before. While Tulare county has about 9000 acres planted to figs, only about 500 of the 5000 acres actually in bearing are set to Black Missions. Shipments of this variety this season were undertaken by the Federal Fruit Company through the California Fruit Distributors. They brought good prices.

RED SPIDER SCARCE

VISALIA.—Red spider on prune, peach, apricot and walnut orchards of Tulare county was very light this year, according to horticultural men. Few orchards had any red spider at all and those where the pest did appear were not badly infested and the pest was quickly controlled. Officials attribute this to extensive control measures during the past two seasons, and the cool spring during breeding time of the spider. However, it is pointed out that growers should not take it for granted that the pest will not appear next year, but should be just as diligent in cleaning up weeds and grass in the orchards and around fences again this coming winter

SHIP FIGS BY EXPRESS

REEDLEY.—Express shipments of precooled Calimyrna figs have started from the Reedley plant of the Stewart Fruit Company. It is expected that the Mission and Kadota varieties of figs will also be handled. A total of 8955 acres of figs is under cultivation in Tulare county at present, with but 4866 acres for the season. In 1924, there were but 700 acres of the fruit in the county. Tulare county growers made $50,000 from dried figs and $175,000 from fresh fig shipments last year, it is stated.

LESS GUESSWORK

MESA (Ariz.)—The Mesa Lettuce Growers' Association has resolved that its product shall not be planted in haphazard fashion on any sort of ground. So next season there is to be a judging of the quality of the soil on which the lettuce is to be grown, and this will be done by William Thompson, a successful grower. The association's pack is to be standardized on the basis of four dozen heads to the crate, a size found most profitable in the market. It has been demonstrated that on rich land an average of 320 crates to the acre of standard lettuce can be produced.

INDICATIONS FAVORABLE

REDLANDS.—Another good year is promised the orange growers, for most of the growers report only a normal June drop and as heavy a crop of oranges setting on the trees as there was during the year just passed, total shipments for which will be well above 4500 cars. The fruit is growing rapidly, for the weather conditions have been good. There will be a good crop of Valencias this coming year, from all indications.

FAIR IN AUGUST

STOCKTON.—The San Joaquin County Fair will be held here August 24 to 29, inclusive. The livestock division is reported well supplied with entries. A big poultry show is assured, according to the officials. A dog show, horse and other features are serving to stir interest. E. G. Vollman is secretary and general manager of the fair.

FINE MILO FIELD

McFARLAND.—The Kraft Brothers' ranch, west of here, has one of the finest, if not the finest, fields of milo in the entire district. The growth is uniform all over the eighty-acre field, broad-leaved and glistening dark green—not gray green and thin bladed as poor corn appears. The heads are large, and already colored deep red and yellow. The Krafts are noted for their fine corn, and last year received $49.00 a ton for the first they cut, which was sold to the Aggeller and Musser Seed Company of Los Angeles. They are looking forward to a good price this year, and if all goes well, will cut a good deal in advance of other growers. Due to the large acreage of cotton, there is not much corn being grown in this district this year.

GOOD PRICE FOR ONIONS

SHAFTER.—Two cars of onions, shipped out of this district recently by the Kern Fruit Company, brought good prices on the eastern markets. One car was filled with crated Spanish Sweets from the ranches of A. Siebert and Dr. Kay and brought a reported price of $3 to $4 per hundred. The other car contained sacked onions and is said to have sold at $2.75 to $3 per hundred. The latter shipment wsa grown by J. J. Siemens. Word from eastern buyers is said to have been that the onions were among the best ever received by them.

HOME MARKET INCREASES

WOODVILLE.—A heavy tonnage of potatoes was shipped this season from the Woodville-Poplar section of Tulare county. It is believed that the total for the season will be 150 cars. Horticultural Commissioner Frank R. Brann is enthusiastic over potato growing in this area. The tubers produced here have been of fine quality and both the outside and home demands have been good. More and more county dealers are using home-grown spuds even as they are using more home-grown watermelons, cantaloupes and lettuce.

MORE VALENCIAS GROWN

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—According to Manager Irving Miller of the Arizona Citrus Growers, the oranges, grapefruit and lemons of the Salt River Valley return the growers about $1,000,000 a year. There is a steady increase in the acreage set to citrus, mostly in small tracts, and a notable turn toward Valencias is reported, although Washington navels, maturing before frost, are still favorites. The Arizona Valencia is exceptionally sweet. About 300 cars of citrus have been shipped during the past season by the association, most of it being grapefruit, while about 75 cars have been consumed locally or were shipped by individuals. One hundred cars of oranges sold readily this season, chiefly in Chicago. The association has a model packing plant here, with an investment of $150,000.

GRAPES RIPEN FAST

POMONA.—The recent hot weather ripened the grapes of San Fernando Valley very rapidly. Tons of grapes will be used for jellies and canned, and many will be shipped for table use. Raisin-drying plants are preparing for a busy season. The crop is reported to be a large one.

Chickens Appreciate Good Treatment

By C. V. CASTLE

The wings of the White Leghorn have never degenerated into useless appendages in the long course of breeding for egg production. They have wings and they fly with them. They are regarded by many as "flighty," high-strung creatures, apt to fill the air with frantic pinions at the least unusual noise or motion. While one can put up with nervousness when it is accompanied by big white eggs at a low feed cost, a good many breeders resent the charge with indignation, and declare that their flocks are placid as May mornings.

The Two Extremes in the Handling of Poultry.

One flock "goes up in the air" literally "at the drop of the hat," while the other uses the proprietor for a roost.

The behavior of poultry and livestock in general is very largely what the owner makes it. The man who dislikes chickens and is impatient with them, finds that they flee at his approach. The man who regards them with indulgent affection and gentleness, who never throws rocks at them when they get where they shouldn't be and who recognizes their dispositions, finds that his chickens trust him to such an extent that they embarrass him sometimes with their familiarity.

It stands to reason that chickens which are not alarmed, annoyed and made fidigty by sudden disturbances, which are fed regularly and protected from heat, cold, draughts, disease and insect pests, will lay more eggs than those which are subjected to abuse and indifference. Poultry raising is a business, and the man who would needlessly scare his chickens is about as sensible as the manufacturer who would throw grit in his machines or introduce mice among his women workers.

The man who does not like chickens, who has no patience with their vagaries, who will not study their habits and humor them along, should not attempt to raise them. To make a real success of the poultry business, or any other business, for that matter, one must have such a liking for it that he is absorbed by it. Such a man under ordinary conditions and with the application of a little common sense, is almost certain to succeed.

Poultry Show to Have More Space

VENTURA.—John P. Thille, chairman of the poultry and pet stock department of the Ventura County Fair has reported to the fair board that about 500 square feet more space for the show will be available this year over that of the show of 1925. The board has permitted space in the poultry tent to be sold to poultry equipment and supply dealers.

The Ventura County Fair Association has secured a life membership in the American Poultry Association and this undoubtedly will add prestige to the premiums awarded, and help standardize the conduct of the show.

Costs and Profits of Poultry Sought

VISALIA.—The approximate cost of producing one dozen eggs in Tulare county is now being determined through work carried on by Assistant Farm Adviser M. A. Lindsay, in charge of poultry and livestock work here. Twenty-five poultrymen throughout the country, with flocks ranging from 100 to 2000 hens have been keeping records of their flocks. These records will show the mortality statistics, daily egg production money expended, income from sale of eggs, and poultry and equipment used. All the poultry equipment on the twenty-five ranches was invoiced in April when the survey was opened and will be invoiced again on April 1, 1927, when the records close.

This study is being made in order that the local farm bureau and civic organizations may give exact information to people inquiring about the cost of poultry production in Tulare county. According to Mr. Lindsay, poultry should be kept over a period of five years to become a profitable industry. With the final tabulation of the statistics, the cost of producing a dozen eggs will be determined, as well as information on the cash income from market eggs, hatching eggs, sale of poultry, expenses, including feed, and the cost of setting eggs and poultry, labor, taxes, insurance and interest on capital invested.

Poultry raisers co-operating in the work include W. E. Shuck and A. H. Cundiff of Woodlake; H. R. Bell, G. C. Bornefeld and W. W. Oakley of Orange Cove; O. W. House of Orosi; Mrs. J. C. Pawley, R. A. Freeman and B. J. McCullock of Visalia.

CROP UNDERESTIMATED

DINUBA.—With the crop developing on the vines and picking time drawing near, grape growers of Tulare county are convinced that early estimates of a short crop of Thompsons are incorrect. The crop will be good this season, though not as heavy as that of last year. The quality is declared to be better and the tonnage of raisins is expected to be almost as heavy as it was last year as more growers will hold their fruit for drying this season. However, the shipment of Thompsons and other raisin grapes as fresh fruit to the east will be large, according to the present outlook.

The Present Status of the Avocado in the Horticultural Scheme

JUST as "Sunkist" is a name denoting quality in California citrus fruits so, it is intended, will "Calavo" mean standardized quality in avocados. For during recent months, the California Avocado Growers' exchange has selected this combination of the names California and avocado as the trade mark of its product, and hereafter, will stamp the word on each fruit of the quality kind that it handles.

George B. Hodgkin, secretary-manager of this organization, recently made some interesting statements regarding the present status of the avocado industry in California."The production of avocados in California is, at present, exceedingly small as compared with the production of any other horticultural crop," he said, "in fact it might be said that Californians are still playing with the avocado business and have not as yet put it on a commercial basis.

"Full grown avocado trees in California can be counted on one hand. There is nowhere in the State a single acre of even half-grown trees. There are however, approximately 4000 acres of this fruit planted at this time and new acreage is being set out as rapidly as trees can be secured.

"Although avocado trees cannot be called mature until they are at least thirty years of age, and 60-year-old trees are probably twice the size of 30 year-old-trees, avocado trees do start producing at a reasonably young age. Some production may be expected on the new orchards from four to five years after planting. Some of the older trees from which new orchards are being propagated, have been known to produce 2000 or more pounds of fruit in a single season.

"But enthusiastic beginners and overenthusiastic land sellers usually multiply the highest known production by the greatest possible number of trees per acre and then by the highest recorded prices, arriving at startling figures. These, if true, would mean that California would eventually produce from present plantings untold millions of pounds of avocados—at a profit. At the present time, however, production is limited to about one-half-million pounds, which will, in the opinion of most avocado experts, be at least doubled during 1927.

"Prices for avocadoes have been remarkably high as compared with those received for other varieties of produce and as production has grown, prices have increased with it. During the first year of its operation, the Exchange with less than 200,000 pounds of fruit, averaged 33 cents per pound. During the second year, with approximately 300,000 pounds of fruit, the Exchange averaged 40 cents a pound, and during 1926, with a probable production of approximately 500,000 pounds, prices will probably average better than 50 cents.

"California avocado growers enjoy a year-round production, varying only from month to month as to type and variety of fruit. A vast number of varieties (there are more than 300) although making a year-round operation possible, tend, however, to make satisfactory marketing next to impossible, or at least very difficult. Varieties, fortunately, are rapidly becoming standardized and the newer commercial plantings are primarily limited to three or four of the commercial best."

STAMPED BY HAND

The California Avocado Growers' Exchange is a co-operative, nonprofit, distributing organization which confines its activities to the wholesalers. To protect not only its members, but the handler and consumer as well, the Exchange is now stamping all quality fruits with its new "Calavo" mark. The stamping is done by hand, as is all of the packing of avocados.

"All operations in the packing-house are by hand, no machinery having been developed as yet to handle avocadoes," says Mr. Hodgkin. Growers pick and deliver their fruit to the packing house in baskets, boxes, flivers, trucks, limousines and by hand. It is not an uncommon sight to see a dilapidated old car loaded with avocadoes parked before the packing-house next to a beautiful limousine, flanked on the other side by a five-ton truck, and all loaded with avocadoes. The fruit is received in the name of each grower and is graded as to variety, size and quality, each one being carefully polished to remove the dust and dirt of the orchard. The best fruit of normal size, good quality, and of unquestionable maturity is placed under the new brand and stamped with the trade-mark name in yellow letters. Each grower is credited with the number of pounds that he has of each size, grade and variety of fruit delivered. The fruit then loses its individual identity as to grower and is pooled by size, grade and variety. Each pool is for a calendar month.

"Fruit for local sale is placed in ordinary California lugs and sold. Fruit for eastern shipment is treated with a special process to prolong its life period and retard softening and is then packed in California avocado lugs. The lugs are divided into three sizes as follows: a special lug, 17 1-2 inches by 13 3-4 inches by 7 1-4 inches, with plenty of air space between the slats and holding two dozen medium to large fruits; a half lug, 17 1-2 inches by 13 3-4 inches by 4 1-2 inches, for one dozen large fruit or two dozen small fruit; a flat, 17 1-2 inches by 11 1-2 inches by 3 3-4 inches, for one dozen medium fruit. Pains are taken in the making of the lugs and the packing to provide for as much ventilation as possible so that the fruit will not heat. Ordinary wood excelsior is used for packing material.

"Whenever possible the fruit is shipped by refrigerator express and when so shipped, after being properly selected and treated, always arrives in satisfactory condition. Experience has shown however, that there is a vast difference in the keeping quality of the different varieties of avocadoes. There is of course, also a difference in the keeping quality of fruit of the same variety, depending on its maturity. The longer the fruit hangs on the tree, the sooner it will soften after being picked. It is necessary therefore, to take the utmost care in selecting mature fruit that will not soften during transit."

SELECTION IMPORTANT

One of the greatest difficulties met with by the organization is the selection of mature avocadoes, Mr. Hodgkin declares. The avocado growers have been working several years on this problem, enjoying the co-operation of the University of California and the United States Department of Agriculture, culminating last year in the inclusion of the avocado in the California Standardization Law. In language understandable to the layman, this law makes it illegal to sell immature avocadoes, and says that to be mature, avocadoes must contain 8 per cent oil. This is determined by chemical test.

Mr. Hodgkin says that some authorities consider this law entirely too liberal, as most varieties of avocadoes grown in California contain from 15 to 30 per cent oil. He declares that the difficulty with the standardization problem is the inability of the average grower, dealer or inspector to determine which avocadoes will pass the law. For this reason, the exchange has been forced to make frequent chemical tests and has adopted a much higher standard for maturity of all fruit stamped with the exchange trade-mark.

MARKETING PROBLEMS

Regarding the marketing of avocadoes, Mr. Hodgkin says:

"Occasionally it is necessary to store fruit for later sales and when this is done, the temperature has to be watched carefully. Most avocadoes can be stored safely for one or two weeks at a temperature of forty-five degrees. Some varieties, however, will stand 40 degrees but most can be spoiled by too low as well as by too high a temperature. The exchange confines its selling activities to the wholesalers. In markets outside of Los Angeles, it handles most of its business through brokers. In most cases the brokers obtain orders from the wholesalers in their markets and the fruit is then shipped direct to the later, f. o. b. shipping point.

"Approximately one-third of the fruit was shipped out during the season of 1925 and indications are that a much larger percentage of fruit will be shipped during the 1926 season. New outlets are being developed rapidly in the East and Middle West. For advertising the Exchange depends very largely upon window cards and upon recipe leaflets and bags printed with recipes. An effort is made to distribute one or the other of the latter for practically every avocado that is sold.

"On some markets avocadoes are sold by the pound, but in others they are sold by the piece or dozen. The exchange, however, converts all sales into pounds before liquidating to the growers. On the Los Angeles market, avocadoes are handled by practically all dealers and can be secured at most fruit stands in all sections of the city.

"The increased consumption of avocadoes has been gradual and sound, based on the knowledge of how to properly soften and serve the fruit; and on the experience that avocadoes are nourishing and healthful."

While most persons are content to eat the avocado in the simpler dishes, the exchange has put out a recipe book which contains many appetizing dishes, and for which there is quite a call.

Grows Produce Used by Soda Workers

LONE PINE.—A well-balanced Owens Valley farm is that of B. H. Bonham, who finds a ready market for all he can produce at Lone Pine and at the soda manufacturing camp of Keeler on the east side of Owens Lake. This plant is one of a number that have been harvesting raw material for soda products from the salt encrustations of the rapidly drying lake since the City of Los Angeles built its aqueduct to capture and transport the water formerly flowing into the sink.

Mr. Bonham is a renter but is of the kind that "sticks," having been on his present place, a mile and a half south of Lone Pine nine years. He has eighty acres in all under least, sixty being in meadow and the rest farmed. Of the portion worked, about ten acres is in alfalfa. Twenty dairy cows are milked regularly, the product being sold raw. Mr. Bonham also generally feeds a few beef animals and is never without one for winter killing for household uses. He has a small flock of chickens and another of turkeys and finds both profitable. His pride is a truck garden of a little over an acre, a bit of wonderful soil, well watered and well cared for.

The Lone Pine district is the only one in which Los Angeles has thus far been inactive in its land and water buying operations in Owens Valley and there are a number of privately owned farms here that are producing well. Alfalfa is the main crop, and is for the most part fed to stock cattle.

The Livestock Bulletin

By ROBERT T. LYANS.

The fair season now imminent will serve as a gauge of the extent to which livestock has actually "come back" in California. While thousands of animals have no representation at the fairs and shows, nevertheless there is a close ratio between the live-stock industry and the number and quality of animals exhibited. Fair secretaries are a unit in declaring that livestock entries are larger this year than they were a year ago, and this may be taken as an almost infallible sign that there is a healthy tone to the business on the farms and ranches. Dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep and horses—all the representatives of the industry—will be exhibited at practically all of the fairs of California this year.

The Holstein-Friesian Association of America has issued its list of the leading Holstein herds of the United States for 1925. The rank is determined by a point system based on official testing, with due allowance for age. For the first time in many years California drops from first to second place, being superseded by Michigan. Washington comes third and New York is fourth. The highest California herd is that of Sargent Brothers of Tulare, which scored 257 points. Pottenger Sanitarium of Monrovia was second; F. S. Borror and Sons of Tipton came fourth, and F. S. Pellissier of Whittier came fifth. Only eighteen herds in this State won any points at all, and among them besides those mentioned, Los Angeles county has El Colmo Ranch of Norwalk, Earl Graham of Rivera, and Santa Monica Dairy Company of Venice. All pure-bred Holstein herds in the United States which are doing official testing are eligible, so that the showing made by the State is regarded as remarkably good.

The demand for Aberdeen-Angus cattle appears to be growing steadily, according to word from Harrison Stock Farms at Woodland. Kenneth McGregor, the superintendent of that great breeding establishment, writes that hardly a week passes without a number of sales of breeding stock, from the place.

A Montreal (Can.,) Ayrshire cow, Nellie Osborne of Elm Shade 16th, owned by W. C. Wylie, is reported to have produced 1003 pounds of butter fat in a 365-day test, giving 23,223 pounds of milk in the year. This is the first Ayrshire cow to pass the 1000-pound mark, the best previous record being 979 pounds, also made by a Canadian The best Ayrshire record in the United States was that of Lily of Willowmoor in the herd of J. W. Clise, Redmond, Wash., of 955.56 pounds of butter fat.

The California Department of Agriculture has just issued a statistical report of State dairy products for 1925, which states that 48 per cent of the 125,000,000 pounds of butter fat produced in the State last year went into the manufacture of butter, Market milk took 26 per cent of the total, cream 9 per cent, evaporated milk, 8 per cent, cheese, 1.9 per cent, ice cream, 5 per cent and the balance is used for miscellaneous products. The per capita consumption of cheese in California is shown to be 9 pounds, which is greater that that of any other State in the Union. Dr. J. J. Frey, Chief of the State Bureau of Dairy Control, says that this report is one of the most complete ever issued on the dairy industry of California.

The Pacific Slope Dairy Show Association announces the opening of its permanent office at 1404 Franklin street, Oakland, with Robert E. Jones, secretary-manager of the organization in charge. With the opening of this office, Oakland is definitely confirmed as the permanent home of the Dairy Show. The dates for this year's show, as announced, are November 13 to 20 inclusive.

Along with the delayed foliation of fruit and walnut trees, the unusual weather which we have had this year might almost appear also to have had its effect on the dairy cows. In Los Angeles county a falling off of the butter-fat content in milk has been observed by the local dairymen and some study has been devoted to the matter in the hope that the cause and remedy might be discovered. It is said to be particularly noticeable in the yields of the smaller whole milk dairies, and it is thought possible that more general testing might enable them to sort out and dispose of the cows which have fallen down in this particular. In the larger dairies where testing is conducted all the time, the culls have been thrown out and the butter-fat content of the milk has held up much better.

Reports from Imperial Valley are that only a few thousand head of cattle remain there out of the 45,000 odd head taken there to feed last fall. It is stated that fewer cattle and more sheep will be fed there during the coming season.

Delicate surgical operations are usually reserved for humanity, but once in a while the value of an animal calls for the utmost skill of the physician in the livestock world. Recently Dr. J. H. Hogan, veterinary surgeon of Escondido, was called upon to perform a Caesarean operation on a pure-bred Duroc—Jersey sow owned by W. R. Beloot. Three dead pigs were removed through her side and the wound was stitched up. On the eighth day thereafter she was doing nicely, the owner reports.

After the Operation.

This sow survived the heroic Caesarean treatment and was saved by an Escondido veterinary surgeon for her owner, W. R. Beloot. Note the stitches.

The coming of some forty-five head of pure-bred Jerseys at La Lomita Rancho on August 11 is attracting a good deal of attention among Jersey breeders along the Pacific Coast. Ferdinand R. Bain, owner of the ranch, has made some notable importations of Jerseys recently, and is authority for the statement that his sale "does not include any culls or inferior animals." Mr. Bain's herd at Palms is probably the largest pure-bred Jersey herd on the Pacific Coast, has won notably on fair circuits wherever shown, and maintains unusually gratifying production as well.

You'll Do Star.

Typy Jersey matron, owned by Ferdinand R. Bain, which has a production record of 840 pounds of butterfat in a year and has won a gold medal.

The anti-tuberculosis campaign which is being waged throughout the State has had the effect of reducing the number of good dairy cows available in California, and buyers have perforce been compelled to seek some animals farther afield. Dairying as conducted in Southern California is a highly specialized business, probably more so than in adjoining States, and feeding programs are carried on along well defined schedules. Many of the cows brought here do not produce as well as their breeding would indicate, probably because the change in climate and in feeds has affected their production. Also, dairymen elsewhere as well as here are inclined to keep their best animals and sell those they do not care so much for. The San Joaquin Valley has been a good source of dairy cattle for Los Angeles county herds in the past, and it is to be hoped that the herds will be cleaned up speedily and that new stock will be available before long from this excellent source.

Twelve years ago Dr. James R. Slonaker, physiologist of the Sanford University, began a series of experiments aimed at the determination of the comparative nutritive values of a strict diet of vegetables and a mixed diet including vegetables and meat. He used rats for his experiments because they are easily handled and, like human beings, are omniverous. He has completed his experiments, and some of the results are of interest in this day of deprecation of the value of meat in diet.
He found that the rats which were fed both meat and vegetables lived almost twice as long as those which were maintained on vegetables alone; that a vegetable diet only increased mortality among the young and that all the young of the second generation died without reproducing; that the weight of the vegetarian rats was from 25 to 35 per cent below normal at birth and that the mixed diet of meat and vegetables produces about seven times as much activity as did the straight vegetable diet.

Big horse-teams are coming into favor rapidly in some sections, especially in dry-farming areas, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Equalized hitches and simple harness have facilitated the handling of big teams. The necessity of holding down labor costs where crop yields are comparatively low prompts farmers to double up their power resources. Just as the railway uses bigger engines and hauls longer trains with the same crews which formerly handled smaller engines and fewer cars, so the farmer is increasing the horse power with the same man power. Under certain conditions, the department states, horses are cheaper than tractors, especially where horses can be fed home-grown feed without much cash outlay. There is less packing of soil where horses are used and this is an advantage over tractors in summer fallowing. Experience shows that one man can handle twelve horses and a 4-bottom plow as easily as he can six horses and a 2-bottom plow, or two horses and a sulky plow. Devices have been developed whereby one man can harness twenty horses, take them out of the barn, water and hook them up without difficulty.

Cattlemen of Cochise county, Arizona, are preparing claims against the Mexican government for reimbursement for cattle seized by revolutionists in 1913, 1914 and 1915. These claims will be filed with the State Department at Washington for collection.

Poultry and Dog Show for November

VISALIA.—The officials of the Tulare County Club have adopted as a slogan, "The Largest California Poultry Show for Visalia." November 18 to 20 has been tentatively set as the time for the third annual poultry and dog show to be held here.

J. M. Hadley, general manager; Robert M. Elliott, secretary; R. F. Weatherhead, superintendent of poultry, and R. B. Armstrong, superintendent of the dog department, are busy with the preliminary work. It is reported that the California Association of Single-comb White Leghorns, the Rhode Island Club, and the California Bantam Club will hold their annual conventions in Visalia at the same time, and that some of their members will enter exhibits in the local event.

The show will be held in the Municipal Auditorium, with East Acequia and South Garden streets closed for the erection of tents. Fully 2000 entries are expected in the main part of the show. Pigeons and pet stock will also be shown.

W. M. Wise of Pomona and Robert M. Moore of San Leandro, two widely-known Pacific Coast judges on poultry and pet stock, will place the ribbons.

Good Grape Season in "North End"

CALIPATRIA.—Thompson Seedless, Malaga and other varieties of early table grapes produced well in the district tributary to Calipatria this summer. A. Finley reports that he picked 2900 lug boxes of Thompson Seedless grapes from his ten-acre vineyard near Niland. Charles H. Jones, picked his first box for shipment on June 6 and continued shipping by express in large quantities until July 8, when he sent a carload by freight to Los Angeles. Express shipments of Thompson Seedless grapes were exceptionally heavy from Calipatria and Niland during June. It is a very favorable season for grapes in this section this year.

There are at present over 300 acres in small bearing vineyards in the north end of the valley and a few young vineyards that will come into bearing next year. A total of 5625 acres of bearing and 698 acres of nonbearing grape vineyards have been planted in Imperial Valley.

Pruning Has Influence on Peach Yield

HEMET.—Seventy-four Tuscan Cling peach trees in the orchard of Hamilton Rose of Hemet are believed to be among the heaviest producers of peaches in the valley. Last year these trees bore a crop of about eleven tons, and this year he estimates the crop at considerably more than that. The rest of his orchard is planted to Sims peaches and these, too, are bearing heavily.

Mr. Rose believes that his heavy crops are due to his method of pruning. Some other peach growers of the Hemet Valley pruned their trees under his direction last winter and it is said their orchards also show an increased production.

Many of the peach orchards in the valley bear as low as five tons to the acre, and deciduous fruit experts are planning a campaign for raising the average. New pruning methods and the use of cover crops will be included. It is claimed that turning under legumes will help hold moisture in the soil after irrigation, and add needed plant food.

More Lettuce Eaten

A report issued by the Federal Department of Agriculture shows that the nation's consumption of lettuce is steadily growing, Shipments in 1925 were six times as great as they were in 1916, and the estimated total value of the lettuce crop of the United States is given at $20,000,000. Potatoes, sweet potatoes and tomatoes are the only vegetables exceeding lettuce in value on the nation's market. California leads in production, with New York and Florida following.

JUDGES ARE CHOSEN

TULARE.—Judges for the Tulare County Fair which will be held September 21 to 25, have been selected, according to C. L. Kennedy, secretary of the fair committee. They are Wallace Sullivan, farm adviser of Kings county; Hugh P. Donnelly, secretary of the Stanislaus county development board at Modesto, and P. M. Rasmussen, superintendent of the Fresno city parks.

Report Shows Progress of Farming

SAN DIEGO.—With increased acreage in many field crops, agricultural activities in San Diego County are steadily progressing, according to a recent report made by Claus Spreckels as regional vice-president for the California Development Association. Beans are among the crops showing increased acreage, it is pointed out, and all conditions are favorable for an excellent yield. The county has produced a big crop of hay this season, although the quality is only fair. Deciduous fruits this year are somewhat below normal. Citrus fruits are coming along very well, and all conditions are good, except that the market price on lemons has been poor. The vegetable crop has been good. June was an extremely favorable month for grapes, dry conditions and moderate temperatures prevailing, and the outlook for the vineyard crop is excellent.

During the first five months of the year "back country" cotton and cotton products to the value of $673,000 were shipped by water, largely to foreign ports, from San Diego harbor, the report shows.

Early in June, discovery was made of the existence of a small quantity of puncture vine near Lakeside. R. R. McLean, County Horticultural Commissioner, is making every effort to keep this pest under control and has had a survey made to determine the degree of its spread in the county. Relatively small infestations have been found in the El Cajon, Viejas Valley and Jacumba districts and along railroad rights of way at Campo, Oldtown, Linda Vista, Corrento and Oceanside. The railroads are spraying the tracks, where infestations occur, with oil and infestations at Lakeside and El Cajon have been similarly treated. Others were hoed down while the plants were small. By general co-operation it is believed this weed can be kept from spreading or doing much harm.

The county has been very fortunate in receiving a good rainfall this season, the Weather Bureau at San Diego reporting a total of 15.66 inches in the city, or 5.65 inches above normal.

The canning industries are showing good progress, canned goods of the value of over $365,000 having been shipped out by water during the first five months of the year, according to the report.

Southland Posies Sold in Metropolis

BY LEONARD J. FRANKISH

ONTARIO.—Southern California water lilies for the New York City cut-flower market!

Incredible as it may sound, water lilies grown in Ontario are now being placed on sale in the flower shops of the nation's metropolis within four days after their cutting here, according to announcement of Charles P. Hayes, owner of the Sunny Slope Water Gardens, whose sixteen pools set to lilies and other water plants, forming the largest commercial institution of its kind on the Pacific Coast, only recently started coming into bloom.

Satisfactory shipment of the dainty lilies to New York and other large cities throughout the country has been made possible by a patented iced carrier, the invention of Otto and August Kramer, Ontario nurserymen, who have for some time past used the carrier with entire success in shipping other cut flowers to the eastern markets.

The carrier virtually brings the New York flower market to Ontario's gates and makes it possible to place water lilies on sale in the metropolis many weeks before the eastern product is ready for harvest. Kramer Brothers personally supervised the packing of the first few shipments and have received many compliments on the excellent condition in which the blossoms arrived at the other end.

The Sunny Slope Water Gardens, now a riot of bloom, are at the foot of Euclid avenue, Ontario's famous double-drive boulevard. The sixteen pools cover two and a half acres and Mr. Hayes has plans for doubling their capacity during the coming year. To be seen at their best, the pools must be viewed before 3 o'clock p.m., as the lilies commence to close for the night at that hour.

The water gardens now contain fifteen varieties of lilies, from which the proprietor expects to harvest between 300,000 and 400,000 cut blooms before the present season closes. He is now negotiating for the importation from Germany of 147 additional varieties.

Mr. Hayes started in a small way a year or two ago to propagate fancy goldfish, for which he found a ready market. He has not dropped this enterprise, but has combined it with lily growing, and thousands of fancy fish, from which he is supplying a large clientele, are now to be found in his pools.

Mr. Hayes has already booked standing orders from many of the largest nursery and cut-flower concerns throughout the country for supplies both of cut blooms and bulbs from his Ontario farm, which gives promise of becoming an important industry of this section.

"Shade Tree" Grove Good Producer

VISTA.—It is no easy job to manage a fair-sized ranch, and John A. Whetstone, a veteran citrus grower who has lived in this district for some years, and who is looking after three places at once, admits that he has his hands full. And it is certain he has plenty of variety in his work, for one place is an established producer, another merely "coming on" and the third in its earliest stages of development.

The developed place is owned by L. S. Twomey of Cleveland, O., and comprises forty-five acres of bearing lemons. When the Ohio man took it over seven years ago the place, to use his manager's expression, was merely a "collection of shade trees," poor stock none too well taken care of. Mr. Whetstone supplied the necessary care and started a systematic program of top working until the whole had been remade. Four years ago, the manager states, the yield from the whole planting was only 300 boxes. The next year it was 1700 boxes; two years ago, 3800 boxes. This year, in early June, it was 11,500, and a total of 15,000 boxes was expected. Last year, Mr. Whetstone points out, the planting suffered from lack of water, due to dependence on pumps, but he hopes this problem is settled now that a supply is available from the Henshaw dam gravity system put in for the Vista area. Commercial fertilizer has been applied and barnyard manure is to follow, and a big production is expected from now on.

Heavily Loaded.

A grapefruit tree on the place of Jack Holt at Vista. John A. Whetstone, manager of the ranch, is holding back the branches to show some fine fruit.

Mr. Whetstone is now working in an experimental way on the development of a portion of a 240-acre holding recently purchased by Jack Holt, Hollywood motion-picture actor. The property adjoins the lemon grove and has only three acres in fruit, much of this having been put out by Mr. Whetstone for a previous owner. There are several varieties of citrus, including an Algerian tangerine for which high hopes are entertained. Avocadoes, guavas, persimmons and several of the commoner deciduous fruits are also included and all are being carefully studied so that "just the right kinds of trees may be put out when the time comes."

Near by Mr. Whetstone has eleven acres of his own on which he is putting out 300 avocado trees, mostly Fuertes, and which he expects to develop almost entirely to the "butter fruit." He declares the soil of this particular area is ideal for "coloring" fruits, due to the porphyry content of the red soil.

Russian Acquires Big Cotton Tract

DELANO.—One of the largest land transactions in late years in the Delano district, was the recent purchase by Dr. E. W. Kluchansky of the Pacific Cotton and Finance Corporation's 640 acres near here. The cotton crop now on the tract went with the land.

This land was bought by the Pacific Cotton and Finance Corporation, from DeVenney and Turner of Delano, and was formerly known as the Harleston tract.

It was developed by the present sellers for cotton growing purposes, the crop now being the second.

There are four artesian wells with turbine pumps, and 50 H. P. electric motors on each one-quarter section, with a capacity of about 120 inches of water for each 160 acres. Each well has a reservoir 200 feet square and five feet deep. Farm buildings, implements, stock and machinery used in farming the land are included in the deal.

Dr. Kluchansky already owned a highly improved cotton ranch adjoining his newly acquired estate, the whole amounting to 720 acres.

He is a native of Russia and was sent to the United States during the World War to purchase supplies of all kinds for the Czarist government. At that time he became interested in American agricultural work, especially in cotton growing. Besides, growing cotton, Dr. E. W. Kluchansky says he will export cotton to Russia through the Russian Textile Syndicate, an organization of the present Russian government, now in this country. This year, he says, consumption of cotton in Russia is 1,500,000 bales, of which 500,000 bales is being bought abroad, mostly from the United States.

Dusting the Beetles

So menacing had the depredations of the striped cucumber beetle become recently in the cucumber, melon and squash patches that two field meetings were held in San Fernando Valley at which Assistant County Farm Adviser F. H. Ernst explained the effectiveness of poison dusts. This, he explained, is due to their repellant effect rather than their killing power. One part of Calcium arsenate to twenty parts of gypsum applied as a dust appears to be the most satisfactory control treatment, he said. Mr. Ernst stated that first applications should be made when plants are emerging from the soil, with subsequent applications as needed. Fertilization and care tend to minimize beetle injury.

Uniformly Dependable Results in Citrus Insect Pest Control

Methods and materials heretofore used in the control of citrus insect pests have lacked certainty and dependability. There have been too many limiting factors. The weather has had to be just right. Atmospheric conditions have had to be carefully watched. The pest has had to be attacked in just a certain stage. All conditions have had to be right for anything like satisfactory results. But VOLCK has introduced an entirely new standard of dependability and uniformity in results.

Few Limiting Factors

With this material the limiting factors are few and easily understood. Uniformly satisfactory results are obtained under widely varying conditions.

The killing effectiveness is so high, and the margin of safety is so wide that successful results are a matter of common sense rather than scientific understanding. It puts a simple, effective, dependable method of citrus insect pest control within the hands of every grower.

A Highly Improved Spray

VOLCK is a highly improved contact spray of the "quick breaking" type. The emulsion "breaks" as it passes thru the nozzles and quickly covers the sprayed surface with a uniform oily film which saturates and penetrates both egg and adult with deadly effectiveness. This film retains its active oiliness over a considerable period, so that any young which escape the application are brought into contact with the oil on emergence and are either killed or prevented from settling down, and quickly die.

The results of VOLCK-spraying are increasingly apparent for some time after application, due to this extended period of effectiveness.

A Protecting Film

This film not only protects the trees from the pests, but also protects them from the blighting effects of hot winds. Trees sprayed with VOLCK come thru these scalding winds little the worse for the experience—whereas disastrous injury often results to trees not VOLCK-sprayed.

Moreover, VOLCK is not toxic and does not injure plant tissue. It has been used under practically all climatic and atmospheric conditions in strengths much greater than are necessary for an effective kill of the pests without injury to fruit or foliage.

This extraordinary safety margin enables the grower to spray during the summer and early fall for black and citricola scale, just after the hatch is out. While VOLCK will kill the pests in any stage, they are more easily and economically controlled soon after emergence. Early control also prevents the scale from sapping the trees of the sugars and starches needed for fruit of size and quality. The sooner the pests are killed the better for the trees.

Eradicates Red Spider

VOLCK is not only highly effective against citrus scale of all varieties, but produces surprising results in the control of Red Spider. It kills the pest in all stages of development from the egg to the adult and greatly retards reinfestation. You kill both spider and scale in the same application.

Thousands of Acres VOLCK-Sprayed

Thousands of acres are now kept clean by the use of VOLCK, and it is rapidly becoming the standard pest control method thruout the entire citrus growing area.

McCORMICK and DEERING
Corn Binders

Five to seven acres a day with a one-man outfit, and the one man does the work of a half-dozen men with corn knives. McCormick and Deering Corn Binders are light, strong and substantial. Roller bearings insure light draft. Both types do clean work, have ample adjustments for tall and short stand, pick up the down and leaning stalks, and make neat, easily handled bundles. McCormick and Deering Corn Binders are equipped with a smooth-working bundle carrier and they can be fitted with wagon elevator, tongue truck, etc. These two binders have been standard for years. The McCormick binds the bundles vertically and the Deering binds them horizontally.

LET THESE MACHINES HANDLE YOUR CORN CROP

As long as 35 years ago the McCormick and Deering inventors and engineers were toiling to produce a binder to ease the farmer's labors in cutting corn. The first practical McCormick corn binder made its victorious way down the rows in 1891, and set a new mark in the history of corn in America.

That progress has been continuous to date. International Harvester has pioneered to give the farmer easy mastery over the corn crop, in all harvest operations, and has thereby helped to build the crop to the gigantic proportions of today.

Today—for the crop now in the fields—the McCormick-Deering dealer in your community offers you the highly perfected machines displayed on this page. Whatever your method or your exact need, the McCormick-Deering Line of Corn Harvesting Equipment will give you the best machine and service satisfaction for now and the future. Write us for information and see your dealer in due season. Where silo filling and forage cutting are done with McCormick-Deering skill and experience, a good, fast and economical job is assured you. McCormick-Deering Ensilage Cutters are designed on the simplest principles. They cut the corn and other leafy crops to the desired lengths, do big-capacity work with maximum safety, and stand the gaff year after year. They have been doing it for years, by the thousands. Steel frame construction, with boiler-plate steel flywheels. The knives are on the flywheel and the cutting and elevating is done in one operation, saving power. Built in five sizes; capacities 3 to 25 tons per hour; power 6 to 25 h. p.

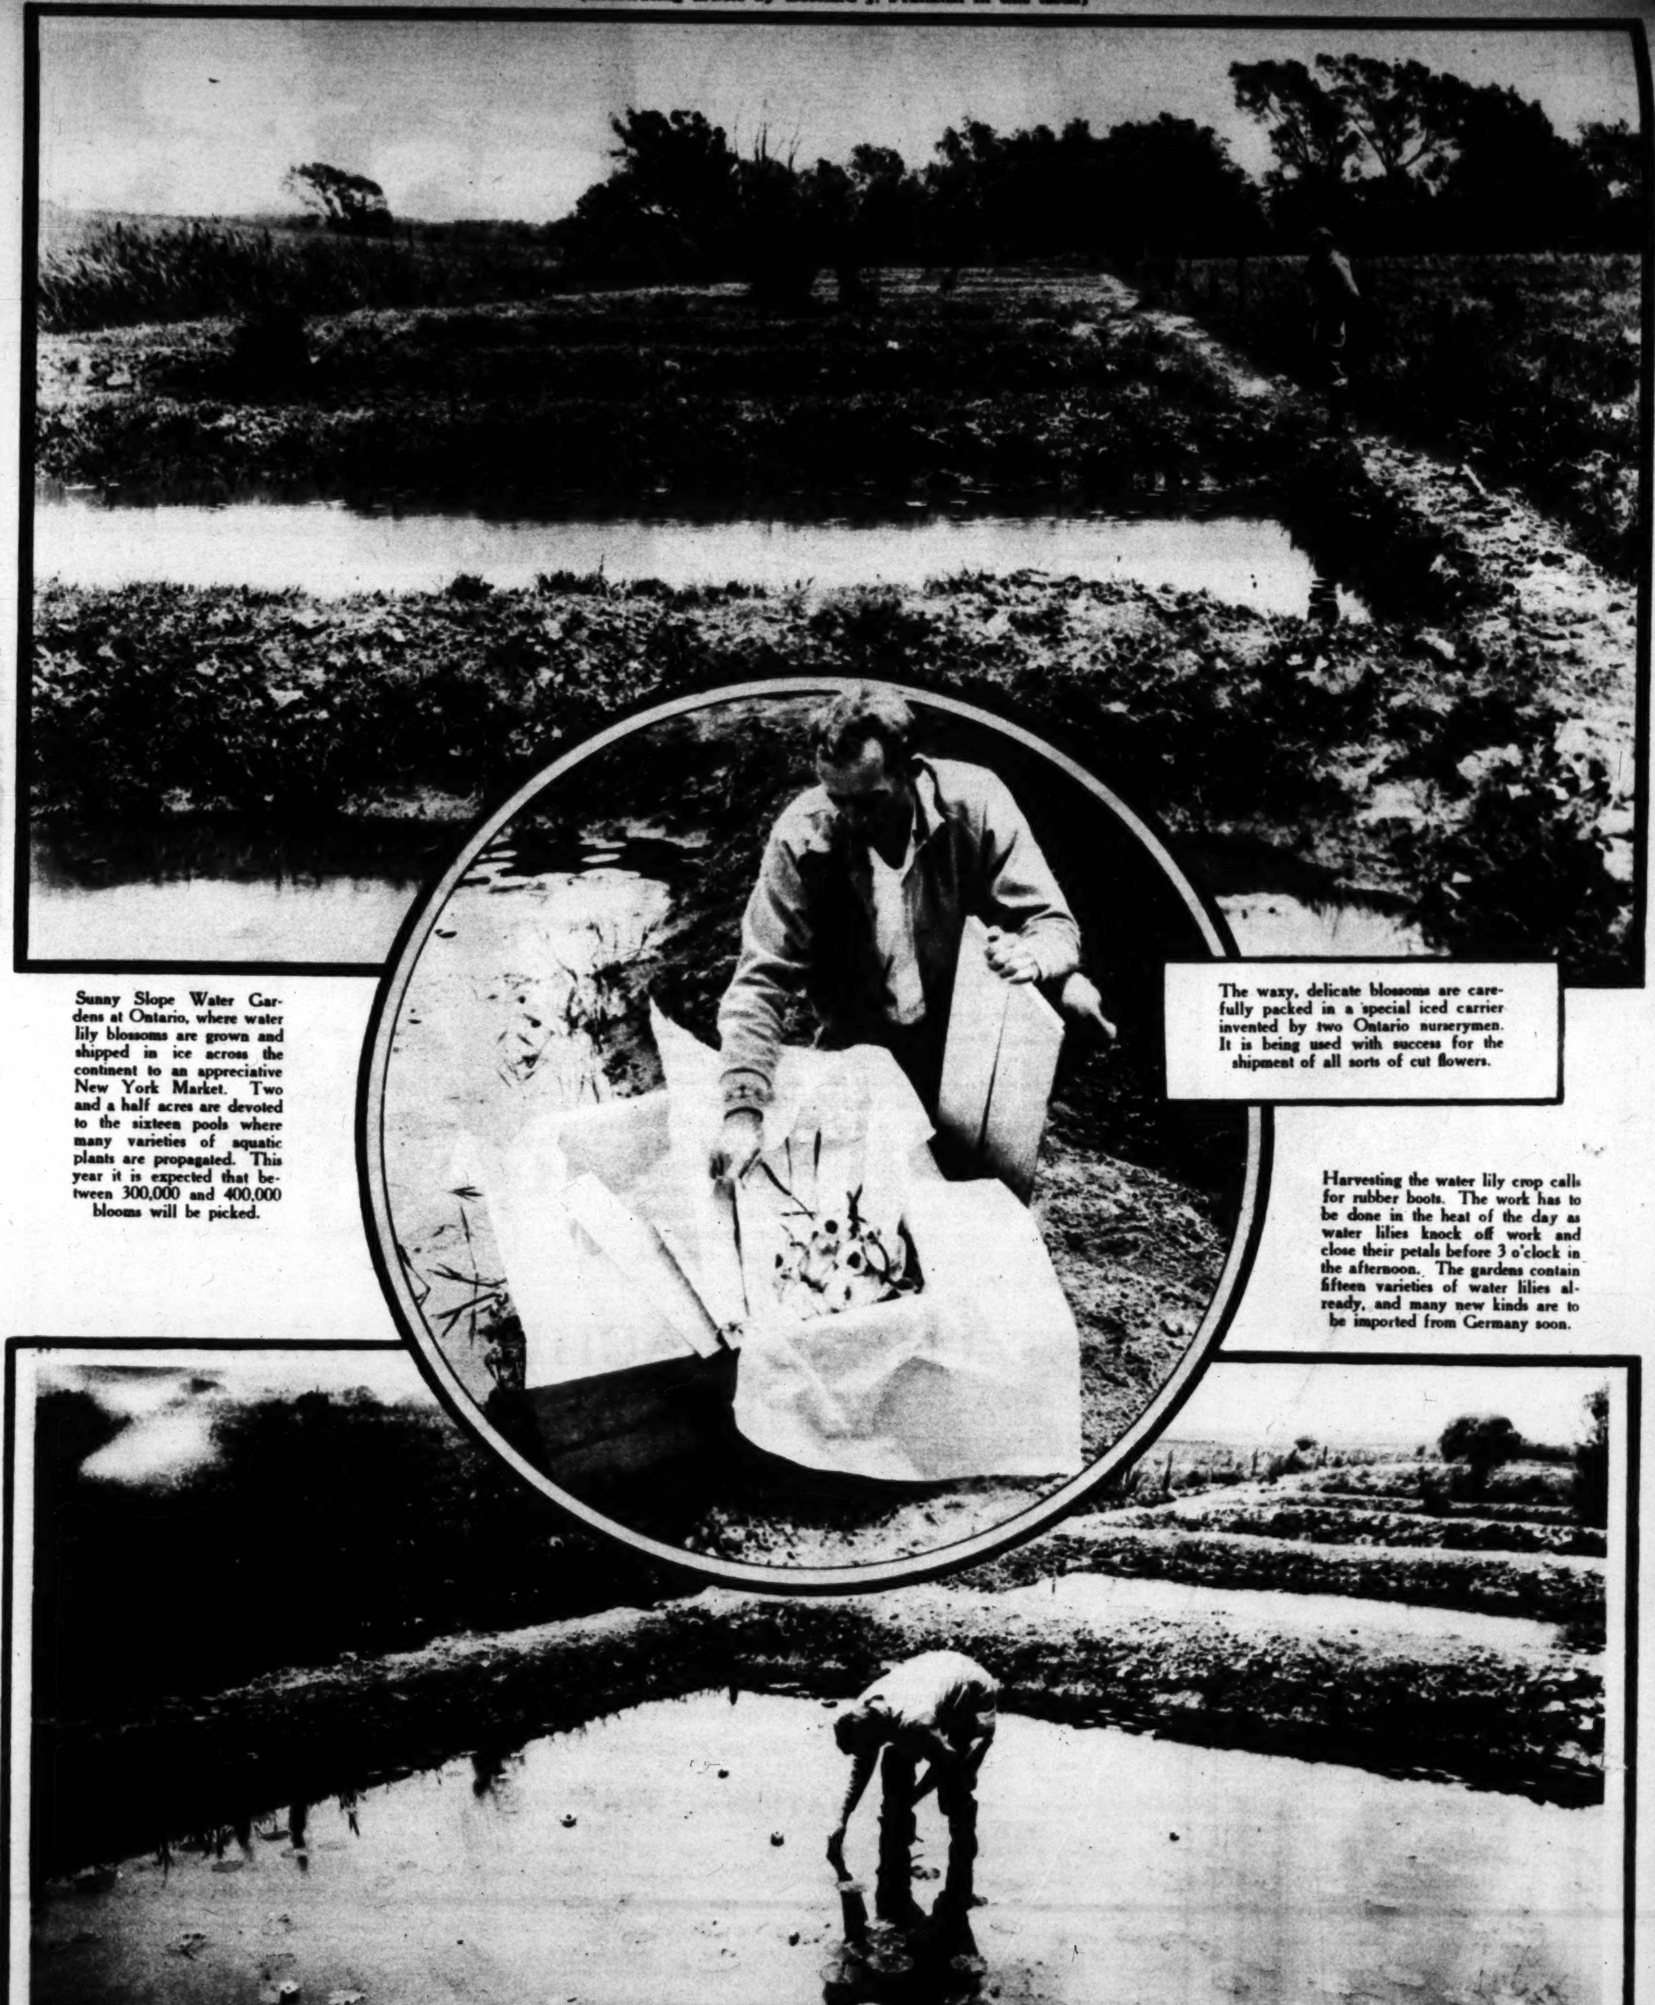
Southland Water Lilies Grown for New York Marke

(Illustrating article by Leonard J. Frankish in this issue)



Sunny Slope Water Gardens at Ontario, where water lily blossoms are grown and shipped in ice across the continent to an appreciative New York Market. Two and a half acres are devoted to the sixteen pools where many varieties of aquatic plants are propagated. This year it is expected that between 300,000 and 400,000 blooms will be picked.

The waxy, delicate blossoms are carefully packed in a special iced carrier invented by two Ontario nurserymen. It is being used with success for the shipment of all sorts of cut flowers.

Harvesting the water lily crop calls for rubber boots. The work has to be done in the heat of the day as water lilies knock off work and close their petals before 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The gardens contain fifteen varieties of water lilies already, and many new kinds are to be imported from Germany soon.
